A NEVER-FAILING REMEDY for LIVER COMPLAINTS.—Dr. SCOTT'S BILIOUS and LIVER PILLS, prepared without mercury, are invaluable to all who suffer from Billous and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Wind, Spasms, Foul Breath, Irritability, Loss of Appetite, Sour Eructations, and General Debility. As a General Family Aperient Medicine they have no equal, being mild in their operation and grateful to the stomach. They will be found, in slight cases, by a single dose to restore health to the body with a happy frame of mind. Prepared only by W. LAMBERT, 1A, Vere-street, London, W. 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; or, post-free, 15 or 33 stamps, and sold by all Chemists. The Genuine are in a square Green Package.

FITS.—EPILEPTIC FITS OR FALLING SICKNESS.—Sensations: Giddiness. Faints.—A certain method of cure has been discovered for this distressing complaint by a Physician, who is desirous that all sufferers may benefit from this providential discovery. It will cure the most hopeless case after all other means have been tried. Full particulars will be sent by post free of charge. Address—Mr. Williams, 10, Oxford-terrace, Hyde Park, London.

TOURISTS.—Their skins always suffer. Blotches, roughness, and general coarseness disfigure it. THE ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the whitest and purest of all soaps, and by its wonderful purifying action preserves it soft and free from complexionable blemishes. Recommended by the entire Medical Profession. A boon to sensitive skins. By all Chemists, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. Chief Depôt, 532, Oxford-street, London.

TAILOR-MADE COSTUMES.
Debenham and Freebody have made extensive arrangements for the production of these useful Costumes, and beg to direct attention to their New Patterns for the present season in tailor-made Tweed and hand-braided serges.
The simplicity of the design and the excellence of the materials employed are maintained, while several novelties in military braiding have been introduced, and the arrangements generally ensure the perfection of fit and the best style of workmanship and finish, considerably below the usual price for this description of Costume.
Sketches in various styles, with Patterns of Materials and Prices, post-free on application.

"AND TEETH LIKE ROWS OF PEARLS."
JEWSBURY and BROWN'S Exquisite Compound,
THE ORIENTAL TOOTH-PASTE.
The celebrated original and only genuine Oriental Tooth-Paste is signed "JEWSBURY and BROWN, Manchester. Established 50 years." PEARLY WHITE and SOUND TEETH, a healthy action of the gums, producing that firmness and rosy brightness of colour so essential to beauty, and fragrant breath, are all insured by the use of this most perfect Dentifrice. Pots, 1s. 6d.; double, 2s. 6d. All Perfumers and Chemists.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath.
Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.
If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.
The Pills purify the blood, correct all disorders of the liver, stomach, kidneys, and bowels. The Ointment is unrivalled in the cure of bad legs, old wounds, gout, and rheumatism.

GOUT and RHEUMATISM cured by the use of Dr. Laville's Curative Liquor or Pills. To be obtained of all respectable Chemists, price 11s. per Bottle. All who are afflicted with these diseases should read Dr. Laville's celebrated treatise, in English, on "The Treatment and Cure of Gout and Rheumatism;" post-free, 4d., of F. NEWBERY and SONS, 1, King Edward-street, London, E.C.—Address—F. COMAR, 28, Rue St. Claude, Paris.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D.,
Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydrocarbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT.

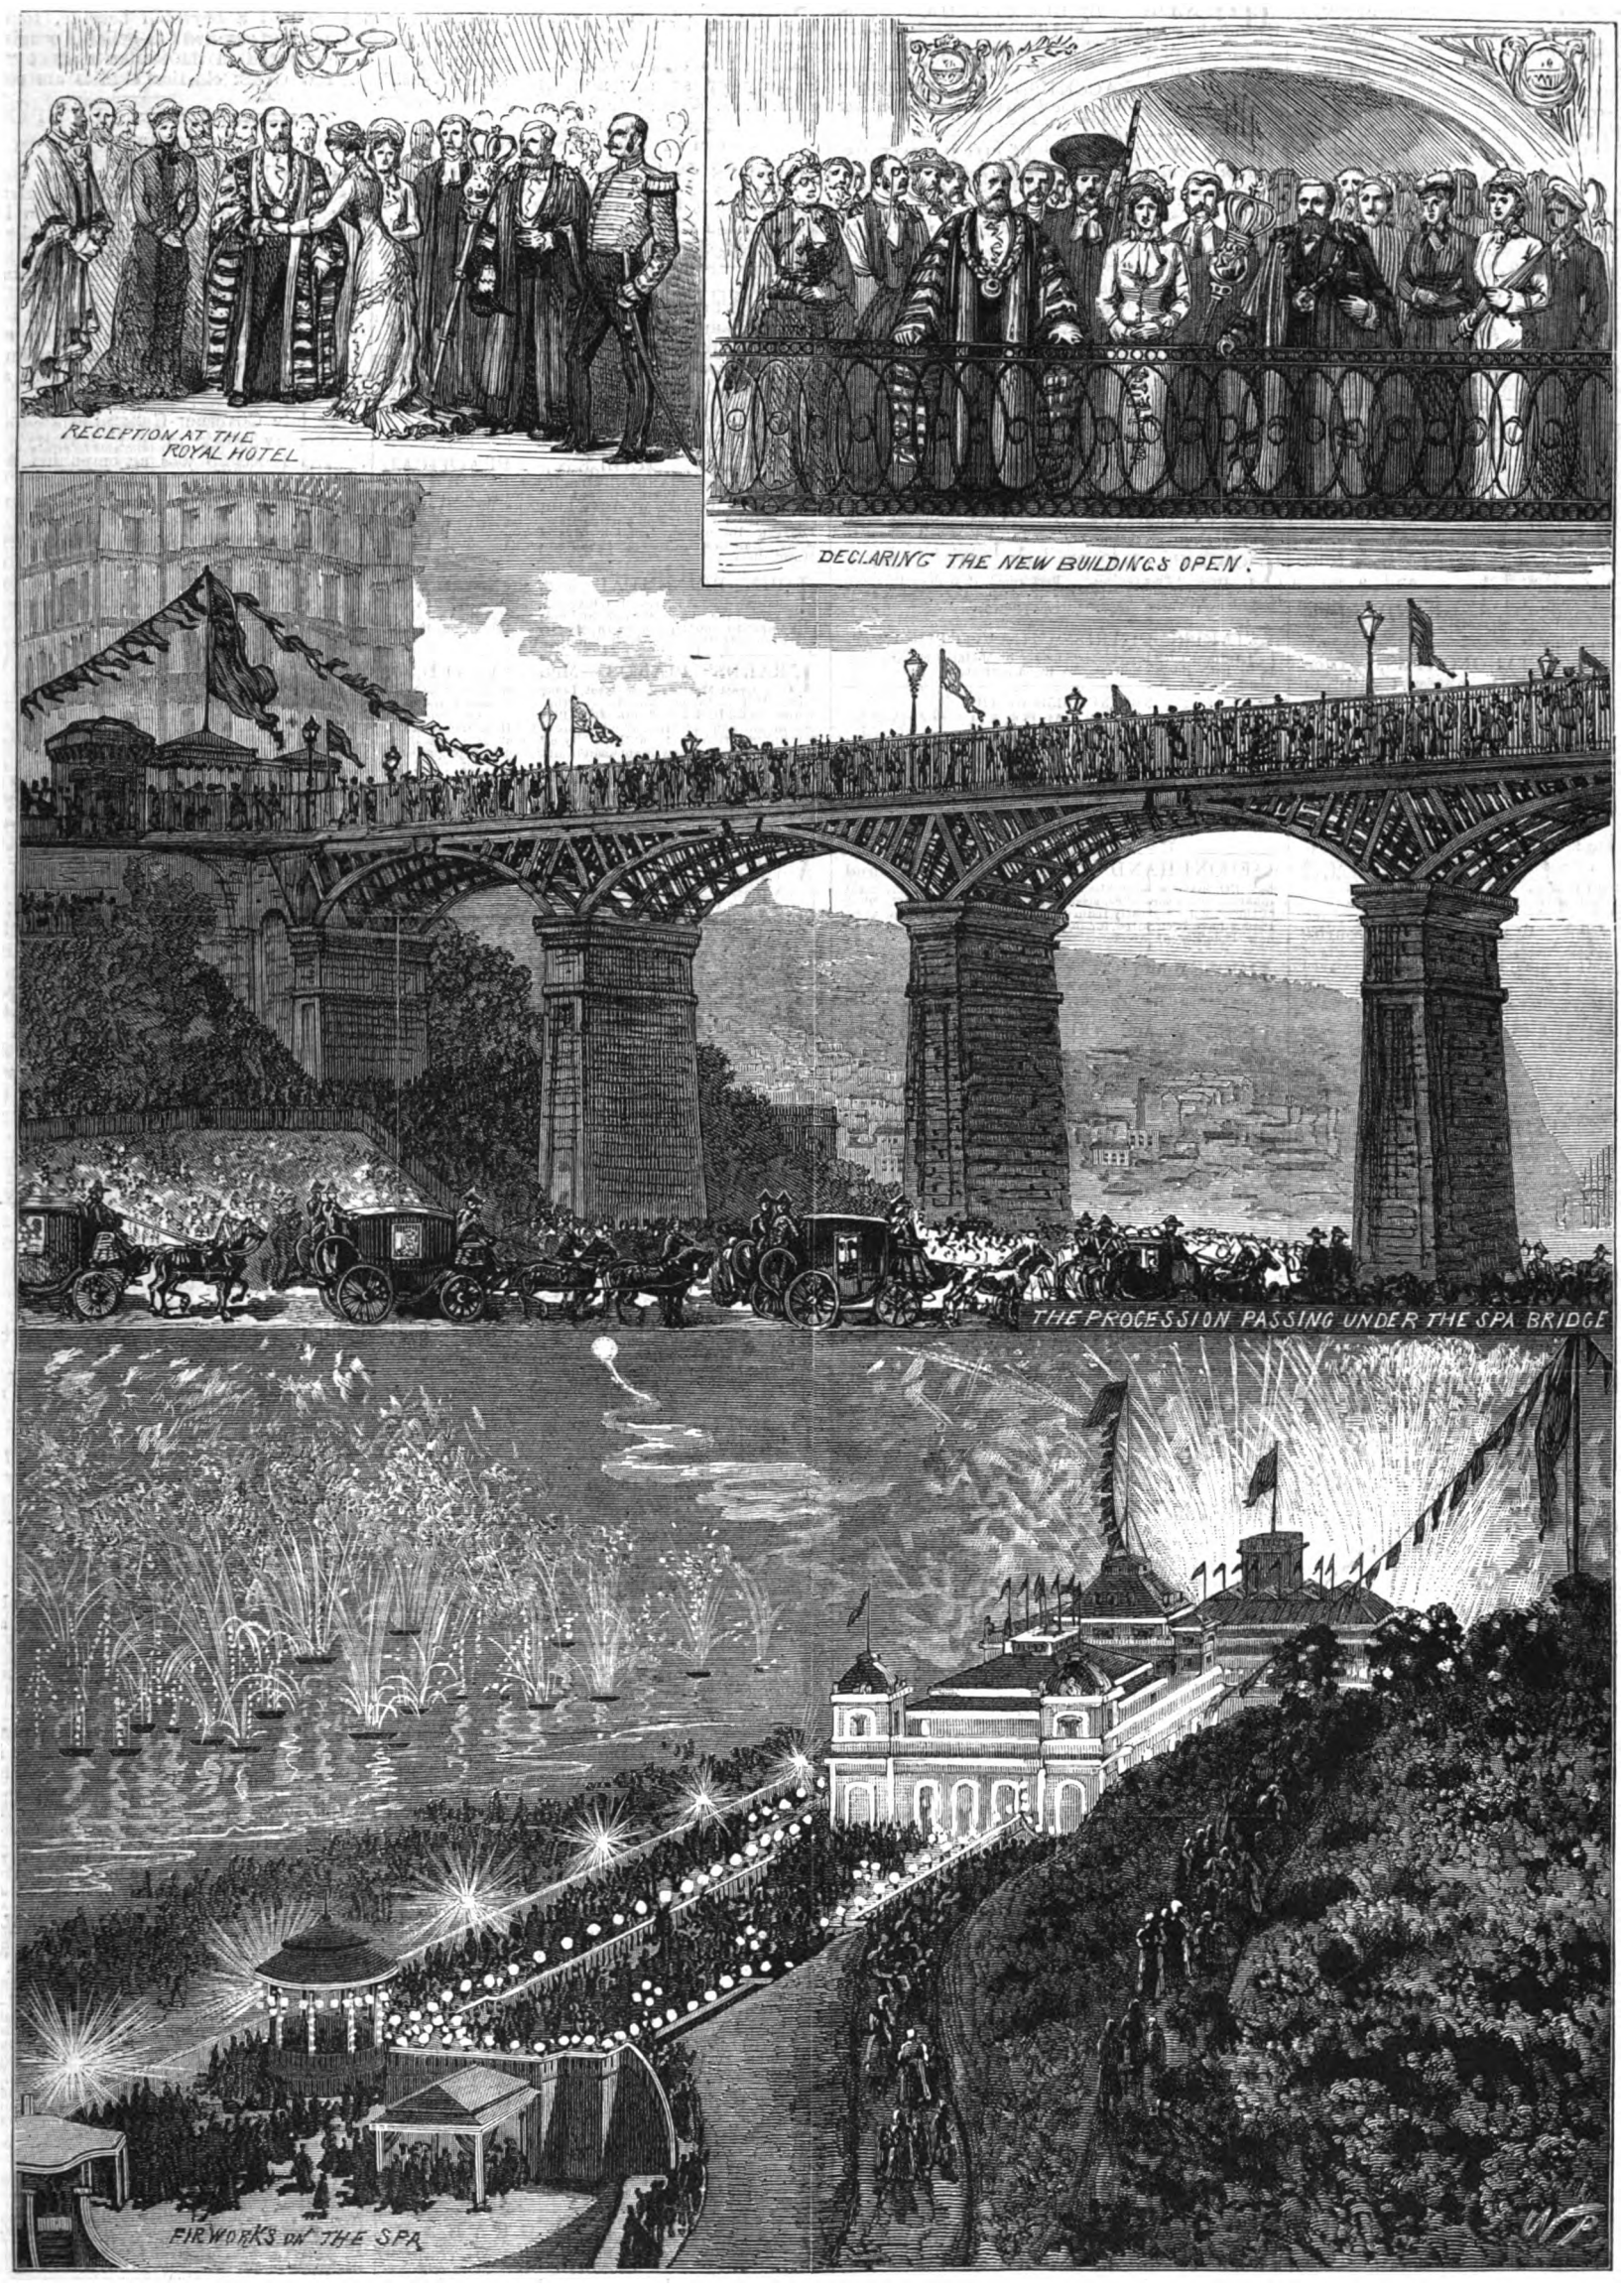
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT (Trade-Mark, "Anti-Fat," Registered) is the celebrated REMEDY for CORPULENCY. It is purely vegetable, being a compound concentrated fluid-extract of sea lichens, and is perfectly harmless. No particular change of diet required. Will reduce a fat person from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. It acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat. "Corpulency is not only a disease of itself, but the harbinger of others," wrote Hippocrates two thousand years ago, and what was true then is no less so to-day.



ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT
is endorsed by those eminent in the medical profession. Thomas Fairbank, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to her Majesty the Queen, referring to Anti-Fat in the "The British Medical Journal," of June 7th, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it to fail. I may state that a patient who has been lately taking it as an anti-fat, and who always suffered very much from rheumatic pains about the body, has been entirely free from such trouble while she has been taking the extract, a fact which she quite independently noted."

"Prattville, Ala., July 20, 1878.—BOTANIC MEDICINE Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—About three months ago I commenced using your Anti-Fat, at which time my weight was 219 lb. By following your directions carefully, I have succeeded in reducing my weight to 158 lb. This is all very satisfactory and pleasant; but just previous to commencing the use of your medicine I had purchased two suits of fine clothes at a high price, and find, to my dismay, that they are entirely useless to me now. When I put one of the coats on, my friends tell me it looks like a coffee sack on a bean-pole; and when I put the pants on—well, description fails. My object in writing is to ascertain whether you have not, in connection with your medicine business, an establishment where your patrons, similarly situated, could exchange these useless garments for others that would fit. I think you ought to have something of the kind, as it would be an inducement for many to use the Anti-Fat, who now object to using it, in consequence of the loss they would sustain in throwing aside valuable garments. Just turn this matter over in your mind. A "Clothing Exchange" is what you want in connection with your Anti-Fat business.—Yours truly,
"GEORGE BOYD."

THE ABOVE CONFIRMED.
"Prattville, Ala., Nov. 29, 1878.—The Botanic Medicine Co., Buffalo, N.Y.—Gentlemen,—I weigh 315 lb. I am a member of the oil firm of Telfair, Swedicker, and Rucker, 105, John-street, New York. I am constantly travelling. Have intended to write to get some of your Anti-Fat, but have been waiting to come across some one who has actually taken your medicine. So to-day I have the gratification of interviewing Mr. George Boyd, of Prattville. He informs me that he reduced himself from 219 to 158 pounds in four months.
"Yours truly, COL. HOUSTON RUCKER."
Hundreds of letters similar to the above have been received by the Botanic Medicine Company, confirming their statements relative to the efficacy of Allan's Anti-Fat in cases of Obesity. Sold by Chemists the world over. Send stamp for pamphlet.

The Extra Supplement.

"SINKING DESPATCHES."

This picture, by Mr. W. H. Overend, which was in the late Exhibition of the Royal Academy, reminds us of stories of naval adventure in the great French war from ninety to seventy years ago; the officers' uniforms, and the sailor's pigtail, being evidently of that historical period. It may further be conjectured that the scene is laid either in the West Indies or on the West Coast of Africa, from the presence of the unfortunate negro boatman, probably a Krooman, who is falling back shot with a musket-bullet from the approaching enemy's boat. There is no chance of escape from destruction or capture, as the superior powers of the swiftly-advancing foe, in a ten-oared launch, with three officers and a score of rowing or fighting men, forbid the hope alike of resistance and of getting away. In this painful situation it has become the duty of the officer in charge of despatches, which he may have been ordered to carry from a ship in the offing to the commander of a blockaded port, to cast his despatch-box into the sea, that its secrets may not be rifled and exposed to hostile eyes. We see him on the point of dropping the box into the water, as he sits in the stern-sheets of the small pair-oared boat, steering it with the tiller-rope in his left-hand, while keeping a sharp look-out astern to prevent being run down by the enemy. After this, let us expect that he will surrender and find the honourable treatment due to a brave and faithful servant of his nation's flag at sea.

THE SPA AT SCARBOROUGH.

The opening, by the Lord Mayor of London, on Monday week, of the new buildings for public entertainment connected with the Spa at Scarborough, was mentioned in our last. The Grand Hall, indeed, was opened last year on the first day of June; and to this have now been added a theatre on the upper floor, a reading-room, a billiard-room, a conservatory, a café and buffet, and a series of promenades at different levels, on the terraces, upon the roof, and in the galleries surrounding the hall, which offer great attractions to the visitors of the Spa. The buildings extend a length of 242 ft., and the central block rises to the height of 75 ft. above the promenade; each of the towers has also an extra storey and mansard roof. The entire dimensions of the grand hall are 140 ft. long by 100 ft. wide, but much space all round is devoted to the broad promenade, leaving 54 ft. by 64 ft. as the area to be occupied by seats for the audience at concerts and other performances. The height is 56 ft. The upper hall, now appropriated to a theatre, is 100 ft. long, 60 ft. wide, and 40 ft. high; the other apartments are very commodious. These buildings occupy the site of the Spa Saloon, on the Cliffs, erected in 1858 from the designs of Sir Joseph Paxton, together with the site of the old Gothic Hall, built in 1837 by Wyatt, and now pulled down; the Spa Saloon was destroyed by fire in 1876. The architects have been Messrs. Verity and Hunt, of Regent-street. Mr. John Barry, of Scarborough, has been the general contractor. The festivities of last week continued, with agreeable variations, during three days. Our Illustrations show the reception of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress by the Mayor and Mayoress of Scarborough; the ceremony of declaring the new buildings open; the decorations of the Cliff Bridge, which connects the town with the Spa, there being a fine road passing across at a height of 100 ft. above the sands; and the fireworks displayed at night on the Spa, and in a flotilla of boats on the bay in front of it, which afforded a spectacle of great beauty. The Lord Mayor of London was accompanied there by the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex. The metropolitan civic dignitaries also this week visit Bournemouth, in like manner, to assist the Town Commissioners to open the new pier.

COLLECTIONS OF POETRY.

The publication, by Messrs. Smith and Elder, of Selections from the Poetical Works of Robert Browning, was noticed some time ago. A second series is now put before us, in which the admirers of Mr. Browning's mode of thought and manner of utterance will find some of his most characteristic "psychological idylls," as they have been aptly styled, boring deep into the profound inner consciousness of man's moral being, and showing what lies at the bottom. With regard to the experiences and capabilities of the spiritual life, nothing of its kind can go closer to the heart of the matter than "Fears and Scruples," which has the form of an enigma; or than the supposed last discourse of the Apostle John, in his dying hour, reported by one of the disciples who attended "A Death in the Desert." Contrasting such intensely devout treatment of a religious theme with the tone of "Bishop Blougram's Apology," or with "Mr. Sludge, the Medium," the tremendous interval between one mood or disposition and another is powerfully realised. In the well-known "Soliloquy in the Spanish Cloister," in "The Heretic's Tragedy, a Middle Age Interlude," and in the customary insults to the Jews of Rome on "Holy Cross Day," we see the ecclesiastical perversion of religion yet more flagrantly exposed. Mr. Browning has dealt with the different bearings of this motive in human nature, as modified by other interests and affections, under a variety of aspects, and with great force of dramatic conception.

A second volume of the Selection from the Poetry of Elizabeth Barrett Browning has likewise been issued. It contains, towards the end, the whole of "Casa Guidi Windows," and several of the "Poems before Congress," in which, from 1848 to 1859, Mrs. Browning, then residing at Florence, expressed her ardent sympathy with Italian patriotism. Many of the other pieces, not like these associated with stirring outward realities of contemporary public history, have the fault of excessive moral introspection and self-contemplation, which beset much of our imaginative literature at the time. "A Vision of Poets" is the longest of these; and we have also "The Poet's Vow," "The Poet," "The Seraph and Poet," "The Poet and the Bird;" besides "The Soul's Travelling" and "The Fourfold Aspect;" all profoundly meditative, and inspired with a religious feeling of her vocation. This is not a strain likely to be popular in the present state of mankind, but one that may still find "audience, fit though few," among serious minds of educated youth, and may perhaps stimulate, if it cannot satisfy, their yearning consciousness of an exalted destiny.

The class of readers, and sometimes day-dreamers, who delight in the free indulgence of imagination and fancy, as well as the simple lovers of exquisite poetical conceptions, will gladly accept Messrs. Macmillan's new volume of Poems from Shelley. It is uniform with the volume of "Poems from Wordsworth," lately edited by Mr. Matthew Arnold; and either the one or the other is a charming pocket companion. The Rev. Stopford Brooke is the editor of this selection from Shelley, to which he has written a critical introduction or preface, entering thoroughly into the ethical and psychological conditions of Shelley's mind. The volume does not contain those long narrative poems, "Queen Mab" and "The Revolt of Islam," but there is a fair collection of separate pieces and extracted passages, treating of the mysteries of life and death, "Time and its Changes," "Nature and Man," as well as "Pure Nature," and especially of "Love." These are led off by the Hymn to "Intellectual Beauty." "Alastor" and "Adonais," the subject and occasion of which are well known, find place in the collection, which includes also some of the poet's appeals to the spirit of liberty, and those he uttered on behalf of the Greek and Italian nationalities.

The same publishers have now bestowed on students of English literature the boon of an excellent systematic series of specimens of The English Poets. It fills two octavo volumes, which form an appropriate treasury of such "musical wisdom." The general editor is Mr. T. H. Ward, late Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford. A general introduction, contributed by Mr. Matthew Arnold, lays down what he deems the essential principles of poetry, and thence discusses the qualities of early French and English poetry. He speaks of Chaucer, with whom he compares Dryden and Pope, and from them turns again to Burns; yet finds them all come short of the high and serious tone of "the great classics," who are represented in our own nation by Shakspeare and Milton. The collection, in the first volume, comprises a great variety of pieces from Chaucer, Gower, Piers Plowman, Lydgate, James I. of Scotland, Dunbar, Gawain Douglas, Skelton, Sir David Lyndesay, Wyatt and Surrey, Lord Buckhurst, Edmund Spenser, Sir Philip Sidney, Fulke Greville, Sir Edward Dyer, Lyly, Peele, Greene, Marlowe, Shakspeare, Drayton, Chapman, Samuel Daniel, Southwell, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir John Davies, John Marston, Bishop Hall, and Dr. John Donne. There is a brief notice of each author, and these notices or commentaries are furnished by different hands, amongst which are those of Mr. Thomas Arnold, Professor Skeat, Professor Hales, the Dean of St. Paul's, Mrs. Ward, and Messrs. Saintsbury, Churton Collins, Edmund Gosse, Professor Dowden, A. Lang, and others. The second volume is made up of selections from Ben Jonson, Drummond of Hawthornden, Sir W. Alexander, Beaumont and Fletcher, Dekker, Ford, William Browne, Wither, Giles Fletcher, Sir H. Wotton, Carew, Herrick, Habington, Sir J. Suckling, Lovelace, Lord Herbert of Cherbury, George Sandys, George Herbert, Crashaw, Vaughan, Shirley, Randolph, Cartwright, Cowley, Waller, Sir John Denham, Sir W. Davenant, Milton, Andrew Marvell, Butler, the Earl of Roscommon, the Earl of Dorset, Sir Charles Sedley, Lord Rochester, Mrs. Behn, Otway, Oldham, and Dryden. Beyond the seventeenth century the series has not yet been extended. The editorial assistants in the second volume, besides those already named, are Professor A. W. Ward, the Rev. Mark Patteson, Rector of Lincoln College, Oxford, and Messrs. G. A. Simcox, W. Minto, A. C. Bradley, W. T. Arnold, Goldwin Smith, and W. C. Henley. The work is executed throughout in a correct and scholarly fashion, and its general arrangement is well preserved. A more complete and satisfactory performance of this kind has seldom been put before the reading public.

Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. recently published a Book of English Elegies, edited by Mr. W. F. March-Phillipps. He prefers to embrace, within this designation, not merely poems on the death of particular persons, but any poems treating in general of the subject of "man's mortality." This contemplation necessarily includes, by correlative association, the idea of immortality, whether based on philosophical speculation or upon Christian faith. It may also be said that human experiences and hopes and fears and wishes, relating to our proved common mortality, and to our belief in a future immortality, or to the imagination of possible existence beyond the grave, constitute the chief theme of nearly all the sublime and pathetic poetry that has ever been composed. All tragedies, of course, and likewise the strongest and deepest elements of moral interest felt in epic, romantic, and lyrical poetry, derive much of their force, if we think of it, from the assured fact of death, and from the all but universal conception of a life to come. So that Mr. March-Phillipps's collection might be extended, were it desirable, to a vast range of chosen reflective passages out of the bulk of English poetical literature. But he has put quite enough into this one small volume to supply thoughtful minds with an ample store of medicinal, sobering and chastening, yet consoling and divinely inspiring meditations, expressed in the noblest and sweetest metrical language. The pieces which he has selected here fall into chronological divisions—namely, those of the Mediæval and Renaissance poets, ending with the Earl of Surrey's lament for Sir Thomas Wyatt; secondly, the Elizabethan; then, those of the seventeenth century; fourthly, the eighteenth century; lastly, the nineteenth, from Southey to Keble. It may be observed that he has admitted the old Border ballad of "Chevy Chace," the soliloquies of Hamlet and Macbeth, the dirges in "Cymbeline" and "The Tempest," and well-known passages in "Romeo and Juliet," "Measure for Measure," "King Richard II.," and "King Henry VI.," with two or three songs by Sir Walter Scott, and Wordsworth's "Lucy," and Tom Hood's "Bridge of Sighs," among the contents of this volume.

The first volume of the Complete Works of Bret Harte, published by Messrs. Chatto and Windus, consists of "Poems and Drama." As for the drama, it is one written in prose, called "Two Men of Sandy Bar," and better adapted to theatrical representation than to a quiet home reading. The scene is laid partly at Red Gulch, in the Californian gold-diggings, and partly at the office and mansion of a banker in San Francisco. The "two men" are "Sandy," or Alexander Morton, junior, a prodigal son of the banker, and John Oakhurst, his comrade and rival suitor of a Mexican heiress. We cannot say that it is an agreeable play, though it may do for the stage as well as some that are in vogue. The poems in Western American dialect, to which Bret Harte chiefly owes his wide reputation, occupy about sixty pages of this volume; and nearly equal space is filled by the "National Poems," inspired with the patriotism of the Union, and commemorating the great struggle between North and South. Of the former class it is scarcely needful to mention those belonging to the celebrated "Truthful James," who has become proverbial on both sides of the Atlantic; and such forcible little stories as "Dow's Flat," or "In the Tunnel," and that unique portraiture of "the Heathen Chinee." Fastidious readers will take warning that these Californian narratives, humorous and pathetic as they are, smack of the whisky bar and the tobacco quid, and have a flavour of profane language which may offend politer ears. Bret Harte is nevertheless a genuine poet in feeling and imaginative thought, and his works claim a place in contemporary literature, to which this edition is a further step.

A new volume of elegant, scholarly, and thoughtful verse compositions by Mr. J. Addington Symonds, entitled New and Old, has been published by Messrs. Smith and Elder. It presents some of the ripest fruit of a mind assiduously refined by æsthetic culture, and by the faithful study, more especially, of Greek and Italian literary models, as well as by a meditative personal experience of life. The first series of these poems is called "Lyrics of Life and Art;" and there is a second series bearing the same title, which shows the progress of the author's ruling ideas and sentiments, comparing one period with another. This is somewhat as the mental history of Schiller, and likewise that of Wordsworth, seems indicated by the arrangement of the shorter poems in the standard editions of their collected works. Besides these, Mr. Symonds has gathered, under special headings, some of his occasional verses suggested by the scenery of the Alps and of Italy, and a few sonnets upon ethical themes. "The Love-Tale of Odatis and Prince Zariadres" is an Oriental romance, with a Persian hero and a Scythian heroine, told in the "heroic" metrical form of rhymed ten-syllable couplets. The same form has been adopted in the Italian story of "Imelda Lambertazzi." A few Greek classical studies are comprised in this volume.

PERSONAL AND POLITICAL.

Mr. Gladstone's convalescence continues. On Sunday he left his bed for several hours, and did not experience any fatigue. Dr. Andrew Clark on Monday afternoon issued a bulletin stating that Mr. Gladstone continued to make favourable progress towards health; and shortly afterwards the Premier, accompanied by Mrs. Gladstone, drove from Downing-street to Paddington, whence they went by railway to Windsor, on a visit to the Honourable and Very Reverend Gerald Wellesley, at the Deanery. Mr. Gladstone attended Divine service in St. George's Chapel on Tuesday, with Mrs. Gladstone, and in the evening drove out in an open carriage in the Great Park.

Lord Lytton, the late Governor-General of India, arrived at Portsmouth yesterday week in her Majesty's troop-ship Himalaya. His Lordship was accompanied by Lady Lytton and suite. Admiral Ryder, General Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and a party of distinguished visitors, at once went on board to receive his Lordship. Lord and Lady Lytton arrived at Osborne on Saturday morning, and had an interview with the Queen. Later in the day the Earl and Countess, with their family, proceeded to Knebworth. On alighting from the train at Stevenage they received a cordial welcome. The town was gaily decorated, a large crowd assembled and loudly cheered his Lordship and family, and an address of welcome was read by the Vicar of Stevenage. In reply, Lord Lytton said there was no task in the performance of which an Englishman could more fairly ask his countrymen to place a favourable construction upon his actions than the government of India. He expressed his belief that nothing more is needed than perseverance for a few years longer in the present system framed for the government of India to give that country all the strength, wealth, and influence of one of the Great Powers of the world. His Lordship then drove to Knebworth, where the tenantry and villagers had assembled to meet him, and the Rector read an address, to which Lord Lytton briefly responded.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Sir Hercules Robinson, G.C.M.G., Governor of New Zealand, to be Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, in the place of the Right Hon. Sir Bartle Frere, G.C.B., G.C.S.I. Sir Hercules Robinson will come home before assuming the government, and it will be administered during the interval by Sir George Strahan, K.C.M.G., the Governor of Tasmania. Sir Hercules Robinson will be succeeded in the government of New Zealand by the Hon. Sir Arthur Gordon, G.C.M.G., now Governor of Fiji, who will continue to be High Commissioner of the Western Pacific.

Lord Camperdown and Mr. Samuel Whitbread have been appointed Commissioners to inquire into the state of the defences of the more important colonial ports and coaling stations, and to consider the apportionment of the cost of such defences. They replace Mr. Childers and Mr. Brassey.

Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., on arrival in England from India, will take up the appointment of the Agent-General for New South Wales, but will (says the Standard) ultimately be transferred to a higher appointment under the Government.

Her Majesty has approved of the appointment of Colonel O'Brien, C.M.G., late Inspector-General of Police at Mauritius, as Administrator of the Government of St. Lucia, in the place of Mr. Des Vœux, appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Tobago.

The Gazette also announces that Mr. Augustus Frederick Gore (late Lieutenant-Governor of Tobago) has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of the Island of St. Vincent.

Mr. Juland Danvers, the Government Director of Indian Railway Companies, has been appointed Secretary in the Public Works Department at the Indian Office, in succession to the late Mr. W. T. Thornton, C.B. Colonel E. S. C. Williams, R.E., late Director-General of State Railways in India, has been appointed an additional Deputy Government Director of Indian Railway Companies.

The Queen has conferred the honour of knighthood on Mr. George Henry Chambers, chairman of the London and St. Katharine Docks Company.

The Convention regulating literary property between Portugal and Spain was signed at Lisbon on Monday.

Excessive heat has commenced.

BELGIUM.

In the sitting of the Chamber of Representatives on the 6th inst. the members of the Bureau of last Session were re-elected. The President made a proposal, which was unanimously adopted, that all the members of the Chamber should be present in a body at the political fête to be held on the 18th inst.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William left Gastein on Monday. His Majesty has evidently benefited by his sojourn there.

The eleventh general meeting of the German Anthropological Congress was opened at Berlin on the 5th inst. by Professor Virchow in the hall of the Lower House of the Prussian Diet. The Crown Prince and Princess arrived in the course of the sitting. Dr. Schliemann, amongst others, took part in the discussion.

Professor Nordenskjöld was on Monday entertained at a reception in the Festal Hall of the Berlin Municipality.

Professor Nordenskjöld and Dr. Schliemann, with some prominent members of the Anthropological Society now sitting, were honoured on Tuesday by an invitation to dine with the Crown Prince and Princess at Potsdam, her Royal and Imperial Highness taking an especial interest in scientific research.

From the Morning Post's correspondent at Berlin we learn that the Geographical Society of Berlin intends to establish scientific stations in the Arctic regions for the observation and the study of the origin of devastating cyclonic storms.

MEETING OF THE EMPERORS OF GERMANY AND AUSTRIA.

The Emperor of Germany arrived at Ischl early on Tuesday afternoon, having been accompanied from Obertraun by the Emperor Francis Joseph. The German Emperor reached the last-named place at half-past eleven in the morning, and was received there by the Emperor of Austria, who had arrived about a quarter of an hour before. The meeting between the two Sovereigns was of a most hearty description. At the Ischl station their Majesties were met by the Empress of Austria, who has been staying there with the Emperor for some days. In spite of the very heavy rain, a large crowd had collected to welcome the illustrious visitor, and their Majesties were heartily cheered as they drove to the Imperial villa.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Emperor of Austria has subscribed 8000 fl. for the relief of the distress caused by the floods in Moravia and Silesia. It is expected that damage to the extent of several millions of florins will have been incurred by this disaster.

TURKEY.

A telegram from Constantinople states that the Powers have declined to negotiate with the Porte, through their Ambassadors, for the purpose of fixing upon a new frontier line between Turkey and Greece. The Ottoman Government has accordingly resolved, it is said, to enter into direct negotiations with the European Cabinets. Mr. Goschen has informed the Minister for Foreign Affairs that the Powers will not consent to any change in the line decided upon at the Berlin Conference.

EGYPT.

The appointment of Major-General Sir F. J. Goldsmid as Comptroller of the Daira Sanieh was gazetted on Tuesday.

The Director of the Slave Trade Abolition Office, in command of a force of 600 Egyptian troops, has started for Siout, where his head-quarters will be fixed.

AMERICA.

Mr. Garfield, the Republican candidate for the Presidency, was on Saturday last enthusiastically received at the head-quarters of the Republican party in New York, and witnessed a march-past of a long procession of political organisations, to whom he made a brief speech.

Dr. Tanner completed at noon on Saturday last his fast of forty days and forty nights. A great crowd was present, and as soon as the blowing of a steam whistle announced that the fast was over, Dr. Tanner, it is stated, "jumped on a chair and swallowed a peach." The latest accounts state that he is in good condition, and is pursuing "a steady diet of melons, apples, beefsteak, wine, and milk, his stomach retaining all the food taken." A Times telegram says that his case attracts equal attention with the Presidential election. It is to be hoped that we shall be spared any further mention of Dr. Tanner.

CANADA.

A fight occurred at Toronto on the night of the 6th inst. between the Catholics and 600 Orangemen. The police, after a hard struggle, stopped the riot. One policeman was fatally wounded, and many of the rioters were injured.

The survey for the proposed tunnel under the St. Lawrence river has been commenced.

According to private advices received at Ottawa from Newfoundland, the fishermen have forcibly stopped the railway survey, being under the impression that the proposed line is part of a scheme to make Newfoundland a member of the Canadian Confederation.

SOUTH AFRICA.

A meeting, which is described in the telegrams as "crowded and enthusiastic," was held at Cape Town last Saturday, at which a resolution was unanimously passed expressing profound regret at the recall of Sir Bartle Frere, sympathy with his Excellency in the difficulties he has had to deal with in South Africa, and asserting that before long the people of England as well as the colonists will acknowledge the soundness and justness of his policy. Various speakers spoke of Sir Bartle Frere's recall as the severest blow South Africa had ever sustained, and a hope was expressed that the decision of the Government would be reconsidered and Sir Bartle Frere "be reinstated for a few years longer to complete his work."

The aspect of affairs in Basutoland is unchanged.

AUSTRALIA.

The new Cabinet at Melbourne has been constituted by the Hon. Graham Berry as follows:—Chief Secretary and Colonial Treasurer, Mr. Berry; Attorney-General, Mr. Vale; Minister of Lands, Mr. Richardson; Minister of Public Instruction, Mr. W. C. Smith; Commissioner of Railways and Roads, Mr. Patterson; Minister of Mines, Mr. Langridge; Commissioner of Trade and Customs, Mr. Williams; Minister of Justice, Mr. A. T. Clark. Mr. Berry failed in an attempt to form a Coalition Ministry.

After a career of crime unprecedented in colonial annals, the Kelly gang of bushrangers, whose murderous deeds created almost a reign of terror, have, as has already been announced by telegram from Melbourne, been conquered by the representatives of the law, three of the offenders having been killed, and the principal, the notorious Ned Kelly, captured.

The South Australian Advertiser says the first event which attracted general attention throughout the colonies to this daring bushranging gang was the Stringybark Creek murder in 1878. In October that year Sergeant Kennedy and Constables Scanlan, Lanigan, and McIntyre, of the Victorian police, were out with a warrant for the arrest of Edward Kelly for horse-stealing, and he was also "wanted" for wounding a policeman. The party were camped at Stringybark Creek, about twenty miles from Mansfield, on the morning of Oct. 26, when Kelly and his gang came up, and three of the policemen were shot. On Dec. 9 the Kelly gang robbed the Faithful Creek Station, near Euroa, and on the following day they robbed the National Bank at Euroa under circumstances of extraordinary audacity. The reward for their capture was increased to £2500, and stronger detachments of police were sent to the district. On Feb. 10, 1879, the gang robbed the Bank of New South Wales at Jerilderie, carrying away about £2000. The bushrangers were outlawed, and rewards were offered by the New South Wales and Victorian Governments, collectively amounting to £7000, which with the reward offered by the banks increased the price on the heads of the outlaws to £8000. The gang, however, had sympathisers in different parts of the country, and as time went on their capture was looked upon almost as hopeless. As the year grew older without any further crime being committed the pursuit was slackened, and the police were gradually withdrawn. Indeed, there was a general impression that the gang, or at least its principal members, had left the colony.

For some time past nothing had been heard of the Kellys; but there were watch parties in the suspected district, and one of these stationed at Sebastopol received an unpleasant reminder on Saturday evening, June 26 last, that the bushrangers were still at large. On that evening a settler named Aaron Skerritt was shot dead by Byrne, and several shots were fired at the hut then occupied by the watch party. The bushrangers proceeded to Glenrowan, which is situated right in the heart of the gold-mining country. The Eldorado station is surrounded by mountain ranges very difficult of passage, and well known in former times as the retreat of the cattle "duffers," by whom the district was infested. A special train was dispatched from Melbourne on the following night with a party of police, and about three o'clock on the next morning, as it was nearing Glenrowan, it was stopped by a man who stated that the Kellys had "stuck up" Glenrowan, and had torn up the lines just below the station, in order to destroy the party which they knew would arrive by the train. The horses were accordingly got out of the trucks, and Superintendent Hare, with one or two men, proceeded towards the Glenrowan Hotel to seek information. They were met by rifle shots, and shortly afterwards a man who escaped from the hotel brought the information that the gang were within, with a number of the inhabitants whom they had temporarily imprisoned there. The police, who were subsequently joined by small reinforcements from Benolta and Wanguratta, formed a cordon round the place and besieged the building. Ned Kelly, who had escaped, returned to the assistance of his comrades, and a desperate fight took place. Like the rest of the desperadoes, he was armed with quarter-inch iron armour made from ploughshares, and most of the bullets failed to penetrate the plates. Sergeant Steele, however, brought him down by firing at his legs, and then closed with and disarmed him. Another of the gang, named Byrne, was shot through the groin while drinking at the bar inside the hotel, and two other of the ruffians, named Hart and Dan Kelly, were burned to death, the building having been set on fire.

A monument to Pius IX., in the form of his statue, little less than twice the size of life, has by private subscription been erected in Milan Cathedral.

News has been received from Zanzibar that Captain Carter and Mr. Cadenhead, of the Royal Belgian Exploration Expedition, have been killed in Central Africa by Mirambo, the great robber chief.

The Swiss Federal Council, at the request of Don Carlos, has decided to annul the decree of 1873 respecting the internment in Switzerland of the Duchess of Madrid, and, further, to restore the cannon sequestrated at her residence in Geneva.

The soundings taken by the French Scientific Commission on board the Travailleur show that the bed of the Bay of Biscay has depressions and elevations resembling those of the neighbouring Spanish coast. The fauna is very rich, including most of the species found by the Challenger in the Atlantic, with a number of the fine echinoderms formerly supposed to be extinct, and a multitude of worms and crustacea. It is now proved that the fauna of the Atlantic depths extends along the European coast.

A return issued by the German Postmaster-General shows the number of post-cards used in Europe in the year 1878 to have been 342,000,000. Of that number 111,445,000 were posted in the United Kingdom, 108,741,000 in Germany, and 30,522,000 in France. In the United States during the past year no less than 246,000,000 cards were dispatched by the Post Office, and it is estimated that during the present year the figure will rise to 300,000,000. The German postal authorities estimate the number of cards in use throughout the postal union at about 700,000,000.

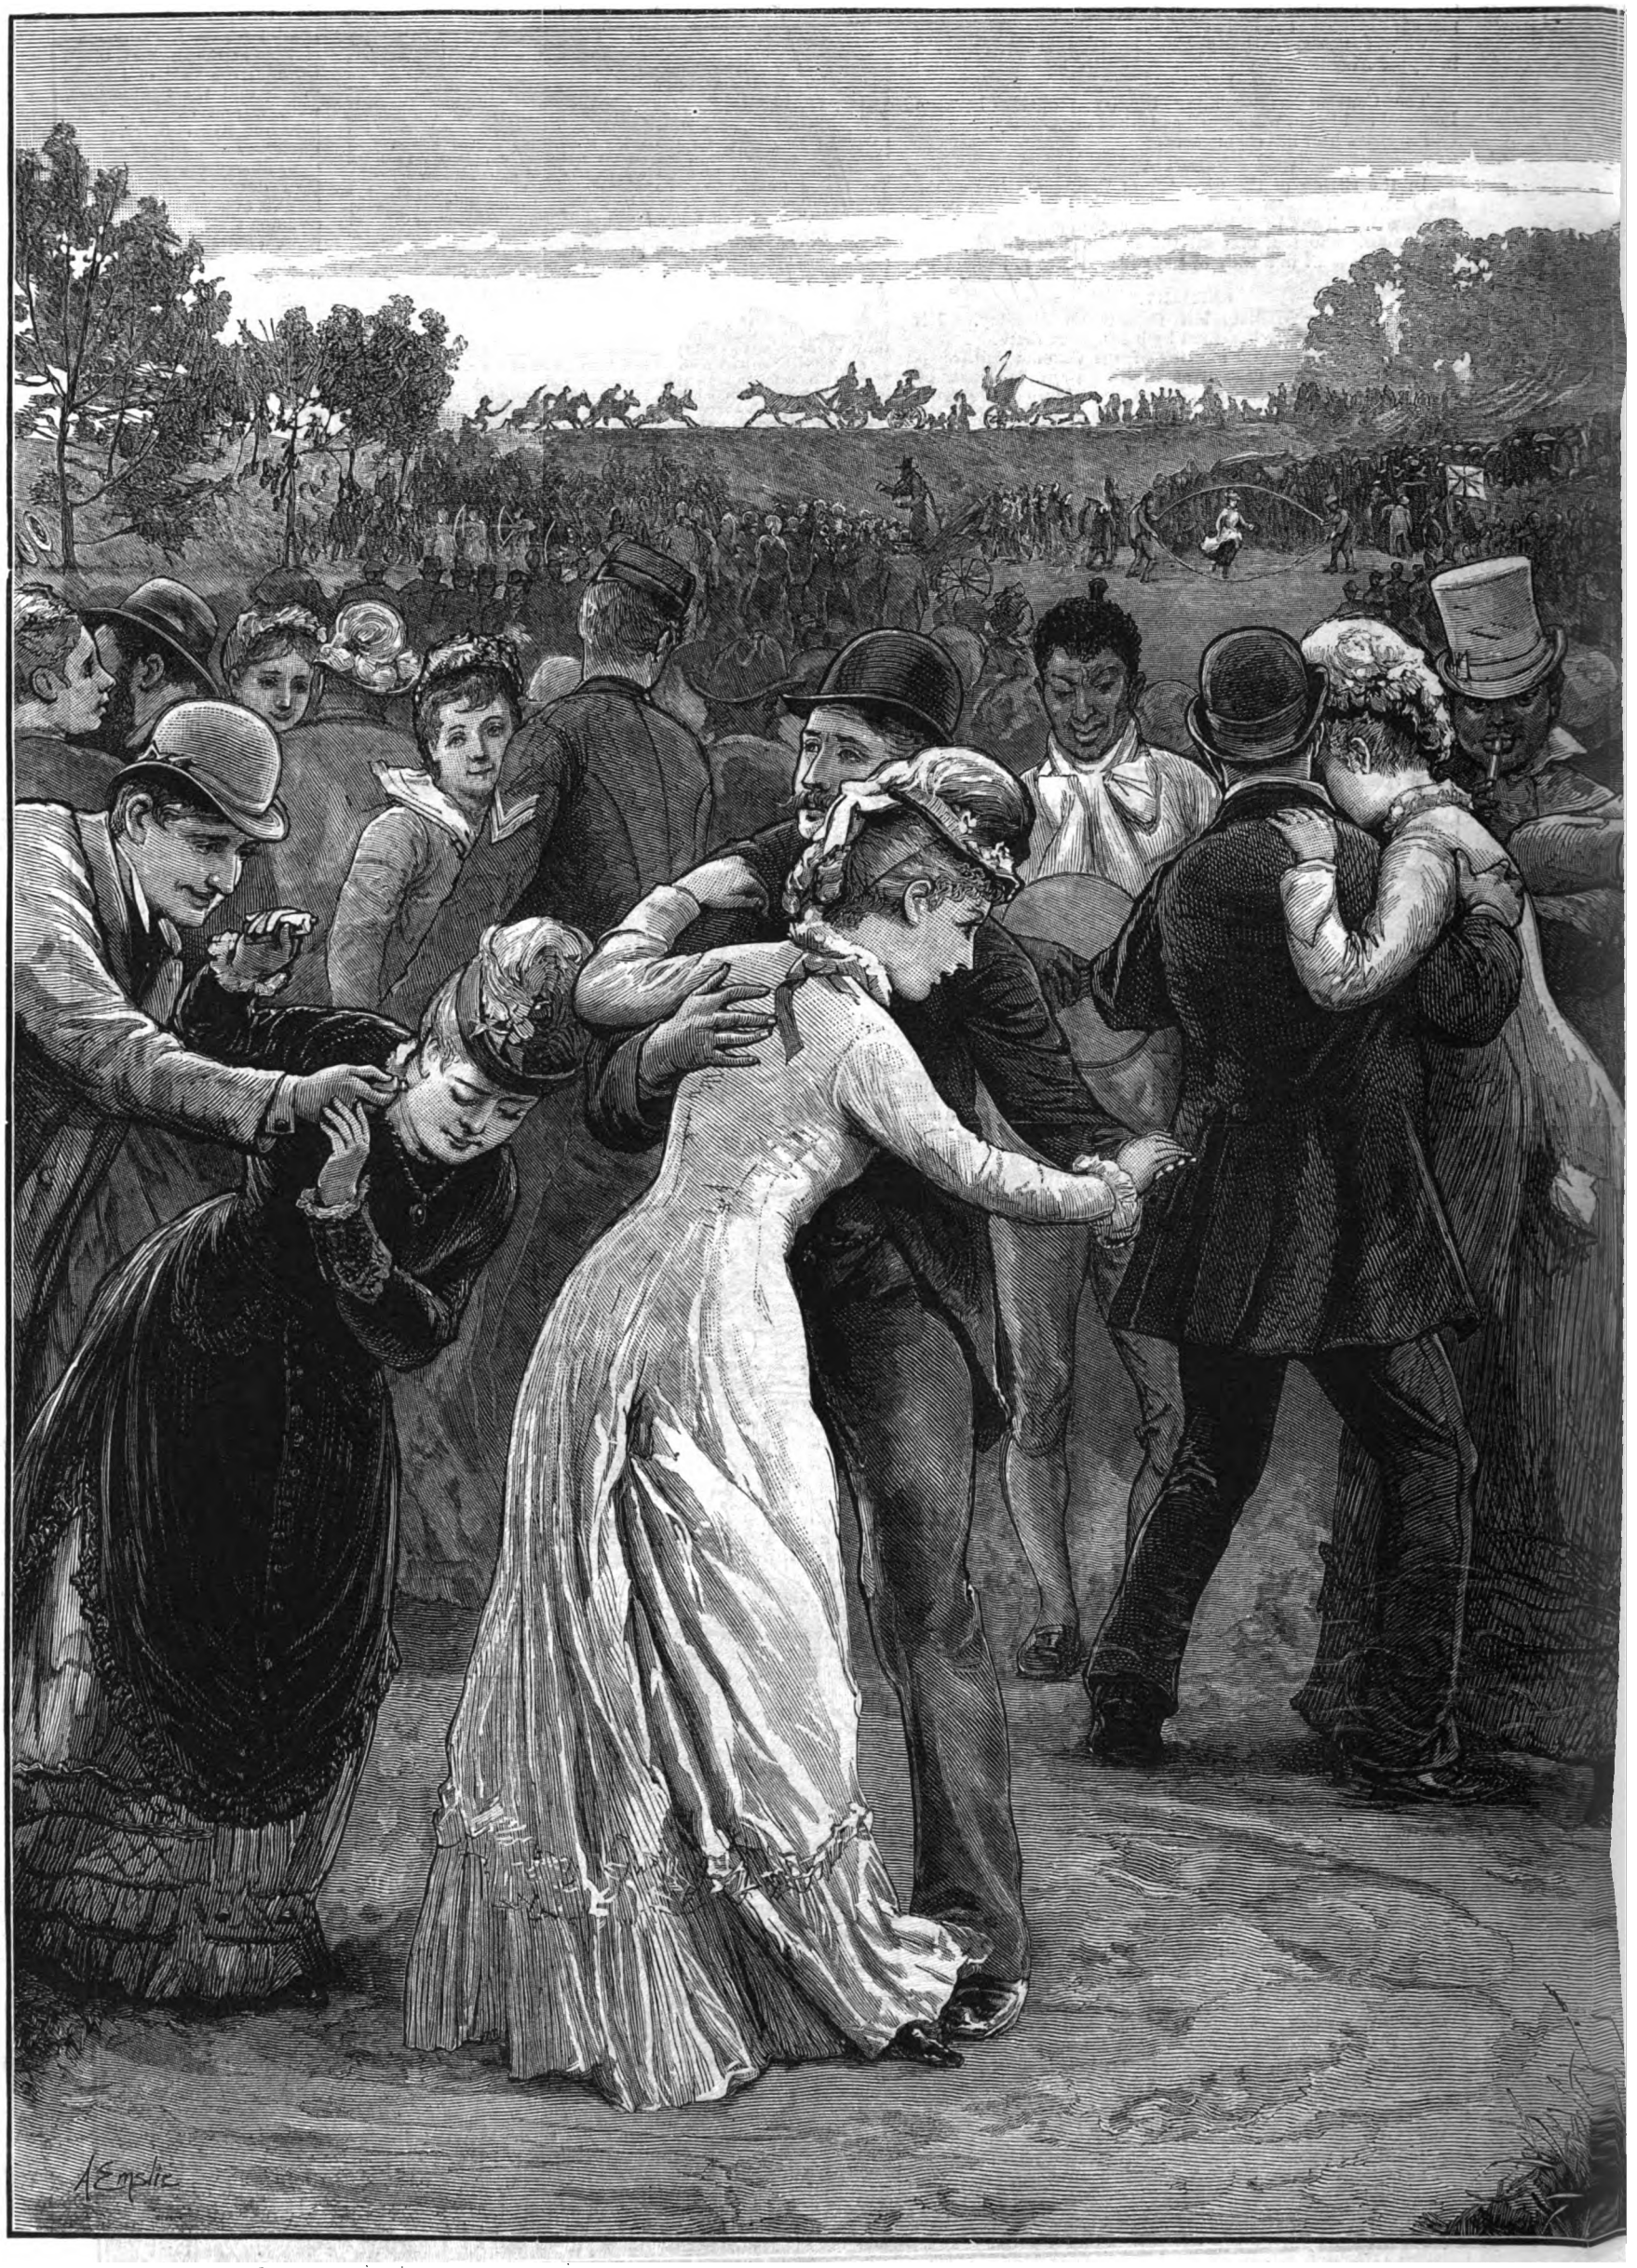
A Canadian now on a visit to London writes to correct a statement recently made public to the effect that 77,000 Canadian emigrants passed through Sarnia on their way to the United States during the last fiscal year. He states that the 77,000 who crossed over from Sarnia to Detroit in the year ending June 30 last were by no means all Canadians or all emigrants, but consisted, first, of persons from Europe passing through Canada by the steamers arriving at Montreal, who by the faulty arrangements of the American Consulate are classed as Canadians; second, of Europeans on their way to the North-Western territory of Canada, which cannot be reached at present from the east of Lake Superior, except through the United States; third, of native-born Canadians moving to the same North-West territory; and, fourth, of a small fraction of Canadians migrating to the United States, just as many Americans migrate to Canada.

The Times Geneva correspondent writes:—"A find of ancient tombs, supposed to have formed part of a Burgundian burying-ground, was made a short time ago at Assens, a village of Canton Vaud. These tombs, which follow each other in regular order, are hollowed out of the rock on a hill at the entrance of the village, about three feet below the soil. They are each two mètres long and eighty centimètres wide. At the head of each grave is a flat stone, dressed, but bearing no inscription. The bones are disposed in the ordinary way, as if the bodies to which they belonged had been laid down in a horizontal position, and not vertically, as in some tombs lately opened at Chamblandes, in the same canton. Fragments of tibiæ, femurs, and the clavicles were found, but no skulls. One of the tombs contained the bones of an adult and an infant, presumably of a mother and her child. Among the objects found are pieces of curiously wrought and chased metal and silver rivets, the remains, probably, of a warrior's glaive and sword-belt. In another of the tombs was a bell-mouthed vase of the capacity of half a litre, black as to its exterior, but in substance yellow. Whether the material of which it is composed be stone or burnt earth has not been determined. Inside as well as outside there are traces of lozenge-shaped figures, executed apparently with some graving tool. The chief interest of these tombs consists in the fact that they are almost certainly coeval with the arrival of the Burgundians in the Jura country in the fifth century, whither they were called by the aboriginal inhabitants to repeople the land, almost depopulated by an invasion of the Allemani. Being for the most part shepherds and hunters, they dwelt chiefly on the mountain slopes and in elevated valleys. The plateau of Mount Jorat appears to have been one of their most important settlements, and there can be little doubt that the origin of Assens, as well as of Cheseaux, where also Burgundian tombs have been found, dates back some 1400 years.

HOLIDAY ON HAMPSTEAD-HEATH.

The pleasantries of London popular diversion, "on the spree," taking a variety of customary forms which are simple enough, in all conscience, and may be innocent enough where the good folk, being merry and wise, keep any conscience at all, can still be witnessed on Hampstead-heath whenever there is a holiday for the working class in summer. From the railway station at South End, below the East Heath, up and down through the Vale of Health, and up again to Jack Straw's Castle and the Spaniards, many thousands of people—men, women, and children, but some of the men and women behaving like children—hang about in buzzing clusters, as numerous and superfluous as a swarm of insects, enjoying their liberty en masse, without much novelty or originality in their devices. Mr. Matthew Arnold, who from the serene heights of critical culture deigns to behold and reprove our common ways of life, would be very much shocked with this frank exhibition of the vulgarity prevailing in the Third Estate of the English nation, as he regards it, consisting of "Barbarians, Philistines, and Populace." But neither Dickens nor Shakspeare would be at all offended if his experience were equally fortunate with that of a friend of ours, who bore public testimony upon such an occasion that "he did not meet a drunken person, or witness an indecent act, or hear a quarrelsome or obscene word, in all that motley assemblage." Our friend had his eyes and ears about him, and had been a professional reporter of town and country doings for a quarter of a century past, so that he was not likely to have deceived himself about what actually happened within the range of his possible observation.

"Kiss-in-the-Ring," which used to be the favourite pastime for youths and girls above sixteen years of age, may, perhaps, have fallen somewhat out of fashion in these latter days, giving place to formal dancing. But it was, in the sober judgment of our peripatetic moralist, an honest and harmless kind of business, as well as extremely natural in its design and method; for that the maiden should run away and let herself be captured, and should pay the honourable forfeit of a chaste salute taken by the lad whom she had challenged to run after her, seems fair play all the world over. She knows what she is about, and she knows that all the company know it, when she drops her glove or handkerchief, or only a flower, at the heels of him who is destined to that charming pursuit. There is no prejudice to real feminine modesty in this case, any more than in certain figures of the orthodox dancing programme, which seem emblematic of lovers' pretended mutual avoidance and speedy return to one another, and all the play of alternate refusal and acceptance between them. As for kissing, when openly performed in the presence of male and female companions, it is as little formidable as any other manner of personal greeting; but it is much nicer for Jack and Mary in the Ring on Hampstead Heath.



The dance, however, which fills the main space of our Artist's drawing in this week's publication, is quite in accordance with the manners of polite society, as these people understand it; and they might fancy themselves polking or waltzing at a Countess's garden party, amidst the galaxy of rank and wealth and elegance that shines through two or three columns of names in the Morning Post. We recognise the sham negro minstrels, the fifer and fiddler, who supply the music here, as occasional performers in the by-streets opposite the Church of St. Clement Danes in the Strand. It is more convenient, on some business accounts, to hear them playing on Hampstead Heath. But for some of the younger class of dancers, the little girls who dance with each other—never yet did a little boy voluntarily join them—it will do quite as well that the most dismal old barrel-organ should grind out "Ah che la morte," or even the Old Hundredth Psalm. Best of all, when two or three discordant organs have taken post within thirty yards, and the third is playing "Mony Musk," or an Irish jig, to mix with the impassioned strains of the "Trovatore" and those one might hear at a village church or chapel. That is the strongest musical provocation for childish hearts and feet, with the levity of their sex, to start off in pretty rounds of waltzing, perhaps more enjoyable, certainly not less correct in movement, than those of their elder sisters with the most accomplished beaux holding them in hand as we see.

The minor amusements of the crowd on Hampstead-heath are equally familiar to every Londoner. There is the skipping-rope for girls, who have a wonderful natural aptitude for that feat, as they have for battle-dore and shuttlecock, and for anything which depends on rapid and punctual repetition of an identical movement, either with hand or foot. Why this should be a special gift of the sex, we invite physiologists or biologists to explain if they can; but such is undoubtedly the fact. Archery, pop-gunnery, and other methods of shooting—this is a good place to "shoot folly as it flies"—are practised, for moderate fees, in different parts of the ground. The stupid and ungraceful trick of squirting scented water from a little pocket-pistol of a glass bottle has apparently superseded that of rasping the back of a man's coat, or of a woman's frock or pelisse, with a small concealed instrument that makes a noise like tearing cloth. Rash and curious experimentalists at the galvanic apparatus may be treated to a sharp tingling and twitching of the nerves in any of the limbs or other parts of the body. Cheap Jack offers his wares for sale in his carriage up there to the left, while another merchant of two penny finery, the modern Autolycus, makes a tempting show of ribbons, and exerts his glibness of speech to beguile the maids into purchasing of him. The high road above is thronged with all kinds of vehicles, like the road to the Derby, besides donkeys and ponies, frightfully overriden, mounted by Tom, Dick, and Harry for an hour's equestrian glory. Everyone in his or her humour takes some part or other, foolishly and idly, perhaps, but seldom viciously, in the miscellaneous funniment of Hampstead-heath on a Holiday. And we are glad that it is fine weather, and that they are all free to do as they like—down to the boy and girl who have exchanged his cap for her bonnet, he wearing this, with its feather, and smoking his manly pipe—down to the baby-sister parading her new doll—down to the level of their common, indeed vulgar, sentiment often expressed in the question, "What's the odds so long as you're happy?"

It appears from the half-yearly report of the London General Omnibus Company recently issued that during the past half-year they carried 28,434,227 passengers. The average number of omnibuses working daily was 623; on Sundays, 529. The average traffic receipts per omnibus per week were £17 10s. 9½d.; the average traffic on working days, £2 11s. 3d.; total number of miles run, 6,602,698.

The Board of Trade returns for July were issued on Monday. The total declared value of the exports for the month is £20,270,579, against £16,611,122 in July, 1879. The total export for the first seven months of the year is £127,901,315, against £105,437,615 in the corresponding period of 1879. The total value of the imports for July was £33,352,595, against £30,186,072 in July, 1879. In the seven months ended July 31, the imports were in 1880, £211,613,348; in 1879, £205,287,795.

THE AMERICAN.

The American is upon us. At this particular season of this particular year, it is hardly an exaggeration to say that the American is all over us. This is the holiday season over the water—early in July, I believe, the thermometer had got up to about 105 degrees in New York—and perhaps the artistic successes of Americans among us of late years (at the Academy, in the concert-room, everywhere) have stimulated more of their brethren than ever to make the little trip. Anyhow, here they are: at our theatres, in our drawing-rooms, we hear the penetrating nasal voices—we are able to form a rough judgment of the nation without ten days of billowy discomfort. We cannot help noticing many differences between ourselves and these our brethren, which seem constant and characteristic.

I never met a stupid American; nor have I yet been fortunate enough to meet one who appeared remarkably clever. They are all, it would seem, readier in the display of what powers they have, than we English—as are most foreigners. They are free from what they call our British diffidence; while yet they do not appear quite so "cocksure of everything" (to quote the classical description of Macaulay) as are Germans and Frenchmen. None of them appear to be ill-read, most of them have a very good acquaintance with modern English literature and history; though they are not good linguists, and seem to judge things literary by a low standard—Eliza Cook would appear to hold "quite a position," as they would say, over there. So in art; so, very notably, in music; and, most of all, their manners and rules of etiquette bear this out—they are good of their sort, but the sort is a little odd to us.

Americans do not like our manner, chiefly, I believe, because in coming here they find theirs divided between two classes. The cultivated Yankee who gets among refined English people finds a freer style of address, a neglect of little ceremonies he has been taught to consider good breeding. He never hears the word "sir," or "ma'am"—perhaps he notices a little surprise when he uses it, which indicates that its employment has stamped him as of a lower class than his hearer. So, for a while, he is not at his ease; though of course a few months, or even weeks, will set him right. On the other hand, if he gets among what Society looks down upon as "very respectable people"—what Matthew Arnold brands as the company of Philistines—he finds, much more, the outward observances of his own country; but he cannot fail to become aware that he is in a lower grade than that which has been his—he misses the brightness, the knowledge, and the pleasantness of cultivation.

This is putting the question from a very British point of view; but, indeed, we can see deficiencies in the Americans of a sort that they cannot, in the nature of things, be aware of themselves. There is a curious want of finesse in their talk, of appreciation of the delicate values of words and thoughts. In spite of the quaint, dry American humour, their conversation is generally straightforward to the point of commonplaceness—they imply nothing, except when they indulge in a grotesque exaggeration, which is, as it were, the strong brandy of wit, not its delicate and perfumed wine.

But this question of manners has also its American point of view. There is no doubt that the average well-bred American tries much harder to be civil than the average well-bred Englishman: who too often directs his efforts in the opposite way, with painful success. And closely connected with this is the fact that young England is infinitely more affected than New England; our forced and "throaty" voice—terribly common among University men and their imitators—has no counterpart among the nasal but unaffected speakers of the States. One might almost sum up the matter by saying that, despite their worship of the almighty dollar, Americans are not nearly so much afflicted with the terrible disease of snobbishness as our unhappy selves.

One notable difference between the two peoples is that, while the English do not care a straw what America thinks of them, Americans are intensely sensitive about English opinion. An American lady said to me the other day that the chief fault she found with the British was that they did not think enough of her countrymen; and that those of us who have not visited the States have usually this fault is very true. The American manner has drawbacks, as has been said: and we are all too apt to take our ideas from the powerful, exquisitely amusing, but ill-natured and shallow caricatures of Dickens—caricatures, too, which have in a third of a century lost the greater part of what truth they possessed. Every five years America becomes perceptibly more civilised, less boastful and uncouth.

Still there is some excuse for the home-keeping Englishman's want of appreciation of his younger brother; and one is glad to know that the latter is surely and quickly growing less sensitive on the subject. The Civil War, it is said, did him a great deal of good—it showed that the Yankee could fight, and even (it may be) gave him a sort of historic dignity before lacking. The one thing that Brother Jonathan can not stand is the polite way in which John Bull simply declines to argue about the relative value of their national institutions—accepting, for instance, the statement that "our baseball 's a finer game than your cricket," with a courteous silence evidently based upon a feeling that the question is too ridiculous to discuss.

But I do not think that the English who have actually been to America can be accused of any desire to do it injustice. The immense energy and activity of its people, the wonderful desire for and pursuit of knowledge, the inventiveness and independence on every side, the "big things" attempted and done both by Nature and man, never fail to make their impression. The gaiety and hospitality of New York: the culture and the poetry of Boston: the houses of Chicago moved on rollers through the streets, with, characteristically, a piano playing inside: the sea-like rivers clear to the bottom: the tremendous thunderstorms: in every way the Briton is impressed with a "bigness" and an activity quite new to him. Even the dullest and the most bigoted of us—nay, those, perhaps, the most—come back entirely cured of any contempt for the Yankee with which we may have started. There may be many things we may not like; we may prefer our homes, our newspapers, our political institutions; but we can never again hope to laugh a reform or an invention out of court by simply calling it "American."

And in like manner those of the new country who have stayed long enough in the old to get used to its smallness, its dinginess, its unfamiliar ways and weather, generally grow to a great respect and liking for all of these—except the last. From the beginning, they have an intense interest in all that is old, that has associations known to them from books. "I believe, Sir," said an evident Yankee to a friend of mine in the Strand, some years ago, "that that is your Temple Bar. I believe that heads of political prisoners were frequently to be seen there, a while ago. We have nothing like that, Sir." Even the old inn in the Borough, where Sam Weller was first met by Mr. Pickwick and his friends, pleases them immensely; and for Stratford-on-Avon, an American would almost as soon think of missing Paris as that little country town.

The occupations of our women, their robust health, and durable good looks, seem also greatly to impress Brother Jonathan; though he does maintain that our most famous beauty would be "quite an ordinary type" on Broadway. Altogether, one may fairly say that he is getting to know us and to like us, and that we—in our slower way—are returning the compliment; and, in a word, that we may very well be glad to know that "the American" is upon us.

FINE ARTS.

On Tuesday last the first stone was laid of the new memorial structure which the Corporation of London is about to erect on the site of old Temple Bar. In the stone a vase was deposited, containing a medallion made from the lead of the old bar, a photograph of that edifice, the coins of the realm, and a parchment inscribed with particulars of the memorial. The new structure will be of an elaborate and handsome character, from designs by Mr. Horace Jones, the City Architect. It will be 37 ft. high, 5 ft. wide, and 8 ft. long. The base will be of polished Guernsey granite, the next tier of Balmoral granite, and above that there will be red granite from the same quarry as that used in the Albert Memorial in Hyde Park. In the niches on the north and south side will be lifesize figures in marble of the Queen and the Prince of Wales, by Mr. Boehm, and in panels on the sides will be reliefs in bronze, by Mr. Mabey and Mr. Kelsey, of the Queen's first entrance into the City through Temple Bar in 1837, and of the procession to St. Paul's on the day of the thanksgiving for the Prince of Wales's recovery. The superstructure will be of hard white stone, and will be surmounted by a griffin, the heraldic emblem of the City, which is being executed by Mr. Birch. The inscription round the structure will be the words, "Here formerly stood Temple Bar." It is represented that the memorial will serve as a refuge for pedestrians in crossing between the Law Courts and Messrs. Childs' bank, and will not interfere with the traffic, for two lines of vehicles will be able to pass in the space of 16 ft. reserved on either side. In point of fact, however, 5 ft. in width cannot be abstracted from this already too narrow thoroughfare without diminishing the freedom of progression and contributing to the yearly increasing blockages of the City. We know of no sufficient reason for marking this particular boundary. Other similar landmarks—such as Ludgate, Aldgate, Cripplegate, and Bishopsgate—have been removed without loss of municipal prestige, rights, or privileges worth preserving. The need of a "refuge" is much more obvious where the thoroughfare is wide, like Regent-street; or still more where roads intersect, forming what the French call a rond point. Meanwhile, the stones of the old Bar remain in limbo, like those of the colonnade of Burlington House, and no attempt is made to re-erect a relic with many interesting historical associations attached to it, although several eligible sites have been named for it.

The twenty-third annual report of the trustees of the National Portrait Gallery has been presented to Parliament. The donations, which amounted to 238 in the last report, have now been augmented to 251. The additions include "The Convention of the Anti-Slavery Society" under the presidency of Thomas Clarkson, with a number of portraits of his contemporaries, painted by B. R. Haydon, and presented by the committee of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society; a portrait of the water-colour painter Copley Fielding, by Sir W. Boxall; another of Inigo Jones, copied by Old Stone from a picture by Vandyke, another of Maclise by E. M. Ward, a bust of Robert Owen, &c. The purchases, which were 345 in the last report, are now raised to 358. Among the new ones are portraits of Queen Mary II., by Gaspar Netscher; Prince Rupert, by Lely; Milton at the age of sixty-two, when blind, engraved by William Faithorne; and a bust of Benjamin West, by Chantry. A number of autograph letters have also been added, several of them from the correspondence of the late Sir Antony Panizzi. In the first six months of this year the visitors have amounted to 40,510. The gallery is open free every day except Friday. The trustees have acquired some rooms adjoining the present gallery, and hope soon to be able to fit them up for the use of art-students who wish to copy the portraits. The trustees suggest various improvements in the building, and they point out the existing danger from fire owing to the low narrow wooden passage which constitutes the approach to the gallery, and is surrounded with other wooden structures and inflammable materials of various kinds.

The pictures, &c., selected by the prize-holders of the Art-Union of London for the current year are now, and will continue to be, on view till the 28th inst., at the new galleries of the society, 112, Strand. The following are the principal prizes:—"Landscape and Cattle," by G. Cole, £200, selected by Mr. E. S. Webb; "In a Welsh Valley," £150, selected by Mr. E. G. Phillips; "Near Tintagel, Cornwall," by T. S. Croxford, £100, selected by the Rev. F. A. H. Fitzgerald. The impression, we regret to say, which the collection of prizes conveys to us is that even less good taste than usual has guided the selectors. There is scarcely a single work which, either in subject or execution, rises above the most hackneyed commonplace. The poorest and least deserving art is, as a rule, encouraged by these indiscriminate and indiscriminating prize-winners. A better principle for the conduct of an art-union is that of making a selection, in the first instance, by a committee of taste, as in the Scotch art-unions. The subscription plate of the London Art-Union for the ensuing year is a line engraving by A. Willmore, from a water-colour drawing by Mr. O. W. Brierly, representing "The Loss of the Revenge."

To the Doré Gallery have been added the two pictures by M. Gustave Doré which he contributed to the last Salon—i.e., "A Day Dream" and "The Rainbow Landscape," neither of them favourable examples of the artist as designer or painter. M. Doré is now engaged on a picture illustrating the text "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden." It is of colossal dimensions, like other of his scriptural subjects.

The Treasury has made provision in the Estimates of this year by means of which the National Gallery will not be closed during the month of October.

Mr. John Bright is again sitting to Mr. Ouless for a portrait, to be presented to the Manchester Reform Club by some friends of that institution.

A portrait of Mr. Mark Firth, also by Mr. Ouless, is about to be placed in the Cutlers' Hall, Sheffield, as part of the presentation made by the town to Mr. Firth for the generosity displayed by him in the erection and gift of Firth College.

We have received two bust-portraits, lifesize, of Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright, printed in colours by the National Fine-Art Association (Castle-street, Holborn), from paintings by Robert A. Muller.

A meeting has been held at Council House, Birmingham, under the presidency of the Mayor (Alderman Chamberlain), for the purpose of opening a subscription-list to raise the sum of £5000 necessary to claim the second moiety of the donation of £10,000 made by Messrs. Tangye Brothers, the well-known engineers, in aid of the fund for providing a local art-gallery and museum. Donations to the amount of £3000 were announced in the room. The Mayor stated that the Town Council had undertaken to erect a suitable building for an art-gallery, giving an area of 20,000 superficial feet, arranged somewhat on the plan of the South Kensington Museum, and the money required is for stocking it with suitable objects.

The Fine-Art Society, New Bond-street, intends during the month of October to exhibit a collection of the works of Bewick, comprising many of the sketches from which he executed his drawings on the block, some of the blocks themselves, and other objects of interest connected with his professional career.

The Mayor of Manchester has opened an art-exhibition in the New Islington Public Hall, Ancoats. The exhibition has been promoted by a number of philanthropic gentlemen for the benefit of the dwellers in that crowded locality.

A loan-exhibition of the works of the late Sam Bough and G. P. Chalmers, both of the Royal Scottish, has been opened in the Glasgow Institute of the Fine Arts.

M. Paul Chenavard, the French painter, has recently presented the town of Lyons with his whole collection of prints, comprehending as many as from twenty to thirty thousand examples, many of them of high value.

An interesting collection of old pictures, chiefly of the Flemish school, which have been brought together to illustrate the architectural history of Bruges, is now on view in the Halles of that city.

The death is announced of M. Lemaire, the eminent French sculptor, at the age of eighty-two. Among his best-known works are the statues of Kleber, Hoche, and Louis XIV. at Versailles, and the pediment sculptures of the Madeleine at Paris. He was a Bonapartist, and a deputy from 1852 to 1869.

OBITUARY.

LORD CLIFFORD OF CHUDLEIGH.

The Right Hon. Charles Hugh Clifford, eighth Baron Clifford, of Chudleigh, in the county of Devon, and a Count of the Holy Roman Empire, died on the 5th inst. at his seat, Ugbrooke Park. His Lordship was born July 27, 1819, the eldest son of Hugh Charles, seventh Lord Clifford of Chudleigh, by Mary Lucy, his wife, only daughter of Thomas Weld, Esq., of Lulworth Castle, Dorsetshire (afterwards Cardinal Weld), and was brother of the Most Rev. Dr. Clifford, Roman Catholic Bishop of Clifton, and of General Clifford, V.C., who recently held a command in Zululand. He succeeded to the Peerage at his father's death, Feb. 28, 1858, and married, Sept. 30, 1845, the Hon. Agnes Catherine Louisa, youngest daughter of William, eleventh Lord Petre, by whom he had five sons and seven daughters. His eldest son and successor, Lewis Henry Hugh, now ninth Lord Clifford, was born Aug. 24, 1851.

SIR PETER FITZGERALD, BART., KNIGHT OF KERRY.

Sir Peter FitzGerald, Bart., of Valentia and Ballinruddery, County Kerry, Knight of Kerry, J.P. and D.L., died at his seat on the 6th inst. This popular and esteemed gentleman was born Sept. 15, 1808, the fifth son of the Right Honourable Maurice FitzGerald, Knight of Kerry (for thirty-five years M.P. for the county of Kerry in the Irish Parliament, who filled at different times the offices of Commissioner of Customs, Lord of the Treasury and Admiralty, and Vice-Treasurer of Ireland), by his first wife, Maria, daughter of the Right Hon. David La Touche, of Marlay, County Dublin, and was descended from the very ancient Kerry family of FitzGerald, the head of which has for generations been known by the titular distinction of Knight of Kerry. He served as High Sheriff of the county of Kerry in 1849, and of the county of Carlow in 1875. He was formerly Deputy Vice-Treasurer of Ireland. The Knight of Kerry was a resident landlord, and devoted his time and wealth to the improvement of the homes of his tenantry, by whom he was deeply beloved. He was a strenuous supporter of the cause of Catholic Emancipation, and of the important Liberal Land and Church Measures of later years, and was created a Baronet only since the accession of the present Government. He married, Aug. 11, 1838, Julia, daughter of Peter Bodkin Hussey, Esq., barrister-at-law, of Farrinakilla House, County Kerry, and leaves four sons and seven daughters. His eldest son, now Sir Maurice FitzGerald, second Baronet, nineteenth Knight of Kerry, Equerry to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, and Captain Rifle Brigade, was born Feb. 6, 1844, and served as A.D.C. to Sir Archibald Alison during the Ashantee War.

MR. JACKSON, OF GREATHAM HALL.

Ralph Ward Jackson, Esq., of Greatham Hall, in the county of Durham, first M.P. for the Hartlepools, died on the 6th inst., at 9, Albion-street, Hyde Park, in his seventy-fifth year. He was third son of William Ward Jackson, Esq., of Normanby Hall, Yorkshire, by Susannah Louisa, his wife, daughter of Edwin Martin Atkins, Esq., of Kingston Lisle, Berks, and received his education at Rugby. Mr. Jackson was founder of the port and town of West Hartlepool, and sat in Parliament for the Hartlepools from 1868 to 1874. He married, in 1829, Susanna, second daughter of Charles Swainson, Esq., of Cooper Hill, in the county of Lancaster, and by her, who died in 1865, leaves an only surviving son, William Charles Ward Jackson, Esq., J.P. and D.L. for the county of Durham.

GENERAL SIR JOHN BLOOMFIELD.

General Sir John Bloomfield, G.C.B., Royal Horse Artillery, died on the 1st inst., at 108, Jermyn-street, aged eighty-six. He was son of Patrick Bloomfield, Esq., of Sligo, by Araminta, his wife, daughter of the late James Gildea, Esq., of Coslough, in the county of Mayo, was educated at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and entered the Army in 1810. Sir John served in the Peninsula and in France, including the battle of Vittoria, siege of San Sebastian, passage of the Bidassoa, and the battles of the Nivelle, Nive, Orthes, and Toulouse, for which he had the war medal and six clasps. He also served in the campaign of 1815, and was at the battle of Waterloo. He became Colonel Commandant Royal Artillery in 1866, and attained the rank of full General in 1876. He was formerly A.D.C. to her Majesty and Inspector-General of Artillery, and was made K.C.B. in 1867 and G.C.B. in 1873.

The deaths are also announced of—

Major-General Chamberlain, William Walker, Bombay Army, on the 29th ult., aged sixty-two.

Major William de Cardonnel Elmsall, late 1st Royal Dragoons, on the 30th inst.

Major William Henry Collins, R.E., on the 28th ult., at 78, Cromwell-road, aged forty-one.

Matthew Kelly, Esq., J.P. for Clare, on the 31st ult., at Doolough Lodge, Miltown, Malbay, aged eighty-six.

Joseph Kiteley, Esq., J.P., on the 5th inst., at The Lakes, Kidderminster, aged seventy-two.

Charles Milsom, Esq., J.P., on the 3rd inst., at 10, Darlington-place, Bath, aged eighty.

James Grignon, H.B.M. Consul at Riga, formerly Captain 37th Regiment, on the 27th ult., at Antwerp, aged sixty-seven.

The Rev. William Foster, late Fellow of Magdalen College, Cambridge, on the 4th inst., at Hilston, aged seventy-one.

J. C. Coffey, Esq., Q.C., late County Court Judge and Chairman of Quarter Sessions for Londonderry.

The Rev. Charles Williams Lloyd, for thirty-two years Rector of Aldham, on the 28th ult., in his seventy-first year.

Major William Burrows Edward Ellis, R.A., on June 22, at Fort Attock, Punjaub Frontier, aged forty-five. He served in the Crimea, and throughout the Abyssinian campaign.

The Rev. James H. Swainson, M.A., for many years Rector of Alresford, Essex, and Rural Dean, on the 4th inst., at Clarens, Switzerland, in his seventy-third year.

The Rev. Charles Howes, M.A., late Fellow of Dulwich College and youngest son of the late Rev. Francis Howes, M.A., Minor Canon of Norwich Cathedral, on the 3rd inst., in his sixty-seventh year.

Captain Gerard Auriol de Visme, 8th Hussars, on June 29, at Murree, Punjaub, from a blow of a stone dislodged by a goat on the side of a hill. He was only son of Edward de Visme, Esq., late of New Court, Gloucestershire.

The Right Honourable Margaret, Dowager Lady Willoughby de Broke, on the 3rd inst., at Plasnewydd, Anglesey, aged eighty-one. Her Ladyship was the third daughter of Sir John Williams, first Baronet of Bodelwyddan, county Flint, and was married, in 1829, to Henry Peyto, eighth Lord Willoughby de Broke, who died, without issue, Dec. 16, 1852.

The Hon. Mrs. Hodgson (Elizabeth), second daughter of the late Lord Denman, Lord Chief Justice of England, and sister of the present Lord Denman, on the 2nd inst., at West Brighton, aged seventy-two. She was married, May 3, 1838, to the Rev. Francis Hodgson, B.D., sometime Archdeacon of Derby, and Provost of Eton, who died Dec. 29, 1852.

William Henry Poynder, Esq., of Hillmarton and Hartham Park, Wilts, J.P. and D.L., on the 3rd inst., at 21, Upper Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, aged fifty-nine. Mr. Poynder was son of the late Thomas Poynder, Esq., of Hillmarton and Hartham, by Sarah Marianne, his wife, daughter of Allen Cooper, Esq., H.E.I.C.S. He was educated at Harrow, served as High Sheriff of Wiltshire in 1876, and was lord of the manor of Hillmarton, and a governor of Christ's Hospital.

Lieutenant-Colonel Cleland, commanding the 9th Queen's Royal Lancers, on the 7th inst., at Murree. The deceased officer was severely wounded while leading a portion of his regiment into action in Afghanistan on Dec. 11 last. Owing to the gravity of his wounds, it was found impossible to move him to England, or even to the coast. Colonel Cleland entered the army as Cornet in 1857, became Lieutenant in 1859, Captain 1864, Major 1878, Lieutenant-Colonel 1879.

Reginald Robert Walpole, Esq., of Hanslope Lodge, Bucks, M.A., J.P., barrister-at-law, on the 23rd ult., at Brighton. He was eldest son of the late Rev. Robert Walpole, Rector of Christ Church, Marylebone, by Caroline, his wife, daughter of Sir John Hyde, formerly Chief Justice of Calcutta. Mr. Walpole, who was educated at Caius College, Cambridge, was formerly Reader on the Law of Real Property to the Hon. Society of Gray's Inn. He was twice married, and leaves four daughters.

The Rev. Joseph Dunnington-Jefferson, of Thicket Priory, Yorkshire, Canon of York and Incumbent of Thorganby, M.A., J.P., on the 31st ult., aged seventy-three. He was the eldest son of Joseph Dunnington, Esq., of Thicket Priory, and assumed the additional surname of Jefferson in 1841. Educated at St. John's College, Cambridge, he graduated M.A. in 1834. He married, 1839, Anna Mervynia, eldest daughter of the late General Sir Henry Mervyn M. Vavasour, Bart., of Spaldington, Yorkshire, and leaves, with other issue, a son, Joseph John Dunnington-Jefferson, Esq., M.A., barrister-at-law.

Mr. William Henry Giles Kingston, the well-known writer of books for boys, at his residence at Willesden, on the 5th inst., at the age of sixty-six. His first work, "The Circassian Chief," was written in 1844, and was followed by "The Prime Minister," a Portuguese story of the Marquis of Pombal, and Lusitanian sketches, being his own travels and adventures in Portugal. In 1851 appeared "Peter the Whaler," which still forms an attractive book for the young. In all, Mr. Kingston produced about 125 books, foremost among which are "The Three Midshipmen," "The Three Lieutenants," "The Three Commanders," and "The Three Admirals," a popular History of the Navy, and works for soldiers and sailors.

 We are glad to be able to state that Colonel Alexander William Adair, whose death was announced in our last issue, is alive.

From various parts of the country reports have been received of considerable damage caused by the brisk gale and heavy downpour of rain on Saturday and Sunday. Several shipping disasters are recorded, and in many districts the crops have suffered severely.

The Inkstand, of which we lately gave an Illustration, was presented by the officers of the 4th Goorkhas to the officers of the 4th Battalion of the Rifle Brigade; not by the Rifle Brigade to the Goorkhas; but there was an exchange of regimental courtesies.

The Committee of Council on Education, at the request of Lord Aberdare, President of the Royal Historical Society, have granted the use of the Lecture Theatre at South Kensington for a course of lectures on history, to be delivered by Dr. Zerffi, beginning early in November and to be continued every Saturday afternoon for nine months. A prize of ten guineas for an essay on the study of History has been offered by the Society in connection with this course. This is, we believe, the first systematic effort ever made to popularize history as a branch of general education. Young persons attending Board schools will be admitted without charge. The Society contemplates further arrangements with a view to promote the study of history.

CHESS.

OLD BOY (Northampton).—Your suggestion is apt enough; and, as it may entertain some of our readers, we give it publicity. Transfer the White which stands, in Problem No. 1901, at Q B 2nd, from that square to Q B 4th, and mate in three moves.

H C B (Wandsworth).—In Problem No. 1879, White's answer to 1. P to K B 4th (dis.ch) is 2. P to K 5th, interposing and discovering checkmate.

C F J (Swansea).—You shall have an early report upon the problem.

R R (Golden Cross).—Thanks. If the games between Major Jaenisch and M. Petroff have not appeared before, they shall have early publication.

L S (Carlisle).—(1) We believe that only one number was published. (2) The Chess-players' Chronicle can be obtained from W. Morgan, 23, Great Queen-street, and the Huddersfield Magazine from Mr. Watkinson, Fairfield, Huddersfield. (3) There is no American monthly "exclusively devoted to chess."

D W K (Battersea).—The portrait of the late Mr. Staunton appeared in our Issue of July 4, 1874. A copy can be obtained from the publisher.

NERINA (Mayfair).—The problem is too elementary in construction; nevertheless it shows promise, and we shall be glad to see more of your work.

VA (U.S.A.).—Correct solution of No. 1898. Your last letter arrived too late for acknowledgment the week it was received.

REV JNO WILLS (Portland, U.S.A.).—Correct solution of No. 1899.

M S H (Bermuda).—The problem duly received.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM No. 1901.

WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to B 6th	P takes P (best)*
2. Q to Q R 3rd	K takes R, or any move.
3. Q to Q 6th. Mate.

* The variations are obvious.

PROBLEM No. 1904.
By F. J. KELLNER (Vienna).

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

Played at the Divan between the Rev. Mr. MACDONNELL and another Amateur.

WHITE (Mr. E.)	BLACK (Mr. M.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. Kt to Q B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. P to K B 4th	P takes P
4. P to Q 4th	Q to R 5th (ch)
5. K to K 2nd	P to Q 4th
6. P takes P	Q to K 2nd (ch)

This manœuvre, originated by Mr. Macdonnell, forces White to accept a draw or content himself with an inferior opening.

7. K to B 2nd

If 7. K to B 3rd, Black continues with 7. Kt to K B 3rd.

7.	Q to R 5th (ch)
8. P to Kt 3rd	P takes P (ch)
9. P takes P	Q takes R

The plain course, 9. Q takes P (ch), exchanging Queens with a Pawn to the good, seems much preferable to locking up the Queen thus early in the game.

10. B to Kt 2nd	Q to R 7th
11. P takes Kt	Kt to B 3rd

11. B to Q 3rd or 11. P takes P are alternative moves here worthy of examination. We prefer the former.

12. B to B 4th	B to Q 3rd
13. Q to K 2nd (ch)	K to B sq

He might, we think, have interposed the B at K 3rd, for White cannot attempt to win it by 14. P to Q 5th, because of the reply, 14. B to B 4th (ch).

14. R to K sq	B to K 3rd
15. P takes P	Q R to Kt sq
16. B takes B (ch)	P takes B
17. Q to R 6th

Apparently the best move. There is not much to be gained by advancing the Pawn to Q 5th, although Black cannot, of course, capture it without losing a piece at least.

17.	Kt to Kt 5th (ch)
18. K to B 3rd	P to Kt 3rd
19. Q takes P (ch)	K to Kt 2nd
20. Kt to R 3rd	K R to Q sq
21. Q to K B 4th	R takes Kt P
22. R to K R sq	R takes Kt P
23. R takes Q

If he had played 23. Q to Q B sq, with the view of defending the Q B P, Black would have won offhand by 23. Q takes B (ch), 24. R takes P (ch), and 25. Kt to K 6th (ch), &c.

23.	Kt takes R (ch)
24. K to B 2nd	R takes P (ch)
25. K to Kt sq	Kt to Kt 5th
26. B to B 3rd	R to K sq

A very neat coup. Should White now capture the Knight with the Bishop, then follows B takes B, and White must lose a piece.

27. Kt to K 4th	B to B 4th
28. K Kt to B 2nd	Kt takes Kt
29. Kt takes Kt	R to K 8th (ch)
30. K to Kt 2nd	B to Q 6th
31. P to Q 5th	B to B 8th (ch)
32. K to Kt sq	B to K 7th (disch)
33. K to Kt 2nd	B takes B (ch)

An oversight, of course. By checking with the Bishop at B 8th, and discovering check alternately, White would have been forced to accept a draw.

34. K takes B	R to K B 8th
35. Q to K 5th (ch)	K to Kt sq
36. Q to Kt 8th (ch)	K to Kt 2nd
37. Q takes Q R P, and Black resigned.

One of sixteen Games played simultaneously by Captain MACKENZIE in New York.—(Sicilian Opening.)

WHITE (Capt. M.)	BLACK (Mr. B.)
1. P to K 4th	P to Q B 4th
2. P to Q 4th	P takes P
3. P to Q B 3rd	P takes P
4. B to Q B 4th	P to K 3rd
5. Kt to K B 3rd	P takes P

The capture of the third Pawn gives White an overwhelming superiority in the opening.

6. B takes P	B to Q Kt 5th (ch)
7. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Kt to K B 3rd
8. Castles	B takes Kt
9. Kt takes B	Castles
10. P to K 5th	Kt to K sq
11. Kt to K 4th	Kt to Q B 3rd
12. P to K B 4th	Q to Kt 3rd (ch)
13. R to B 2nd	P to K B 3rd
14. Q R to Kt sq	P takes P
15. Q B takes P	Q to Q sq
16. B to Q 6th	Kt takes B
17. Q takes Kt	Kt to K 2nd

17. Q to K 2nd is the correct move here.

18. P to B 5th	K to R sq

If 18. Kt takes P, 19. R takes Kt, R takes R; 20. B takes P (ch), &c.

19. P to B 6th	Kt to B 4th
20. P takes P (ch)	K takes P
21. Q to K 5th (ch)	K to R 3rd
22. R to Q Kt 3rd	P to Q 4th
23. R to K R 3rd (ch)	K to Kt 3rd
24. R to Kt 3rd (ch)	K to R 4th
25. B to K 2nd (ch), and wins.

The suspicion we expressed last week that a second problem of a set competing in the Leghorn Tourney under the motto "Tamajo Caros Nipomi Kotos" was an old acquaintance, has been speedily confirmed. The problem, which was described last week, is the composition of Mr. W. S. Pavitt, and it was published in the Illustrated London News for July 11, 1868. We are indebted to Mr. A. E. Studd for the identification, which we have verified by comparison of the two positions.

It is a trite observation that the only way to test the accuracy of a chess problem is to publish it, and then much depends upon the medium of publication. Mr. Burden, whose retirement from the chess world is a deprivation to the present generation of amateurs, was always ready to lay odds against the accuracy of any given problem, whether it had been published or not, and found very few to accept the challenge. It appears now that, notwithstanding the examination to which the prize problems of the American tourney were subjected by such experts as Messrs. Carpenter, Cook, and Waterbury, these compositions have been already demolished by the public. The Turf, Field, and Farm announces that the set "Per aspera ad astra," from which we extracted a pretty two-move problem last week, has been disqualified, owing to one of the problems being proved to be unsound. The set "Varieties" is also disqualified for a similar reason.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated March 26, 1877) with three codicils (each dated Oct. 29, 1879) of the late Edward Lord Belper, who died on June 30 last, has been proved by the executors, Henry Lord Belper and the Hon. Frederick Strutt, in the Nottingham district registry of the Court of Probate. The personal estate was sworn under £200,000. The real estates in Newton Burgoland, Snarestone and Swepstone (part), in the county of Leicester, and in Mackworth, Markeaton, Ilkeston, and Little Hallam, in the county of Derby, are left to his son, the present Lord Belper, in fee; the estates in Kingston (including country seat, Kingston Hall), West Leake, and elsewhere in the county of Nottingham, and Normanton, Swepstone (remainder), and Kegworth, in the county of Leicester, are left to the present Peer in strict settlement. The estates in St. Alkmund's, Derby, are left two-thirds to the present Lord Belper and one-third to the Hon. Frederick Strutt. Provision is made for an unmarried daughter, and for the infant son of the Hon. Arthur Strutt (deceased). To Lady Belper (the widow) is given the town residence, No. 75, Eaton-square, with its contents, and an annuity in addition to that secured by her marriage settlement. The residue of the real and personal estate is left to the present Lord Belper and the Hon. Frederick Strutt in equal shares.

The will (dated May 21, 1879) of Mr. William Henry Nicholson, late of St. Margaret's next Rochester, Kent, who died on June 15 last, was proved on the 31st ult. by William Smith Nicholson, Henry Frederick Nicholson, and Stuart James Nicholson, the sons, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Nicholson, £500 and his furniture, plate, pictures, household effects, horses and carriages absolutely, and his residence in St. Margaret's, together with an annuity of £1000 for life; after her death such residence is to go to his son William Smith, to whom he also devises some other freehold houses and lands. There are pecuniary legacies to his other children, and £100 to his coachman, Thomas Mutton; £9000 each is left upon trust for his daughters, Mrs. Isabella Caroline Wray and Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Talbot, and a further sum of £4000 each on the death of their mother. As to the residue of his real and personal estate, he leaves eight twentieths to his son William Smith and six twentieths each to his sons Henry Frederick and Stuart James.

The will (dated March 23, 1876) with a codicil (dated Sept. 26, 1877) of Mr. George Clive, J.P., D.L., late of Perrystone, near Ross, Herefordshire, and of Ballycroy, Mayo, Ireland, who died on June 7 last, was proved on the 31st ult. by Lieutenant-Colonel Edward Henry Clive, the son, the surviving executor, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator devises and bequeaths all his estates and property in Australia, the Ballycroy estate in Ireland, his estate at Perrystone, and all his personal estate to his wife, Mrs. Annsybella Clive, absolutely; but, as to his Irish estate, on the condition that she occupies the home farm on the expiration of the present tenant's lease. The deceased was member of Parliament, in the Liberal interest, for Hereford from 1857 to 1868, and again from 1874 until the last dissolution. His official experience was somewhat varied: he was formerly an assistant Poor Law Commissioner, then a police magistrate in London, and afterwards for ten years Judge of the Southwark County Court; subsequently, from 1859 to 1862, he held the office of Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

The will (dated Feb. 18, 1876) with a codicil (dated June 4, 1880) of Mrs. Annie Hessey Anderson, late of The Oaks, Balcombe, Sussex, who died on June 27 last, was proved on the 22nd ult. by George Carpenter Anderson, the son, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testatrix leaves all her property to or upon trust for her two sons, George Carpenter and Henry Archibald.

The will (dated April 28, 1879) of Mr. George Buckton, late of North Hill in Roundhay, Barwick in Elmet, Yorkshire, engineer, who died on March 16 last, has been proved by Alan Lupton and Joseph Estlin Carpenter, the sons-in-law, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Buckton, his household furniture and effects, horses and carriages; to his daughters, Mrs. Emma Lupton and Mrs. Alice Mary Carpenter, £200 per annum each during the life of his wife; and the residue of his real and personal property upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his children.

The will (dated Nov. 12, 1878) of Mr. Charles Trevor, formerly Controller of the Legacy and Succession Duties, Somerset House, and late of No. 18, Norfolk-crescent, Paddington, who died on the 5th ult., was proved on the 2nd inst. by Charles Cecil Trevor and William Charles Trevor, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths his furniture, plate, linen, china, and other household effects to his two daughters, the Misses Jane Maria and Caroline Trevor; and the residue of his personal estate between all his eight children.

The will (dated Sept. 3, 1870) of Mr. George Dudley Ryder, formerly of No. 15, Portland-place, Brighton, but late of No. 16, Palace-gardens-terrace, Kensington, who died on June 19 last, was proved on the 19th ult., under a nominal sum, by George Lisle Ryder and the Rev. Cyril Ryder, the sons, the acting executors. The testator exercises the powers of appointment given to him by his marriage settlements and other deeds over various sums of stock in favour of his children; the residue of the personalty he gives to his daughter, Beatrice Mary, if unmarried at his decease, and his real property to his son George Lisle.

CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

The following, in order of merit, are declared by the Civil Service Commissioners to be the successful candidates at the recent open competition for the Civil Service of India. Their selection is conditional on their passing a medical examination:—

Archdale Earle, Arthur Leslie Saunders, Arthur Baker, Maurice Walter Fox-Strangways, Walter Henry Merk, William James Guthrie, Charles George Crump, Reginald Hugh Brereton, William George Louis Rice, Lionel Slade Carey, Arnold Eardley Hurry, Ross Arthur Leslie Moore, Peter Henry O'Brien, Elliott Graham Colvin, Allan Stopford Fleming, Alexander Lauzun Pendock Tucker, Henry Paul Todd-Naylor, Frank Campbell Gates, Alexander Francis Maconochie, Arthur William Davis, Arthur Shaw Womack, William Doderet, Herbert W. Foster, Henry William James Bagnell, William Ogilvie Horne, Reginald Heber Shipley, and David Doig Murdoch.

Vice-Chancellor Malins had before him on the 5th inst. an application for the administration of the estate of an old miser named Rhodes, of Pomona-place, Hounslow, who died worth £60,000. It appeared that he had commenced making money by picking up cigar ends in the streets; that he had lived in a state of filth and discomfort; and that he had left all his property to the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's-inn-road, and the Life-Boat Institution. The will was disputed by the next of kin, the deceased's nephews and nieces, and the two charities had consented to pay them a sum of £1050. The Vice-Chancellor sanctioned the arrangement, and ordered the remainder of the fund to be paid out to the two charities.

FANCY DRESSES.—ENGLISH AND FOREIGN MANUFACTURE.

The popularity of Printed Cotton Fabrics has almost OBLITERATED the sale of Woollen Dress Goods this season. I find the Department clogged with an immense Surplus Stock that must be cleared before Stocktaking. To effect this, the whole has been re-marked, with the view of a complete clearance. The absurdly low prices must attract the most sceptical; for instance, beautiful materials that cost me 10d., 12d., and 14d. per yard will be sold for 6½d., 8½d., and 11½d. per yard. Wonderful Bargains.

FAILURE OF A LARGE SHIPPING FIRM.

An extraordinary purchase of several thousand yards of Dress Fabrics in nine-yard lengths, in many instances twenty lengths of the same style; these I shall make up into Bundles of fifty-four yards, and dispose of them at 27s. the lot, or at the rate of 6d. per yard, for goods varying in value from 9d. to 2s. 6d. Sets of Patterns free.

Edward Cope, Esq., of New Bashford Mills, and Arboretum-street, Nottingham.
John Harrison, Esq., of the Linthorpe Art Pottery, Middlesborough, and of Darlington.
ART SUPERINTENDENT.—Dr. Christopher Dresser, F.L.S., &c., of Tower Cressy, Notting-hill, London, W.
MANAGER.—Sir Edward Lee, of 82, Gloucester-crescent, Regent's Park, London.
SECRETARY.—Robert Smith, Esq., 157, New Bond-street, London, W. (to whom all communications should be sent).
BANKERS.—The City Bank (Limited), Bond-street, London, W.
SOLICITORS.—Messrs. Fowler and Perks, of 17, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C.
Registered Offices.—157, New Bond-street, London, W.
No promotion fees, nor any expenses other than those rendered necessary by the legal arrangements and by advertising, have been incurred.
The Articles of Association may be seen on application to the Secretary.
This Alliance is established to supply the general public with artistic house-furnishing requirements of the best description, including furniture, carpets, wall decorations, hangings, pottery, table glass, silversmiths' wares, hardware, &c.
The advanced standard of public taste attained during the last few years has created an unprecedented demand for art-objects, and there is no establishment in Great Britain where only works of true art-excellence can be procured; it is to meet this want that the Art-Furnishers' Alliance has been formed, under conditions which are eminently calculated to ensure its financial success.
The art direction, general arrangements, and selection of the exhibits have been intrusted to Dr. Christopher Dresser, the well-known authority on all art subjects, and no object, whether an important work or mere adjunct of furnishing, will be exhibited unless its art qualities are duly tested. The public will thus have an absolute guarantee that every article sold, whether costly or cheap, will possess intrinsic art merit as regards its originality, design, and execution.
Arrangements have been made with many of the leading manufacturers to consign to the Alliance such objects of artistic excellence as the directors consider of reasonable price; thus the Alliance avoids the all-important risk of purchasing unsaleable goods and being burdened with a remainder of useless stock.
The directors have secured on favourable terms extensive premises in the best position in New Bond-street (No. 157). The entire building is new, and it is expected that in the course of a few weeks the decorations, &c., will be complete, and the collections, already secured, displayed to the public.
A number of shares has been taken by the directors and their friends, and the remainder of the first issue of 5000 is now offered at par, £1 per share to be paid on application and £2 on allotment. Forms can be obtained at the Offices of the Alliance, 157, New Bond-street, W., on application personally, or by letter to ROBERT SMITH, Secretary.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL and COMFORTING.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 21, 1880.

The Parliamentary Session continues, and, for aught we see, will continue a fortnight longer at least, and, perhaps, more than a fortnight. Slowly, wearily, but doggedly, the Legislature is achieving the work set down for it. Some of the bills before it may possibly be dropped, but there is yet a vast deal of business to be done which, quite independently of the will of the Cabinet, must be done before the Prorogation comes. The Estimates of National Expenditure are not yet entirely got through. The Appropriation Bill has not yet been brought forward, and the projects of Legislation mentioned in the Queen's Speech will yet occupy a considerable portion of the time available for discussion. No one can justly, or even plausibly, accuse either the House of Commons, or the Government, of any lack of industry in dealing with Public Affairs, and it is not quite "off the cards" that before it separates Parliament will complete the measures which it has begun, and, if so, it will complete them at no trivial self-sacrifice. The 12th of August has already passed away—the 1st of September will probably do likewise before it rises for the vacation. All must do homage to the patriotic determination which keeps together the two Houses for the good of the country; while all must lament that, in conformity with the habits of our legislating class, the distribution of public work makes so large and unnecessary a demand upon social enjoyments and personal pleasures.

The Recess, which is anxiously looked forward to by noble lords and hon. and right hon. members, offers but a poor prospect of recreation to the Ministers of State. So far as England and Scotland are concerned, there is no visible likelihood of disquietude to trouble them. No one, of course, can predict with any certainty that things within Great Britain may not suddenly and unexpectedly take a shape which will call for the utmost vigilance. But neither here nor in the Colonies, do serious prognostications point in the direction of disturbance—political, social, commercial, or economical. We do not say that the Government can adopt in the fulness of its original sense the exclamation of the late Sir Robert Peel on first taking office after the Reform Bill—"Our chief difficulty is Ireland." But, unquestionably, the auguries which present themselves in relation to the Sister Isle assume a very unpleasant character for the approaching autumn and winter months. These auguries may turn out to be delusions, but they have an ominous look about them, like thick clouds on the horizon lit up now and then by an electric flash; they naturally turn one's thoughts to a seemingly approaching tempest. They are, perhaps, more threatening in their aspect than in their substance. They may disappear, or they may give us a stormy night. A good Harvest, which in Ireland seems to be more probable than in England or in Scotland this year, may do not a little towards neutralising for the time being the acute hostility of the Tenant Farmers class towards that of Landlords—hostility rendered more bitter by the rejection by the Lords of the Compensation for Disturbance Bill, and inflamed, even to a point of danger, by exciting speeches delivered here and there by men having great influence over the peasantry. The movements which are taking place, under the direction of the Government, of the Irish constabulary and of military forces, prove that the Chief Secretary is not blind to the perils with which he will have to grapple. But, in this case as in others, "forewarned is forearmed." We can hardly anticipate an outbreak of insurrectionary violence. There is no sufficient organisation of national discontent to warrant any expectation of that kind. But local eruptions there may be which will render it a matter of some difficulty to protect life and property in certain districts, and much practical wisdom of administration will be needed to maintain the supremacy of Law in the face of the social opposition to which it may be there exposed. This is, for many reasons, to be deplored, but chiefly because while such a state of things cannot but inflict great sufferings upon individuals and families, it will do nothing to help forward that permanent reform which the Government are understood to have in contemplation for the relief of Irish distress. Patience we shall all need under the trial which seems to threaten us; and the power of sympathy and patience in dispersing bad humours in any limb of the body politic, especially when expressed by deeds as well as words, is wellnigh magical.

Nor, if we turn our eyes Eastward, can we see any immediate promise of repose for her Majesty's advisers. The reports from Afghanistan, it is true, are more favourable than they have been since the defeat of General Burrows by Ayoub Khan. The new Ameer is gradually drawing towards the post to which he had aspired. Cabul is quiet. General Roberts is on his way to Candahar, and the chiefs of the territory through which his army is passing have hitherto maintained an attitude of quiescence. No serious apprehensions are felt by the Government of India that he will fail in the mission which has been intrusted to his guidance and gallantry. Still, what is most likely to happen is the unexpected. We are not out of Afghanistan yet, though there are good grounds for hoping that we soon shall be. Meanwhile, much anxiety prevails at the India House. Heavy expenses are being incurred in sending off reinforcements in anticipation of the customary reliefs. And when tranquillity shall have been restored to the North-West Frontiers of India, and the Afghan episode has at length been brought to a close, it will be seen and remembered, we trust, how much easier it is to rush into war than to extricate ourselves from the long train of evils which war (especially where it is unjust and unnecessary) inevitably brings with it.

As to our relations with Turkey and the South-Eastern Nationalities of Europe, it seems to be taken for granted that the Signatary Powers of the Berlin Treaty have little else to do than stand fast in the demands they have made upon the Porte, and patiently wait the issue of their combined intervention. But Lord Granville will have no sinecure during the next two months. The death, at the advanced age of ninety-two, of Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, who held for so many years, and with such signal success, the post of Ambassador to Constantinople, will remind the noble Secretary for Foreign Affairs of the main qualities essential to a triumphant diplomacy in that part of the world, and of the severe tests to which his forbearance will be exposed. The policy which he pursues cannot be regarded as identical with the policy of Lord Stratford; but, in its main lines, it does not much differ from it, and is likely to prove quite as troublesome. That he may be able to enjoy an interval of rest during the coming holidays is a desire which we can more cordially entertain than confidently expect.

As a statement in last week's "Echoes," to the effect that a certain cab company had been "engulfed in the waters of liquidation," might, we are informed, be supposed by some persons to refer to the British Cab Company Limited, we gladly announce that this company is alive and in robust health.

The Queen has conferred upon Mr. E. J. Reed, M.P., the honour of a Knight Commandership of the Bath.

Tuesday's Gazette announces that the Queen has made the following appointments to the Order of St. Michael and St. George:—Lieutenant-Colonel F. G. E. Warren, R.A.; Captain A. G. Wauchope; Gerald Fitzgerald, Esq., to be Ordinary Members of the Third Class, or Companions; and Colonel John C. M'Neill, to be an Ordinary Member of the Second Class, or Knight Commander.

A body of Swedish gentlemen, about forty-five in number, members of the Stockholm Gymnastic Club, gave a display illustrative of the Swedish system of education at the Crystal Palace on Saturday last. Under the Swedish system, a pupil learns to use his left arm equally with his right, and the display of efficiency in fencing and sword play with the weapon in the left hand is something marvellous to Englishmen.

The Duke of Leinster presided at a meeting of the Duchess of Marlborough's committee in Dublin yesterday week, when it was announced that the total funds which had been received amounted to £135,170. A final remittance of £164 was received from the Lord Mayor of London, and a resolution was passed thanking his Lordship for his remittances, amounting in all to £34,164. The committee have a balance in hand of £2391.

The Commissioners of the Fishery Board (Scotland) have issued the report of their proceedings in the year 1879. They show that the herring fishery upon the coast of Scotland was not so good as in the previous year. The number of barrels cured in 1879 was 841,796, or 63,972 less than in 1878. The Commissioners attribute the falling-off to the bad weather which prevailed on the east coast, where the deficiency occurred. On the west coast there was actually an increase of 82,801 barrels. The cod and ling fishery of 1879 was not equal to that of the preceding year, the decrease in quantity being 21,444 cwt. cured dried, and 482 barrels cured in pickle. The number of fishing-boats, 14,457, shows an increase of twenty-six boats over the number in 1878; the number of fishermen, 46,502, a decrease of twenty-seven men. This decrease is due to the fact that hired men are no longer employed; an advance in skill has produced an economy of labour. Arrangements have been made in accordance with the Commissioners' recommendations in their report for 1869 to bring the Outer Hebrides into telegraphic communication with the mainland. The appendix contains a number of fishery statistics and accounts, and a plan of a new breakwater which has been erected at Burnmouth harbour.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

In some incidental remarks on Cabs and Cab Companies made in last week's "Echoes," I mentioned one company, the "inaugural" festival of which I happened to have attended last November, just before I left England for the United States. Without specifically naming the company in question, I said (acting, it turns out, on quite erroneous information) that the undertaking had come to irreparable financial grief. In stating this (quite innocently, as regards intention) it seems that I have done grave injustice to the British Cab Company (Limited), the secretary of which association writes me from the head office, Queen Victoria-street, that the company is in full working order, and is, financially, in a highly flourishing condition. Moreover, one of the directors has been so kind as to call at my house in one of the excellently well-appointed hansom cabs which are being so successfully worked by the Company, which he informs me has recently declared a very gratifying interim dividend. I need scarcely add that I am extremely sorry that, through the mistake of my informant, I should have said anything to the detriment of the prosperous British Cab Company; and I am all the more vexed at the contretemps because at the outset of the undertaking (being strongly interested in the question of Cab Reform) I endeavoured to do the British Cab Company, in the way of publicity, all the good in my power.

"Would you be surprised to hear"—it seems an age since that famous question of the great cross-examining counsel was so familiar to the public ear—that the authority of the great Dr. Johnson can be quoted in favour of permitting the Civil Servants of the Crown to engage in private trade for their own immediate profit and advantage? "We got into an argument" (Percy Fitzgerald's edition of Croker's Boswell, Vol. ii. 8) "whether the Judges who went to India might, with propriety, engage in trade. Johnson warmly maintained that they might. 'For why' (he urged) 'should not Judges get riches as well as those who deserve them less.' I said they would have sufficient salaries, and have nothing to take off their attention from the affairs of the publick."

"Johnson, 'No Judge, Sir, can give his whole attention to his office; and it is very proper that he should employ what time he has to himself for his own advantage, in the most profitable manner. . . . Every Judge who has land trades to a certain extent in corn or in cattle, and in the land itself, undoubtedly. . . . No, Sir, there is no profession to which a man gives a very great proportion of his time. It is wonderful, when a calculation is made, how little the mind is actually employed in the discharge of any profession.'"

Mem.: Quite apart from Dr. Johnson's prophetic views on the Co-operative Stores question, I think that his remarks touching the shortness of the time during which the mind is really occupied with strictly professional pursuits might be read with great advantage by our prosperous modern actors and actresses (heroes and heroines of "light comedy" in particular) whom I read about as repairing to the Continent or to some favourite watering-place at the end of the season in order to enjoy an interval of perfect rest after the long period of physical and mental toil which they have gone through.

Let me see. I strongly opine that if I could act, and were either prosperous or popular, I should not think it very hard work, either of a physical or mental nature, to have the entire day to myself; to go down to the theatre at about seven in the evening; to go through in the course of the next three or four hours, with the assistance of a man or maid servant, the wholesome, and certainly not laborious, processes of changing my clothes and washing my face and hands, and in the intervals between those exercitations to speak a certain number of speeches and repeat a certain number of gestures which I knew thoroughly well by heart—having possibly repeated them by heart three, four, or even five hundred times. And, be it observed, Sunday is to the actor or actress an unbroken holiday. There is a great deal of nonsense talked in these days about overwork, both in the case of adults and of school-children (who are put to learn too many things, but who do not work hard enough at anything). When I was a boy of twelve I had nine hours' solid schooling to go through in the course of every day; and (abating eyesight troubles) I feel none the worse for the cruel "brain pressure" (as the newspaper correspondents phrase it) to which I was subjected at school, forty years ago.

That very entertaining and useful periodical the Boy's Own Paper has sustained a material loss in the recent death of one of its most valuable contributors, Mr. W. H. Kingston. He was the Alexandre Dumas of juvenile English literature, and, I am told, wrote something like a hundred and twenty stories for boys; besides being a constant contributor to the magazines. In the early numbers of the Boy's Own Paper, Mr. Kingston wrote a capital story, in every way adapted to the taste of his youthful readers, called "From Powder Monkey to Admiral." Altogether, Mr. Kingston's books (all of which had an honest and healthful tone), largely contributed (as did Charles Dibdin in his sea-songs and Marryat in his nautical novels) to perpetuate that love of maritime adventure and that patriotic spirit which had been first inculcated by Defoe.

Mem.: "Robinson Crusoe" must have been the means of sending tens of thousands of English lads to sea. I scarcely fancy Smollett's "Roderick Random" sent many that way.

I note a strange article in this week's World, entitled "Why Radicals are hated." One of the reasons assigned for the execration in which Radicals (according to the gentleman in the World) are held in English "Society" is that they dress "for the most part abominably;" and to this rule the Arbiter of the Elegances informs us "there are scarcely a dozen exceptions to be found among the Liberals in the House of Commons. Dear me! This is very sad. And yet the slovenly Radicals had their dandies in the last generation. Mr. Thomas Duncombe, M.P. for Finsbury, was, next to Count d'Orsay, the best-dressed gentleman in London. Mr. Edward Lytton Bulwer was a far more resplendent fop while he was a Radical than when he became a Conservative; and probably the most gorgeous waistcoats and cravats ever worn by the youthful Mr. Benjamin Disraeli were donned at the period when that precocious genius was penning the "Revolutionary Epic."

How manners change! Early in the century some of the greatest Liberals were likewise the greatest "swells," in the way of dress, on town. Lord Byron, Sir Francis Burdett, Sir John Cam Hobhouse, Lord Sydenham, Leigh Hunt (do you remember Christopher North's fierce attack on "Signor Le Hunto's" yellow pantaloons?), and Thomas Moore, were all more or less dandies; and it was the Tories who "dressed abominably." Lord Eldon, out of his judicial robes, was frequently mistaken for his own butler; and the rusty black braceless nether garments of Sir Charles Wetherell have become historical.

The exquisite critic of the World is no better pleased with the proper names of leading Radicals. Their very nomenclature is apt to be "unfortunate." "Disagreeable associations are suggested by such names as Briggs, Odger, Potter, Bradlaugh, Niass, Beales; and the proprietors of these ill-sounding names have for the most part the queer attributes which it might be expected they would carry with them." Surely this is sorry stuff; and as a Radical, and, withal, as the proprietor of a very queer name (in Russ, I believe, it signifies tallow), I must protest against the World's dogmatic assertion.

Is there anything of queerness or of cacophony in the name of those stanch Liberals and Radicals—John Bright, Joseph Chamberlain, William Vernon Harcourt, Auberon Herbert, John Morley, Frederic Harrison, Charles Wentworth Dilke, Ashton Dilke, Henry Labouchere, Frank Hill, Arthur Arnold, and Wilfrid Lawson? These are no more ugly names than Wolff, Worms, Coope, and Gorst are pretty ones. And here is a parting and Parthian dart for the gentleman who thinks Radical nomenclature so very "unfortunate." What do you think of the name of a whilom famous Champion of Toryism and Friend of the Farmer:—Chowler? Yes; Chowler! Roll that name under your tongue, and tell me whether you find it a sweet morsel. Chowler will kick the beam against Odger (who, by-the-way, is as dead as Paul Potter).

Mem.: In the State of New York the name of Grimes, and in the State of Massachusetts the name of Perkins, are accounted as aristocratic as Bohun or De Vere are with us. Taking names as names "all round," I do not know a finer catalogue of simple-sounding Saxon appellatives than those of the members of the High Court of Justice who signed the Death Warrant of Charles the First. It is not to be denied that in names there is often a strange fascination. Such a fascination I have always found (Southey found it in the river Susquehana) in "John Randolph of Roanoke," "Carroll of Carrolton," "Ethan Allen," "Donald Cameron of Lochiel;" and especially in "Beaufranchet Comte d'Oyat, who was chief of the staff of the army of Paris at the execution of Louis XVI., and gave the word of command—"Tambours!"—to drown the King's voice when he strove to address the people from the scaffold. "Sir David Lindsay of the Mount, Lord Lyon King at Arms," is also captivating; but it is only a jingle. "Miomandre de Sainte Marie," the gallant Garde du Corps who made so determined a stand on the grand staircase at Versailles at the massacre in October, 1789, is another of the (to me) strangely fascinating ones. Perhaps some of my correspondents (the ladies especially) will forward me a few names which, in their opinion, they hold most beauteous.

I have become the eager possessor of the first number of the grand new Paris Monthly Magazine of the Fashions, "L'Art de la Mode," anent the proximate appearance of which the trumpet was so vigorously sounded a few days since in the Figaro by that most graphic of feuilletonnistes, M. Albert Wolff. The annual subscription to this new Book of Beauty is one hundred francs a year, and a single number costs ten francs. Among the artists and writers who contribute, or are to contribute, to this "Revue Mensuelle de l'Elégance" I find the names of such world-wide celebrities as Paul Baudry (of Grand Opera decorating fame), Carolus Duran, Heilbuth (who should be painter in ordinary to the Vatican, for nobody has painted cardinals and cardinal's footmen better than he), Henner (the renowned painter of the idyllic undraped), De Nittis, Alfred Stevens, and Toulmouche (both of whom have long since "set" the feminine fashions in their delicious genre pictures), and the famous Spaniard, Madrazo, together with the indispensable M. Grévin and the inevitable Mdlle. Sara Bernhardt.

Among the writers figure Bachaumont, Theodore de Banville, Charles Blanc, Philippe Buzty, Jules Clarétie, François Coppée, Alphonse Daudet, Edmond de Goncourt, Ludovic Halévy, Henri Meilhac, Paul de St. Victor, Francisque Sarcey, Victorien Sardou, and Aurelien Scholl. The brilliancy of this galaxy of talent dazes one! Combine the staffs of the Nineteenth Century, the Fortnightly Review, the Athenæum, and Punch; and yet the combination would scarcely equal in strength and variety that of "L'Art de la Mode."

And yet I am slightly disappointed with the first number. It is luxuriously printed on handsome paper, with superb type, and some of the vignettes are very gracefully drawn: although, owing to their being executed by one of the new "processes," some of the drawings have a scratchy and others a sooty appearance. "Beginning at the beginning," the renowned Idyllist, M. Henner, illustrates the first of a series of essays on a History of Fashion with a large chalk drawing, a full-length figure of Eve. The spouse of the "Grand old Gardener" is "en pleine toilette de Rien du Tout." The next most conspicuous illustration is a "photogravure" from a drawing by M. Alfred Stevens:—a full-length figure of a lady attired in the superlative degree of the fashions of 1880. The lady's dress is very rich and elegant, but her countenance is extremely plain; and it is a curious fact that, with the exception of a damsel whose standing figure and long train form an initial letter "L," there is not a single pretty female face in all the illustrations. M. Stevens's "Grande Dame" stands in an oddly defiant attitude, her left hand on her hip, and her right holding one of the new sunshades, which looks half like the engano or red flag of a Spanish muleteer and half like a blunderbuss.

The "fashion-plates," properly so called, are graceful enough and highly coloured; but I fancy they would be but of very slight service to a costumière. No back views of the dresses are given; and in these days the back of a lady's dress is as important a matter as its front. We may sneer at the conventional attitudes and the sweetly and sillily simpering countenances of the ladies in our accepted fashion-plates; but they are, at least, technically, working drawings, which can be followed flounce for flounce and fold for fold by the professional modiste; and among professional milliners and dressmakers "L'Art de la Mode," all sumptuous as it is, will scarcely supplant "Myra" and "Sylvia" and the "Journal de la Mode," and the rest of the almost innumerable tribe of "fashion books."

From "L'Art de la Mode" to (for the last time, I promise you) alamode beef. An anonymous Oracle tells me, sternly, on a post-card, "Champignons," or "champillions," "are to be found growing at Tottenham, near where you used to go to school." This curt communication is signed "A reader of the Echoes since the time of Shirley Brooks." But, my dear anonymous Oracle, I never had the advantage of going to school at Bruce Castle, nor at any other educational establishment at or near Tottenham. What little English schooling I got was at the once famous Pestalozzian seminary (1842-3), Bolton House, Turnham-green. And, again, respected A. O., poor dear Shirley Brooks never wrote any "Echoes" in this Journal. He wrote "Notes of the Week" and "Nothing in the Papers." 'Twas your humble servant who, in "Echoes of the Week," succeeded the late Peter Cunningham as a logoprates twenty years ago.

But information touching this historic dish (I may call it historic: did not Mr. Gladstone once make a speech on the historic connection between ox-tail soup and the Huguenots who emigrated to England after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes?) reaches me from the fountain head. "J. G. J." (the bearer of an alamodically historic name, but I give only the initials) writes from the sweet seclusion of Alwyne-square, N., to say that his father, his grandfather, and his great-grandfather were successively owners of "Johnson's Thirteen Cantons and Alamode Beef House." Mr. J. adds that my correspondent was quite right about the champignons used in flavouring the alamode, and says that his father used to buy those esculents by the sackful. The thickening was not arrowroot, but flour and water.

Mem.: Not only Mr. J., but twenty more correspondents have drawn my attention to Charles Dickens's account of his personal experiences of alamode beef in "David Copperfield"—

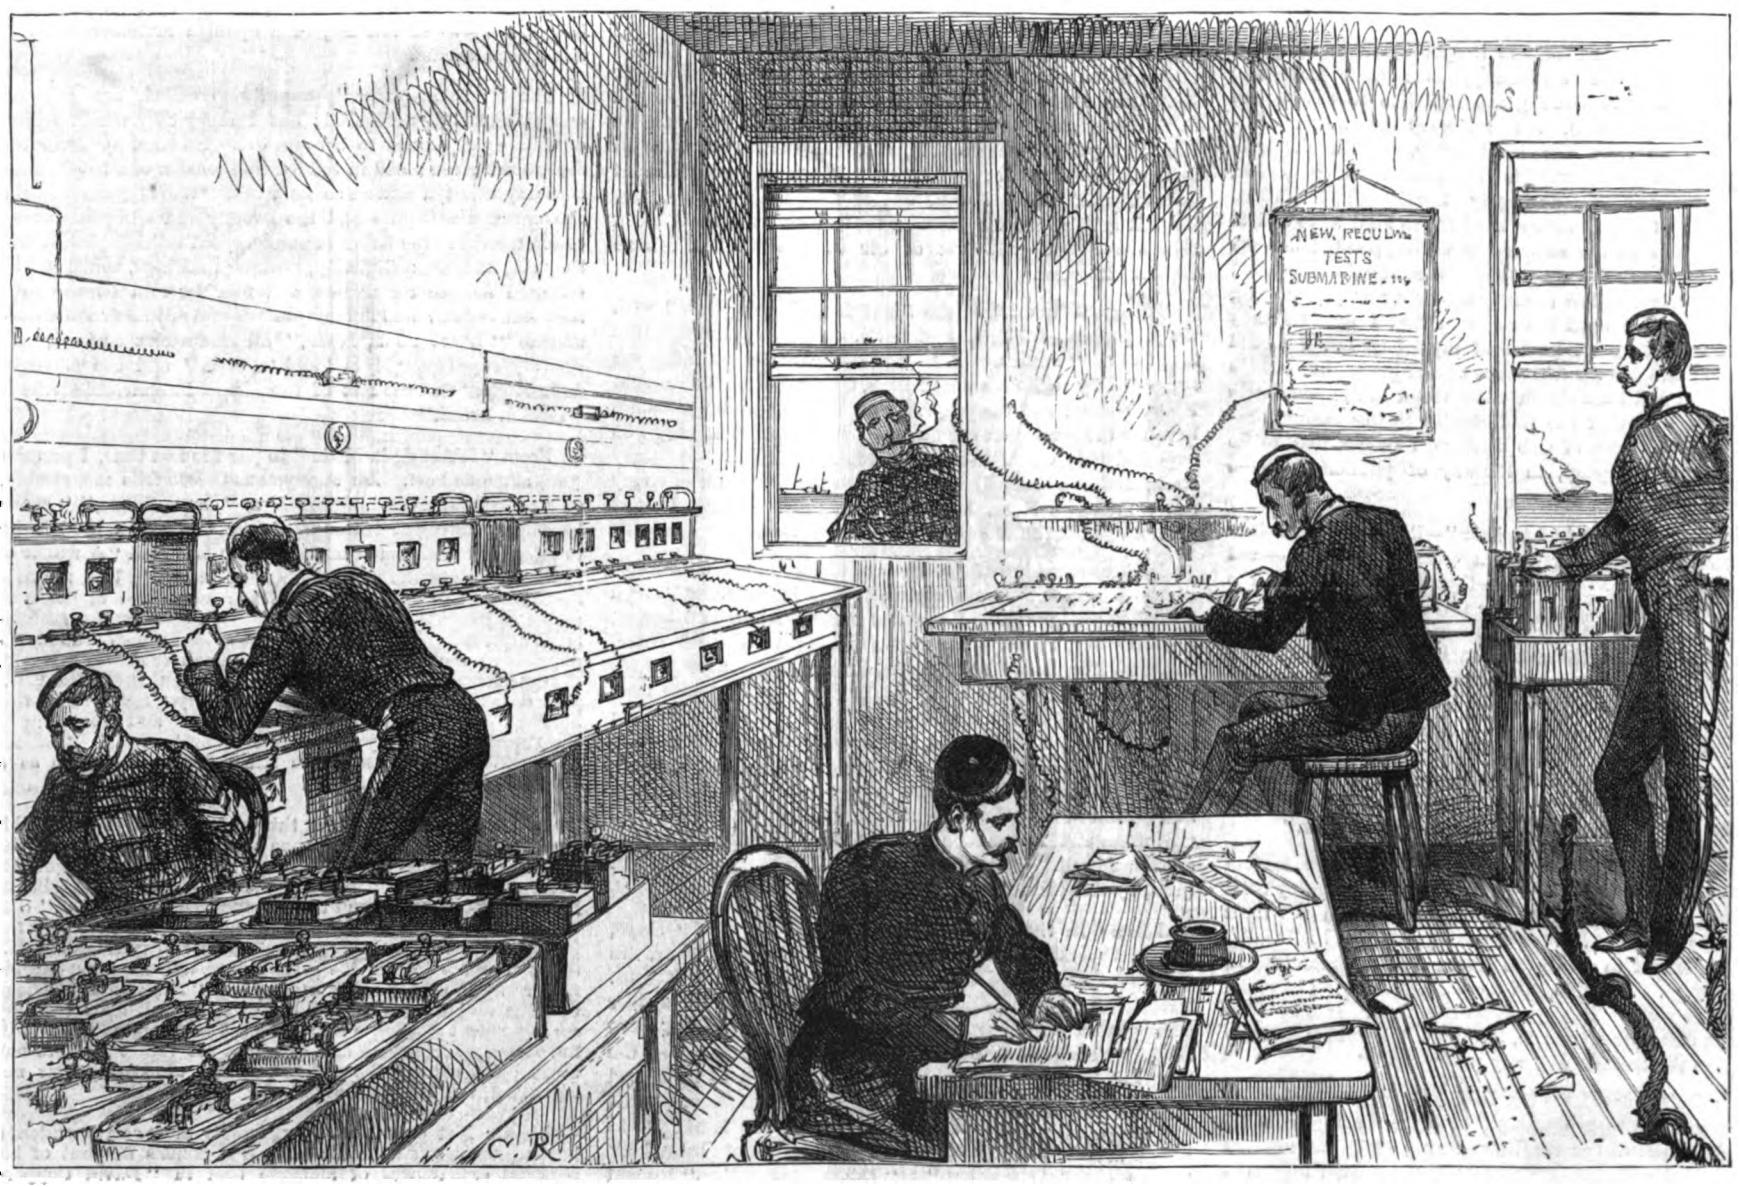
> Once I remember carrying my own bread (which I had brought from home in the morning, wrapped in a piece of paper, like a book), and going to a famous alamode beef house near Drury-lane, and ordering a "small plate" of that delicacy to eat with it.

The famous alamode beef house was evidently the "Thirteen Cantons."

Mr. J. relates a curious anecdote touching the manner in which the license for the tavern was originally obtained. His great-grandfather had a dog called Carlo, a kind of four-footed Roscius, who, for one hundred and seventy-four nights, played, at the Theatre Royal, Drury-lane, in a piece called "The Caravan (Camel?); or, The Driver and his Dog." The town was much taken up with Carlo, and his performances brought much money to the treasury of Old Drury. When Mr. J.'s great-grandfather, who always accompanied Carlo to the theatre, was asked by the lessee and manager, the Right Hon. Richard Brinsley Sheridan, how much he was indebted to him for the services of the canine artiste, he replied that he looked for no pecuniary recompense whatever. Sheridan thereupon asked him if he would like a wine and spirit license for his establishment, which heretofore had only been an eating-house. The offer was accepted, and through the influence of Sheridan the license was obtained.

Come, this is not so bad. I have been gibed at by the irreverent for talking about alamode beef; but at least I have succeeded in tracing a close connection between the "Thirteen Cantons" and the author of the "School for Scandal" on the one hand, and the author of "David Copperfield" on the other.

My very old friend Mr. Henry Vizetelly (nearly a quarter of a century since I wrote for him in the "Welcome Guest" a series of papers called "Twice Round the Clock") has sent me a very neat and attractive series, just published by him, of English translations of French novels by celebrated authors. Among the series I find "Fromont the Younger and Risler the Elder," by Alphonse Daudet; "Samuel Brohl and Partner," by Victor Cherbulioz; "Maugars Junior," by André Theuriet, and "The Drama of the Rue de la Paix," by Alphonse Belot. Mr. Vizetelly's object is "to test whether English novel-readers, unconversant with the French language, are not as appreciative of clever works as English playgoers are of clever French dramas and Operas Bouffes. Especial care has been taken that the works selected for translation shall be only those of an unobjectionable character which, can be presented, in an unabridged form, to the English reader.



A correspondent wishes to know where he can find Hannah More's piously "comic" song of the "Hackney Coachman." I have a very pretty little edition of the excellent Hannah's works, in six volumes, small octavo (London, Fisher, Fisher, and Jackson, 1834), with vignettes drawn by H. Melville, and engraved, in line, by Portbury. Therein I find, not only "The Hackney Coachman" and the "Gin Shop," but also "Robin and Richard; or, the Ghost of Poor Molly," "The Riot; or, Half a Loaf is Better than no Bread," "Patient Joe; or, the Newcastle Collier." These ditties immediately precede "Moses in the Bulrushes" and the rest of the "Sacred Dramas." Hannah should be "pickupable" on the book-stalls. I gave a crown for my copy. I have mislaid my correspondent's note; but if he wants the entire words of the "Hackney Coachman" and the "Gin Shop" (both ditties admirably suited for temperance réunions) I will willingly copy them out and send the verses to him, if he will courteously furnish me with his address.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Aug. 17.

Some eight or ten days ago Rochefort's journal, L'Intransigeant, began publishing a series of terrible revelations about the revolting brutality of a certain Lieutenant Marceron, who commanded the Prison des Chantiers at Versailles, where some eight hundred or a thousand Communists were confined previous to their appearance before the Conseils de Guerre. Every day has brought new testimony against this man, who now occupies an administrative post at the Vincennes Railway Station, under the control of the Minister of Public Works. Men, women, and children were maltreated and tortured by this man with a savagery and ingenuity that would have done credit to the Inquisition. Whatever judgment may be passed on the movement of March 18, 1871, commonly known as the Commune, it is certain, from the point of view of humanity, that the repression of it by the Versailles troops—the troops of the Government of Thiers, Jules Favre, and Jules Simon—was the cruelest that had been seen for centuries. Ten years have passed since the events of the Commune; they now belong to history. Hitherto the victors alone have spoken, now it is the turn of the vanquished. The mere savagery of the Versailles troops has been recorded in M. Camille Pelletan's book La Semaine de Mai; the men who have been in exile have related the miseries of the convicts in New Caledonia; now the testimonies of the victims of Marceron have given us a glimpse of what the prisons were. That such horrors should have been committed in the nineteenth century is incredible. But, unfortunately, all the testimony is in one direction; not a single protesting voice has been raised in favour of Marceron. And to think, too, that this is only a small part of what passed in the repression of the Commune! What will it be when history shall have reconstituted the whole truth?

The revelations in the press relative to Marceron have indeed assumed such importance that the Government, it is announced, has ordered an official inquiry to be made in the matter. But previously to taking this step the Government took a step the expediency of which it is hard to see. One of the first persons who gave evidence to the Intransigeant against Marceron was a Madame Dalang, a Frenchwoman who is married to a Swiss engraver of talent, who has lived quietly in France for more than eight years. On Thursday last M. Dalang received orders from the Prefect of Police to quit the country within twenty-four hours, in virtue of a decree of the Minister of the Interior. This case of expulsion is peculiarly arbitrary. It is simply striking the wife in the person of the husband, who is innocent, but who happens to be a foreigner, and therefore liable to the law of 1849. The press is almost unanimous in protesting against the expulsion of Dalang as it was against the expulsion of the American "Baron" Hickey, the editor of Le Triboulet. The Government, by-the-way, has semi-officially announced that the last-named gentleman was expelled, not on account of his journal Le Triboulet, but on account of his having promoted the Caisse Noire by his money and his influence. The Caisse Noire was a silly Royalist subscription, organised by a few fanatics with a view to paying the expenses of an army of invasion, at the head of which Henri V. was to enter his good town of Paris. This puts Mr. Hickey's case exactly on a parallel with the case of M. Cernuschi, who was expelled from France in 1870 by the Imperial Government for having subscribed 20,000f. to the Republican fund, M. Cernuschi being an Italian. The ex-triumvir of Rome went to Geneva and immediately telegraphed to the Republican Fund, increasing his subscription to 100,000f., wherein he showed that he was a man of wit and spirit. It was against the expulsion of M. Cernuschi that MM. Jules Ferry, Gambetta, Grévy, and Magnin signed a famous protest in 1870. But it is a truism to say that in France progress consists in receiving blows from Pierre instead of from Jacques. If you say that you prefer to receive no blows at all you are looked upon as an anarchist and an irreconcileable.

Political promises and oaths form a fruitful subject of reflection in the study of contemporary French history. In 1869 Jules Simon said, "I am a Socialist." In 1860, Emile Ollivier said, "I, who am a Republican . . ." In 1871 Trochu said, "The Governor of Paris will not capitulate." In 1848 ex-Vice-Emperor Rouher cried, "Vive la République!" The example of Napoleon III. is universally known. But the most active and versatile weathercock has been the eminent publicist and the successor of M. Thiers as member for the ninth district of Paris, M. Emile de Girardin. In 1835 he cried, "Vive le Roi!" In 1849, "Vive le Prince Président!" In 1869, "Vive Haussmann!" In 1870, "Vive Ollivier!" "Vive l'Empereur!" "Votez oui!" and "Vive la guerre!" In 1872, "Je combats Gambetta!" In 1879, "Gambetta est en grand citoyen!" In 1880, "Vive la République!"

M. Sigismund Lacroix has proposed to the budget committee of the Paris Municipal Council to suppress the subvention which the Ville de Paris annually gives to the Grand Prix de Paris. The reason of the proposed suppression is, oddly enough, purely political and utterly absurd. It is because, on the day of the distribution of the colours to the regiments, July 14, the tribune of the Jockey Club at Longchamps was empty. The Jockey Club having protested against the fête of the Republic, the ultra-Republican Municipal Council wishes to protest against the Jockey Club. As was truly said by a journal at the time, the Jockey Club, by leaving empty the tribune which it generally occupies on the race-course only showed what a small place is held in the nation by that part of the aristocracy which tries to react against the march of modern society. When, some years ago, the Ville de Paris and the Railway Companies decided to share the annual subvention of the Grand Prix, they did not think of gratifying the Jockey Club, but of forwarding their own interests. By suppressing the Grand Prix the Municipal Council would not be spiting the gentlemen of the Jockey Club, who, in their own elegant language, s'en fichent pas mal; it would be spiting Paris and the Parisians, and depriving them of one of their most popular and most democratic fêtes.

"The little Doric Morgue" is about the last place in the world where one would have expected the eminent actress Miss Neilson to end her dramatic career. Miss Neilson was staying at the Hôtel Continental. On Saturday, after breakfast, she went to take a drive in the Bois de Boulogne, accompanied by two persons of her suite and a gentleman. At the Pré Catelan she drank a cup of milk, and then continued her drive. Shortly afterwards she felt pains in her stomach. She stopped again at the Châlet du Rond-Royal, and asked for a room where she could rest. She was shown into a salon, and there, on the sofa, after twelve hours of agony, she expired, at half-past three o'clock on Sunday morning. The body was conveyed to the Morgue, and a post-mortem examination was made, but, nothing abnormal having been discovered, the doctor returned a verdict of natural death.

During the last fortnight the heat has been oppressive and thunderstorms have been frequent. All who were able have left Paris, and taken refuge at the seaside or at the watering-places of the Pyrenees. Paris, therefore, to use the conventional phrase, is empty—that is to say, there are but few carriages to be seen in the Bois; there is nothing going on in society, the literary novelties are being kept back until the autumn, the theatres will not reopen until next month—in short, there is nothing left to talk about but politics. Happily for the newspapers, politics are an inexhaustible subject, especially when you belong to the Opposition. The Parisian press used to be noted for its high literary character; but now the flood of politics has swamped everything, and even in high dog days you will seek in vain for a literary article in forty-five out of the fifty daily political journals that are published and sold in Paris.

Press prosecutions, too, are being continued zealously by the Government. On Saturday the proprietor of the Gil Blas, a daily opportunist journal which gained a large circulation and an infamous reputation by publishing every morning a highly spiced after-dinner story, has been condemned to three months' imprisonment and a fine of 500 francs for outrage aux mœurs. The offence consisted in a foully indecent article published in his journal. Le Monde Parisien was condemned on the same day to fifty francs fine, and Le Triboulet to a fine of twenty-five francs for having published caricatures which the censorship had refused to authorise. This is the twenty-third time that Le Triboulet has been condemned for this offence.

Rochefort suggests as the only plausible explanation of the interest which the Cabinet takes in the success of Le Triboulet, that M. Gambetta, or M. Léon Say, or M. Andrieux, or M. de Freycinet holds stock in it. When the shares go down they have the journal prosecuted, and a reaction takes place.

Quel plaisir, quelle fête,
Nous, voilà,
Réunis,
Tous, les trois,
Réunis.

So runs Donizetti's monotonous refrain. Jules Grévy is President of the Republic; his brother Albert is Civil Governor-General of Algeria, and last Sunday General Paul Grévy, "Monsieur Paul," was elected Senator for the department of the Jura.

GROUSE-SHOOTING.

Before summer has passed into autumn, and while the latest of turf engagements and yachting-matches are still pending, the Twelfth of August sends many of our sporting men to the North of England and to Scotland in pursuit of this fine "bird of the wilderness," which affords more active exercise and invites more skill than the September partridge or the October pheasant. We have news of the grouse from the moors of Yorkshire and other neighbouring counties, as well as from Perthshire, Stirling, and Forfarshire—from Ross, Inverness, and Argyle—and in the south-west from Ayrshire, Lanarkshire, and Dumfries. A great business is made of letting the privilege of shooting over these favourite grounds to the best bidders who are desirous of taking them, and this supplies an important part of the landowner's revenue.

The Southron, as he would be called by Sir Walter Scott's Highlanders, if he be a man of sedentary habits and addicted to good dinners, may, perhaps, find this sport more fatiguing than he has meant to bargain for, and such is apparently the experience of a stout gentleman who figures in the Artist's humorous drawings. There is a formidable stretch of rough walking to be done, much of it up hill, with many turnings and windings to shun the observation of the sagacious bird; and the attendant mountaineer guide is apt to show little mercy to his exhausted and embarrassed pupil. The grouse are disposed to be shy, for their part, and to "pack" and lie close for the better chance of eluding pursuit. It takes much hard labour to fill a good bag, with the aid of clever and obedient dogs; and in the meantime there is a severe penance to be endured in the manifold aches of the back and legs, the pricking of undefended parts of the nether man by sharp-pointed gorse, and the loss of breath in steep and rapid climbing what they call "the brae-side."

That all this toil should be undertaken in vain by the enterprising and liberal-spirited lessee of Killochnane Muir for the present season, who has brought his wife and daughters from home, with their London servants, to stay through early autumn at the laird's mansion, would indeed be a mortifying result of such great expense and trouble. It would move the secret scorn, if not open derision, of Scottish gillies as of English gamekeepers, if he had no produce of sporting skill, or "only two and a half"—that is to say, two grouse and one very little bird—wherewith to load the promised hampers that were to be sent, by express railway train, to all the friends of the family south of the Tweed. Yet such, according to our Artist's veracious testimony, was the actual state of this gentleman's acquisitions, by his own personal efforts, on the evening of the first day. Was it for this he had gone forth in the morning, with the Dew of Ben Nevis fresh upon him, arrayed in the tartan of his valiant clan, though not exactly kilted like the hardy Gael, but with a pair of knickerbockers warranted to lift their wearer over the Grampians with very moderate strides? Was he to return without a heavy bag of grouse to the expectant ladies at Killochnane, and to their guest at dinner, the reverend parish minister, at the close of the second day's performance on those wearisome moors, for which he had already paid so dear? Our friend knew a trick worth two of that, and so did the crafty gillie, whose ingenuity was sharpened by the extra gift of a gold coin, over and above his stipulated wages for the day. Having reached a convenient and solitary position, where the grouse were known to be sufficiently abundant, and nobody could see from the path below what was about to be done, the gun was quietly handed over to the more expert Highlander. The Englishman lay down on a soft cushion of turf, and made himself very comfortable with his flask of cold toddy and one of his choice cigars. The bag was brought home quite full to the house in the evening, and we are all very glad that our friend has enjoyed his sport.

The Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland held its show on the 11th inst., at Clonmel, and the entries were considerably in excess of those at the last show held in that town. The Marquis of Waterford received a letter warning him against attending the show. The letter informed his Lordship that as sure as he attended the show he would be shot. The Marquis, however, was present.—A meeting was held in the same place, under the auspices of the Irish Land League, at which a letter from the Archbishop of Cashel was read denouncing the recent action of the House of Lords.

The inquest on the four persons drowned in the recent collision on the Thames was concluded at the Anchor Hotel, Shepperton, on the 12th inst., and the jury returned a verdict that the deceased were drowned through a collision of a steam-launch with a row-boat, caused by a misunderstanding on the part of the parties in charge of each of the boats owing to the defective by-laws of the Thames Conservancy; and they added two riders, one that the fines for excessive speed were inadequate, and the other recommending further regulations as to the carrying of lights.

NAVAL WARFARE EXPERIMENTS AT PORTSMOUTH.

On October last year we gave some Illustrations of the combined spectacle of naval and military or garrison artillery and engineer manœuvres performed in front of Fort Monckton, opposite Portsmouth Harbour, in the rehearsal of a night attack and defence. On the Tuesday night of last week, in presence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, on board the Royal yacht Osborne, and of the Lords of the Admiralty, in their yacht, the Enchantress, a similar exhibition took place, of which we likewise present several Illustrations, from Sketches by an officer of the Royal Artillery.

The practical aim of these operations was chiefly to prove the best means of forcing a channel defended by submarine mines and obstructions, supplemented by the fire of artillery and infantry. This channel was represented by the same piece of water which had formed the scene of the two previous contests between the sea and land forces. It ran between the coast, extending from Gillkicker Fort, at the sea end of Haslar Wall, to Fort Blockhouse, at the harbour end, and an imaginary shore line opposite. It was defended by submarine mines, supplemented by obstructions, floating and fixed. While the operations of the defence were limited to putting the attacking fleet (with the exception of the Glatton) out of action, the operations of the attack, on the other hand, were limited to breaking through booms and obstructions, countermining, removing and disabling mines, destroying cables, and putting guard boats and field guns hors de combat. The space protected by mines was 700 yards in length and 500 yards wide. Between the channel and the forts was an apparently open space of water, 300 yards wide; but it was supposed to be blocked by permanent obstructions, and was closed against all vessels, being marked with buoys and red flags.

The attacking force consisted of her Majesty's ship Glatton, armed with two 25-ton guns and a brace of 20-pounder torpedo guns; four gun-boats—the Medway, Spey, Vesuvius, and Manly—two of which carried their usual armament of three 64-pounders, the others being unarmed, except for the purpose of destroying mines; twelve torpedo-boats and steam-launches, besides several rowing-boats. At the time the friendly action began it was supposed that the only heavy artillery which remained for the defence were the guns in Fort Monckton, consisting of four muzzle-loading rifled 64-pounders, two small-bore 8 in. guns, and one breech-loading rifled 7 in. gun. The other available means at the command of the defence party were the 0 field battery of the 3rd Brigade Royal Artillery (of which four 16-pounders were placed in position on the western side of the fort and a couple on the eastern side), under the orders of Colonel Hope Johnstone, a company of Royal Engineer Submarine Miners, and a battalion of infantry represented by three companies from the first battalion 24th Foot, under the command of Captain Tongue. The defending forces were under the command of Colonel Schaw, R.E.; while the electric and mining operations for the protection of Fort Monckton and the Channel were under the superintendence of Captain Ramsay, R.E., commanding the submarine miners. The attack was conducted by Captain Gordon and the officers of the Vernon, torpedo training-ship.

It was nearly half-past nine when the attacking flotilla had emerged from the cover of the Glatton and were coming into action. Their efforts were mainly directed to encompass the destruction of the formidable boom, which not only blocked the passage of the channel, but served to protect the electric connections between the shore batteries and the nests of sunken mines. This boom was constructed after the manner of a gridiron, a number of balks of timber being placed parallel to each other and to the face of the fort, and with the ends pointing in the direction of the attack; while three rows of chains were placed across them at regular intervals, thus forming the meshes of a rigid net, the whole being kept in position by mooring anchors placed fore and aft. In front and in rear of the boom the passage was further impeded by nets floated by means of cork, to foul the screws of the steam craft, while in the rear was a substantial spar placed across the channel, the whole area being also covered with sunken mines.

While the Glatton engaged the guns of Fort Monckton, the launches and torpedo-boats forced their way through the boom, though with the loss of several, which were caught in the chains or otherwise disabled. Two rowing-boats succeeded in attaching a charge of gun-cotton to the boom and blowing it up, after which the Manly and the Spey passed through. The conflict finally resolved itself into an artillery fight between the guns of the three ships, on the one side, and the heavy ordnance and field battery of the fort and defences, with the fire of infantry, on the other. They made as much smoke as possible, there being no wind to clear it away, and this put to a severe test the power of the electric light, from Siemens' apparatus, to illuminate the entire scene of action.

One of our correspondent's sketches, from on board the Echo, torpedo-tug, represents the scene of blowing up the boom; another shows the boats of the Glatton advancing to the attack. The interior of the military electricians' room at Fort Monckton, from which the submarine mines were fired, is represented in one of the Illustrations on another page; and it is accompanied by one of the scene in a tent on the ramparts, where Royal Artillerymen were employed in making up 350 extra rounds of cartridges for the guns. As they were busy opening kegs of powder, weighing it out, and ladling it into the cartridge-cases or bags, the men were obliged either to stand barefoot or to wear light slippers, as shown in this Sketch, lest the powder should be ignited by a nail in a boot.

Yesterday week the inquiry into the loss of the Hydaspes, on July 17 last, which took place five miles off Dungeness, after a collision in a fog with the screw-steamer Centurion, was brought to a close. The Court found that the pilot of the Centurion was to blame for not having ported his helm on hearing the whistle of the other vessel, and the captain of the Hydaspes was also to blame for not having shortened his tow-rope when the fog came on. The blame attached to the last-named was, however, so slight that his certificate would not be dealt with; and the Court also trusted that the certificate of the pilot would remain untouched.

Last month the officers of the Fishmongers' Company seized, as unfit for human food, the unprecedentedly large quantity of 93¼ tons of fish, which had been consigned to Billingsgate Market for sale. Of this nearly 76 tons arrived by land and 17 tons by water. The fish numbered 96,531, and included 44 bream, 64 brill, 12 catfish, 84 coalfish, 40 cod, 144 crabs, 1272 dorees, 76,948 haddocks, 1654 lobsters, 6940 plaice, 1 salmon, 303 skates, 3900 smelts, 8 soles, 1550 thornbacks, 17 trout, 60 turbot, and 1490 whiting; and, in addition, 2 barrels of salt cod, 2520 lb. of eels, 1468 casks of pickled herrings, 12 bags of mussels and 27 of periwinkles, 812 bushels of periwinkles, 1 "kit" of pickled salmon, 171 gallons of shrimps, 30 bags and 40 bushels of whelks, and 240 quarts of whitebait. The whole was destroyed.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

This is la morte saison in the world theatrical; and although a score of theatres continue bravely to keep their doors open (why should they not do so? possibly out of four millions of Londoners not a hundred thousand have as yet gone away grouse-shooting, or to the Continent or to the seaside), there is very little in the way of novelty to record. I continue to hear good reports of the prosperity of "The World" at Drury Lane; and the mention of the establishment now under the management of Mr. Augustus Harris puts me in mind to repair an omission of which I was inadvertently guilty in a lengthened but hasty review of the first performance of Messrs. Meritt, Pettitt, and Harris's grand sensational drama.

If I remember aright, I said nothing of the very graceful and intelligent impersonation by Miss Fanny Brough of the young lad Owen, who is one of the few survivors of the dynamatically blown-up ship freighted with sham diamonds, and who, after undergoing unheard of sufferings on the raft, arrives in London in time to dine at the Royal Aquarium, sup at the Great Hotel, and to be generally instrumental in unveiling vice and vindicating virtue. Miss Fanny Brough is a very appreciative and refined young actress. Her forte, I take it, is the pathetic; but she has plenty of time before her, and the ingenues, or the boys' parts, which she plays so well, will do her no harm, until an opportunity presents itself for her to assume a rôle of the importance of Frou-Frou, which she sustained so capably at the St. James's.

It would be hard, indeed, if I forgot Miss Fanny Brough, seeing that I knew her when she was literally a baby, and that years before she was born her father, the late Robert B. Brough, the author of that exquisite poem "The Tentmaker's Story," "Godiva," the "Story of Boccaccio," and many other charming verses, one of the wittiest of modern burlesque-writers, a skilful dramatist, a caricaturist, a graphic essayist, and a novelist withal, was one of my dearest friends. Poor Robert Brough was not born in a golden age for dramatic literature, or for any kind of literature whatsoever. From '47 to '60 the times for English playwrights and men of letters were hard. Robert Brough worked unremittingly for the barest of crusts, and I suppose that from the points of view of chronic ill-health and as chronic impecuniosity he led about the wretchedest of imaginable lives, while the public were screaming with laughter at his burlesques, and shaking their sides over his waggeries in "The Puppet Show" and "Diogenes." Ah! if he had only lived a few years longer! Ah! if he were only alive now! He might have left a fortune, as Mr. Robertson did. He might be making a fortune as Mr. Burnand and Mr. Byron are doing. He might be building yachts with Mr. Gilbert, or owning "Big Bonanza" silver mines with Mr. Boucicault. Perhaps. Ah! that perhaps. Have I forgotten all my Greek? What ancient was it that wrote "koine gar he tuche, kai to mellon aoraton"? Yes; chance is common, and the future is hidden. I am glad to see that Miss Fanny Brough has inherited much of her father's artistic feeling and keen insight into character.

I went on Monday last to the Olympic to see an extraordinary play called "The Eviction," by the clever Irish comedian Mr. Hubert O'Grady, who, with his equally clever wife, sustain the principal characters—a sprightly young Irish "gossoon" who sings a good song and tells a good story, and is as ready with his pistol as with the potheen; and a Colleen Bawn grown to matronly maturity. The drama to which Mr. and Mrs. Hubert O'Grady, and Mr. Charles Frew, in his especially well acted part of a treacherous bailiff called Rooney, give life and interest, has nothing very extraordinary either in its epopea, its incidents, or its dialogue. The central figure is a hard-hearted landholder, presumably of Saxon descent, appropriately named Lord Hardman, who is in the habit of evicting his tenants for non-payment of their rent, and allowing cripples and octogenarians to die in ditches, he having previously demolished their humble cabins. He is also in the habit of addressing suitors for his daughter's hand as "beggars," and of turning that same daughter out of doors at five minutes' notice for refusing to marry an objectionable corn merchant. He is also given to gambling on the turf, and to mortgaging his estate without the formality of calling in a solicitor to draw the mortgage-deed. Also he is partial to officiating as a committing magistrate in cases where he is himself the prosecutor. Altogether, Lord Hardman is scarcely an ornament to the British Peerage.

The conduct of this cruel nobleman in evicting the family of the MacMahons (or "MicMarnes") from their holdings leads not only to his being cursed by an angel female in a mob cap (one of the evictions of his rigour) and knocked flat on his back by an indignant Roman Catholic Priest, Father Mike (energetically played by Mr. Domican), but to a conspiracy of "Wild Boys" being formed against him. Lots are drawn as to which of the "Boys" shall assassinate him; and the fatal task falls to Dermot MacMahon (or MicMarne). By him or by the "Boys" in concert (for there is a good deal of gun-firing in each act) Lord Hardman is shot in the low-backed car on which he is riding to a railway station—under circumstances unpleasantly reminiscent of the assassination of the Earl of Leitrim. Lord Hardman, however, is only badly wounded, and he survives to become a reformed character, to forgive his daughter, and not to evict his tenants any more. How he is to manage to live without getting any rent from them, I am sure I don't know.

I learn from the well-informed Era, which is always well posted up in the minutest details of theatrical bibliography, that Mr. Hubert O'Grady's "Eviction" was first produced, in the month of January last, at Glasgow. It has recently been performed, with much applause, at the Standard Theatre; but from the frequency with which the Americanism "Hold on!" occurs in the dialogue, I cannot help fancying that "The Eviction," or something very much like it, has been played in the United States. It is precisely the kind of drama that would rouse an audience at Buffalo, or Cincinnati, or Chicago, to ecstacies of delight. It may, in fine, be qualified as a "Parnell and Dillon Anti-Rent" piece; and that which is extraordinary to me is, that it should not have occurred to the Examiner of Plays that such a play as "The Eviction," looking at the present distracted condition of the unhappy island of Ireland, is just the reverse of a play that ought to be performed under existing circumstances. It is decidedly unpleasant to witness one scene in which a detachment of the Royal Irish Constabulary are ignominiously pummelled, and have their uniforms torn off their backs by the "Wild Boys."

Haverly's United American Mastodon Minstrels continue their triumphant career at Her Majesty's, and much delight is conferred on crowded audiences by the evolutions of the "Broadway Squad," with Mr. Billy Rice as Captain of the Force, and Mr. Billy Welch as Sergeant Moriarty. Mr. Billy Emerson, hight "the original" (but why so many Billies?), is irresistibly comic in his great character song of "My Grandfather's Pants;" and the "Old Kentucky Home" gains in popularity every night. At the Alexandra Palace the Criterion Company have been playing Mr. F. C. Burnand's "Betsy" with great success throughout the week, and their engagement continues for yet another week. Likewise at the Alexandra Miss Litton's Comedy Company, with the invaluable co-operation of Mr. William Farren and Mr. Lionel Brough, are still among the most conspicuous attractions in Mr. Willing's varied and brilliant programme.

I read in the Sunday papers of Aug. 15, "Miss Neilson arrived at Liverpool, per Steam-ship Abyssinia, on Saturday night, the Seventh instant." On that same Sunday morning poor Lilian Adelaide Neilson died, in her thirty-first year, at Paris. Her remains were interred on Friday at Brompton Cemetery. "Madame se meure:—Madame est morte!" One cannot help recalling, in presence of the awful suddenness of the taking away of this accomplished actress, of the most touching in Bossuet's famous Oraisons funèbres. I reserve until next week what I have to say of this most excellent dramatic artist and much-lamented lady. G. A. S.

MUSIC.

London music is now almost entirely sustained by the Covent-Garden Promenade Concerts, so ably conducted by Mr. F. H. Cowen. During last week the sestett of Swedish singers appeared, and sang some German part-songs and arrangements of national melodies. On Saturday the popular French composer, M. Hervé, conducted his "Colonel Polka," a brilliant dance piece, which has had much success in Paris. Monday was a "Wagner night," the first part of the programme having consisted of a selection from the works of that composer. Wednesday was another "classical night," and yesterday (Friday), an "English night." Besides the eminent vocalists named in reference to previous concerts, Mrs. Osgood, Madame Patey, Signor Foli, Mr. Maybrick, and other well-known singers have recently appeared; and the brilliant pianoforte playing of Madame Frickenhaus has been an attractive feature on several occasions, as have the solo violin performances of M. Musin. Classical and popular overtures, and symphonies by the great masters, form important items in the programmes, and serve to display the good qualities of the fine orchestra.

The scheme of the Guildhall School of Music, under the conduct and control of the Corporation of the City of London, is now matured. The institution is intended to supply, on very advantageous terms, a complete musical education, some classes being kept open until nine in the evening for the benefit of those whose days are occupied in business. The school will be in active operation towards the close of next month. Mr. Weist Hill is the Principal.

At the various examinations of Trinity College, London, 6024 candidates presented themselves during the past academical year. Those in the Theory and Practice of Music numbered 5024, and those in General Knowledge 1000. At the higher examinations there were 353 candidates, while the entries at the local examinations were 5669. About 11,000 papers were separately examined.

A Reuter's telegram announces the death, at Bergen, in Norway, of the celebrated violinist, Ole Bull. He was born at Bergen in 1810, and has led a somewhat adventurous and chequered career. He has for some years past lived in the United States, and had intended shortly to return there.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Chappell and Co. have recently issued some drawing-room vocal pieces which will help to supply the large demand which exists for that class of music. The songs and ballads now referred to are pleasingly melodious, and within easy compass and limited means of execution. Of this kind we may specify "Old Dreams," by Mr. Alfred Cellier—which has reached the fifth edition—"The Dustman," and "The Old Poet," by Mr. J. L. Molloy, being portions of his "Songs after Hans Andersen;" "What the firelight told," an expressive song by J. L. Roeckel; "Millchester Market" and "Shadows of the Past," by C. H. R. Marriott; "The cooing of the dove," by A. D. Duvivier; "The Tramp," by A. Whitley; "Harold on a summer's day" and "La Reine d'Amour" (Romance), by W. Fullerton; and "The Old Oak Tree," by R. Dawre. All these will be found available for voices of almost any calibre.

Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co. have published "The Moss Rose" and "Autumn," two effective songs by King Hall; and "The Bramham Moor and Five-and-Twenty Couple," a characteristic hunting-song by Mr. J. S. Lee, of the 20th Hussars.

"The Three Singers," by Mr. Berthold Tours (Messrs. Boosey and Co.), is a pleasing song (the words from Longfellow), with an effective accompaniment for the harmonium, in addition to that for the pianoforte.

Messrs. R. Cocks and Co. are active providers of drawing-room music, both vocal and instrumental, among their recent publications being the following pleasing songs and ballads, all which are written with a view to facility of execution:—"The Unforgotten Song," by Odoardo Barri; "To Inez," by H. F. Limpus; "The Whisper of the Firs" and "Jack and Jill," both by J. J. Browne (consecutive octaves in the accompaniment of each might easily, and with advantage, have been avoided). "Not I," a piquant song by A. L. Mora, closes the list. Messrs. Cocks and Co. have also brought out "Musical Cards," an easy method of learning the notes and reading at sight, which seems well calculated to facilitate the desired object. M. Wely's "Processional March," arranged for the Pianoforte by F. Lemoine, and Gluck's March from "Alceste," similarly adapted by G. F. West, are also issued by Messrs. Cocks and Co.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. have brought out a most excellent arrangement of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," for Harmonium and Pianoforte. The adaptation has been very skilfully made by Mr. E. Prout, who has combined and contrasted the two instruments in a way that successfully conveys the effect of the full score. The same publishers have also issued an effective transcription for the pianoforte, by Mr. B. Tours, of M. Gounod's celebrated sacred song, "There is a green hill far away;" a spirited "Jubilant March" for the Organ, composed by Dr. Stainer; and Professor Macfarren's elaborate Sonata in G minor for the Pianoforte. This is the third work of the kind produced by this eminent composer, and it has recently been performed in public with great success by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, to whom it is dedicated. Messrs. Novello and Co. have just begun the publication of a series of "Pianoforte Albums," neatly engraved and printed, at the low price of a shilling. The first number comprises a selection of twenty extracts from Bach's compositions, edited by Mr. B. Tours and prefaced by an explanation of the old signs used for grace notes. The same firm has added to its cheap and very extensive octavo edition of oratorios and sacred music a Communion Service in B flat, adapted from one of Mozart's numerous pieces composed for the Catholic Church, the English adaptation having been made by the Rev. J. Baden Powell; the musical portion being edited, and the pianoforte accompaniment arranged, by Mr. B. Tours.

"Boadicea, Queen of the Iceni"—Dr. Bridge's cantata, recently performed with success by the Highbury Philharmonic Society—has been published, in a handy and inexpensive octavo edition, by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co., who have also issued the 47th part of the "Organist's Quarterly Journal," edited by Dr. Spark, of Leeds. This number contains some effective pieces, in different forms and styles, by Dr. J. V. Roberts, J. T. Pye, A. Carnall, R. H. Heath, and A. W. Marchant—all being, according to the principle of the work, written expressly for it.

"The Sands of Dee" is a very characteristic setting, by Mr. J. L. Hatton, of the Rev. Charles Kingsley's words. The piece is pleasingly melodious, while occasionally admitting of declamatory expression, and it lies within a moderate compass of voice. Messrs. Metzler and Co. are the publishers, as also of "The King's Jester" and "O love that 's true," both by Mr. Alfred Cellier, the former being a song of the robust kind, the latter a piece of agreeable melody in a calm and flowing style. Two pretty songs, "Jessie" and "The unfinished song," both by Mr. F. H. Cowen; and "On mossy banks," an effectively written duet for soprano and tenor by B. F. Gilbert, are also published by Messrs. Metzler and Co.

"Love, the truant," (Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co.) is a song by Lady Benedict that is piquant while yet being simple and unpretending.

Messrs. Forsyth Brothers are issuing an interesting series of classical solos for the violin, with pianoforte accompaniment, edited by E. J. Payne. The first six numbers comprise pieces by Handel, Bach, Vivaldi, Boccherini, and Veracini. These arrangements will be very serviceable to amateurs.

"Impromptu" in F major, for the Pianoforte, by Charles Hallé, is one of the few (too few) instances in which that eminent pianist has proved that, had he devoted more of his attention to composition for his instrument, he might have been as distinguished in that respect as he has long been as a performer on it. The piece now referred to is not very elaborate, but is graceful in style, and forms an excellent study for sustained rapidity in right-hand passages. The "Impromptu" is also published by Messrs. Forsyth.

M. Massenet's "Scènes Pittoresques," which have been so successful in orchestral performances, have been published, by Mr. Joseph Williams, in an effective arrangement for two performers on the pianoforte.

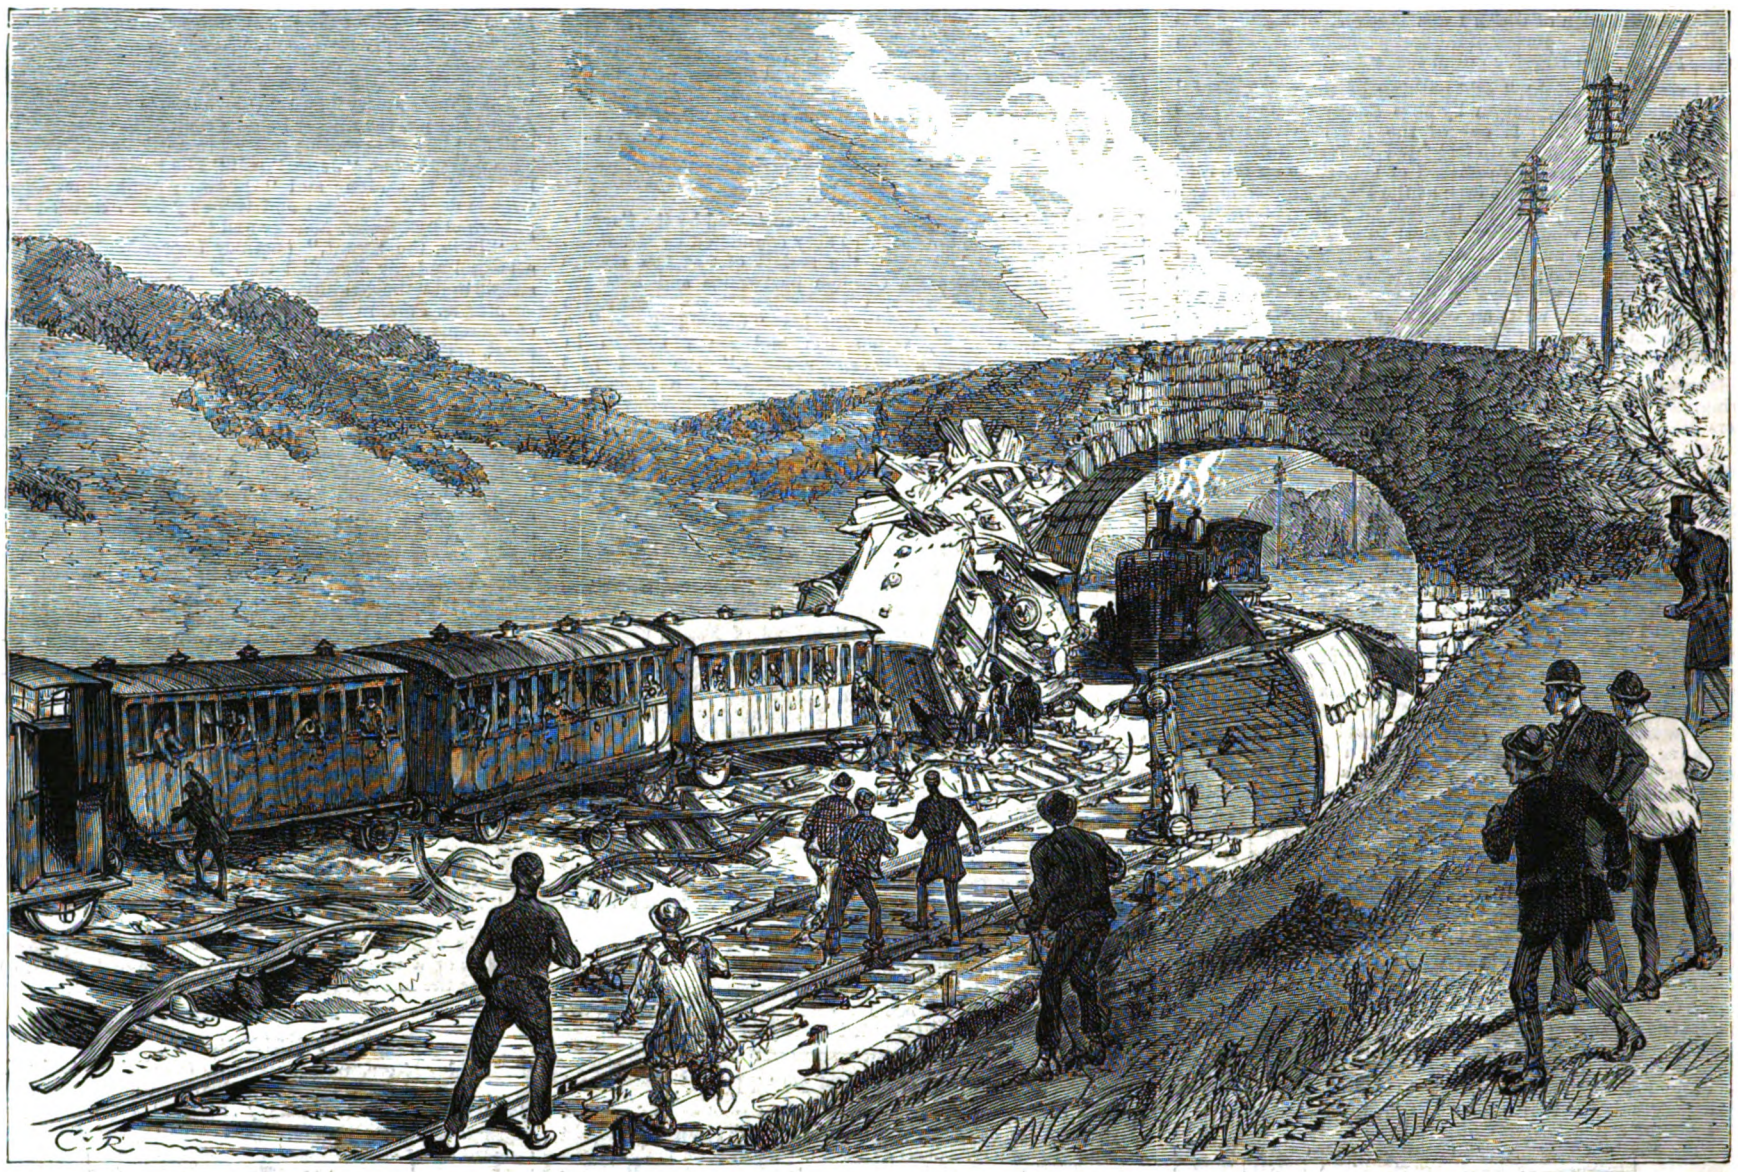
Another publication of a similar kind is Messrs. Neumeyer and Co.'s issue of Mr. A. C. Mackenzie's very clever orchestral "Rhapsodie Ecossaise," both as a pianoforte duet and for pianoforte solo.

Messrs. Ashdown and Parry have issued some brilliant and effective pianoforte pieces by Mr. Sidney Smith, including "The Last Rose of Summer" (a skilful "paraphrase de concert" of the well-known melody), "Echoes of the Past" (an expressive "meditation"), "La Gazza Ladra" (a fantasia on themes from Rossini's opera), and "Unter den Linden" (a spirited "valse").

"La Duchesse" (published by A. Hays) is a "Gavotte," for the Pianoforte, composed by "Zeta." It is a very spirited piece, in which the old dance rhythm is well preserved amid features of a more modern kind, and changes of key, which enhance the musical interest.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

On Monday afternoon the members of the British Archæological Association opened their thirty-seventh annual Congress in Devizes, and were cordially received by the Mayor and Corporation, and the representatives of the Wilts Archæological and Natural History Society in the Townhall, where a numerous audience assembled. The Rev. A. C. Smith, on the part of the Wilts Society, cordially welcomed the British Archæological Association, and observed that Wilts men were proud of the antiquities of their county, and they hoped to show the great London society objects of interest second to none in this country. They had certain mediæval specimens of architecture well worthy of inspection, also some good specimens of monastic work, Malmesbury and Lacock Abbeys, while there were interesting illustrations of domestic architecture at Patterne and other parts of the district. Wiltshire, however, was not famous so much for works of the periods referred to as for those of the earliest of all periods—the British periods; and where could they look for better specimens of these than on the downs to be visited during the week? They would also have the opportunity of inspecting Stonehenge and Avebury, which were the largest stone circles in existence—that at Avebury being the most extensive, although less known to the general public. Mr. Morgan, treasurer to the British Archæological Association, having replied, the visitors were conducted to the Churches of St. Mary and St. John, described by the Rector of Devizes, Dr. J. Hart Burges; the remains of the ancient Castle of Devizes, and the beautiful grounds of the modern structure, now the residence of Mr. Leach, were subsequently visited.



In the evening Earl Nelson gave the opening address in the Townhall. He pointed out the good that had been done by that and other similar bodies in illustrating the past, and remarked that within the last thirty years the history of our country had been wellnigh rewritten by the exertions of such societies. After alluding to the discoveries that had been made in Assyria, Mesopotamia, and other parts of the East by the labours of Layard and others, Lord Nelson continued:—"In the same way at home, though many points of history have been placed in a truer light by the printing of ancient records, much still remains to be done, and these recurring meetings, though they may revisit scenes often visited and reported on before, have a greater work to perform than is at first apparent. Their work is a missionary one, and the zest that such meetings give to all to become antiquaries, to gather together little bits of their family history and of the history of their respective parishes, and to support the local societies, is evident to all who observe and peruse the mass of information which comes before us from time to time in the pages of the journals which such societies publish, and which go far to found the materials of a county history." The company then adjourned to the Bear Hotel, where Earl Nelson presided at a public dinner.

The Sussex Archæological Society held its thirty-third annual meeting on the 12th inst., at Boxgrove, near Drayton, the company altogether numbering over 300. Boxgrove Church was the first place visited, and its fine old architectural features formed the subject of an interesting and elaborate paper by one of the members, and was further supplemented by a verbal description of some conventual buildings, the ruins of which (of considerable dimensions) were formerly connected with the church. A visit was next paid to Halmeden, the ruins of an old baronial residence of that name. Respecting this place some curious antiquarian information was imparted to the assembly, dealing principally with the pedigree of its owners anterior to the sixteenth century. The company afterwards dined at Goodwood Park—the Bishop of Chichester presiding. By the permission of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the company subsequently had the pleasure of inspecting the grand suite of apartments at Goodwood House.

TWO FATAL RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

The disaster of Tuesday, last week, to the "Flying Scotchman" train from Edinburgh, on the North British Railway near Berwick, was followed on the Wednesday afternoon by one twice as great in destruction of human life, on that branch of the Midland Railway system which connects Leeds and Bradford with Lancaster and Morecambe Bay. Seven persons were killed in the latter instance, and as many were seriously injured.

The first-mentioned accident, which was briefly reported in our last, was caused by the morning express-train from Edinburgh to London running off the rails. This train consisted of an engine, two guards' vans, and nine first and second class carriages, containing a large number of passengers. The journey was performed in safety until the train reached the curve at Marshall-meadows cutting, four hundred yards north of the Marshall-meadows bridge, midway between Berwick and Burnmouth stations, and about three miles from the North British station at Berwick. At this point the engine appears to have left the line. The passengers felt an oscillation of the train, and then a sudden divergence of the carriages from the line. The engine had parted from the tender and been thrown across the lines, the front wheels being imbedded in the bank next to the line on which the train was running. The tender was thrown up the bank on the opposite side, with the wheels and under framework of the guard's van on the top of it, the remainder of the van being fully twenty yards up the bank, and almost smashed to pieces. The first carriage was thrown alongside the guard's van, and the second, third, and fourth across the line, where they lay in a twisted position. Another carriage was cast on the bank parallel with the engine, and the remaining carriages, partly standing on the line and partly leaning on the bank, were more or less destroyed. The rails were torn up and bent into all sorts of shapes, and the ground and the banks on each side were ploughed up to a great extent. From the appearance of the train, it is marvellous that anyone could have escaped without at least being more or less injured. The engine-driver, Thompson, of Newcastle, must have been killed instantaneously. His remains presented a terrible appearance. The fireman, whose name was Norman, and who belonged to Gateshead, was picked up alive. His arm was broken. There was a large wound on the leg, and he was internally injured. He was conveyed to Berwick Infirmary, where he died soon after. One of the three men killed was a guard named Pearce, belonging to Newcastle. He had gone to Edinburgh by the morning express from Newcastle, and was returning home as a passenger in the carriage next to the guard's van. The passengers in the train escaped without hurt. The bodies of the men killed were interred on Friday in the cemetery at Gateshead. An official inquiry of the Board of Trade was opened at Berwick the same day, and evidence was taken as to the condition of the rails, chairs, and sleepers, which seem to have been imperfectly spiked together. Our three Illustrations are from photographs taken by Mr. W. Green, of Berwick-on-Tweed and Norham.

The other accident, which took place at Wennington Junction, twelve miles north of Lancaster, about two in the afternoon, has excited still greater alarm in the general public mind. The passengers were mostly people from the towns of the West Riding, family parties or single holiday-makers going to Morecambe Bay, which has of late years become a favourite seaside resort for the inhabitants of that part of Yorkshire. All went well with the train till it had passed Wennington, where the line becomes single, except at the stations, where it is made double for shunting purposes. When the train, which had not to stop at Wennington, got three or four hundred yards on the south side of the station, and was taking the facing points where the line diverged, the engine struck the points. The train was going at a speed of thirty-five miles an hour. The engine ploughed along the line, dragging the carriages along with it till they came to a bridge which crosses the railway. The carriage next to the engine caught the buttress of the bridge on the north side and was smashed to pieces, the following carriage telescoping into it. The remaining carriages were piled up above these two on to the embankment by the side of the bridge. The engine was thrown across the line, the tender being some distance away from it. The line was ploughed up for some distance, and the rails were bent and twisted as though they had been pieces of wire, both lines being blocked. After the first confusion, news of the accident was telegraphed to Lancaster and Morecambe. In a very short time a dozen medical men were sent up by a special train and rendered what assistance they could to the injured, who had been removed from the wrecked train on to the side of the railway embankment. Those killed were Joseph Stewart, potato dealer, Morecambe; Miss Mitchell, Hawkcliffe House, Keighley; Mr. Mitchell, brother of the last-named; Mrs. M'Kenna, beerhouse keeper, Keighley or Skipton; William M'Kenna, her son; and Mrs. Shepherd, of Swinton, near Rotherham, whose daughter Maud had both thighs fractured. Two boys of fourteen were also killed.

Seven of those seriously injured were brought on to the Lancaster Infirmary. Upon examination it was found that two women were suffering from fractures of both thighs; another woman from fractured leg and thigh; a third woman from a bad injury to the knee; one boy, about sixteen years of age, from concussion of the brain, and partially unconscious; another boy, of about the same age, from fracture of the hip joint; and a younger boy had both his legs fractured. Mr. George Hastings, a brother of the Rev. Samuel Hastings, of Halton, who was on his way to visit that gentleman, sustained a bad fracture of both legs. He was brought on to Halton Rectory. At Lancaster and Morecambe the railway stations were besieged by visitors and residents anxious as to the safety of friends who had been expected by that train. The scene on the arrival of the wounded, by a train at six o'clock, was very distressing. An inquest has been opened by the coroner at Lancaster. Colonel Yolland, one of the inspectors of the Board of Trade, attended the adjourned inquest on Tuesday last. The Illustration is from a Sketch by our own Artist.

A curious Act of Parliament has just been issued, to remove doubts as to expressions relating to time in Acts of Parliament, deeds, and other legal instruments. In future "time" in Great Britain is to mean "Greenwich mean time," and in Ireland "Dublin mean time."

There was a Sunday-school centenary celebration on Tuesday at Lincoln. Six thousand children with their teachers paraded the streets, and at the invitation of the Mayor (Mr. F. J. Clark) proceeded to Bracebridge Park, where tea was provided. The hall and grounds were thrown open, and the Mayor's hospitality was extended to all who attended. The afternoon was observed as a general holiday.—A gathering of more than fifteen hundred school children was held yesterday week on White Horse Hill, Berkshire, in connection with the Sunday School Centenary.

THE COURT.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice were much interested one evening last week in the operations of an assumed defence and attack of a channel in front of Portsmouth by guns and torpedoes, and also experiments with the electric light in lighting up the surface of the sea, when objects upon it were rendered invisible or indistinct by the smoke of firing. Her Majesty and the Princess witnessed the operations, which lasted an hour, from the Terrace at Osborne.

Princess Louise of Lorne and Prince Leopold arrived at Osborne on Wednesday week. The Prince of Wales came to see her Royal Highness immediately after her arrival; and remained to luncheon with the Queen. Her Majesty drove out with Princess Louise and Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold. The Prince and Princess of Wales joined the Royal dinner circle.

The Queen knighted Colonel John Carstairs M'Neill, C.B., V.C., C.M.G., the next day, and invested him with the insignia of a Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George, on his return from Canada, whither he had, by her Majesty's command, accompanied Prince Leopold. Princess Louise took leave of her Majesty the same day, and left for Buckingham Palace, on her way to Germany, where her Royal Highness is gone for the benefit of her health. Colonel Sir John Carstairs M'Neill attended her to London.

Later in the day the Queen and Princess Beatrice drove out, and were present for some time at a cricket-match played at Osborne between the Osborne Cricket Club and the officers and men of the Royal yacht. Princesses Victoria and Frances of Schleswig-Holstein visited her Majesty and remained to luncheon; and the Countess of Dartrey and the Earl of Kimberley dined with the Queen.

The Duke of Edinburgh, who had arrived at Cowes in her Majesty's yacht Lively from Plymouth on his return from a cruise with the Channel Squadron as Rear-Admiral in command of the Reserve Squadron, visited her Majesty yesterday week in the morning, and also dined with the Queen and Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold. The Prince and the Princess had passed the day in the Solent on board the Royal yacht's steam-barge, Captain Thomson being in attendance.

Her Majesty's dinner party last Saturday included Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, Lady Waterpark, the Earl and Countess of Wilton, the Hon. Harriet Phipps, Admiral Ryder, the Right Hon. Lieutenant-General Sir Henry Ponsonby, and Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph.

The Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Osborne by the Rev. Ernest R. Wilberforce, Canon of Winchester. Princes Albert Victor and George visited her Majesty; and the Duke of Edinburgh and Princesses Victoria and Louise of Schleswig-Holstein lunched with the Queen.

The Queen drove to Trinity Pier, East Cowes, on Monday, and met the Empress Eugénie on her arrival, the Empress having crossed in her Majesty's yacht Alberta from Portsmouth, where she was met by Princess Beatrice.

The Duke of Edinburgh visited the Queen and the Empress on Tuesday morning. Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales also came to see the Queen. Her Majesty and the Empress, with Princess Beatrice, walked and drove out.

The Hon. Mary Lascelles and the Hon. Harriet Phipps have succeeded the Hon. Frances Drummond and the Hon. Ethel Cadogan as Maids of Honour in Waiting to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have, with their usual kindliness, been gracefully identifying themselves with the interests of the British Army. Last Saturday their Royal Highnesses, with Princes Albert Victor and George and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, accompanied by Rear-Admiral the Duke of Edinburgh, arrived at Portsmouth from Cowes on board the Osborne, Commander Lord Charles Beresford, in order to be present at the annual military athletic sports. The Royal party first inspected the 80-ton gun of the turret-ship Inflexible, which had just arrived from Woolwich; and subsequently lunched with Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Countess Dornberg at Government House, after which they went to the garrison recreation-ground and witnessed the sports, the Princess presenting the prizes to the successful competitors. Their Royal Highnesses returned in the evening on board the Osborne to Cowes, the Duke of Edinburgh returning in the Lively.

The Prince and Princess again visited Portsmouth on Monday, accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, for the purpose of presenting new colours to the 1st Battalion of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers on the eve of their embarkation for India on board the Malabar. The Prince performed the ceremony, and feelingly addressed the regiment, after which his Royal Highness had the whole of the officers drawn up on each side of the drums, and as they saluted and passed to their posts each was individually presented to himself and the Princess by Lieutenant-Colonel Elgee, commanding. The Prince and Princess subsequently entertained a large party at luncheon on board the Osborne, after which the Royal party, augmented by Princess Beatrice (who had arrived in the Alberta to meet the Empress Eugénie at Portsmouth), went on board the Malabar and passed three-quarters of an hour in inspecting the ship. The Malabar afterwards drew away into the stream, followed by the Osborne, amid the utmost enthusiasm from the large assemblage witnessing her departure.

The Prince's racing-yacht, Formosa, has been taking part in the Royal Albert Yacht Club Regatta this week.

The Duke of Edinburgh arrived in London on Tuesday night from Dover, where he had landed from the Lively. The Duchess of Edinburgh, with her children, has arrived at the Duke's Palace at Coburg from Tsarkoe-Selo. His Royal Highness will join her shortly.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived at Munich yesterday week from Darmstadt, and proceeded the next day to Oberammergau to witness the Passion Play.

The Duke of Cambridge left Gloucester House, Park-lane, on Tuesday evening, for Germany.

The Duchess of Westminster, accompanied by the Duke and by the Marquis and Marchioness of Ormonde, the Hon. Captain C. and Lady Beatrix Cavendish, and Lord Ronald Leveson-Gower, has left Grosvenor House for Cliveden.

Mr. Gladstone has rapidly recruited his health.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Lord Edward Somerset, Royal Horse Guards, fourth son of the Duke of Beaufort, with Miss Fanny Julia Dixie, youngest daughter of the late Sir Alexander Beaumont Churchill Dixie, Bart., and sister of the present Baronet, was solemnized on Tuesday at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. Before the wedding party assembled, a corporal-major and six non-commissioned officers, with thirty troopers of the bridegroom's regiment, entered the church and lined the way from the north door to the communion-table, by which the bridal procession passed. The bride on her arrival was received by Sir Beaumont Dixie, her brother, by whom she was given away. The bridesmaids were Miss Wollaston, Miss Adderley, and Miss Langrishe. The bride wore a dress of white duchesse satin trimmed with Brussels point and chatelaine of natural orange-blossoms, and veil of Brussels lace over a wreath of real orange-blossoms and stephanotis, fastened by a large diamond star. The jewels were a pearl necklace and diamond pendant, a gift from the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, and diamond and pearl bracelet, a present from the Marquis of Queensberry. The bridesmaids wore costumes of cream satin draped with mousseline de soie, trimmed with coffee-coloured lace, ruby velvet Tam o'Shanter hats. Each also wore a gold mouse pearl acorn bracelet, the gift of the bridegroom, and carried a bouquet of deep red roses and carnations. Mr. G. L. Wickham, R.H.G., was best man. The marriage was performed by the Rev. Benjamin Ludford Astley, Rector of Cadeby, Leicestershire, brother-in-law of the bride. The wedding breakfast was given by the bride's sister, Mrs. Park-Yates, at her hotel in Cork-street. The bride and bridegroom went to Bognor for the honeymoon. The wedding gifts were valuable, and included presents of silver from the Cheshire Hunt servants, from Mrs. Park-Yates's servants, and from Lady Dixie's servants at The Grange.

Mr. Charles Stuart-Wortley, M.P. for Sheffield, was married at the British Embassy in Paris, on Monday, to Beatrice, daughter of Mr. Anthony Trollope.

The marriage of Lady Beatrice Pelham-Clinton and Mr. Cecil Lister-Kaye will take place at the end of September.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

Noble Lords still tarry for the Queen's Speech. Forewarned by Mr. Gladstone's collapse from over-work, Ministers flit to the country for a brief rest in fresh air from Saturday to Monday, and so steel their nerves to bear with equanimity the Earl of Redesdale's mild remonstrances at the tardiness of the Lower House in deliberating upon measures which the noble Earl, as Chairman of Committees, knows how to push through the Chamber of Peers with exemplary expedition. Not reassured by the announcement in the semi-official daily organ of the Government that the Session would probably be brought to a close by Sept. 3, Lord Redesdale was on Tuesday moved to complain that the Employers' Liability Bill had not yet reached their Lordships, and that there was no sign of the Hares and Rabbits Bill coming up for consideration during the week. To which Earl Granville consolingly replied that, though circumstances had delayed those measures, some comfort might be found by the noble Earl in the fact that the Merchant Shipping and Post-Office Money Order Bills had come up that day.

Those of their Lordships who have devoted themselves to the country by loyally persevering in their attendance, despite the most aggravating temptations to forsake the seat of duty by alluring reports of portentous bags from the moors, have had the usual variety of themes brought before them. When not dispatching bills, noble Lords have within the past week had their attention discreetly drawn to Afghanistan by the Earl of Camperdown, to the difficulties of reporting in the House by Lord Sudeley, to the Sword of Damocles, which the gallant Lord Strathnairn—no mean authority on military matters—has persisted in holding over the head of General Lord Chelmsford for his conduct of the Zulu Campaign; to the rumoured joint naval demonstration against Turkey, with regard to which Earl Granville diplomatically declined to enlighten Lord Stratheden and Campbell further than he had done on Monday week; to the question of the London water supply by Earl Fortescue, who pumped from the Earl of Fife the information that the Government favoured the plan of the Select Committee for establishing a Water Trust for the metropolis.

Candahar a free city under British administration! Lord Waveney on Tuesday intimated that, on Sept. 2, he would move for an address to her Majesty praying that negotiations might be opened to bring about this result.

A brief but important debate upon India was initiated on Tuesday by the Earl of Camperdown, who was of opinion that it would be economical to substitute a Lieutenant-Governor for a Governor in Madras. Earl Northbrook, in the course of an instructive exposition of the Indian administration, incidentally stated that he had, when Viceroy, recommended the abolition of the office of First Minister to the Viceroy, and that recommendation had been carried out, at a saving of £8000 a year. With regard to the general question, the noble Earl the First Lord of the Admiralty said the matter should receive the attention of the Government.

COMMONS.

The grave financial statement of the Marquis of Hartington, as Secretary for India, claims notice first. The noble Lord, who has acquitted himself with characteristic firmness and discretion since the illness of Mr. Gladstone threw upon him the burden of Leadership, must in fairness be said to have strengthened his political position by the masterly manner in which he handled the formidable mass of figures he had to deal with on Tuesday. It was eminently a business-like exposition. Of necessity, his Lordship had to deal in a great measure with the accounts prepared by the late Government, corrected, however, in accordance with the subsequent revelations of millions of war expenditure not estimated by his predecessor in office. The noble Lord, while explaining this stupendous blunder, could not withhold some blame from the Indian authorities responsible for the huge deficit; but plainly preferred that the figures should tell their own significant tale to heaping of censure upon negligent administrators. Lord Hartington computed the revenue of the current year at £66,746,000, and the expenditure at £66,329,000, leaving a surplus of £417,000, instead of, as last year, a nominal surplus of £330,000. In face of existing responsibilities, no reductions in expenditure could be promised yet, and a diminution could only safely be brought about by a gradual change of policy. The cost of public works in India having been reviewed, his Lordship came to the weighty additions made to the expenditure for the war in Afghanistan. For example, to the £2,090,000 estimated as the cost of the war for the present year, three and a half millions have to be added. But the passage in which Lord Hartington summed up the colossal inaccuracies of the late Indian Government with respect to this department of expenditure deserves to be quoted in full:—

The following is a summary of the war expenditure, showing the estimated charge, the actual cost, and the addition that has had to be made to the estimates:—In 1878-9 the estimated charge was £676,000, the actual charge was £2,926,000, the addition that has to be made being £2,250,000. In 1879-80 the estimated charge was £3,216,000; the actual charge was £6,466,000, the addition that has to be made being £3,250,000. In 1880-1 the estimated charge was £2,090,000, the actual charge being £5,590,000, the addition that has to be made being £3,500,000. Thus the total estimated charge for the war for the last three years is £5,982,000, the actual charge is £14,982,000, the total addition that has to be made being £9,000,000. If the true war expenditure had been known in each year, the year 1878-9, instead of closing with an apparent surplus of two millions, would have closed with an equilibrium or a slight deficit; the year 1879-80, instead of closing with an apparent small surplus, would have closed with a deficit of nearly three millions; and the year 1880-1, instead of closing with an apparent small surplus, would have closed with a deficit of about five millions. I have stated that but for the war a surplus of £11,179,000 would have been obtained in the three years. Taking the gross cost of the war during those years roughly at £14,000,000, after allowing £1,000,000 for the increased revenues from the railways and the telegraphs occasioned by the war, and adding to it the £4,000,000, the cost of the frontier railway, which is charged in the expenses of the war, we have a total war expenditure of £18,184,426. Deducting from that sum the £11,179,000, the amount of the surplus, we have a deficit for the three years of £7,005,000. I have already stated how this enormous error of £9,000,000 on an expenditure now estimated at £15,000,000 has occurred. It has occurred through taking audited accounts of a portion of the war period as a basis of the estimate. But the despatches from India to the Home Government give us some reason to believe that there existed a most trustworthy basis on which the estimate might have been framed had it occurred to anybody to make use of it. . . . At the very time when these sanguine estimates were announced, General Stewart had been ordered to march from Candahar to Cabul, and the force at Candahar was replaced by the Bombay troops. It was then fondly hoped that the war would be over by the end of this summer, and that the troops would be able to return to India. I do not think that the members of the Supreme Government in India would wish to hold themselves free from responsibility in this matter. Lord Lytton, not on this account, but in consequence of the general divergence of his views with regard to India from those of the present Government, has resigned, and his example has been followed by Sir J. Strachey and Sir Edwin Johnson.

The noble Lord then manfully tackled the financial difficulty; and, while showing that the £3,500,000 which remained of this war debt would be met for the present by the proceeds of the Indian loan previously sanctioned, insisted that England was bound to defray her share of a war incurred for Imperial purposes, and concluded his able speech in these words:—"I trust it will be my duty, or that of whoever may succeed me in this office, on future occasions, to devote a larger portion of the statement to matters affecting the internal condition of India and the improvement and progress of its people; and I believe that the energy and the ability displayed in our Indian empire will not fail in eventually securing the happiness and prosperity of that great country."

A prolonged debate ensued on Indian affairs. Mr. Otway, taking up the mantle of Mr. Fawcett as an Indian reformer, moved as an amendment, "That the public expenditure in India and the charges on the Indian revenue defrayed in England are excessive; and that in the interests of the people of India it is desirable to effect a prompt and large diminution of such expenditure." Of the speeches that followed, the most noteworthy were Mr. E. Stanhope's, which entered into a cheerfully glib defence of his own action as the former Under-Secretary for India; Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett's, counselling the annexation of Afghanistan; Mr. J. K. Cross's comprehensive address, exhibiting a remarkable grasp of India's financial state; Mr. Fawcett's call for a radical change in the government of India; and Sir George Campbell's dry Indian experiences. Mr. Otway ultimately withdrew his amendment; and, Sir Stafford Northcote reserving his reply, the debate was adjourned to Tuesday next.

Ireland has furnished the next topic of import. The inconsiderate appeal of an Irish member, Mr. Dillon, to the passions of the peasants on Sunday led Sir W. Barttelot to call Mr. Forster's attention to the speech on Tuesday. Mr. T. P. O'Connor endeavoured to exculpate the member for Tipperary; but the Secretary for Ireland roundly rebuked Mr. Dillon, declaring that such speeches were as craven as they were wicked—a pungent remark, which called up Mr. Joseph Cowen with the retort that the report of his friend's speech might, as Mr. T. P. O'Connor also suggested, have been incorrectly reported. "It has not been contradicted," replied Mr. Forster, who thereafter had occasion to express surprise that "every man of importance, every man of influence, and every Minister" did not meet to set their faces against "the foolish processions" which lead to the "miserable rioting" that is "a perfect disgrace to the province of Ulster, and to a civilised country."

As an economist, Mr. Bradlaugh made his appearance at question-time, and gathered from the Marquis of Hartington that the India Office was, so to speak, dunning the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh for a sum of £13,000 that had been lent to that Indian resident in England. Sir William Harcourt, however, declined to be drawn by the member for Northampton into an expression of opinion regarding a freethinker's recent experience in a police court.

The Burials Bill was read the second time, on the 12th inst., by 258 votes to 79 after an eloquent debate, the salient features of which were the triumphant speech of Mr. Osborne Morgan in introducing the measure he had advocated for many years, the "Batavian" facetiousness of Mr. Beresford-Hope in opposing it, the impressive and weighty arguments of Mr. Bright in supporting the bill, and the final protest of Sir R. Cross against a measure which would, in his opinion, weaken the Church.

The Employers' Liability Bill, regarded with unabated hostility by the railway authorities in the House, was made yet more stringent against them by the adoption of Mr. Morley's addition to clause 1 yesterday week, when the measure at length passed through Committee. During the evening, an effective speech from Mr. O'Connor Power led Mr. Foster to admit the existence of a deplorable amount of fever in the distressed districts of Ireland.

Wednesday afternoon was occupied with a final stand against the Employers' Liability Bill, which, Mr. Gorst's motion to give dockyard workmen the advantage of the measure having been withdrawn, was read the third time, and passed amid cheers. The Savings Banks Bill was then taken up in Committee.

The desire of Lord Hartington to give the House the fullest information possible regarding Afghanistan was again exemplified on Monday, when the noble Lord read telegrams showing that the new Ameer had occupied Sherpur, Roberts was steadily advancing to Candahar, Khelat-i-Ghilzai was quiet, and a Pathan attack upon Kuch Amadan had been repulsed. Replying to questions, his Lordship added that he did not place much faith in the Afghan chiefs, but thought there was no collusion between Abdul Rahman and Ayoub Khan, as their interests were divergent. Monday evening was serviceably spent in Supply.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the first week in August was 82,618, of whom 46,190 were in workhouses, and 36,491 received outdoor relief. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 769, of whom 535 were men, 194 women, and 40 children under sixteen.

In London last week 2602 births and 1670 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 214, and the deaths by 64, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 6 from smallpox, 38 from measles, 58 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, 32 from whooping-cough, 19 from different forms of fever, and 348 from diarrhœa. In Greater London 3261 births and 2021 deaths were registered.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The racing at Redcar, Kempton Park, and Windsor last week was good enough in its way; still, the period between the end of the Sussex fortnight and the York Meeting is always a very dull one, a large number of the aristocratic followers of the sport being away on the various grouse-moors, and finding the crack of a breechloader a welcome change from the somewhat monotonous roar of "Two to one, bar one." Theckla showed little of her early form in two attempts at Redcar, being beaten out of a place on each occasion; still, she carried heavy penalties, and the allowances claimed by most of her opponents placed her at a still greater disadvantage. Mr. Bowes won the Third Kirkleatham Biennial with Fleecy Cloud, a daughter of Adventurer and Toison d'Or, and the success of the colours of such a grand old sportsman was most popular. At Kempton Park the uncertain Montrose succumbed to Lady of Lyons, a daughter of Blue Gown, who carried off another race on the following day; and Reefer, who has mended his ways wonderfully, added a couple more victories to those that he has been gaining of late. Sleeping Beauty was undoubtedly the highest-class performer that appeared at Windsor, and two good stakes rewarded Mr. Langley for sending her there. The chief handicap fell to Charles I., and the disappointing Roscius managed to win a race for Mr. Rayner.

On Tuesday, Stockton presented far more attractions than Egham, still the bulk of the southerners naturally patronised the latter fixture. In the Cleveland Stakes, Abbess of Beauchief, who does great credit to Prince Charlie, managed to carry her 10 lb. penalty successfully, though only after a desperate race with Loonie. Teviotdale had only Fleecy Cloud to beat in the Twenty-third Zetland Biennial; and, though he looked decidedly big, and won in a canter, odds of 33 to 1 are still offered against him for the Leger. At Egham, Sleeping Beauty, who must have had rather too much of it lately, succumbed to Queen Frederica; Battlement, another very smart selling plater, won a couple of races; and Silverstreak at last managed to get back some of the money that has been lost over him by beating the Lady Bothwell filly in the Egham Plate.

The sale of blood stock at the Cobham paddock on Saturday was fairly successful, though none of the sires that were offered found purchasers. This was rather surprising, as both Albert Victor and George Frederick have shown fair promise, and the reserves placed upon them were by no means exorbitant. The brood mares that the late Mr. Cartwright disposed of in a lot to M. Andre sold decidedly well, Phœbe Athol (700 gs.), Fair Lyonese (920 gs.), mare by Lord Clifden—Princess of Wales (700 gs.), Victoria Alexandra (520 gs.), and Eau de Vie (500 gs.), all being knocked down at remunerative prices.

The Royal Victoria Yacht Club regatta took place last week, and, on the whole, the committee were favoured with delightful weather. Proceedings opened with the match for yachts of any rig, over 40 tons, and after an extraordinary finish, which occupied about twenty hours, the Florinda, 134 tons, took the first prize of £100; the Miranda, 132 tons, the second, of £50; and the Vanduara, 91 tons, the third, of £25. The Town Cup was secured by the Florinda, by time allowance, the Latona, though coming in first, not gaining sufficient to allow of her taking the prize. The cutter prize was won by the Norman, and the prize for second-class yachts was taken by the Freda. The Commodore's Prize—a service of plate value £100, presented by the Marquis of Exeter for all yachts belonging to any Royal yacht club, was carried off by Mr. A. B. Rowley's yawl Latona, after a magnificent race, the sight at the start being a very fine one. The final races for the week were taken by the Asia Minor, of H.M.S. Asia, who won the first prize for launches and sailing-boats belonging to her Majesty's ships; Queen of Palmyra securing similar honours in the sailing-match.

The Royal Albert Yacht Club regatta commenced on Tuesday last, and the programme embraced a number of very valuable prizes, including the Royal Albert Cup and a race for prizes of £50, £40, and £25, the first being presented by Mr. A. Brassey, the vice-commodore. The first contest claiming attention was for the Albert Cup, of the value of £100, for yachts exceeding forty tons, and at the finish the Florinda added yet another prize to her many victories of the present season. Norman won the prize for cutters belonging to any Royal yacht club, and Freda that for cutters not exceeding twenty tons.

A few days of fine weather at once has a marked effect upon cricket all over the country; bowlers, even of the highest class, get sadly knocked about, and there are always plenty of long scores to chronicle. In a match between Middlesex and Gloucestershire last week Mr. A. J. Webbe (142) played a grand innings, and he was well backed up by Messrs. Pearson (57) and A. J. Ford (45). On their second attempt, however, no one "came off," and Gloucestershire won by five wickets, some of the best individual scores being made by Messrs. Moberley (99), Cranston (53), and Townsend (40). The hitherto undefeated Notts team has at length succumbed to Yorkshire by five wickets. The bowling was too good on each side to admit of any heavy scoring, and the result was mainly due to the efforts of Bates, who took ten wickets at an expense of only 68 runs. Yorkshire v. Surrey ended in the defeat of the latter county in a single innings with 123 runs to spare; Humphrey (43) and Pooley (53) batted uncommonly well for their county; but the feature of the match was the grand innings of Ullyett (141); while Bates (57) and Grimshaw (45) were also good contributors to a total of 398. This week Middlesex has scored a grand victory over Yorkshire by six wickets. The Hon. A. Lyttelton (44) and Messrs. G. F. Vernon (40) and A. J. Ford (39) did most of the scoring for the winners; while Lockwood (57) played a splendid innings on the other side.

On Monday, W. G. George, the amateur champion at one and four miles, succeeded in running a mile in 4 min. 23 1-5th sec. This performance is the best on record, as W. Slade's fastest time is 4 min. 24½ sec. The path at Stamford Bridge, where the race took place, was in splendid condition, but the evening was not very favourable to fast time, as there was a good deal of wind. On Monday, Sept. 6, George will attempt to beat the best amateur time for four miles—20 min. 22 sec., also made by Slade.

The decision of the amateur swimming championship attracted very few people to the lake, South Norwood Park, on Saturday last. The distance was one mile, and there were nine starters, including most of the best-known swimmers of the day. D. Ainsworth, the champion of 1873, led for more than half the distance, when he gave up, completely exhausted, and eventually J. P. Taylor (Newcastle S.C.) won by twenty yards from A. E. France (Alliance S.C.), who was a little more than that distance in front of A. F. Bettinson (St. John's-wood S.C.). The winner's time was 30 min. 37 sec. Last week Captain Webb eclipsed his former achievements by swimming for seventy-four hours at Scarborough. During that time he only left the water for about four minutes.

HOME NEWS.

The Foresters' annual fête was held at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday, when there was an attendance of 34,000 visitors.

The thirteenth Trades Union Congress will be held at Dublin during the week beginning Sept. 13.

An aquatic fête was given in aid of the Atalanta Fund in the bath of the Royal Naval Hospital Schools at Greenwich on Wednesday afternoon; Mr. Lovibond officiating as starter.

Party riots have occurred at Portadown, Dungannon, and other places. At Dungannon on Monday night the police, in attempting to disperse the mob, used their firearms, causing the death of one man and wounding sixteen others.

The autumnal meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce will be held at Hawick on the 24th inst., and at Galashiels on the 26th inst. Mr. Whitwell, M.P., will be president of both meetings.

A Parliamentary return shows that to Dec. 31, 1879, the amount issued from the British Treasury for interest and management of the Imperial Ottoman Guaranteed Loan of 1855 was £138,469, of which £105,458 had been repaid.

Mr. Gray, M.P., having finally declined to accept the position of Lord Mayor of Dublin for the year 1881, Mr. George Moyers, LL.D., was unanimously nominated, on Monday, at a meeting of the municipal council of Dublin.

Mr. George Lees Underhill, J.P., ex-Mayor of Wolverhampton, has been presented with a handsome silver fruit-stand, valued at 250 guineas, together with a portrait of himself, as a mark of respect and esteem.

The annual report of the Markets Committee of the Corporation of London shows that the Central Meat, Poultry, and Provision Markets in Smithfield continue to prosper. The building contract for the new Fruit and Vegetable Market, undertaken last March, is in progress.

A coffee tavern was on Tuesday opened at Kingston, which, by permission of Prince Leopold, was called the Leopold Tavern. His Royal Highness is a shareholder, and shares are also held by Lady Brabazon, Sir Henry Peek, Bart., M.P., the Mayor of Kingston, and several magistrates.

The directors of the North British Railway Company have appointed Mr. W. H. Barlow, President of the Institute of Civil Engineers, to prepare plans for the reconstruction of the Tay Bride. Mr. Barlow was one of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the cause of the disaster.

Mr. M. A. Bass, M.P., speaking last Saturday at the opening of a free library at Smethwick, strongly insisted on the importance, indeed the necessity, of technical education, if the British working-classes were to compete successfully with foreign workmen.

On Monday the Lynn and Fakenham Railway was opened throughout for traffic, having been inspected on Saturday by General Hutchinson. The line is about twenty miles in length, and its construction was first proposed in 1845. Powers have been obtained for its extension to Norwich.

The "crowning of the Rosière" was among last Saturday's fêtes at the Alexandra Palace, when Helen Capel, of Walworth, was the "Rose Queen." She had been selected for industry and good conduct, and for having supported an aged parent.

The Association of Foremen Engineers and Draughtsmen on Saturday last held their annual festival at the Crystal Palace. A time-piece and a purse containing one hundred sovereigns, were presented to Mr. Joseph Newton, C.E., the president of the association a position which he has held for twenty-one years.

While the Rev. Mr. M'Fadden, parish priest of Derrybeg, in the county of Donegal, was saying mass on Sunday in his church, which is built over a rivulet, there came a flood, which entered the building, rising to a height of ten feet, and drowning, it is supposed, fifteen persons. The priest himself escaped with difficulty by climbing a window.

The supply of live stock and fresh meat from the United States and Canada last week was, of live stock an increase, and of fresh meat a decrease, when compared with the preceding week. The totals were as follows:—2465 cattle, 4955 sheep, 363 pigs, 3256 quarters of beef, 370 carcases of mutton, and 145 carcases of pigs.

The Lord Mayor, with the Lady Mayoress and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, left London last Saturday for Brussels, to attend the fêtes in celebration of the anniversary of Belgian Independence. His Lordship and the Lady Mayoress will also visit the Austrian Tyrol, returning to the Mansion House about the middle of September.

A Parliamentary return, issued yesterday week, shows that, since the passing of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, 390 vessels have been detained as defective, and 125 as overladen. Of the former, 376 were found unsafe, while the whole of the overladen ships were, on inspection, declared unsafe. Of the latter, 102 were iron steamers.

Mr. J. Dent-Dent has been appointed chairman of the North-Eastern Railway, in place of Mr. Leeman, resigned. Mr. Arthur Fitch, formerly assistant-secretary, has been appointed secretary of the Great Northern Railway Company, in the place of the late Mr. Alexander Forbes; and Mr. William Latter, of the general manager's department, has been appointed assistant-secretary, in the place of Mr. Fitch.

The Clothworkers' Company have offered £1000 towards the building of a new wing to the Mechanics' Institute at Keighley as a technical school, on condition that at least £4000 be subscribed locally. Mr. Isaac has promised another £1000 towards the new building. The Clothworkers' Company have also increased their annual contribution towards the maintenance of the Keighley Weaving School from £50 to £100.

Mr. Raphael Tuck, the fine-art publisher, has offered fourteen prizes, amounting to £500, for the best original sets of designs for Christmas and New-Year cards, in either water-colours or oil. Sir Coutts Lindsay, Mr. H. S. Marks, R.A., and Mr. G. H. Boughton, R.A., have consented to act as judges, and the competitive designs will be exhibited in October next at the Dudley Gallery.

Several thousand Irishmen from all parts of Scotland held a Home Rule gathering last Saturday in Glasgow. They marched through the principal streets to Maryhill, where resolutions were adopted to the effect that our land laws must be assimilated to those of the Continent, that a few years will show whether the democracy of Great Britain and Ireland or the House of Lords shall conquer, and that legislation for Ireland can be effected only in Dublin. Later in the day some rioting took place.

The new arrangement, which will afford admission to public hospitals of patients who are able and desirous of paying towards their maintenance, is about to receive a trial at St. Thomas's Hospital. The Adelaide and Alice Wards will be prepared for "paying patients." The other two wards in the same block—viz., Mary and Florence—are at present empty; and the idea is that, should the paying system be found to work, the wards just named may also be brought into requisition in the same manner.

THE WAR IN AFGHANISTAN.

The position of the beleaguered garrison under General Primrose in the citadel of Candahar, threatened by the army of Ayoub Khan, is a subject of present anxiety. It will yet be many days before it can be relieved, either by General Sir F. Roberts, moving southward from Cabul with ten thousand troops, or by General Phayre, advancing from Quetta in a north-westerly direction, through Pishin, over the Khojak Pass, and by the fort of Chaman. The latest intelligence we have of the condition of the garrison at Candahar is to the 11th inst., from General Primrose, sent by why of Quetta, which was a fortnight after the defeat of Brigadier-General Burrows at Khushk-i-Nakhud, half-way between Candahar and the Helmund. Up to the hour of the present writing, on Wednesday evening, the British garrison at Candahar is reported to be making good its defence. The enemy had opened fire with his Armstrong guns, at a distance of two thousand five hundred yards from the city. The damage so far was very slight. In the morning and evening a musketry fire was opened at the walls from the villages situated on three sides of the town. A Fusilier had been killed and two other wounded. Several of the natives had been wounded. There was a good supply of provisions and water for the garrison for forty-five days. The strength of the garrison was as follows:—1243 effective European soldiers and 3386 Native troops, besides a total of 382 sick. It was rumoured that the enemy intend to attack on the south side of the town.

Ayoub's strength is put down by General Primrose at 10,000, but this is probably an under estimate. The 5th of September is the time mentioned for General Sir F. Roberts to reach Candahar, if not delayed by hostilities at Ghuzni or at Khelat-i-Ghilzai.

CANDAHAR AND THE ARGANDAB VALLEY.

One of our Illustrations presented this week, from a photograph by Dr. Whylock and Major A. G. Owen, 19th Bengal Lancers, gives a different view of the Citadel at Candahar from that which was given in our last. It is the north side, with a portion of the city wall, 20 ft. high and 20 ft. thick, and the city gate, which is shown to the left hand. The castellated building within, formerly the Afghan Governor's Palace, is also conspicuous in this view. A minute description both of the Citadel and the town of Candahar has been published in this Journal of the last two weeks.

The camp of Ayoub Khan is about five miles west of Candahar, on the road to Herat crossing the Argandab river. It is at Kokoran, a lonely village, says the Daily Telegraph, "enclosed by the usual mud walls and having close by an inclosure strongly walled, the residence of Nur Mahomed, the Sartip, or commander of cavalry. This chief was in command of the Afghan horse, which on two occasions during the late campaign attempted to oppose the advance of General Stewart upon Candahar, and his son is now reported to be trying to raise the Ghilzai tribes in the neighbourhood of Khelat-i-Ghilzai against us.

"From Kokoran the road leads due east to Candahar, the traveller having on his left hand broad expanses of cultivated ground, sloping gradually towards the Argandab River, and interspersed with orchards of peach, apricot, and nectarine. On his right lies a stony range, which throws out frequent spurs, long and sloping, up to and across the road. The two highest points are some 800 ft. above the level of the river, and one of these was used during our occupation of the city as a signalling-tower, from which sun messages were flashed by heliograph to the turret in 'the General's garden,' and thence to the tower in the citadel.

"After advancing two miles along this road, the enemy would reach the end of the range, after which the road, suddenly dipping, leads across several water-courses, offering, however, no obstacles to the progress of artillery, as all are carefully ramped, while the last and most important is bridged. Crossing the bridge, a village is found lying to right and left, the walls brightened at this season with a thick, tangled growth of the 'bhendie' cucumber and its yellow, star-like flower, and the road, skirting the point of a rocky spur, is shaded by an avenue of fine old mulberry-trees.

"At this point, marked by a building in the rear of the 'Engineer's lines,' the chief canal from the Argandab crosses the road by the bridge which we have already mentioned, and runs alongside the road all the way to the Herat Gate of the city. With an orchard or two on the right hand and our abandoned cantonments on the left, the road, now within two miles of the city walls, traverses an expanse of cultivated ground, in which fields of Indian corn and barley alternate with broad patches of lucerne and clover, and here and there clusters of red rose-bushes, a flower of which the Afghan is especially fond, and which he cultivates in great perfection. Half a mile from the Herat Gate stand some groves of remarkably fine trees, mulberry and poplars, watered by the canal which flows by at their feet, and carefully tended by some fakeers, whose pious duty it is to see to the well-being of the Pirs' tombs shaded by them.

"The whole road, therefore, from Kokoran to the Herat Gate, some five miles, offers no obstacle—except at the bridge and junction of the road and the canal—to an army advancing in fighting order. For bombardment, the artillery would find excellent position in our abandoned cantonments, the walls of which would suffice to offer the best possible cover to even larger batteries than Ayoub Khan possesses. Here, however, he would be exposed to the guns of the citadel, which, at this range of about 2500 yards, would be certain to make capital practice; so that it is very likely that Ayoub Khan will resist the dangerous temptation offered by these buildings, and will, after crossing the bridge, pass to the south of the road, between the water-courses, and take up position for some of his batteries among the walled orchards and villages which lie in the prolongation of the line of road that crosses the city from the Cabul to the Herat Gates. Here he would be quite secure from the guns of the citadel, for not only is the range too long a one for effective practice, but the position is virtually invisible from the level of the guns on the citadel, in consequence of the city walls, which are the same height as those of the citadel, intervening. Of course, General Primrose could mount a gun on the central and highest bastion of the fort, from which he could shell Ayoub Khan's position; but this, at the best, could hardly do more than annoy the enemy."

The foregoing description of the country westward of Candahar, which is likely to be the field of battle when Sir Frederick Roberts or General Phayre come to relieve the besieged garrison, will be read with much interest. It mentions the "stony range, with spurs long and sloping," of which we give an Illustration, likewise from one of Major Owen's and Dr. Whylock's photographs, in our view of the Argandab Valley, showing the hills of the Baba Wulu Pass on the right.

KHELAT-I-GHILZAI.

Next to Candahar and General Primrose, the safety of the British garrison at Khelat-i-Ghilzai, on the road north of Candahar towards Ghuzni and Cabul, has excited much solicitude. We present a view of the interior of this fortress, having published an exterior view of it during the campaign at the commencement of the war.

The following description of Khelat-i-Ghilzai has been drawn up by the War Office:—"Khelat-i-Ghilzai is a fort standing on the right bank of the Tarnak river, on an isolated plateau having a command to the south of 5773 ft. above the surrounding country. The ramparts have been scarped to a great height out of the face of the hill, and riveted with bricks made of kneaded straw and mud, built up in layers and allowed to dry in the sun. A substantial parapet surmounts the rampart, and is carried all round the works, embracing the whole plateau, the slopes of which form the glacis, and are in places exceedingly steep. At six or eight feet from the foot of the rampart the hill has been scarped perpendicular for a height of about eight feet. Near the western face is a mass of conglomerate, some eighty or one hundred feet high, forming a natural cavalier, upon which a gun en barbette ranges upon the works below. From this rock two copious springs flow, affording an abundant supply of excellent water for the garrison of the fort. There are two gateways: the main one is on the south side. The approach to it is steep, and is well flanked by the works on the left. The other gate is on the north side; it has no flanking defences, and the approach to it is comparatively easy, for the large masses of conglomerate which are scattered about would afford good cover from which to keep down any fire which might be opened on a party approaching the gate. Within the fort and between the two gates is the bazaar, containing at present some thirty shops. The quarters of the garrison are ranged round the ramparts; the magazine is near the south-west corner. There are two extensive granaries, and a residence for the governor. There is no town at Khelat-i-Ghilzai, but there are several small walled villages not far from the fort of the north-west. The military importance of Khelat-i-Ghilzai as an advanced post on the road from Candahar to Ghuzni and Cabul is very clear, and the position of the place within the territory of the powerful Ghilzai tribe renders its possession highly valuable in a political sense, for the future course of operations in Afghanistan must depend much upon the attitude of this tribe. In the Afghan campaign of 1878-9 the fort was occupied by British troops, and again in October, 1879, by a force under Brigadier-General Hughes, from Candahar, by which it is still held (January, 1880). Subsequent to which date General Hughes, with a portion of this force, returned to Candahar, leaving a garrison under Colonel Tanner. This garrison was again modified, as under, on General Stewart's advance on Cabul in April, 1880:—Garrison in August, 1880: C-2 R.A., two guns; 3rd Sind Horse, detachment; 66th Foot, two companies; 29th Bombay Native Infantry; about 1100 of all ranks."

The fears generally expressed about the garrison of Khelat-i-Ghilzai seem to be unfounded. If they have sufficient provisions there is little ground for alarm, for the present garrison is stronger in total numbers and in Europeans than that commanded by Captain Craigie in 1842. In November, 1841, Captain Craigie, with a body of infantry and forty-three European artillerymen, entered the fort. Shortly after his arrival, some 300 Sepoys of the 43rd Bengal Native Infantry were added, making the garrison nearly 1000 strong. The fortifications of the place had been little more than commenced when Captain Craigie entered it; indeed, along some hundred yards there was neither ditch nor parapet. Captain Craigie set his men to work, and soon the fort became fairly defensible. There was wheat, but no mills, and animal food was scarce. Mills were, however, constructed after many failures; and when the neighbouring villagers, under pressure from the insurgent chiefs, left off bringing in food, sorties were made to carry off sheep. Every sort of hardship, the worst being extreme cold, was borne with admirable cheerfulness by all ranks. Though obliged to be always on the watch against surprise, only a little desultory fighting took place till the spring, when some Ghilzai chiefs took up a position close to the fortress, drawing gradually near, and daily increasing the strength of their force. Towards the middle of May the besiegers began to construct trenches all round the place, working at them only during the night. By the 20th the circuit was completed, and the nearest works were within 250 yards of the enceinte. They were loopholed and very judiciously constructed and arranged. On May 24 the garrison saw through their telescopes that some of the enemy were practising escalading at a distant fort. This intelligence put Captain Craigie on his guard, and he made every preparation to receive the assault which he saw was imminent. Sure enough, in the intense darkness preceding the dawn of May 21 the enemy attacked in dense masses, and having, by means of scaling ladders, crossed the ditch, strove gallantly to get over the parapet or through the embrasures. Sword in hand, they continued the struggle for nearly half an hour; at the end of which time day broke, and the enemy, accepting their failure, retired, carrying off many of their dead and wounded. They left, however, 104 corpses close to the enceinte, and a few days later it was ascertained that they had lost in killed and mortally wounded 400 men. The number of the assailants was about 6000. On May 29 Colonel Wymer arrived with a brigade to carry off the little garrison who had so stoutly held their post for nearly seven months. As a reward for their gallantry, the 3rd Shah's Infantry was constituted a regular portion of the Bengal Army, with the designation of "The Regiment of Khelat-i-Ghilzai." Every officer and man who took part in the defence above briefly described received a silver medal, bearing a mural crown, with the superscription of "Khelat-i-Ghilzai," and on the reverse the word "Invicta, 1842." With such glorious memories to stimulate it, we cannot suppose that the garrison of 1880 will resist less sturdily than its predecessor of 1842.

We have received details of the repulse of the Kakars by the garrison of Kuch. It reflects great credit upon the men of the 16th Bombay Infantry, who formed the garrison. The enemy's force is estimated at 2000; the garrison was but 300 strong. The loss of the Kakars was 200 killed around the post and in the pursuit. The British loss was fifteen killed and twenty-five wounded.

ELECTRIC LIGHT IN ALEXANDRA PARK.

The new management of the Alexandra Palace and Park at Muswell-hill provides amusements for a hundred thousand people at a time, and the number of visitors on Bank Holiday was seven or eight thousand above that figure. Our last week's "Echoes" contained the writer's personal testimony in praise of the variety of entertainments furnished by Mr. Willing, the present lessee, to this vast multitude of his customers. The experiment of doing away with all reserved places, and giving equal advantages to every person who pays his or her eightcenpence for the railway journey and admission to the Palace, has proved a great and signal success. For the special occasion of last Thursday, which was the Police Fête, in aid of the funds of the Police Orphanage, there was a programme setting forth many attractions. The Triple Lake or chain of lakes in the ornamental grounds have been illuminated with the electric light on certain evenings, and this light is also sometimes used to illuminate the Grove.

Our Illustration of the beautiful nocturnal scene, which is unequalled in the display of peculiar effect of brilliant artificial lights on sheets of still water, gives a general idea of its character. The lamps used, two for the Lakes and two for what is called the Grove, are those of Crompton's patent, supplied by Messrs. Crompton, of 25, Queen Victoria-street, and worked by them, with their own carbons, on the principle which has been adopted by the British Electric Light Company for its future operations. Four of the galvano-electric machines, class A, contrived by M. Gramme, a description of which appeared in this Journal some time ago, are set in motion by one of Marshall and Son's steam-engines. The whole apparatus, engines, electrical machines, and lamps, can be removed from one place to another without difficulty, so that the effects of the illumination may be easily changed by altering its position and bearings on the surrounding features of the place. It is therefore to be expected that this magnificent exhibition will continue to please, notwithstanding frequent repetitions, and we hope it will become a permanent attraction to Alexandra Park.

THE SCIENTIFIC ASSOCIATIONS.

The various great national associations for the advancement of science hold their annual meetings during this month and next. Tuesday witnessed the inaugural meeting at Cambridge of the British Medical Association, being the first of the English gatherings this year. The French Association, established a few years ago after the model of the British Association, began its meetings at Rheims on Thursday, M. Krantz, of exhibition fame, being the president-elect. The sections are much more numerous than with us, including medicine and even veterinary surgery. The British Association follows a week after the conclusion of that of France, meeting at Swansea on the 25th, under the presidency of Professor Ramsay, the chief of the geological survey. As the jubilee meeting of the association is to be held at York next year, the Swansea meeting promises to be rather quiet, although the local committee have arranged for a considerable variety of excursions in a district teeming with interest to the geologist as well as the engineer. The public lectures this year will be by Professor Boyd Dawkins on "Primeval Man," Mr. Francis Galton on "Mental Imagery," and Mr. Seebohm on "The North-East Passage." The American Association meets at Boston this year just about the same time as our own, and as that city is so accessible the meeting is likely to be a popular one. Probably the best managed of all these great associations is that of Germany, which, under the name of the German Association of Naturalists and Physicians, meets at Dantsic from Sept. 18 to 24. There are altogether twenty-three sections in this association, more than three times the number in our own. The Germans seem to know better than any other nation how to combine science with play; every day some entertainment or excursion is arranged for, and there are many opportunities during the meeting for the savants enjoying themselves together over their beer and their pipes, the whole concluding with one of those great social gatherings so dear to the hearts of German students. Several of the public lectures are on subjects of great scientific interest. Of course, both in Europe and America there are many other more or less scientific annual meetings at this season, but none so really national as those above mentioned. The Swiss have also an association of a somewhat similar kind; as also have the Russians, the latter meeting under many restrictions.—Times.

It was stated in our last issue that Captain G. Fred. Harris is the only officer in the Army wearing the Order of St. John medal for gallantry in saving life on land. This was a mistake. It was granted to Deputy Commissary J. S. Young, to whom the medal was presented by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Major-General commanding the Home District, at a parade of the Guards in review order March 17, 1876. The Princess of Wales is a "Dame Chevalière" of the Order of St. John.

NEW BOOKS.

Curiosities of the Search-Room, by the author of Flemish Interiors (Chapman and Hall), is a collection of romantic wills and incidents anent testators and intestates, from the time of Noah (who, we are told, had a good deal of land at his disposal) to the present. The title is not happily chosen, for few, if any, of the wills quoted are the result of the author's personal research in the "Search-Room" at the Will Office; indeed, his description of this room in the preface belongs to what is known as the reading-room. They have been practically wholly, and not in part as put by him, diligently sought "in works of many classes, periods, and localities, not excluding the contemporary press." He has certainly diligently perused for a series of years the Illustrated London News, for we recognise many of the wills as being verbatim copies of the original reports that have appeared in the columns of this Paper. Extracts from other papers are carefully acknowledged; but the Illustrated London News, to which the author is so much indebted, and from which, by-the-by, these extracts have been mostly copied, is never once mentioned. We have it impressed on us in this book that it is not safe to act in the matter of a will without consulting a solicitor; we should think it equally dangerous for authors to write upon legal subjects unless they are learned in the law. We are informed that 7 Will. and 1 Vict. "help to throw some light on what is required in a testamentary document;" we were under the impression that the Wills Act (1 Vict.) gave us all the light required, containing as it does all the law as to the making of wills. We are also informed that "all that is necessary in respect to the signature being that the will shall be signed at the foot of each page." This is not required by the Act; the essential thing is that the will shall be signed by the testator "at the foot or end thereof," one signature at the end of the will, if of any number of pages, is sufficient. The two last paragraphs on page 28 are also likely to mislead intending testators, and make them think it possible to make an oral will; but this is not so, for the Wills Act expressly declares "that no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing," the only exception it is immaterial to state. We do not know how the conversation related on page 4 between a testator and a lawyer, as to the latter's name being inserted in the will he was making as residuary legatee, merely as a matter "of form, you know," could have come to the knowledge of the author. He must have been too acute a lawyer to let it out; for if he had, notwithstanding the assertion that there was no dislodging the residuary legatee, we venture to say he would assuredly have been ousted. In plays, if an original will has to be produced, it is always brought in written on parchment. We account for this from the fact that most of the dramatists are barristers-at-law; the author falls into the same error, as he speaks of the readers who are perusing the originals committing each "skin" to memory. The ceremony of "Reading the Will," also, of which a long account is given, is more a matter of popular belief than actual practice. At page 86, the State of Pennsylvania is inadvertently spoken of as a city; and it is news to us that "families have been thrown into Chancery for years." The word we usually spell "rhyme" throughout is spelt "rime," except in the index; this may be either an affectation or a step toward spelling reform. We have felt obliged to take exception to some of the author's dicta, but we have been much interested in the other parts of the book. The following anecdote, entitled "Cutting the Gordian Knot," is quite new to us:—A man had a legacy of £2000 left him on condition that he placed half of it in the testator's coffin to be buried with him; the legatee's friend, to whom he announced it, inquired where the money was then, and was told in the bank. "All right," he said; "you write a cheque for £1000, and put it in the old gentleman's coffin, drawn to order." Although most of the wills have been published over and over again, and some are apocryphal, many are taken from books practically unknown and inaccessible to the general reader; and it would need a tour on the Continent to inspect the documents and records laid under contribution by the author. This is the best collection of wills we have seen brought together into one volume, and altogether makes a very readable book. We may add that the binding is got up to look as much like parchment as possible, with part of the old-fashioned commencement to a will impressed on it in Old English characters.

Philhellenism of a pronounced flavour, but not of excessive potency, pervades the pages of Modern Greece, by R. C. Jebb, LL.D., Edinburgh (Macmillan and Co.), a volume which contains a mass of instructive facts and observations within a very small compass, and which requires so short a time for perusal that it deserves to be attentively read and considered by every one who takes an interest in the burning questions of the day. For among those questions a prominent place must assuredly be assigned to the future of the Greek Kingdom, which enthusiastic Hellenes and Philhellenes would fain expand to the dimensions—and even beyond them—of the old Roman or Byzantine Empire, whereof Constantinople was the seat. It is easy to understand that Professor Jebb, into whom the Greek spirit may be supposed to have entered to the exclusion of most other influences, should take a sanguine view of the Hellenic race and its prospects. For Hellenic, he will have it, the race still is, holding that "the central fact of all Greek history, from the earliest age down to the present day, is the unbroken life of the Greek nationality." There has always according to him, been a sufficient leaven of the autochthons left to leaven the whole lump of those so-called Greeks who, whether in Asia or in Europe, lay claim to the name of Hellenes and foster ambitious hopes of a coming Hellenic Empire beyond the wildest dreams of the Palæologi. He does not deny that there were in European Greece immigrations of Slavonians, whose numbers and influence may be inferred from the changes in "the old names of places, even the most famous," so that even Marathon and Salamis and Platæa were clean wiped out from the people's memory; and he freely admits that the Asiatic Greeks, by whom "during the whole Byzantine period the Greek nationality was mainly represented," were hybrids from the first. But we are to bear in mind that, though "from 750 to 850 A.D. the Slavonians formed the majority of the population in Greece," yet "the Greeks, being superior in civilisation to the Slavonians, gradually absorbed them;" and that, when "the Turkish conquest broke up the Byzantine system, and dispersed the Byzantine aristocracy of birth and learning," forthwith "the representation of the Greek race goes back from Asia to Europe, and for four hundred years the real core of the Greek nation was the agricultural population of Greece Proper." So be it; there is no desire here to vilipend the modern Greek, or to insinuate that he is not a lineal descendant of Miltiades, Pericles, Phidias, Socrates, and Plato. We are bidden, moreover, to draw a conclusion in favour of continuous Greek nationality from the wonderful way, if all things be considered, in which the original language has been preserved, so that "the chief difference now remaining between Old and Modern Greek is one which exists between old and modern languages generally." So be it again; but it may be permissible to suggest the question whether the phenomenon be not due less to any spark of Hellenic nationality than to the reverent care with which a few "barbarians" have from time immemorial watched over the literary treasures received by them from Greece, and without which the Greek language of to-day, the pride of the modern Hellene, would probably never have had its vocabulary "purged of alien words, Slavonian, Turkish, Italian, Albanian," nor its grammar "cleared of many corruptions," but would have remained for ever a polyglot monstrosity, enough to make Aristarchus, the grammarian, turn in his grave. Some persons may think, not altogether unreasonably, that Greek orthodoxy rather than Greek nationality is at the root of the matter; and that persecuted, enslaved co-religionists, having at their command a name to conjure with, a name carrying with it prestige of race and of all that is honoured among men, would not be slow to make the best of the accident, boldly claiming unbroken lineage and boldly working back to the old spell-exerting language. "Such cunning they who dwell on high have given to the Greek." But however all this may be, whether all the modern Hellenes be of the seed of Hellen, or of Abraham, or of some Slavonian, or not, it is undeniable that Professor Jebb's is a most entertaining as well as instructive volume, which whosoever reads it will remember with feelings of pleasure and respect.

Middle-aged English newspaper readers, and especially those who used to attend public meetings, will recollect the huge popularity of Louis Kossuth when he came to this country in 1851. The Gambetta of Hungary, who had been detained two years in Asiatic Turkey, instead of being given up to Austrian Imperial tender mercies, charmed the hearts of the million by his prophetic eloquence and his romantic personality. He afterwards subsided into a second-rate literary and political journalist, not much heard of except during our Russian War. But in 1859, when Napoleon III. joined Cavour and Victor Emmanuel to drive Austria out of Northern Italy, there seemed a chance for Kossuth to obtain French aid in the emancipation of his own country. He has now related, in a volume entitled Memories of My Exile, the translation of which is published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter and Galpin, what he did in that year, and what others promised but failed to do. We are compelled, by a sense of historical probability, to take some of these disclosures with a certain degree of reserve. Many of the distinguished personages whose dealings with M. Kossuth, on behalf of the Hungarian revolutionary party, are here described, have passed away from this world. Not only the late Emperor of the French, the late King of Sardinia, and Count Cavour, but Lord Palmerston, Earl Russell, and several active members of the English Liberal party in 1859, are no longer here to admit or deny the correctness of these statements. It is an undoubted and notorious fact of history that the authors of the Italian War did accept Kossuth's offer to draw away the Hungarian troops from the service of the Austrian Empire; and they probably gave him some vague hopes of direct or indirect assistance to an insurrection which he proposed to stir up in Hungary. But we find it difficult to believe that the British Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary of State, at the request of the late Mr. Charles Gilpin, furnished M. Kossuth with letters written by themselves, which he was to show, with their consent, to the Emperor Napoleon, pledging her Majesty's Government to a friendly neutrality in case the war should extend to Hungary. Plainly speaking, we disbelieve this statement of M. Louis Kossuth's altogether. It is very strange that M. Kossuth should have lost those wonderful letters of the two English Liberal statesmen, and that he should possess no copies of them. The originals, he says, were delivered to him by Mr. Gilpin in the first week of June, immediately before the opening of the new Parliament, by which the Liberal party had arranged to overthrow Lord Derby's Government. He states that these letters were written in accordance with a previous express agreement, for the assurance of that section of the party to which Mr. Bright, Mr. Cobden, and Mr. Milner Gibson, as well as Mr. Gilpin, belonged. It is not improbable that Lord Palmerston and the other Whig leaders may have given to those gentlemen a written assurance that the Government which they were about to set up would preserve its neutrality in the war between France and Austria. What remains to us quite incredible, notwithstanding M. Kossuth's assertion, is that they or Mr. Gilpin, who is also dead and unable to speak, ever authorised him to show any such letters to the Emperor Napoleon, as he says he did, in the camp at Valeggio a month afterwards. He tells us how, conducted by M. Pietri, he waited on the Emperor, with whom he had already had an interview at the Tuileries on May 5, when he had promised the Emperor to procure, by his influence in England, this very arrangement. M. Kossuth had undertaken that the Whigs should come into power, taking one or two members of "the Cobden party" into office, upon condition of not interfering to save the Austrian Empire from complete destruction. M. Kossuth, having performed this work, carried the original letters of the English Cabinet Ministers, binding their Government, to the French military head-quarters. "Indeed!" said the Emperor. "May I see them?" And so M. Kossuth handed him the letters, which "seemed to interest him very much; he read them one after another, smiling every now and again, and shook his head as if astonished." What became of the letters, M. Kossuth does not know; whether he left them with the Emperor, or if they were consigned to the keeping of the Hungarian National Committee. It seems that Messrs. Daniel Iranyi and Nicholas Puky, secretary and treasurer of that committee, know nothing of these remarkable documents. Let M. Kossuth find them if he can, so that Englishmen who knew Lords Palmerston and Russell may be satisfied about this curious incident. Or perhaps Mr. Gilpin's executors, or possibly Mr. Milner Gibson, can throw some light on the subject.

The annual fête on behalf of the funds of the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage, Twickenham, took place on Thursday, at the Alexandra Palace. In December last there were 233 children enjoying the benefits of the institution, which has the patronage of her Majesty. This year forty-four children have been admitted, and the number is only limited by the funds at the disposal of the committee. Special attractions were provided for this fête, and in the evening there were fireworks.

During the night of Thursday, Aug. 12, Encombe House, Dorset, the residence of Lord Eldon, was entered by burglars, and property exceeding in value £20,000 was stolen. Thirty pounds in gold and silver was carried off, and the remainder of the booty comprised a large seal (stated to be probably that portion of the Great Seal of George III. which was presented to Lord Chancellor Eldon by George IV.) twelve silver table spoons; marked with the Eldon crest (lion's head and coronet), eleven silver tea spoons, one necklace, two diamond bracelets, one diamond brooch, one square diamond brooch which had contained a miniature, one large sapphire stone set in gold, one silver sugar basin, one diamond tiara resembling in style the bracelets, and one pair of silver sugar tongs.

HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. LAURIE, M.D. Completely rearranged, revised, re-written, annotated, and brought down to the present time, with a copious introduction, by R. S. Gutteridge, M.D. The present edition contains many important new chapters and sections, with new features and matter pertaining thereto, including the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of women and children. Diseases of Tropical Climates are fully considered, and the volume may be pronounced of the greatest value to families, emigrants, and missionaries.
Of this work a Physician of high standing writes:—
"I have gone pretty well through your Edition of Laurie's Domestic Homœopathic Medicine, and I can truly say that it is the most perfect work of its kind ever published; in fact, it is, to my mind, too good for the general public, as it enlightens them too much in the art and mystery of medicine and surgery. For young medical beginners such a work is invaluable, as it would save them a great amount of reading. It is really superior to any Domestic yet published. I have the First and Second Editions of Laurie, and your Edition only shows what the work has developed into."

EPITOME OF THE ABOVE WORK.
By R. S. GUTTERIDGE, M.D.
This edition contains notices of most of the new medicines, and is brought down to the present time.

THE MONTHS: AUGUST.

As though conscious that the beauty of her youth is losing its freshness, Summer, in this her latest month, makes a supreme effort to captivate us with her charms, and to the soft blue skies and wealth of verdure with which she has hitherto favoured us, adds yellow corn-fields and purple moorlands. No longer has the umbrageous foliage of the trees that emerald transparency, which, in the sweet fresh days of June, revealed to us a delicate tracery of veins in every leaf; the tints of the foliage are darker, and the texture is grosser; the beautiful leaves are, truth to say, becoming a trifle faded and soiled. Our matronly summer, however, has about her a freshness of verdure even yet, in the aftermaths that are springing from the hay-fields, which beneficent rains have done their best to rejuvenise; but the aftermaths are but a poor recompense for the meadows and the leaves of June and July, and so she gives us the golden corn-fields and purple moors to solace us.

First of the cereals to ripen are the rye and the oats. Exquisitely fair when the stalks and blades were still green and the grain yet unripe, the oat crops are even lovelier now that they have assumed the yellow tints of harvest, the delicate heads of spray nodding—so gracefully—in every passing zephyr. Scarcely less pretty than the nodding oats are the fields of "waving" barley—which last adjective, though indiscriminately applied to all the cereals, seems to us to belong par excellence to the pale-hued barley, whose stooping heads of bearded grain are more prone than the trembling oats and rye, or than the more erect wheat, to swaying undulations like the billowy swell on the ocean's breast. And the wheat-fields, how splendid they look, gleaming out on the hill slopes "like golden shields cast down from the sun." Nor is it only when Phœbus dominates the ethereal vault that the corn-fields charm us with their restless quiverings. Dian's fair light gives them an aspect lovely beyond compare, especially during the latter part of the month, when she will shed upon the earth a brighter lustre than at any other time of all the year. Let us hope that the nights bordering on the 20th of the current month will be cloudless, for then occurs the annual phenomenon of an immediate supply of light after sunset; thus enabling the husbandman to continue the ingathering of the harvest to any hour of night he pleases, though, possibly, now that the sickle is giving place to the more expeditious reaping-machine, harvest may not require so much pushing as in the "good old times." However, whether the reapers be in the field or in the beerhouse, the sight of the corn-fields by moonlight is one that should not be missed. Scarcely has the sun sunk in his crimson bed, when, on the opposite side of the heavens, perchance from behind a dark outline of trees or a dusky hill, ascends majestically the Harvest Moon, bathing the half-cut fields in a flood of silvery splendour that is intensified by dark shadows from the trees and hedges.

Very pretty was it, in days not long ago, to see the reapers take their places in the corn-fields "soon as the morning trembles o'er the sky"—

> In fair array, each by the lass he loves,
> To bear the rougher part, and mitigate
> By nameless gentle offices her toil.

But the poetry of the corn-fields, like that of the hay-fields, is dying out before the march of intellect and machinery. The reaping-machine cuts down the grain quicker than half a dozen sickles, portioning off, as quickly as it cuts, trim bunches of corn ready for the sheaf-makers; and so the buxom country maids, and a lot of men to boot, can be dispensed with. Nor, in this practical age, is there time for the rural revels that used to grace the Harvest Home—the crowning of the wheat-sheaves with flowers, the dancing, the wassailing, and all the rest of the uncivilised Saturnalia. Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis.

Now that the corn is turning yellow and the summer losing its freshness, now that the birds have grown weary of singing and the flowers of blooming, flits the town to the country. Some there are, of course, who, year after year, can find no rest for their jaded spirits unless they are on the Continent; but of those who are pouring out of town, there is a goodly army who find plenty of charming nooks on their native seaboard—who think the wooded vales of England quite lovely enough, Ireland green enough, Wales and Cornwall and Scotland romantic enough, our moorlands wild enough. For the unfortunates who can only snatch a holiday of a few brief weeks the seaside or a rural vale offers, perhaps, the greatest rest. But for those who have longer respite from the turmoil of town, and to whom the Long Vacation is not the only holiday of the year, what scenes can charm more potently, in the purple month of August, than the wild and trackless moors? To the sportsman none—we mean the genuine lover of manly exercise, not the spurious sportsman who cares only for the murderous battue!

Where in Nature's grand domain shall we meet with sublimer aspects of scenery or air more bracing than in the heathery solitudes over whose purple expanses skims on whirring wing the beautiful game bird, doomed, after the fateful Twelfth, to a life of fluttering fear and peril? What a change of scene is here, from the heated ball-rooms and crowded parks and dusty streets, to the heath-clad mountains of Scotland, or the rolling uplands of the North of England, with their dashing torrents and cool clear burns to cross, their rugged heights to climb, and everywhere the pure exhilarating air! Now we are knee-deep in the ling and other heathers—now emerge on a smoother path, where the blue harebells ring out a tender chime to the song of the mountain breezes—now we are down in the tangled marshy bed of an old water-course, or

> Where coots in rushy dingle hide,
> And moorhens shun the day.

Down here, among the reedy haunts of water-birds, a sense of loneliness, perhaps, creeps over us, which is only intensified when we hear suddenly the startled cry of a curlew that, rising on ample wing, wheels off into deeper solitudes; but the next instant we forget our loneliness as we watch the reeling and tumbling in mid-air of a flock of plovers, or flush a snipe from its hiding-place among the reeds. But the scene is ever changing, and anon we are tracking a mountain torrent to its source—catching sight, perchance, for a moment, of the snow-white throat and breast of the dipper, or water-ouzel, as he stands perched on a rock in the centre of the stream that with ceaseless clamour rushes down its rocky bed from the high lands above. And now again we are in the dry upland wilds, where the heather is thick about us, and where ever and anon flies before us the bird of the moors, the wild red grouse, now fluttering, now sailing, now on rapid wings; and here and and there, with his loud call notes challenging our right of approach, a ring-ouzel darts past us, his white necklace glistening in the sun. And when the sun goes down, how splendid then are the fire-streaked masses of purple heath!—there is a momentary scene of desolation as he sinks behind the hills; but almost immediately after rises, as if by magic, the fair orb of Night, and sheds her pure soft light upon a scene more solemnly sublime, though perhaps less charming, than she gives us in the yellow harvest-fields.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

ITALY.

King Humbert and the Duke of Aosta passed through Ivrea on Tuesday on their way to the Castello di Sarre, in the valley of Aosta, where Queen Margherita is now staying. His Majesty and the Duke met with a cordial reception from the inhabitants.

Last Sunday the flag presented by the Roman ladies to the ironclad bearing the name of the capital was handed over to the officer in command, Captain Caimi. A special train conveyed the naval and municipal authorities and numerous guests to Civita Vecchia, off which the Roma was anchored, and a string of boats towed by a steam-launch took them on board. The ceremony evoked several patriotic speeches, and was followed by a social entertainment.

BELGIUM.

The Senate on Saturday last unanimously adopted the bill passed on the previous day by the Chamber of Representatives enabling the Government to grant an amnesty to deserters from the Belgian army living abroad.

In connection with the celebration of the fiftieth year of Belgian Independence, a political fête was held at Brussels on Monday, the members of the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, the entire Ministry, and various deputations from the Army, Navy, and civil bodies going in procession to the Exhibition buildings, where the chief ceremony was performed. The number of people present amounted to perhaps 200,000, and the scene was very brilliant. M. Rogier and the members of the National Congress were enthusiastically received. At half-past one the King and Queen and their two daughters, and the Count and Countess of Flanders, with their children, followed by their suites, arrived, and were loudly cheered by the vast assemblage, while the orchestra and choral societies performed the "Brabançonne." After a number of speeches had been delivered, the King, in reply, thanked the Chamber, the Government, the magistracy, the provinces, and the communes for their affectionate words respecting the dynasty, and congratulated the members present of the Provisional Government and the National Congress of 1830. His Majesty said, further, that the faith which they had had in the wisdom of the people of Belgium had not been deceived. They had endowed it with the most liberal institutions in the world, and success had crowned their work. "When we are now," he added, "celebrating an ever-memorable event, we cannot forget to pay a just tribute of gratitude to the five Great Powers who introduced us into the European family, and who by guaranteeing our neutrality have assured to us peace for fifty years. Strict observers of the duties which they imposed on us in exchange for so great a benefit, let us still assure them that we shall know how to remain faithful to them." The King, after expressing his best hopes for the future welfare of Belgium, concluded:—"I shall join my efforts to yours to work at the common task. My only ambition is to serve my fatherland, as I love it with all my heart and all my soul." The performance of a cantata by the composer M. Lassen then took place, the singers numbering 943.

The Belgian Literary Congress began its sittings on the 12th inst. in the great hall of the Palace of the Academies in Brussels, and the inaugural sitting was honoured by the presence of the King, whose arrival was greeted with loud and hearty applause. M. Rolin Jacquemyns, Minister of the Interior, presided.

GERMANY.

The Empress, travelling from the south to Coblentz, alighted at Darmstadt on the 10th inst., and paid a visit to the Grand Duke and the Grand Ducal family of Hesse. The Empress met at the palace the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who were guests of the Grand Duke. Prince and Princess Christian arrived at Darmstadt in the evening.

Professor Nordenskjöld dined with the Emperor William last Saturday, and left Berlin on Sunday morning.

On Monday the Emperor took part in the celebration of the anniversary of the famous charge in the battle of Mars la Tour by the two regiments of Dragoons of the Guard, and addressed the assembled officers.

The Emperor and Empress on Wednesday honoured the Austrian Emperor's birthday by giving a banquet, to which the whole staff of the Embassy was invited.

THE MEETING OF THE EMPERORS.

The Emperor William left Ischl on the 11th inst. He dined in the Imperial villa, and afterwards, accompanied by the Emperor of Austria, drove to the railway-station, where their Majesties took leave of each other, the Emperor William proceeding to Passau. During the forenoon the Emperor of Austria paid a visit to the Emperor William and remained with him half an hour. According to Berlin telegrams, the interview is believed to have been "a highly satisfactory one."

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

Wednesday being the fiftieth anniversary of the Emperor Francis Joseph's birthday, all the newspapers published congratulatory articles. The streets were gaily decorated with flags, even in the remotest parts of the capital, and telegrams from all the provinces announced preparations to celebrate the anniversary.

The International Corn and Seed Market, Vienna, was opened on Monday, Herr Maschauer, of Vienna, being elected president, and Herr Sting, of Stuttgardt, vice-president. Statistics published of this year's crops in Austria-Hungary estimate the condition to be as follows, taking the average at 100.—Wheat, 98; rye, 97; barley, 109, and oats, 107. The quantity available for export is estimated as follows:—Wheat, 5,000,000; rye, 6,000,000, and oats, 4,000,000 centals.

RUSSIA.

Sentence has been pronounced by the Military District Court at Kieff on the twenty-one individuals charged with forming an illegal society, with the object of overthrowing the existing order of the State. Two were sentenced to be hanged, three to twenty years' penal servitude, and the remaining sixteen to various terms of imprisonment, with hard labour, varying from ten to fifteen years.

The lower part of St. Petersburg, the Ligofka quarter, has been devastated by a great fire.

General Skobeleff has telegraphed to St. Petersburg contradicting the rumour of his having been taken prisoner.

AMERICA.

Speaking at a soldiers' meeting at Columbus on the 11th inst., President Hayes congratulated his hearers upon the measure of prosperity which was bringing such a tide of immigration as was never before known in the United States, the only country of the globe which constantly gained population from every other.

The United States Commissioner for the International Exhibition, to be held in New York in 1883, have begun their sittings, and have effected the preliminary organisation.

A New York telegram states that the American team, composed of six members, has won the international rifle-match at Creedmore, beating the Canadians by 1273 to 1235 points.

Eureka, in Nevada, has again been almost destroyed by fire.

A formal declaration has been made by the cattle dealers at Chicago, in regard to statements recently made abroad that unhealthy cattle have been shipped from that port. They declare that the condition of the stock offered on that market was never better than at the present time.

Twenty deaths resulted from a collision last week on the New Jersey Railway.

Mr. Evarts has been informed by the Chinese Minister at Washington that the Chinese Government has decided to revoke the existing decree prohibiting Chinamen from engaging in commerce with foreign ports, and hereafter will give the greatest latitude to Chinese merchants desirous of engaging in foreign trade.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Arrangements have been made for Sir Bartle Frere to return to England in the Union Steam-Ship Company's Royal mail-packet leaving Cape Town on Sept. 14.

Letsea, the Basuto chief, has occupied Thaba and Bosigo without encountering any opposition on the part of Masupha.

INDIA.

A large and influential meeting has been held at Bombay, under the presidency of Sir James Fergusson, the Governor, at which a subscription was opened for the relief of the families of the soldiers who have fallen in Afghanistan, and 54,000 rupees were collected.

M. Giana, Vice-President of the Roumanian Chamber, has been appointed Minister of Justice.

In the Presidency of Bengal 1264 persons were killed by wild animals and 9515 by snakes last year. In the same period the number of cattle destroyed was upwards of 12,000.

Cologne Cathedral, begun on Aug. 14, 1248, was finally completed on Saturday last, Aug. 14—the last stone of the cross ornamenting the top of the pinnacle of the second of the two great spires being then fixed in its place. As the flags triumphantly floated on the towers, on the consummation of the work, the citizens manifested considerable enthusiasm.

Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt arrived at Copenhagen on Monday morning. A telegram in the Standard says that the crowd cheered vociferously, and thousands stationed themselves before the Hôtel d'Angleterre all day. The King has invited her to take a trip in the Royal yacht. According to the same authority, Mdlle. Bernhardt is to give five representations at £250 each.

Sir Garnet Wolseley has been selected by the Horse Guards, with several other officers, to attend the autumn manœuvres of the German army, which promise to be of more than ordinary interest. Captain Turner is to be one of Sir Garnet's staff, and Sir Howard Elphinstone will attend the Duke of Connaught, who will lead his illustrious regiment, the Ziethen Hussars, belonging to the 6th Cavalry Brigade, and the 3rd, or Brandenburg Army Corps.

The report, which appeared in a few early copies of our impression last week, that the steamer Jeddah, from Singapore, had foundered off Cape Gardafui with about 1000 pilgrims on board, was quickly contradicted; the Jeddah, with the passengers and crew all safe, being towed into Aden by the Ocean Steam-Ship Company's steamer Antenor, a few hours after she had been left to what seemed an inevitable fate. The captain of the Jeddah appears to have thought the vessel was going to founder, abandoned her, and brought the report to Aden that she had foundered.

THE BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

The forty-eighth annual meeting of this association, which was held last week in Cambridge, was the most successful that the society ever held.

The principal feature of public interest on the 11th inst. was the conferring of honorary degrees of Doctor of Laws upon Dr. Brown-Sequard, of Paris; Professor Donders, of Utrecht; Sir W. Jenner, Sir William Gull, Sir George Burrows, Mr. William Bowman, the Rev. S. Haughton, Mr. Joseph Lister, Dr. O'Connor, Mr. John Simm, and Dr. Andrew Wood.

On the 12th inst. the report of the Committee on Medical Reform was discussed and adopted. Mr. Holmes gave the address on surgery, and the gold medal of the association, voted to Dr. W. Farr, who was absent on account of illness, was received on his behalf by Dr. Acland. The members then attended the several sections. Sir J. Paget gave the opening address on Pathology, Dr. W. S. Savory in Surgery, Dr. W. S. Playfair in Obstetric Medicine, Dr. J. Crichton Browne in Psychology, and Dr. Rutherford, of Edinburgh, in Physiology. A meeting of the Poor Law Medical Officers' Association was held in the Guildhall. The annual dinner was held in the hall of Trinity College, Professor Humphry presiding. The speakers referred to the new position taken by Cambridge in the provision now being made by the University for affording medical education, and Sir James Paget particularly dwelt upon the efforts of Professor Humphry to urge forward this good work, and to open to the medical student the advantage of a university education. The high position now taken by this large association in advancing science and in stimulating a high code of professional action in general practice and in the public services was also acknowledged.

A meeting was held in the Senate-house on the 13th—Professor Humphry presiding—when Dr. Michael Foster, Prelector in Physiology in Trinity College, gave the address on Physiology before a very full meeting of his brother professional men, including many of the most eminent professors. In the course of his address Dr. Foster spoke upon the unnecessary subjects pressed upon the students in medical examinations, to the exclusion of practical subjects. These useless subjects, he said, might be useful to persons who were to be buyers in wholesale trades, or were about to live in the wilds of Africa, but to men who were about to practice medicine or surgery they were worse than a waste of valuable time and mental power. These remarks were loudly cheered, as were those of Professor Lister, who, in proposing a vote of thanks to Dr. Foster, expressed his sympathy with the views expounded. Dr. Andrew Wood, of Edinburgh, in seconding the motion, said he never heard a more suggestive lecture. He was inclined to think, with Dr. Foster, that examinations had been pushed to the utmost limit. The President remarked that a general hope was expressed that the Medical Council should take the subject into consideration at its next meeting. The vote was carried, and the members proceeded to the sections.

In the Public Medicine Section, Mr. Seeley, of Aylesbury, demonstrated "The True and False Cow-pox in the Animal and in Man;" and other papers of interest were placed before the section, by Dr. A. P. Stewart, on "A Proposed Convalescent Home for Patients Recovering from Scarlet Fever;" Dr. Drysdale, on "The Vital Statistics of the east end of London;" Mr. Wilson Hardy, on "Provident Dispensaries and Paying Patients at Hospitals;" and Dr. Sansom, on "The Reform of the Out-patient Department of Hospitals." Mr. Jabez Hogg showed an instrument for detecting the presence of sewer gas in dwelling-houses and buildings. The other sectional work was of a technical character.

The last general meeting was then held in the Senate-house, and the report of the Parliamentary Bills Committee presented by Mr. Ernest Hart, detailing the political work of the association, the main feature of which was the opposition to the Government Vaccination Bill and the Habitual Drunkards Bill, and the demands for a due recognition of the medical service in the Army and Navy, was received and adopted; and thanks were voted to Mr. Hart for his energetic services.

The forty-eighth annual meeting of the British Medical Association came to a close last Saturday, when a large concourse of members visited surrounding places of interest, the observatory of the University forming an especial object of attraction. In the Public Health Section Dr. Jabez Hogg read a paper, and exhibited instruments of considerable value and interest to the public for the detection of sewer gas and other gas leakages; also, a fire-damp and choke-damp indicator, the invention of Mr. F. Ansell. The principle of the instruments is founded on the law of diffusion, which, as is well known, is the natural tendency of gases in close promixity to intermingle in the inverse proportion to the square root of their density. The several instruments, so far, have proved very successful in operation; and, although extremely sensitive, are nevertheless simple in action, and may be put into the hands of anyone unaccustomed to the use of scientific instruments; so that, whether in the hands of the officer of health, the sanitary engineer, or the inspector of nuisances, they may be expected to yield equally happy results, and be found of great utility in saving life.

Williams, G. A.; Vicar of Weston Beggard, Herefordshire.—Guardian.

The Bishop of Liverpool has appointed eight clergymen of his Diocese to be Honorary Canons. Seven Canons have been transferred from the old Diocese of Chester, making fifteen, and two will be appointed every year until the total of twenty-four is reached.

The Lord Mayor has received about £1000 in aid of the fund for the erection of the new cathedral at Truro. Messrs. Baring Brothers and Co. have contributed £250; Messrs. Antony Gibbs and Sons, £200; Messrs. F. Huth and Co., £100; and Messrs. J. S. Gilliat and Co., £100.

The parish church of Churchill, Somerset, which has been very carefully restored by Mr. Ewan Christian, was reopened by the Bishop of Bath and Wells on Thursday week. There is a new chancel window by Clayton and Bell, the joint gift of Sir Lintorn Simmons, Canon Simmons, of York, and Mr. C. J. Simmons, of Churchill, descendants of Sir John Latch, whose quaint monument, with inscription by Dr. Donne, is on the north side of the chancel. The total cost of the work has been about £2000.

A brass tablet has been placed in the Church of St. Katherine Coleman, Fenchurch-street, bearing the following inscription:—"In memory of Sir Henry Billingsly, Knt., who departed this life A.D. 1606, and was buried at this church. He founded three scholarships at St. John's College, Cambridge, and this tablet is erected by two members thereof in grateful recognition of his benefaction." It is understood that the two gentlemen referred to are the Rev. W. H. Griffin, Vicar of Ospringe, a former Senior Wrangler, and the Rev. H. Williams, Head Master of the Brewers' School, and for many years Curate of the parish.

On Tuesday week the Archbishop of York consecrated the Church of St. Nicholas, Beverley, which has been built as a memorial to the deceased members of the Wolverton family. The building is to serve a parish which, since the Commonwealth, has been united to St. Mary's, its own sanctuary having been demolished by the Roundheads. It will accommodate about 360 adult worshippers, and it has been erected in the Early Decorated style, from the designs of Mr. Brodrick. The nucleus of the fund was £6000, left by the late Lord Wolverton as a memorial of his four sons; but it has been supplemented by a gift of £2000 from the Dowager Lady Wolverton, and other handsome donations.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The result of the competition for minor scholarships at Cavendish College, Cambridge, has been announced as under:—Ennis, University College School; Lee, Merchant Taylors' School; and Roll, Cavendish College; who are all declared to be equal in merit. Consequently a scholarship of £20 a year, tenable for three years, is awarded to each of the successful candidates. The Cobden prize, founded by the Cobden Club, and awarded triennially for the best essay on a subject connected with political economy, has been adjudged to be equally divided between Mr. Alfred Caldecott, B.A., scholar of St. John's, and Mr. Joseph Shield Nicholson, B.A., scholar of Trinity, the merits of whose essays are declared equal by the examiners.

For the future administration of the Free Grammar School, at Tunbridge, known as Sir Andrew Judd's School, originally founded by an Alderman of the City of London, in 1853, a scheme has been issued by the Charity Commissioners.

The Rev. G. H. Morberly, Rector of Duntsbourne Rouse, has been appointed Principal of Lichfield Theological College.

Mr. J. A. Coghlan, M.A., late scholar of St. Peter's College, Cambridge, and Assistant-Master at Birkenhead School, has been appointed to the Head-Mastership of the Grammar School, Fowey, Cornwall.

The Rev. J. Elliotson Symes, M.A., has been appointed Second Master at Newcastle Royal Grammar School.

The annual prize distribution of Cardiff College took place on the 29th ult., in the big school-room, which was filled. Mr. C. W. David, the chairman of the council, presided. The prizes were distributed by the Archdeacon of Llandaff, assisted by the Mayor, Mr. J. McConnochie. The former, in addressing the boys, dwelt upon the advantages of a classical education, in conjunction with the accurate study of English literature and technical training. He believed that the three great books were the Bible, Shakspeare, and the "Iliad."

On the 28th ult. the annual speeches and distribution of prizes at the Hereford Cathedral School were held in the College-hall. The Dean of Hereford, as ex officio chairman of the school, was in the chair, supported by the Bishop and Canons Jebb and Musgrave. Scenes from the "Trinummus" of Plautus, Sheridan's "Critic," and Molière's "Les Femmes Savantes," were given with great spirit by the boys, and were much appreciated by the audience. The Head Master mentioned, in the course of his remarks, that next year the school would celebrate its 500th anniversary, having been founded by Bishop Gilbert in 1381.

The annual distribution of prizes at Heversham School took place on the 29th ult., under the presidency of Mr. F. A. Argles, of Eversley, a very large number of the governors and parents of the boys being present. A long list of distinctions gained during the past year was read by the Head Master (the Rev. Dr. Hart), including a First Open Mathematical Scholarship at Cambridge, and the first and fifth places in mathematics in the last Cambridge local examination.

At Oakham School the speech-day was July 28. The Head Master (the Rev. E. V. Hodge) remarked on the large increase in numbers during the year and the erection of new class-rooms to accommodate them, and the need of a new boarding-house. The prizes were distributed by Mr. A. C. Johnson, hereditary trustee, and the proceedings were closed by recitations from Aristophanes, Plautus, Brueys, and Shakspeare, which met with great applause. In the evening the usual supper was given in a tent in the school-yard.

Tuesday, Aug. 3, was the prize-day at the Queen's School, Basingstoke, when the prizes were distributed by the Archdeacon of Middlesex. The Head Master (the Rev. A. L. Rutty) read a list of pupils who had distinguished themselves at Woolwich, Sandhurst, and other examinations. After the distribution Archdeacon Hessey delivered a genial address.

Friday, Aug. 4, was prize-day at St. George's School, Brampton, near Huntingdon. The school has rapidly increased under the present Head Master, the Rev. R. H. Wix, M.A., and has now reached its limit of one hundred boys. There was an early celebration of holy communion in the chapel at 7.30 a.m. At three p.m., in a tent erected on the cricket-field, which was filled with more than 200 visitors, the school glee-class gave a concert, which was interspersed with recitations. The prizes were afterwards distributed.

The prize-day of the Sandwell Girls' School was on July 24, when the Rev. G. W. Kitchin, of Christ Church, Oxford, after a pleasant and encouraging speech, gave away the prizes. During last week three scholarships were competed for, the results being—Ethel Darent, Sandwell School, £40; Marie Isabelle Chirnside, home tuition, under her father, the Principal of the Competitive College, Bath, £30; and Katherine Rhodes, Mrs. Drury's, Hyde Park, £10.

Speech-day at Sedberg School was on Wednesday, July 28. Morning service was held at 10.30 a.m. Mr. F. S. Powell, having alluded to the debt the school owed to the late Head Master, the Rev. F. Heppenstall, and to the perfection of the new buildings, which had been provided at a cost of above £27,000, distributed the prizes.

The annual Exhibition for Scholarships given by the Governors of the Sherborne King William's Grammar School and other donors has been completed, with the following results:—Governor's Scholarship, Hensley, ma.; Partridge, ma.; House, ma.; Harper, mi.; Dixon, mi.; Lys, ma.; Holme and Penney, mi. House Scholarships: Shore, Southcombe, Partridge, mi.; Hobbs, Bastard, ma.; Collet and Hankey. Old Sherburnian Scholarships: Lys, mi.; Lowndes and Jacob, mi. In the late open competition for the R.M.C., Sandhurst, Laing—a scholar of Sherborne School—came out first; he passed direct from the school. Woodhouse, a Sherborne boy, gained twenty-first place.

The following in order of merit are declared by the Civil Service Commissioners to have been the successful candidates at the recent open competition for admission to the Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's Hill, Surrey:—Samuel Page Herschell Dyson, Henry Robert Hackman, Adolphe Ernest Orr, Henry Etienne Pellereau, Cyril Edward Arengo Jones, Thomas Herbert Clowes, Edward Herbert Scott Napier, Henry Matthew John Bacon, John Netterville Albert Eaton, Henry Hennis Green, Fredric James Robinson, James McCord Jamieson, Thomas Temple Bonhote, Alfred Rowland, George Walton Appleby, Cyril Vernon Joakim, Benjamin Douglas, Thomas Robert John Ward, Henry Sydney Jones.

The twenty-seventh report of the Science and Art Department of the Committee of Council on Education has been issued. The number of persons who have during the year 1879 attended the schools and classes of science and art in connection with the Department are as follows, viz.:—59,519 attending science schools and classes in 1879, as against 57,230 in 1878; and 795,444 receiving instruction in art, showing an increase upon the previous year of 67,570. The total number of persons who received direct instruction as students or by means of lectures in connection with the Department in 1879 is 862,021, showing an increase upon the previous year of 67,474. The attendance at the art and educational libraries at South Kensington and at the National Library of Ireland in 1879 has been 83,851—an increase of 7787 over that of last year. The museums, and collections under the superintendence of the Department in London, Dublin, and Edinburgh, were last year visited by 2,449,764 persons, showing an increase of 169,887 on the number in 1878. The number of visitors at the local art and industrial exhibitions to which objects were contributed from the South Kensington Museum were 584,022.—The total number of persons attending the different institutions and exhibitions in connection with the Department in 1879 has been upwards of 3,943,707—an increase of 351,220 over last year's numbers. The expenditure of the Department during the financial year 1879-80, exclusive of the vote for the Geological Survey (which was £22,895) amounted to £295,229.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

ARTILLERY VOLUNTEERS AT SHOEBURYNESS.

The results of the 64-pounder and 40-pounder competitions, which were spread over Monday and Tuesday last week, were posted on Wednesday by the executive. In the 64-pounder competition the first prize was won by the second detachment 2nd Kent, which fired its four rounds in 7 min. 52 sec., and made three direct hits, scoring 18. The first detachment of the 2nd Devon made a similar number of points, as did also the ninth detachment 2nd Durham, the first detachment of the 1st Gloucester, and the first detachment of the 1st Norfolk. Every one of the winning detachments fired within the time allowed. In the 40-pounder competition, the five prizes were taken by the ninth detachment 2nd Durham, the first detachment 1st Forfar, the first detachment 2nd Durham, the fifth detachment 2nd Lancashire, and the first detachment 1st Lanark. Scotland's Cup and the Cinque Ports Challenge Cup were both taken by a Plumstead detachment, 2nd Kent, second detachment, their points being 18, and their time 7 min. 52 sec. In the 40-pounder competition the ninth detachment of the 2nd Durham won the first prize, and in Wednesday's competition with the same gun succeeded in making the highest average score during the meeting, and so securing the Queen's Prize and the Association badges.

The Repository competition of Monday and Tuesday resulted in the first prize being taken by the fifth and sixth detachments of the 3rd Kent. The second prize was won by the first and second detachments of the 8th Lancashire, who on Monday performed the shift in 7 min. 48 sec.; and the third prize was won also by Lancashire men, the third and fourth detachments of the same corps, who shifted the gun in 8 min. 47½ sec. The same corps won the first prize last year and this year.

The meeting practically closed on Thursday. Seven brigades of Royal Artillery competed with 10-inch guns for two prizes given by the Association. The first prize was won by Sheerness, and the second by the Cork Brigade. In the competition between volunteer officers with the same gun, the officers of the northern detachments made the highest score. Repository badges were awarded to the squad. The 3rd Kent men were inspected by Colonel Hastings; and the prizes were distributed by the Marchioness of Londonderry, the Marquis of Londonderry, Earl Percy, M.P., and a distinguished company being also present. The 2nd Durham, of which the Marquis is in command, carried off the lion's share of the prizes, the first detachment (Sergeant-Major Graham) winning prizes of £45, £15, and £5 value; the seventh detachment, one of £20; and the ninth detachment (Corporal Hindson), the Queen's Prize of £100, the Queen's Badges, a prize of £30, and a prize of £15. The other most successful winners were Trumpeter-Sergeant Hewitt, 4th East York, £45, £30, and the fourth aggregate prize, £10; Sergeant MacEwan, 1st Midlothian £20, and the second aggregate prize, £25; Sergeant Lidbury, 2nd Middlesex, £45, £20, and the third aggregate prize, £10, and Lord Waveney's Cadiz Challenge Mortar.

The sixteenth annual meeting of the National Artillery Association was brought to a successful close yesterday week, the thousand officers and men forming the camp during the last week of the meeting being moved without mishap or confusion. The commandant of the camp, Lieutenant-Colonel Keate, R.A., takes leave of the division in the usual camp order, in which he acknowledges the exemplary conduct of the men encamped in all but a single case. He considers the thanks of all due to the Commissariat Department, of which Captain Lowrie, 2nd Middlesex, was in chief charge, and points to the fact that only two slight cases of sickness have occurred amongst the Volunteers during the meeting as a proof of the good sanitary arrangements of the camp.

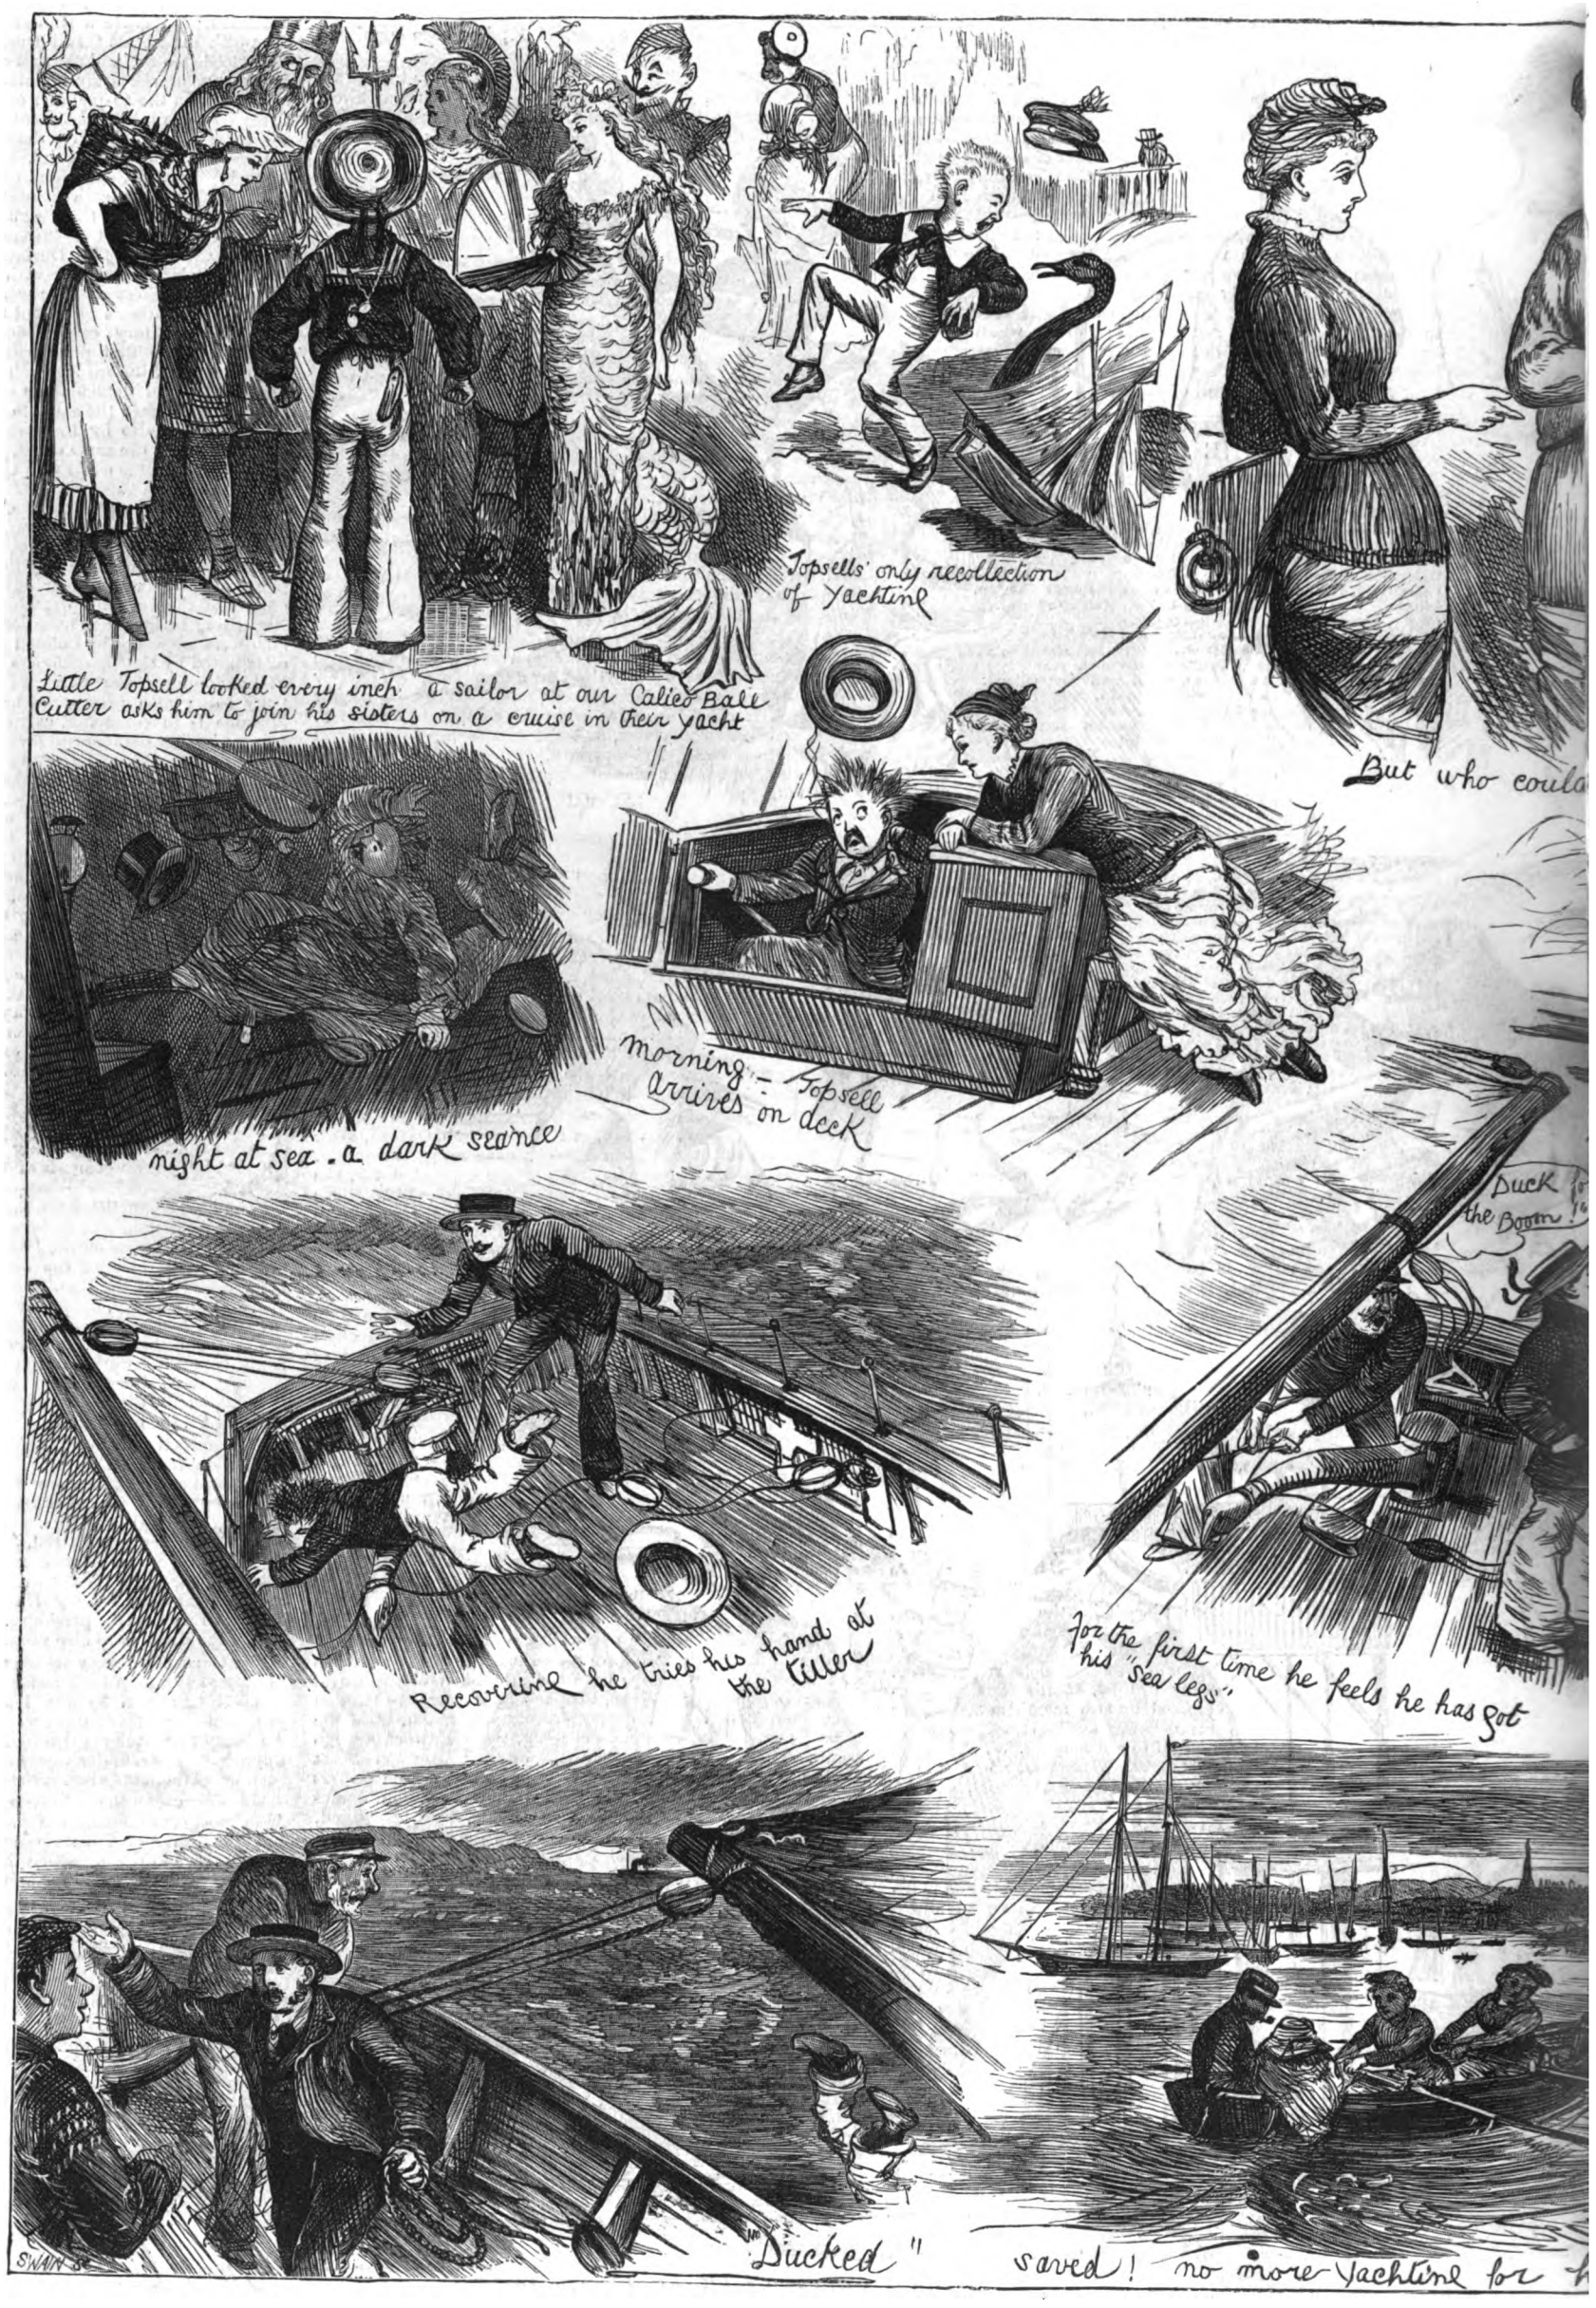
The final competition for the champion badges of the Middlesex Association, and various prizes in money, took place at Wormwood-scrubbs on the 11th. The ranges and conditions of firing were those of the first stage of the Queen's Prize. Private Lewis, of the Hon. Artillery Company, made 97 points, and Private Cutting, of the 1st Devon, 94. Neither could take the badge, however, as the former had missed a former meeting of the association, and the latter did not belong to the home counties. Corporal Rothon, of the 1st London Rifle Brigade, took the gold badge; Sergeant-Instructor Ware, same regiment, the silver badge; and Lieutenant Munday, of the H.A.C., the bronze badge.

The annual prize competition of the Essex Association concluded on the 11th at the Range, Danbury. Prizes to the value of nearly £200 were allotted, exclusive of the Essex Challenge Shield, valued at 100 guineas, which was won by the 3rd Essex Rifle Volunteers. The Association Cup (value £5) was won by Lieutenant Reed, 3rd Essex; and the blue ribbon by Private Rippon, 1st Essex Rifle Volunteers, who is thus entitled to compete for the Prince of Wales's prize at Wimbledon next year. Lady Hawkins distributed the prizes; Admiral Luard, C.B., presiding. Mr. Coope, M.P., who presented the shield, was also present.

Sir Garnet Wolseley visited the grounds of the Toxophilite Society at Regent's Park last Saturday evening, to inspect the works constructed by the 1st Middlesex Engineers. The principal examples of work were bridges of various kinds, and Sir Garnet Wolseley expressed to Corporal Johnson, of the Royal Engineers, under whose superintendence the works have been carried on, his great satisfaction with what he had seen.

Last Saturday the volunteers who have been doing duty at Aldershott camp during the past week left for their homes; and the 6th and 7th Provisional Battalions of volunteers arrived there in the afternoon for a week.

Detachments of the 21st and 50th Middlesex visited Rickmansworth by rail on Saturday afternoon, and marched to Rickmansworth Park, where Mr. Birch, the Governor of the Bank of England, had invited them. Under the command of Major Sanderman, the men went through some skirmishing manœuvres. They afterwards piled arms on the lawn, and sat down in a tent to an excellent dinner.



On the same day the Hull Artillery Volunteers were inspected by Colonel Collington, commanding the Auxiliary Artillery, second Northern Sub-district. Major Pudsey, at the close of the proceedings, said he was authorised by the inspecting officer to express his satisfaction at the appearance and drill of the men present.

On Monday the annual competition for prizes in connection with the Oxfordshire Rifle Association took place at Oxford. The bronze medal of the National Rifle Association and £10 was won by Private Gilks, of Banbury, with sixty-one points.

A court-martial is sitting upon Serjeant Marshman, of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, charged with fraudulent marking at the butts during the recent meeting of the National Rifle Association at Wimbledon.

Sir George Young, the secretary, has issued a circular announcing that the Irish Land Commission will open its session in Dublin on Sept. 1, for the reception of evidence.

The Coloured Supplement.

"WAITING FOR THE LAIRD."

"Are those yours, old man," was the query—"those two dog pictures? They look like your touch, though they are not your subject." "They are two of my early ones. I have done nothing of late years," was the answer, "I grant you, but landscape and figures; but I used to do dogs only—springers and setters, in woodland work, with cock-pheasants and snipe, and so on; and that of the fox-hounds was one of my first. They were two that we had which belonged to the Hunt, and they were up at our farm 'at walk;' and, as father fancied them, and petted them too, I one day knocked them off to please him." "It is a good bit, certainly, and it shows some character; but I like the other better." "It is a better one, old fellow, by a very long way, though it is a rough draught only. They are four setters we had when we lived at Glatton; and very good dogs they were. We sold them to his Lordship—Lord Lowndes, our landlord—who had a lodge and some moors in Scotland, and I made a picture of the fine fellows for him; and, as it got me commissions from those he knew, I followed, for a time, that class of subject."

His friend Anderson looked at it. "You don't want to part with it, do you?" "No, I don't; but it is my wife's, not mine. She keeps it as a memento of my first success; and she assisted at the painting—at least, she thinks so, as she was by when I did it. Mary," said he, as his wife came in, "your picture is being admired. George wants it." "I am glad you like it, Mr. Anderson, for it is one," she replied, "that I prize very much, for it made Frank what he is." "You are about right there," was his remark, "as it led up to my getting in regular work, and ceasing to paint pot-boilers." And that"—— "Well, that, I suppose, led to my having you." "Was it so, Mrs. Willoughby?" "Not exactly," was the laughing answer, "because Frank knows I promised him before that was painted." "Yes, so you did, darling, but your people would not have it. You remember the old days, George, when father fussed so much about me farming, and you used to stand my friend by upholding Art, though he said it was not in me?" "I do," said Anderson; "and the time we had in Sutton Chase, day after day, at cattle, gipsies, children, and what not, its wood and water, stretch of heath and gorse, and its glorious glimpses of those deep blue hills that backed the landscape! We did some work in those days." "Yes, painting away for life; accumulating canvasses, but never selling, because they were so bad, the dealers would not have them. However, you managed it at last, and got me off." "And a good thing, too, or else, instead of being, as you are now, in a cosy studio in St. John's-wood, here, you would be tied in the country, to hops and crops, and be worried with stock and tillage." "And yet, with the hunting and shooting that I had there, those were very jolly days."

"Oh yes," the artist's wife interposed, "they were very happy days for us, but you can have those now." "Don't believe it, George; she likes London too well to leave it." "What! when I go with you to Wales, and the north, and elsewhere when you're sketching?" "Well, you do like it, don't you?" "Of course, I do; who would not?" "Like most other ladies, Mrs. Willoughby, who like to see the world, and the fashion in it. So, you really prize that picture?" "I do, indeed; and I could not part with it; though I wish you could see the finished copy of it that Lord Lowndes has. 'Tis life itself!" "I like the grouping." It is just as they were on the moor when he took them." "Not 'on' the moor, Mary." "Well, love, at the foot of it. There is a strip of a dingle there, below the hills, close to the loch, where the keeper's hut is; and Jane and I used to walk there when he was busy at his easel." "That I should not make love to the keeper's daughter, whose portrait I then was painting." "Now, Frank," said his wife, protesting; "You knew I could trust you, though Alice was pretty. He had been our keeper, Mr. Anderson; and when Frank's father—our neighbour—sold the setters, he, too, went with them; and when I went to the north to my married sister, to stay with her awhile, nothing would do but we must go to see him; and Frank came with us, but stayed behind to paint Alice's likeness, and to get some sketches; and as he remained a week there, as he found there was room for himself and belongings—we went up to him each day to watch him at work." "And to keep an eye on the keeper's daughter. She was one of your Greuze-like beauties, George; you know the style, innocent in aspect, and with peach-like cheeks, and with heaps of soft brown hair that waved all over. Ask Mary, else." "O, it's no use asking me," said Mrs. Willoughby, "I did not take such notice; but it seems you did." "Obliged to, you know, to seize the likeness."

The artist went on, "It was once in August, George, when you were abroad some years ago, and his Lordship was up grouse-shooting; and on the day when he came to the moor above us—which was all purple and brown, from the heath and heather—he sent lunch to the hut for himself and friends when they came down for a mid-day rest, till the sun was less bright and the birds packed better. I had gone off to be out of the way, and Mary, here, was with me." "And Jane, too." "Was she? Well—perfectly proper you see, George—and Jane, too; and as, making sure they had left, we dipped down to the loch by the big elm-tree, the dogs were waiting near the hut, in the shade outside, grouped as you see them there, Dash and Rover, coupled as usual, and eagerly panting, with Shot at full length in front of them, fast asleep, and Ranger behind them, curled up, and dozing; and, as their colours told up against the green background, I hoisted a canvas, and very soon had them." "While we," said Mrs. Willoughby, "stood by and talked to the dogs to make them keep their tongues out." "In that way," was the comment, "you were both useful." "Just so," his wife said.

Mrs. Willoughby added, "Then Lord Lowndes came out to ask us ladies in, and he saw what Frank had done, and praised the picture, and he ordered a copy of it, which he now has." "A lucky meeting?" "It was, indeed, for from that day, as one picture brought another, all went well, and we soon got married; and now, as you know, he has a name, and as much as he can do; and he is daily expecting a commission from him for some autumn scenery on that very moor." "Yes; waiting for the Laird," put in her husband.

"That," said his pretty wife, smiling, "is the name of the picture. You see, Mr. Anderson, it lacked a name, and we knew not what to call it; when Donald, the Scotch keeper, came to see it, and solved the question, by saying they 're "Waiting for the Laird;" so Frank put that name to it." "And a good name, too," said Willoughby. So now it is explained to our readers, how and why that name has been given to the Extra Supplement of this week.

Last Saturday the foundation-stone of the water tower to be erected for supplying water to Littlehampton was laid by the Duke of Norfolk, in the presence of a numerous company.

YACHTING SKETCHES.

The month of August, which is wont to disperse London society to the moors, to the mountains, or to the sea and its bathing-places on shore, witnesses some important gatherings of the squadrons of beautiful pleasure-craft owned by members of the principal Yacht Clubs. From May to September, at different ports round our island coasts, a great variety of minor and local competitions of this kind are proceeding, so that there is a match sailed almost every day, weather permitting, throughout the summer. But at Cowes and at Ryde, where the most notable meetings are held, and where the course is frequently all round the Isle of Wight, the yachtsmen have an opportunity of trying for prizes of the highest distinction. It is a noble pastime, of which English gentlemen may well be proud; and none of our readers can suppose that any slight to it is intended by the designer of these comical sketches, portraying the misadventures of "Little Topsell," which occupy two pages of our engravings this week.

The subject of this series of drawings, indeed, is not any of the yacht-races, great or small, to which allusion has been made, but a short voyage or pleasure-trip—though poor Mr. Topsell has little pleasure in it—which he has been invited to share. It appears that a party of gay and clever young friends, including ladies as well as gentlemen, had arranged such an expedition for themselves. The ladies were struck with the nautical figure presented by Mr. Topsell when he put on the dress of a sailor to attend a certain Fancy Ball. They spoke to their husbands or brothers, and got permission to enlist him as one of the party on board. He had never had any sea-faring experience, and all his yachting practice was that which he had, when a very small and silly boy, in sailing a little toy model ship on the Serpentine, where he remembers it was upset by one of the swans. "But who could refuse" the invitation of such an undeniable, irresistible press-gang as that consisting of three of the most agreeable ladies of his acquaintance? Topsell was received on board the yacht, bringing his tuneful banjo with him by special request, and his falsetto tenor voice was uplifted, the night before starting, in that popular nautical song, "A Life on the Ocean Wave!"

They all retired to rest in the cabins or the bunks allotted for their respective occupation; but the vessel rolled at her moorings outside the harbour, and Mr. Topsell, perched on an upper shelf, did not enjoy his needful rest that night. The ill-secured articles of personal property, his hat, umbrella, and the aforesaid banjo, fell out of the roof-straps overhead, considerably disturbing his repose; and the unaccustomed noises, both within the yacht and against her outer sides, made it impossible for him to sleep. In the morning, very sad and weary of his nocturnal penance, Topsell emerged from the companion-ladder to get a breath of fresh air. It was rather too fresh, blowing such a fitful breeze that his sailor hat was carried fairly off his head, but a string by which this had been prudently fastened kept it from flying overboard.

The ardent and chivalrous disposition of Titus Topsell was ever responsive to the amiable regards of lovely woman. One of the fair mistresses of social harmony aboard the "Felicity" schooner-rigged yacht, an unmarried sister of the amateur skipper, sat on deck at the open hatchway when Topsell struggled up. She was quite at her ease, and was beforehand with her guest in hoping, or saying she hoped, that he had passed a comfortable night.

"Oh, yes!" He smiled grimly in the utterance of this venial falsehood. "A Life on the Ocean Wave, you know, Miss Binnacle! So your brother has been on deck these two hours, and they 've got up the anchor, and we're off and away! 'Off and away, flew the light barque, over the blue—what-is-it?—bay.' Now, this I call jolly!"

And in so speaking, he was suddenly made aware of inward qualms—not calms; calm was neither inward nor outward to his consciousness. The wind and sea were rising, and the yacht began to play a game of pitch-and-toss with the rolling waves of the Channel.

Miss Binnacle pretended not to notice his increasing paleness and the trembling fit that seized him. "I am so glad you appreciate the poetry of the sea," she remarked, with sentimental affectation. "I love it—I dote on it—I feel that it is Life, Joy, Liberty, Bliss, and all that sort of thing!"

"Yes, so it is—very much indeed," he stammered in reply, "Quite all that, by Jove—I should say, by Neptune—I, I did, I must—— Excuse me, something I forgot—below, you know—back in a minute;"—and the distressed gentleman, feebly attempting to bow, made shift to stagger round to the head of the cabin stairs. Miss Binnacle turned away her head, to hide a smile that she could not suppress.

The unhappy Topsell, perceiving that her eyes were averted, took advantage of it to change his proposed manœuvre. He did not attempt to descend into the cabin, but ducking his head, so as not to be seen, he sneaked round, behind the raised roof of the hatchway, to the fore part of the deck.

There he cast himself on the gunwale, though it was the weather side of the vessel, and gave vent to his internal emotions in a strain which was not so poetical as his studies of Byron's "Corsair" and "Childe Harold," and the naval songs of Dibdin and others, had taught him to emulate.

Four luxurious meals, prepared by a competent cook from the best materials to be bought in Piccadilly, were daily put before the privileged voyagers in the "Felicity," during her three-days' run along our southern coast. Alas! they were not for the like or the liking of Titus Topsell! Breakfast to him was a myth; dinner was a delusive dream; tea was a thought of sorrow; and supper was a vision of despair. The punctual summons to these supposed refreshments of what his merry hosts facetiously called "the outer man"—as if there could be any inner man of Titus Topsell left—were practically tormenting. They only convinced him, or what of him still remained above-board, not yet merged in the heaving expanse of ocean, that he was either dead or dying, or doomed to a more lingering death. Might it be that of simple inanition!—but no, there was the case of Dr. Tanner to forbid any speedy release in that way. Might he be washed over the vessel's side by a whelming wave and sink into his vast and moving grave of waters, unnoticed and unlamented!—but no, there was no such luck for him—no such grand and glorious finale to his mortal existence. He had but to suffer and be silent, and to feel the frailty of human happiness, and to conceive a new opinion of the merits and delights of a seafaring life.

The company on board were not so cruel as to approach Mr. Topsell with any efforts of consolation. It is to be hoped that they did not even look at him, for he scarcely now presented an imposing or very charming figure. His head, indeed, was often quite invisible over the gunwale, apparently turning an intent gaze to inspect the bottom of the sea, as if that could have been discerned, at a depth of nineteen fathoms, through a mass of greenish grey water, incessantly varying its surface, and flecked with huge flakes of foam. To save his hat from continually falling off the head as it hung downward, he had tied it on with a handkerchief, which reminded him of a nightcap he had worn, ages and ages since, when he went to bed in a room of a house on shore.

Hours of this misery went on beneath the clouded, but not inclement, sky of that long August day, and of the next, till, about noon, there was a change in the sailing orders. The "Felicity" had to be put about, to round a promontory of the opposite chalky cliffs, and, whether from her new tack lying nearer the wind, or from getting into a sheltered piece of water, the deck became far more steady. Poor Topsell now recovered himself in some degree, and finding that he was still alive, and able to stand and even to walk and talk, soon procured something to eat and drink, after which he ventured to light a cigar. It would not do to confess himself finally defeated by the malignant marine influences. There was no shame in sickness, but the man who basely succumbed to the dread of its return was unworthy of the name of Briton. None but the brave deserve the fair, and now was the time to show Miss Binnacle that he had a heart, if not a stomach, equal to the sublime aspirations they had agreed to cherish for a "Life on the Ocean Wave!"

So Mr. Topsell, with a jaunty demeanour, as who should say, "Give me a tight boat and plenty of sea-room," strolled towards the stern of the yacht, and began (for there were no strict regulations) talking to the man at the helm. "I say," he presently hinted, "shall I relieve you a quarter of an hour? Give me the tiller-ropes, while you go and stretch your legs."

His proposal was not inopportune, as the vessel had only to be kept on a straight course for the next four or five miles; and the two ropes were placed in his hands, with injunctions to hold the one taut, applying some little force to it, in order to resist the drift of the current and the leeward action of the sails on the tack then pursued.

But there were some mysterious mechanical relations between these forces with which Mr. Topsell was unacquainted. And he neglected to observe the full instructions given him, as to what he should do when the vessel was put about on the opposite tack, which was done before he was dismissed from his responsible charge. How or why it happened, Mr. Topsell has never been able to comprehend; but the boom of the mainsail came swooping round and knocked him down, happily this time without injury, falling on deck, where he picked himself up and resigned the tiller-ropes to a more expert and vigilant steersman.

This, however, was not his worst misfortune, but seemed a mere foretaste of the serious and perilous disaster that befel him in the evening, when the "Felicity" was running into Avonmouth Bay. Topsell was again abaft the mainmast, and leaning over the lee side of the yacht, when a violent lurch, for which he was not prepared, pitched him headlong into the sea. Now, it may or may not be good fun to see the awkward landsman tumble about on board ship; but drowning is no joke. There was great alarm, to be sure, among the crew and passengers of the little vessel, during about five minutes, while they took in sail, put her head to the wind, and stopped her course, lowering a boat and casting out ropes, spars, chairs and benches, with cork life-preservers done up in canvass, and lots of other things, to give poor Topsell a chance of his life.

A boat came by, not manned but womanned, so to speak, by two strapping wenches of the neighbouring port, each pulling her pair of oars, and conveying a soldier of the garrison, their gallant friend, across the harbour to a treat he had promised them. It was reserved for this boat to make salvage of Mr. Titus Topsell; and he was not at all inclined to be particular about the means and agents of his rescue. There would have been no difficulty, of course, in putting him aboard the yacht, but Topsell positively declined. "No more yachting for him!" said this luckless maritime adventurer, as he lay, drenched and soaking and dripping wet, beneath a rug and tarpaulin in the stern-sheets of the boat. He had lost both watch and purse, dropping out of his pockets, but was able to promise a handsome reward to his deliverers—they ought to be styled his fair deliverers by right of their sex; but the rough life of boatwomen out in the harbour or on the beach from morn to eve, with the sun, wind, and rain, and the salt sea-spray, had somewhat affected their feminine complexion, and they were not quite so fair as Miss Binnacle and the other ladies.

These, with their male companions aboard the yacht, had seen Mr. Topsell lifted into the boat, which was then brought alongside, and the kindest inquiries were sincerely addressed to that gentleman, with heartfelt congratulations upon his safety. But he resisted, as we have seen, all their pressing requests to set foot again in the ill-omened "Felicity," which he declared should rather be named the Purgatory, so far as he was concerned. They quickly, however, ran into port, and there landed, in good time to receive Mr. Topsell as he left the boat and ascended the steps of the pier, to be conducted to the nearest hotel.

Titus Topsell's future voyages are limited to the passages from London to Chelsea and to Greenwich. He is no longer ambitious of owning a yacht. If he had one, it should be fixed in his garden-lawn, like the ship that stands in the boys' playground at the Royal Naval Hospital School, adjacent to Greenwich Park. And the name of his yacht should be Terra Firma.

Lord Shaftesbury, accompanied by his son, the Hon. Evelyn Ashley, M.P., on the 12th inst. opened a Working Men's Institute, including reading and club rooms and coffee tavern, at Purton, near Swindon, a populous village inhabited by agricultural labourers and employés of the Great Western Railway works at Swindon. The building, which has cost between £2000 and £3000, was erected at the sole cost of Mr. and Mrs. James Sadler, of Lydiard House, who, while desiring to provide an admitted want in the parish, intend the institute to be a memorial to a deceased sister of Mrs. Sadler.

A French national fête was held at the Crystal Palace on the 12th inst., M. Challemel-Lacour being present. His Excellency in responding at dinner to the health of the French President referred to the first Universal Exhibition which had been held in the building which was now the Crystal Palace, and said that from that time a new era had begun, and, though an age of unbroken peace was not to be expected, still the notion of indestructible enmity between the English and French nations which formerly existed could be no longer entertained. Among the other speakers were Sir P. Cunliffe Owen, Mr. M'George, and Mr. Forbes. There was a display of fireworks in the evening, the set piece being a representation of the statue of "La République," 100 feet high, as inaugurated in Paris in July.—Next day a deputation of French gentlemen residing in London had an interview with M. Challemel-Lacour at Albert-gate, and presented him with a congratulatory address upon his appointment. The Ambassador, in the course of his reply, pointed out that the Republic was not a temporary necessity resulting from the momentary exhaustion of parties, or from the accidental conflict of dynastic pretensions; it was a definite fact—a state of things consecrated by a decisive will, by a deliberate choice, and by an explicit assent.—M. Challemel-Lacour visited the French Hospital and Dispensary, Leicester-square, on Saturday last, and expressed himself charmed with its management.

OBITUARY.

VISCOUNT STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE.

The Right Hon. Sir Stratford Canning, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, county of Somerset, K.G., G.C.B., P.C., Hon. D.C.L. Oxford, and Hon. LL.D. Cambridge, died on the 14th inst., at Frant, near Tunbridge Wells. He was born Jan. 6, 1788, the fourth son of Stratford Canning, Esq., of London, merchant, who was brother of George Canning, Esq., of the Middle Temple, barrister-at-law (father of George Canning, Prime Minister in 1827), and brother also of Paul Canning, Esq., of Garvagh, father of the first Lord Garvagh. His Lordship, one of the most eminent diplomatists of his time, was educated at Eton, where he rose to be captain, and at King's College, Cambridge. For more than half a century he was actively engaged as Ambassador or as Minister in various important congresses and missions at different periods and in different countries. His last Embassy, one in which he achieved historic reputation, was to Constantinople. His diplomatic appointments were as follows:—Secretary to Embassy to Turkey 1809 to 1810, and Minister Plenipotentiary 1810 to 1812; Congress of Vienna 1814 and 1815; Ambassador to Switzerland 1814, and to the United States 1820; Special Mission to Russia 1824; Ambassador at Constantinople 1825-7-9; Ambassador at Madrid 1832, at St. Petersburg 1832, and at Constantinople 1841 to 1858. In 1852 he had been raised to the Peerage and had chosen for the designation of his title that of "Redcliffe," in remembrance of his collateral ancestor William Cannynge, the pious founder of St. Marye Redcliffe at Bristol. While a commoner, Lord Stratford sat in Parliament as member for Old Sarum, 1828 to 1831, for Stockbridge 1831, and for King's Lynn 1835 to 1842. He married, first, Aug. 3, 1816, Harriet, daughter of Thomas Raikes, Esq., Governor of the Bank of England (which lady died June 7, 1817); and secondly, Sept. 3, 1825, Elizabeth-Charlotte, daughter of James Alexander, Esq., of Somerhill, Kent, by whom he leaves issue—three daughters, Louisa, Katherine, and Mary. His only son, George, died unmarried in 1878, aged forty-six. The title consequently becomes extinct. The deceased nobleman retained almost to his last hour his great faculties, and we need scarcely remind our readers that he wrote last year the spirited and sympathetic poem on the glorious death of Melville and Coghill at Isandula. He had long been known in the literary world.

HON. W. C. SPRING-RICE.

The Hon. William Cecil Spring-Rice, late Registrar in Bankruptcy, died on the 11th inst., at his residence in the Albany, Piccadilly, in his fifty-seventh year. He was the fifth and youngest son of Thomas Spring, first Lord Monteagle, by his first wife, Lady Theodosia Pery, second daughter of Edmund Henry, first Earl of Limerick. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degree of M.A. in 1845, and was called to the Bar in 1848. From 1853 to 1858 he acted as Secretary to Lord Cranworth, and from 1861 to 1865 was Secretary to the Commissioners in Lunacy. He became subsequently Registrar in Bankruptcy.

MR. ELLICE, OF INVERGARRY AND GLENGUSICH.

Edward Ellice, Esq., of Invergarry and Glengusich, in the county of Inverness, M.A., J.P. and D.L., died on the 9th inst., on board his yacht, off Portland. He was born Aug. 14, 1810, the eldest son of the late Right Hon. Edward Ellice, M.P. for Coventry, by Lady Hannah Althea, his wife, sister of Charles, second Earl Grey, Prime Minister in 1830. In 1837, he was returned to Parliament by the borough of Huddersfield, but subsequently sat in the Liberal interest for St. Andrew's District of Burghs up to the recent dissolution. He married, first, 1834, Katherine Jane, second daughter of Lieutenant-General Robert Balfour, of Balbirnie, in the county of Fife (which lady died 1864); and secondly, 1867, Eliza Stewart, eldest daughter of T. C. Hagart, Esq., of Bantaskine, and widow of Alexander Speirs, Esq., of Elderslie.

MR. THOMAS H. WYATT.

Thomas Henry Wyatt, F.R.I.B.A., the well-known architect, died on the 5th inst., at the age of seventy-three. He was born in Ireland, the eldest son of the late Matthew Wyatt, Esq., a metropolitan Police Magistrate, and from an early period adopted the profession in which he afterwards became so eminent. During a practice of half a century he designed and superintended the construction of a great number of important buildings, amongst which were the Exchange-buildings, Liverpool; the Adelphi Theatre, London; the County Asylum, Devizes; Mr. Sidney Herbert's church at Wilton; St. Aidan's College, Birkenhead; the railway-station at Florence, and the new Guards' Barracks in Hyde Park. He was also employed in the construction or restoration of upwards of 150 churches. In 1870 he was elected President of the Royal Institute of British Architects, and in 1873 received the Queen's gold medal.

The deaths are also announced of—

Alexander Cathcart, Esq., J.P., formerly of Knockdolian, Ayrshire, on the 9th inst., at Fulwood House, Cheltenham, in his eighty-first year.

Lieutenant-Colonel Archibald Robertson, for thirty-nine years Chief Constable of Hertfordshire, on the 8th inst., at Sele Grange, Hertford, aged seventy-six.

Captain Alexander Pringle Samuells, 3rd Punjaub Pioneers, third son of the late Edward Alexander Samuels, Esq., C.B., Bengal Civil Service, on the 7th ult., at Rawul Pinde, Punjaub, aged thirty-six.

Colin John Campbell, Esq., late Scots Greys, Lieut.-Colonel Commandant Dumbartonshire Rifle Volunteers, on the 6th inst., at Camis Eskan House, aged thirty-two. He was eldest son of the present Colin Cambell, Esq., of Colgrain, county Dumbarton. He married, Oct. 3, 1872, Constance Henrietta, only daughter of Sir Arthur Brinsley Brooke, Bart., M.P., and leaves issue.

John Surman Surman, Esq., of Swindon Hall, near Cheltenham, and of Lay Court, in the county of Gloucester, J.P., at the former residence, on the 8th inst., aged seventy. He was eldest son of John Hughes Goodlake, Esq., and assumed, by Royal license, the surname and arms of Surman on inheriting the estate of Swindon through his mother, Elizabeth Surman.

F. Dukinfield Astley, Esq., lord of the manor of Dukinfield, and late Captain in the Fusilier Guards, accidentally drowned while on a yachting tour in Canada. Mr. Astley resigned his commission in the Army, and in May last left England with a small party on a pleasure and sporting tour in Canada. He was born in 1853, and, his father having died in 1868, succeeded to the estate on attaining his majority. He rebuilt and endowed a public library and mechanics' institute, and gave £2000 towards the purchase of a public park. The Dukinfield estate is a very valuable one, the manor comprising the greater portion of the borough of Stalybridge and the whole of the town of Dukinfield. Mr. Astley also owned the Arasaig estate, Inverness-shire.

The Rev. Edmund Cotter, M.A., Rector of Monanimy, in the county of Cork, on the 6th inst., at Rockforest, in that county, aged eighty-five. He was the third and last surviving son of Sir James Lawrence Cotter, Bart., M.P. for Mallow. He married Grace, daughter of the late William Digges La Touche, Esq., of Sans Souci, and of Stephen's-green, Dublin. He held for many years the office (now abolished) of Clerk of the Papers, Dublin Castle.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the "Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

P J (Broadmoor).—The scraps of paper on which your communications are written are very confusing. Please to send your problems described upon diagrams, and use note-paper of the ordinary size.

W I (Clapham).—The problem is well constructed, but the conception is old, not to say hackneyed. We shall be glad to hear from you again.

S N S (Wolverhampton).—In the position described White is required by the laws of the game to capture the Pawn en passant.

G F (Leeds).—Your friend is mistaken. Le Bourdonnais wrote a book upon chess with the title "Traité sur le Jeu des Echecs." He was also a contributor to the early numbers of Le Palamede, a monthly chess journal published in Paris.

Dr F St (Blandford-square).—You can procure chess diagrams from Mr. T. H. Hopwood, 3, Islington-square, Manchester. The problem shall have early attention.

D W K (Hastings).—There is nothing to commend the game, save that it was played in such extraordinary circumstances—"at sea, in a small boat, on a rainy day." We have returned the manuscript, as requested.

An Old Hand.—We do not examine problems unless they are accompanied by the author's name and address.

E E (Southampton).—Very good and very acceptable.

A Hindoo Youth (Calcutta).—Correct solutions of Problems Nos. 1896 and 1897.

Correspondence Chess.—Mr. William Vander Haeghen, 44, Rue Berckmans, St. Gilles, Brussels, will be glad to play a game by correspondence with an amateur of moderate skill.

The Huddersfield College Magazine announces that the current number is the last that will appear under that title, and that a new chess journal, conducted on the co-operative system now in fashion, will take its place on Jan. 1 next. Mr. Watkinson will be assisted in the new adventure by the Rev. C. E. Ranken, the Rev. W. Wayte, and Mr. Andrews.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated May 5, 1880) of the Right Honourable Sir Stephen Cave, G.C.B., late of No. 35, Wilton-place, of Sidbury Manor, Devon, and of Cleve Hill, Downend, near Bristol, who died at Chambéry on June 6 last, was proved on the 19th ult. at the Bristol district registry by Charles Daniel Cave, the brother, and Thomas Daniel Hill and Sir Charles Brodie Locock, Bart., the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £350,000. The testator bequeaths his carriages, horses, furniture, pictures, plate, and effects in Wilton-place to his wife, Dame Emma Jane Cave; and two legacies, together £6000, for her immediate use, and directs that arrangements be made with his said brother for securing to her the use of his residence at Cleve Hill or Sidbury Manor, at her option, for life, with the use of the carriages, furniture, and effects there. At her death such carriages, furniture, and effects are to go to his brother. He also bequeaths to his executors £500 each; upon trust for Percy Leigh Ingpen, Edith Maud Ingpen and Walter Cecil Ingpen, £5000; to Mr. Lang, the steward of his Devonshire estates, £1000; to Mr. Young, the agent of his Gloucestershire and Somersetshire estates, £500. Legacies to servants of one or two years' wages, according to their period of service; £5000 to Mangotsfield parish, to provide a bible woman and scripture reader, and to assist in providing an additional curate; £3000 to Siddbury parish, to provide a bible woman and scripture reader; two years' annual subscription to each of the hospitals or charities to which he should at his death be an annual subscriber; and £10,000 to his niece, Miss Eleanor Alington. All the foregoing legacies are given duty free. The executors are to realise his West Indian and other colonial estates and to hold the proceeds, and the residuary personal estate, upon trust, to purchase £133,333 6s. 8d. Consolidated or Reduced Annuities, to secure to his widow, Lady Cave, an annuity of £4000, and subject thereto (in the events which have happened) for all his sisters living at the date of his will for their respective lives, with power to appoint, by deed or will, a life interest to their husbands, and afterwards among their children, and in default of appointment to their children equally. The testator devises to his brother, the said Charles Daniel Cave, all his real estate in England, and bequeaths to him £50,000, on condition of his entailing the Devonshire estates purchased by his father, the late Daniel Cave, or by the said testator, on himself, the said Charles Daniel Cave, and one of his sons, with remainder to his issue in tail, and of his also confirming to Lady Cave the free and absolute use of No. 35, Wilton-place, for her life.

The will (dated Feb. 3, 1872) with a codicil (dated Feb. 13, 1878) of Mr. Richard Baxter, late of No. 19, Leinster-gardens, and of Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law, who died on June 20 last at Sandwich, was proved on the 21st ult. by John Maurice Herbert, Charles Zachary Macaulay, and Christopher James Riethmüller, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator leaves legacies to relatives, executors, an old clerk, servants and others, and the residue of his real and personal estate between his five sons, Richard, Herbert Carlyon, Charles Edward, Clement Frederic, and Arthur Lionel, in equal shares, as tenants in common.

The will (dated May 12, 1875) with a codicil (dated May 23, 1879) of the Rev. Richard John Meade, late of Castle Cary, Somersetshire, Canon of the Cathedral Church of Wells, who died on May 23 last, was proved on the 2nd ult. at the district registry, Wells, by the Rev. William Meade and the Rev. De Courcy Meade, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator, among various appointments and bequests in favour of his family, gives £6500 upon trust for his son Richard Meade and his children, and his lands in the county of Cork to his second son, De Courcy. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be divided between his two sons, William and De Courcy, and his two daughters, Miss Frances Catherine Meade and Mrs. Charlotte Henrietta Hankey.

The will (dated March 19, 1880) of Elizabeth Catherine Baroness de Cetto, late of No. 6, Hill-street, Berkeley-square, who died on the 22nd ult., was proved on the 9th inst. by Antoine Baron de Cetto and Major Louis de Cetto, R.A., the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testatrix gives £8000 to her son Louis, £2000 each upon trust for her sons Francis and Maximilian; legacies to her maid, butler, and housemaid; and the residue of her real and personal property to her son Antoine.

The will (dated May 15, 1880) of Lady Harriet Jane Herbert, late of Powis Castle, Montgomeryshire, who died June 21 last, at No. 45, Berkeley-square, was proved on the 26th ult. by the Right Hon. Edward James, Earl of Powis, the brother, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. The testatrix bequeaths, among other legacies, to her sister, Lady Charlotte Elizabeth Montgomery, £4000; to her brother the Hon. Robert Charles Herbert, £6000; to her brother Colonel the Hon. William Henry Herbert, £4000; and the residue of the personalty to her brother the Earl of Powis. The deceased was the second daughter of the second Earl.

The will (dated April 20, 1876) with two codicils (dated March 19, 1877, and March 3, 1880) of Mr. William Fisher, late of Orchard-place, Sheffield, and of Norton Grange, Norton, Derbyshire, merchant, who died on March 25 last at Tonbridge Wells, has been proved at the Derby district registry by Edward Thomas Atkin and Thomas Edward Atkin, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000. The testator, after giving some legacies, leaves the residue of his property, real and personal, upon trust for his wife for life; at her death, among other legacies, he bequeaths £250 each to the Sheffield General Infirmary and the Hospital for Women, Fig Tree-lane, Sheffield; £100 each to the North of England Catholic Girls' Reformatory, Howard-hill, Sheffield, and the Roman Catholic Deaf and Dumb, Intsitution, Handsworth, Yorkshire; and the residue of such part of his personal estate as may by law be applied for charitable purposes for the purpose of founding a charity, one half of which is to be held for the benefit of ladies of good character in reduced circumstances, whether married, unmarried, or widows, who, in contradistinction to the Roman Institution, are not members of the Established Church or Protestant Dissenters holding Trinitarian views, but who believe in the unity of God (as opposed to Trinitarianism), or are members of the Roman Catholic Church, and the other half is to be held for the benefit of single domestic servants, but as to this half no consideration of belief or disbelief is to be taken into account in granting pensions. Should it be considered necessary to give the charity a name, it is to be called Eleanor Fisher's Charity.

The will (dated June 26, 1880) of Major-General Robert Crawley, formerly commanding the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, late of No. 9, York-terrace, Regent's Park, who died on the 2nd ult., was proved on the 29th ult. by F. Waller, Q.C., the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £7000.

Mr. Donald Currie, M.P., laid the foundation-stone of the New Temperance Hall at Stanley, in Perthshire, last Saturday.

EPPS'S COCOA.
GRATEFUL and COMFORTING.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.
If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath.
Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

EAU DE SUEZ.
EAU DE SUEZ immediately and permanently cures toothache, whitens and preserves the teeth, removes all unpleasant odours, including that of tobacco, and secures a pure and healthy state of the gums, mouth, and throat.
There are three kinds, distinguished from each other by a Yellow, Green, and Red Silk Thread.
EAU DE SUEZ.—GREEN THREAD
must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouth-wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning.
EAU DE SUEZ.—YELLOW THREAD instantly removes toothache, however violent it may be.
EAU DE SUEZ.—RED THREAD is used in the same manner as the green, but is specially adapted for children.
SUEZ TOOTH-BRUSH.—This brush is soft, being made of the finest badger-hair. A hard tooth-brush is not only a foolish, but also a criminal instrument, so to speak. For by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will evidently become spongey and weakened, thus being no longer of any use in protecting the roots of the teeth, which naturally become exposed, and impart an offensive smell to the breath.
SUEZ ORANGE TOOTH PASTE secures the permanent removal of tartar, and by daily use restores the whiteness of the teeth.
EAU DE SUEZ.—To guard against counterfeiting, buy only those tooth-brushes which are stamped on the handle with the name "Suez," and those bottles which bear the words "Wilcox and Co., 336, Oxford-street, London," on the labels.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT. Trade Mark,
"Anti-Fat" (Registered), is purely vegetable, and perfectly harmless. No change of diet required. Will reduce from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. Acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat.
ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT is endorsed by those eminent in the medical professional.
The late THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to Her Majesty the Queen, referring to ANTI-FAT in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, AUGUST 28, 1880.

The discussions which took place in the House of Commons during the earlier part of the week in relation to the present and prospective state of Ireland were of a kind which can hardly fail to have deeply pained every right-minded and sound-hearted reader. Exceptional in their own character, it is to be hoped, and may, we think, be fairly believed, that the condition of things to which they point is exceptional also. Dissatisfaction with the existing laws which demand allegiance from her Majesty's subjects may, for aught we know, be more general in Ireland than it seems to be. But actual conflicts between the supremacy of law and the excited will of people who resist it have not become so common, or so widespread, as to be fairly typical of the nation as a whole. Ugly symptoms there are, no doubt, of a temper which we shall all concur in deploring; but it would be exceedingly unwise to overrate, and still more to overstate, the ill humour with which the Queen's Government have to deal. Be the area of Irish discontent large or small, be it of a permanent or of a transient character, be its causes deep-seated or merely superficial, it is a satisfaction to be assured by the Chief Secretary that the Irish Government pledge themselves to uphold law and order, come what may; that they have confidence in the means already placed at their disposal to accomplish this their primary duty; that they have no present intention of asking Parliament for an enlargement of their powers; that if, in the course of the recess, they should find themselves unable by the instrumentality of the ordinary law adequately to protect life and property, they will not hesitate to call Parliament together for the express purpose of obtaining such a measure as may strengthen their hands for the discharge of their responsibility; that meanwhile, however, they will do their best to mature such a scheme for the settlement of the relations of Landlord and Tenant in Ireland as may be calculated to constitute a solid basis for permanent social peace. The matter may be looked at from various points of view, but it is difficult to see how, in existing circumstances, it would be possible for her Majesty's Ministers to take up a position better fitted to cover the entire breadth of what is commonly referred to as the Irish Land question.

That question—more vital to the peace and prosperity of the people of Ireland than, perhaps, of any other country in Europe—is complicated with many difficulties not abstractly inherent in it. Ireland cannot sever herself from the past, nor can the Imperial policy which dominates Ireland be framed, or carried into effect, without more or less consideration of the past. The problem of the Statesman of the present day is one which must not only include a reference to the laws which govern human nature, but it must take account also of the modification of those laws by several generations of unwise, often unjust, and sometimes very oppressive government. Ireland cannot be ruled with permanently good results without some reference to her antecedents. The sins of its progenitors come down to trouble the present generation. "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." Every wrong works out its own punishment, and, by means of it, its own cure; but it does so in its appointed fashion, and in its own appointed time. We have now to deal with a nation whose ideas, sentiments, feelings, and rights have been perverted from what is essentially true and natural by long misgovernment. The penalty we have to pay is far heavier than had been anticipated. For half a century, at least, this country has been endeavouring to "do the right thing" by Ireland. By one concession after another she has aimed at raising the self-respect of her alienated sister, soothing her excitability, fostering her self-reliance, and placing her in all respects upon a footing of equality with herself. To some extent she has succeeded, but, it would seem, has not yet sufficiently atoned for past wrong-doing. It is impossible now, whatever it may be hereafter, to put Ireland, in regard to the chief means of her living, under precisely the same regimen as that which may suit the condition of people who have not passed through her experience. We are bound to remember this in the presence of projects and proceedings which we are justified in condemning. We cannot all at once set right the wrongs which our ancestry did. We cannot, with a mere stroke of benevolent legislation, conjure away the evil traditions which derived their origin from inexcusable misdeeds. We may fret at proofs of failure. We may sometimes feel indignant that good intentions do not produce good fruit. We may lament the misfortune of having to bear the brunt of what was done long before our time, and what we heartily condemn. But this does not alter the case. We have to solve a difficulty of other men's making, it is true, but a difficulty the pressure of which bears upon ourselves. We must be patient and, what is almost of equal importance, perhaps even of more, we must try and put ourselves in the position of those for whom we are called to legislate. They do not see things precisely in the light in which we do. The principles upon which they build are not identical with those upon which we rest our political efforts. Our maxims and mottoes, and catch-words, which often stand for something more incontrovertible than they are, have less authority over suffering Irishmen than over Englishmen and Scotchmen. It is in this spirit that the Irish Land question has to be entertained. There are, of course, points of difference which cannot be given up. But even out of these difficulties may be forced sequences which will call for the exercise of continuous forbearance.

The personal and party disputes which have been witnessed in the House of Commons this week are, no doubt, grievous enough. The mere protraction of the Session by means of them, though an inconvenience, is a mere trifle. Even the obstruction of other business of some importance by a small minority is one of those evils which time will speedily cure. But, as the Government seems to be thoroughly aware, no merely temporary success over these obstacles to progress will do much, if anything, to ameliorate the actual condition of the population of the Sister Isle. Neither can that be done all at once, or in passion, much less at the end of an abnormal Session. The wonder to us is that Irishmen do not see this; that the Representatives of Ireland in the Imperial Legislature appear so greatly to err in respect to the course which it is best for them, and for their country, to pursue. We trust, however, that during the recess, which cannot now be very far distant, they will yet abstain from speech and action which, under existing circumstances, are calculated only to excite angry passions in the breasts of the Irish peasantry and to exasperate the prejudice of the English people. We have said before, and we are glad to have the authority of the Chief Secretary in confirmation of our utterance, that no general rising of the Irish people is to be apprehended during the autumn and winter to which we are looking forward; nor do we believe that the somewhat sinister predictions of heedless agitators will be fulfilled. But no one can help seeing that repressive administration, imperatively as the exigencies of the moment may call for it, must be promptly as well as boldly followed by large and conciliatory legislative changes.

The Queen has approved the appointment of Mr. F. Napier Broome, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary of Mauritius, to be Lieutenant-Governor of that colony.

General Sir Thomas Steele, whose nomination to the command-in-chief of the troops in Ireland we notified some weeks back, will succeed Sir John Michel in the duties of that position on Oct. 1 next. Sir Thomas Steele has appointed Lieutenant-Colonel P. Boyle, his military secretary.

The Gazette officially notifies the appointment of the Duke of St. Albans to be Lieutenant and Custos Rotulorum of the county of Nottingham, in the room of Lord Belper, deceased, and the appointment of Mr. John Pierrepont Edwards, British Vice-Consul at New York, to be Consul at New York.

The Gazette also contains a Royal Order to the effect that the brothers and sisters of the present Earl of Kilmorey shall enjoy the same title, pre-eminence, and precedence as if their late father had survived and succeeded to the title and dignity of his father, the late Earl of Kilmorey, who died in June last.

Mr. Gladstone has so far recovered that he was able to attend the meeting of the Cabinet Council last Saturday afternoon. He has been advised by his physicians to give himself the benefit of a sea cruise, and has gone for a short trip in the Grantully Castle, one of Messrs. Donald Currie and Co.'s South African steamers, embarking with some members of his family and some friends, including Mr. Donald Currie, on Thursday.

Tuesday night's Gazette announces that the Queen has appointed Sir George Cumine Strahan, K.C.M.G., to administer the Government of the Cape of Good Hope and its dependencies, and to be her Majesty's High Commissioner for South Africa, until Sir Hercules George Robert Robinson, G.C.M.G., enters upon the duties of the said office. Her Majesty has also appointed Lieutenant-General Sir John Henry Lefroy, K.C.M.G., C.B., to administer the Government of the colony of Tasmania and its dependencies. Major Lord Gifford, V.C., has been appointed Colonial Secretary for Western Australia and Senior Member of the Legislative Council of that colony.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Oo you agree with me, compelled abider in town, that London presents, just at present, a very ghastly appearance, and that the splendid harvest weather with which we have lately been blessed rather increases than diminishes the dismal aspect of the metropolis? It was glorious summer weather, you will remember, in London in 1665, the year of the Great Plague. Not that (happily) we are threatened with any plague or pestilence just now; still London looks melancholy, because it is nearly Empty. And vacuity is dreadful; Nature abhors a vacuum; and so do hotel-keepers and theatrical managers.

The clubs are nearly all shut up for cleansing and carpet-beating purposes; and those which remain open have been invaded by the shut-out members, invited through the courtesy of the committee to "use" their establishments while their own houses are being swept and garnished. The testy veterans of the Exasperated Service in Pall-mall East find, to their horror and indignation, their favourite tables in the club dining-room usurped by the members of the Parallelopipedon in Pall-mall West; while the smoking-room at the Iguanadon (the haunt of some of the most dignified old fogies in London) is made noisy by the loud converse and unseeming hilarity of the rackety members of the Junior Dry Goods, whose club is being "done up"—estimable gentlemen, no doubt, but addicted to wearing machine-made trousers and "pot" hats, and to smoking briar-wood pipes.

Yes; London is very empty indeed. I went for a drive in Hyde Park last Saturday afternoon, with a friend (he is a distinguished foreigner, and the barouche was his, not mine); and between Kensington Gardens and the Achilles Statue, between five and six p.m., we met only four carriages. London is so empty that there must be at least fifty thousand of the nobility and gentry and the upper, middle, and well-to-do shopkeeping classes at their country seats, at the watering-places (which are all crammed to suffocation), and on the Continent. Now, fifty thousand people are a very large slice out of a population of four millions. Qu'en pensez vous? Is what we call the "World" or "Society" very large or very small? How many people are there in your "World"? Five Hundred? Perhaps, not Fifty.

I can entertain but few hopes of being able between the present time and Michaelmas next to clear off the whole of the alarming arrear of correspondence which has been accumulating in my letter-baskets (not waste paper-baskets, by any means) during the past fortnight. I will, however, endeavour this week to deal with a few.

"C. E. B.," Burton-on-Trent, mildly reproaches me for having jestingly appropriated the epithet of logoprates—a seller of words. He says that the word is "barbaric Greek." Well; but I find it in the great Scapular Græco-Latin lexicon of the Oxford (Clarendon press, 1820) edition, of which I possess a superb copy. It gives (at p. 1230) logoprates—venditor verborum. But it was not that lexicon that I had in my mind's eye when I incidentally used the word logoprates. Had I turned it up in the Oxford edition I should have found that St. Gregory Nazianzen has made a most offensive application of the epithet to a personage with whom no one would care about being identified. My source of information was a lexicon which I have had in working use ever since I was a schoolboy in France, more than forty years ago: the "Dictionnaire Grec-Français," built on the lines of the Greek "Thesaurus" of Robert Etienne, by Professor Planche, of the College Bourbon, Paris, in which logoprates is defined as a "vendeur de paroles—surnom donné aux avocats." And a journalist is always advocating something, and gets paid (but poorly) for his advocacy.

Mem.: Professor Planche does not give the classic Greek definition of a pun; and there must have been plenty of puns in the days of Socrates and Aristophanes. But in the modern Gallo-Hellenic Lexicon of M. N. Contopoulos (Smyrna, 1875) I find "calembour" rendered as logopainknion. Is this "barbaric Greek," or vernacular Romaic— or is it a word of merely modern manufacture, like atmoploun for steam-boat, and siderodromos for railroad?

I asked lately if the admirable and much-lamented Irish comedian Tyrone Power (who wrote, by-the-way, a capital book of American travel) was really a Welshman. "T. W.," among other correspondents, says that the distinguished actor, who perished in the ill-fated steam-ship President, was born and bred at Glamorgan, and that his name was David Powell. He refers to the Metropolitan Magazine, Sept. to Dec., 1836, vol. xvii., in confirmation of his statement. It happens that I possess a complete set of the entertaining periodical in question (Captain Marryat wrote his "Dog Fiend" and his "Japhet" in the M. M.), and at page 92, vol. xvii.; in an article entitled "Our Actors, and their original Trades, Crafts, and Callings," I read—

> Power that is, Power that was (Welsh in 1812, Irish in 1836!)—David Powell (for under that sponsorial and patronymic we understand the now justly popular actor Tyrone Power) was born and bred in that delightfully picturesque county Glamorgan, in the Principality of Wales. His mother, though in very straitened circumstances, resolved that her darling little dainty Davy (as she fondly called him) should be "a man of letters;" therefore, scraping together what little cash she could muster, she apprenticed him to Mr. Bird, a printer in the town of Cardiff.

The same article contains a brief but strangely powerful biography of Edmund Kean, to which, under existing melancholy circumstances, it would be indecorous to advert in detail, just now.

"S. B." is an ingenuous correspondent. He mentions that he has lately come across "an old work entitled 'Stow's Chronicles,' published in the year 1573," and he suggests that I should furnish him with some particulars regarding the work and the life of its author. I envy the ingenuous "S. B." his acquisition. He will be able to find out all about old Stow and his Chronicles in Cassell's "Old and New London," by Walter Thornbury and Edward Walford.

"Henry J. H." wishes to know the meaning of "French Leave." In Dr. Cobham Brewer's "Dictionary of Phrase and Fable," page 316, I find, sub voce "French Leave:"—

> To take French leave. To take without asking leave or giving any equivalent. The allusion is to the French soldiery who, in their invasions, take what they require and never wait to ask permission of the owners or pay any price for what they take.

In the "Slang Dictionary" (Chatto and Windus, 1874), "to take French Leave" is defined as leaving or departing slily without saying anything or obtaining permission. Captain Grose says that to "take French Leave" is to go away without taking leave of the company. I have no clue as to the chronology of the expression. I dimly fancy that I have met with it somewhere in Swift.

In the matter of well-sounding names, "R. S. P" (Salisbury Club) suggests "Yale of Yale," adding, "it is an old Denbighshire name, some thousands of years older than the Deluge or the Sphinx. The old pre-historic mansion of the family ("pre-historic" is good) is in Denbighshire; and it was a member of this illustrious house who founded Yale College, Newhaven, Connecticut. But my correspondent has strangely forgotten that a Yale of Yale, together with Owen Glendower, or Glendour, assisted Prince Madoc in the discovery of America, some centuries before the birth of Christopher Columbus.

Among well-sounding names it is obvious that I myself omitted to rank D'Aurelles de Paladine, Regnault de St. Jean d'Angely, Florence McCarthy, and Aubrey de Vere Beauclerc. Touching Southey's predilection as a name of the locality of Susquehana, can you tell me a prettier named English village than Henley-in-Arden?

The same obliging correspondent speaks touchingly and with fond remembrance of a certain alamode beef house called Wilkinson's, in Gracechurch-street, where he and "five other hungry clerks used to enjoy the 'fourpenny plate'" forty years ago. Of the two survivors of that bright band of alamodists one has served the exalted office of Lord Mayor of London, and the other (my correspondent) has been High Sheriff of his native county. There may be luck in alamode beef.

An Oxford Don writes me from Brussels that in the course of a series of lectures delivered by him at Oxford on Early English Prose Writers, he observed that if "Bacon were to revisit the glimpses of the moon no one would be more surprised than he to find himself called "Lord" Bacon." This remark led at the time to much controversy, and numbers of modern authorities, Lord Campbell included, were cited to justify the prefix of "Lord" to Bacon's name:—it being clearly as absurd to speak of Sir Francis Bacon, Baron Verulam and Viscount St. Albans, as "Lord Bacon," as it would be to call the author of "Coningsby" "Lord Disraeli," the author of "Palm Leaves," "Lord Milnes," or the author of "the Match tax" (an unacted tragi-comedy) "Lord Lowe." Still, little more than a hundred years after the death of the illustrious author of the "Novum Organum" I find him alluded to as "the Lord Bacon" in Pemberton's "View of Sir Isaac Newton's Philosophy" (London, 1728); and Pemberton in a drolly fulsome manner continually refers to "his Lordship," alleging this and "his Lordship" philosophising on that.

Mem.: The worthy Pemberton eats many toads in the dedication of his handsome folio to Sir Robert Walpole. Mine is a beautifully clean copy, and it does not appear to have been read much. The bookplate—or rather the vestiges of two bookplates on the inside of the cover—gave me an amusing amount of trouble. The sparse fragments of one plate testified that the volume had once belonged to "——— O'Bryen." Pasted over this was the merest scrap of another plate, on which were only visible the word "Marquis," the letters (apparently beginning a heraldic motto) "VIG," and a couple of links of the chain of the Order of St. Patrick. What Almanack and Diary Peerages I had by me said nothing about any Marquis whose motto begins with "VIG," and my "Burke" had gone to the binder's. I was in despair; when it occurred to me to consult an old Peerage of the year 1815. Thereon, I found that the motto "Vigueur de Dessus," with the crest of a hand and arm bearing a sword "frappant," belonged to the Marquis of Thomond.

Many thanks to a Right Reverend correspondent, who writes me from Sandwich that the words of Purcell's "Mad Tom" were written by William Basse; but that many of Tom D'Urfey's pieces were set to music by Purcell: among others the opera of "Don Quixote" and the cantata "From Rosy Bowers," which contains the most lovely little allegretto (staccato in C minor)—

> Or if more influencing
> Is to be brisk and airy,
> With a skip and a bound
> And a frisk from the ground,
> I will trip like any fairy.

My correspondent wishes to know who wrote the words of "Mad Bess," another of Purcell's "Bedlam" ditties.

In re the "Apples of King John," "J. L." (Lower Norwood) sends the following extract from "Sir Charles Grandison," vol. iii., p. 32:—

> Mrs. O'Hara has been a handsome woman. . . . her complexion sallowish, streaked with red, makes her face (which is not so plump as it once has been) look like a withering John apple that never ripened kindly.

But 'tis the "King," and not the "John," that has puzzled us all so sorely.

To J. L. (Princes-park, Liverpool), who, remarking on my having lost that queer little old work "Chrysal; or, The Adventures of a Guinea," generously offers me his own copy as a gift, I return my sincerest thanks for his kindness. Gladly would I accept the present; but it turns out that I am luckier than I deemed myself to be. Digging and delving in a very Monte Testaccio of dusty books in an upper chamber I came, to my delight, on a volume of "Chrysal." The other volumes are sure to turn up—at least, I hope so.

"B.W. A." inquires "whether the gentleman who used to write under the nom de plume of 'Azamut Batuk' is still living," and whether I can give the "true name and nationality of the gentleman in question." In reply, I beg to state that the vivacious journalist who used to give himself out (in print) to be a Turk, and who wrote so many sprightly essays on English manners in the Pall Mall Gazette some ten years ago, is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, alive and well. At least, I had the pleasure to meet him at the Brevoort House, New York, last December. He was then, I think, attached to a New York paper called the Sun.

Azamut Batuk and I campaigned (journalistically) together in and about Metz and Nancy at the outset of the Franco-German war in 1870. Afterwards he went, I think, to Spain as special correspondent for an American paper during the Carlist war. Touching his nationality, I think that I have heard him say that he was born at Bologna, but that his parents were French. His name is a French one; but what that name is I am wholly unable to remember. Of such are the tricks that Memory plays us.

Curiously and appropriately suggestive to the meeting at Swansea of the British Association is the republication from the early numbers of "Bentley's Miscellany" of the "Mudfog Papers," by Charles Dickens. The original manuscripts of the two meetings of the Mudfog Association and of "Mr. Robert Bolton, the gentleman connected with the press," are, so Mr. George Bentley informs us in a sensible and modest little preface, in his possession. They are covered with corrections, erasures, and additions. "At that time," remarks Mr. Bentley, "Charles Dickens wrote a freer and bolder hand than he came to write in later years; and these manuscripts are easily decipherable.

"Something, perhaps," continues Mr. Bentley, "of the comparative freedom of the handwriting of these sketches when set by the side of the manuscript of 'Our Mutual Friend' may be owing to the quill pen, with the exit of which has gone out much of the free and graceful penmanship of the past." But has the quill pen wholly made its exit, G. B.? There are a great many clubs in London; and in club writing-rooms the use of quill pens is almost universal. I do not know whether they are used in Government offices, but they certainly are to be found to a large extent in banking-houses. I am passionately fond of the quill myself; but being practically "wall eyed" I am unable to split a nib properly, or, indeed, to mend a pen at all, without mending—or cutting—my fingers at the same time. And, again, good quill pens are very dear. I cannot buy five-and-twenty goose-quills of superior quality for less than five shillings; and I have heard of very large swan-quills that cost a shilling apiece.

Yes; the "Mudfog Papers" are appropriately and suggestively republished; since in the two lengthy reports of the meetings of the "Mudfog Association for the Advancement of Everything," and the humorous discussions at the sections presided over by Professors Muff, Nogo, Snore, Doze, Wheezy, and Woodensconce, Charles Dickens penned not only a droll burlesque but a bitter satire on the British Association for the Advancement of Science. It is curious, also, to remember that, a few years later, in the columns of the Times, the late Gilbert Abbott A'Beckett, of Punch, metropolitan police magistrate, and author of "The Comic History of England," wrote a series of leading articles turning the Association and its proceedings into merciless ridicule. Le ridicule tue, they say in France; but in England you may be made very ridiculous indeed, and yet live it down. The British Association for the Advancement of Science has grown to be a great power in the State of Learning; and its members, now that it is approaching its fiftieth anniversary, can afford to smile good-naturedly at the attacks made upon it when it was a struggling bantling.

More than once lately have I heard people (with somewhat jaded appetites perhaps) maintain that within the last few years the characteristically English banquet known as "whitebait at Greenwich" has been growing more and more elaborate, and that the bill of fare for a "set dinner" at the Trafalgar or the Ship has now become so copious that it seems to comprise the elements of a feast at Willis's Rooms, or the Freemasons', as well as the traditional and delicious riparian symposium at which, subsequent to the degustation of the "red devil," nothing more solid than a duck or some lamb cutlets was wont to appear. But a kind lady friend of mine who is acquainted with one of the most conspicuous of English gastronomes (Awful Personage!) has obtained from him the programme of a dinner given at the "Crown and Sceptre" Tavern, Greenwich, on May 28, 1810. Let us see how our fathers (your great-grandfathers Mesdames) fared seventy years ago—

Turtle Soup. Turtle Fins.
Salmon Souché. Flounder Souché.
Lobster Cutlets. Eels grilled. Soles fried.
Whiting Pudding. John Dory stuffed.
Spey Trout with Tartar Sauce.
Salmon Cutlets fried.
Whitebait plain and devilled.
Sweetbreads and Mushrooms.
Ducklings and Green Peas.
Quarter of Lamb.
Blancmanges. Custards. Gooseberry Tarts.
Maids of Honour.

Saving the absence of iced pudding, this bill of fare might be one for a Greenwich dinner in 1880. Among the illustrious guests who dined at the "Crown and Sceptre" in May, 1810, were Lord Castlereagh, Lord Carington, Lord Chatham (of Walcheren notoriety), Lord Eldon (the Doubter), Lord Ellenborough (who tried William Hone), Mr. George Canning, Sir Henry Halford (a famous medico), Lord Braybrook (Pepysian Braybrook?), Mr. Spencer Percival (assassinated by Bellingham), Lord Harrowby (whom Thistlewood conspired to assassinate), Mr. Frere (the diplomatist, I assume), and some half-dozen more noblemen and gentlemen less known to fame. I wonder what they drank. The bill is lamentably deficient in that particular; but I fancy that very little champagne was imbibed.

THE NEW PIER AT BOURNEMOUTH.

The visit of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress of London, with the two Sheriffs, to this pleasant and salubrious Hampshire sea-coast town, was from Tuesday to Thursday of the week before last. Its occasion of local public doings was the formal opening, on the Wednesday, of the new promenade pier which has been erected by the Bournemouth Improvement Commissioners. Some members of that body, headed by Major-General Burrows, received the municipal dignitaries of the City of London. Mr. T. Beechey, Chairman of the Pier Committee, also took part in the opening ceremony, and presented Lady Truscott, the Lord Mayor's wife, with a golden key of admission to the pier. There was a luncheon, with toasts and speeches, followed by a regatta; and in the evening there was a grand banquet, and a display of fireworks.

We give an Illustration of this structure, which was designed by and has been erected under the superintendence of Mr. Eugenius Birch, C.E., of Victoria-street, Westminster, the engineer of many works of the kind at different places along the coasts of Great Britain. The new pier at Bournemouth is raised much higher than the old structure which it replaced—which, by-the-by, acted as a platform whilst this was being erected—and is of considerable dimensions. Its length is 833 feet: for a distance of 650 feet it is 35 feet wide, but for the remaining distance it is no less than 110 feet, whilst the decking in the centre part of the sea has been slightly raised. At the entrance there is an ornamental structure, with covered resting-place, which is arranged so as to give prominence to the approach. Here there are also lavatories and waiting-rooms both for ladies and gentlemen, and over the centre portion of the structure is a small clock-tower, in which it is proposed to place an illuminated clock. The building itself is of pitch pine and plate-glass, with majolica panels. It has been painted and decorated in an elaborate manner. The pier is of iron, with pitch pine decking; the narrow part is supported by seven clusters of iron screw piles, and beneath the broad end there are fifty-six piles, braced together. Running round the exterior of the broad end, and passing under one part of the pier, is an inclined landing-stage for steamers and boats, having a length of about 1060 feet. The lowest part is only covered by a few inches of water at high tide, and the other parts are at all times accessible. It is constructed of open plates, with timber piles, and, being quite independent of the pier itself, enables vessels to approach the larger structure without striking it. The rail which runs round the sides of the pier is of an ornamental character, and there is seating accommodation for 1000 persons, each three seats being divided into a bay. At the back of each bay there is an appropriate device, representing a dolphin, and the lamp-pillars are of a similar character. Light shelter boxes, fourteen in number, are placed at regular intervals on either side of the narrow part, and are formed of glass, so that whilst resting the visitor is able to view the entire bay. The pier is lighted by sixty globular lamps, and at the sea end has been placed the Board of Trade regulation lamp, which is lighted by Sugg's Argand burners, having an illuminating power equal to twenty candles. The contract for this structure, at £23,000, has been executed by Messrs. Berghein and Co., of Laurence Pountney-hill, London. It is proposed to erect a pavilion on the pier, at a cost of £6000, the borrowing powers of the Bournemouth Commissioners not being yet exhausted.

COLOGNE CATHEDRAL.

On Aug. 14, 1248, the foundation-stone of the Cathedral at Cologne was laid, and on the 14th of the present month, after an interval of exactly 632 years, that magnificent edifice was finished, the last stones being planted on the two sky-reaching towers. At ten o'clock in the forenoon the Prussian flag was unfurled from the top of the northern tower, while at the same moment the Imperial standard began to flutter from the southern pinnacle. The town itself was decorated with numerous banners. All Germany joins with the Cologne Gazette in congratulating the ancient Rhine city and the Empire on the completion of so splendid a monument "of German unity and strength, of German love, and German trust in God." It is expected that the Emperor will be present at the ceremonial consecration and opening of the august ecclesiastical pile, though nothing, we believe, has yet been settled.

We present, in our front-page Engraving, a view of this celebrated Cathedral. Its building was commenced, as we have said, in the year 1248, by Archbishop Conrad, of Hochstaden. The original architect is said to have been Meister Gerhard, a native of Riel, near Cologne. The foundations were laid 46 ft. below the surface of the ground—at least, those of the four central piers or columns, which are 30 ft. in circumference. The form of the whole edifice is that of a cross, which is 466 ft. long, with 238 ft. transept. The two towers at the west entrance, which are only now completed, rise 500 ft. in height; but the central tower is 350 ft. high. The west front consists of four immense buttresses, deeply grooved, inclosing, at the basement, a three-doored portal and two large windows; above these, two tiers of lofty canopied windows. The façade of the south transept, which is 130 ft. wide and 240 ft. high, is adorned with a great number of statues in niches, and with other figures sculptured in bold relief, in the arches of the three doorways; above which is an open balustrade, with a large and beautiful window. The whole exterior of the Cathedral is at once relieved and sustained by double flying buttresses, crocketed and pinnacled, which greatly enliven its aspect. The interior is upheld by about one hundred pillars. There are fifty-six clustered pillars, in two rows, 106 feet high, surrounding the nave and choir, besides the single row that stands round the transepts, and shorter pillars in the aisles. A triforium gallery passes round the whole interior. The best of the stained-glass windows are those in the north aisle, which were placed there in 1508.

In this Cathedral is the "Chapel of the Three Kings," who were identified by an old legendary tradition with the three Wise Men of the East, or Magi, who visited the Saviour's cradle at Bethlehem. Their names were given as Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar; and three human skulls, which are supposed to be theirs, may here be seen, crowned or decorated with rubies and other precious stones, preserved in a shrine of their own. It is stated that these relics, like many others, were brought from Palestine to Constantinople by the Empress Helena; that the Crusaders brought them to Milan; and the Emperor Frederick I., called Barbarossa, sent them to the Archbishop of Cologne.

The Chapel of St. Agnes contains a picture of the Adoration of the Magi, by Stephen Lothener, painted in 1410, which is esteemed of some importance in the history of German art. The tombs of Conrad von Hochstaden, the Archbishop mentioned above, and of Philip von Heinsberg, who built the fortified walls of the city of Cologne, are likewise to be noticed; and there is a black marble stone marking the burial-place of Queen Marie de Medicis, widow of Henry IV. of France, and mother of Henrietta Maria, the wife of our King Charles I.

The building of Cologne Cathedral was stopped by the long-continued civil wars and religious wars of Germany in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and by the subsequent overthrow of the great ecclesiastical principality, in the wars of the French Revolution and Empire of Napoleon I. It was again taken up by King Frederick William of Prussia, and has, during the past forty years, been the object of steadfast patriotic efforts to collect subscriptions all over Germany. The work is now completed in a manner satisfactory both to antiquarian and architectural taste, and to the sentiment of German nationality, of which it has long been regarded as a grand visible symbol. Our Illustration, as the reader will at once perceive, was taken some time before the building of the towers was finished, and shows all the scaffolding yet attached to this mighty structure.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Aug. 24.

When a Parisian chroniqueur complains of the scarcity of news you may be sure that he is sick, or that he is in the country, or that he will not take the trouble to look around him. Paris offers always something new to those who take the trouble to seek. Rétif de la Bretonne found the means of writing forty-two volumes by confining himself simply to relating the romantic episodes which he observed in the society of his times. Modern French society is scarcely romantic; on the contrary, it is, above all, practical, and even brutal in its practicality. The days have gone by when a husband who was loved by his wife was thought to be as comic as one who was deceived by his wife. The men of the nineteenth century have considered that the family is worth defending, and, following the advice of Dumas the younger, they have taken the law into their own hands in order to punish the unfaithful wife, while reserving to themselves the monopoly of infidelity. Now the women are claiming their rights in two ways. Mdlle. Hubertine Anelert claims the right of vote; Madame la Comtesse de Tilly demands the punishment of the unfaithful husband, and, finding that the law of the land is powerless in her case, she buys a bottle of vitriol and throws it in the face of her husband's mistress. The jury of the town of Saintes has acquitted her, and French public opinion is in her favour. Public opinion is also in favour of Mdlle. Dumaire, who shot a lover who had deserted her. This afternoon the Assize Court of the Seine began to examine a similar case of a Belgian girl, Marie Moyen, who caused vitriol to be thrown into the face of her lover, who had taken measures to wed a lawful wife. In short, during the present year there has been a series of similar crimes in which women have taken justice into their own hands, and in each case the jury has acquitted the culprit. There is no reason why the series should end until the Legislature affords reasonable protection to women by establishing the institution of divorce, and legalising the recherche de la paternité—that is to say, by establishing liberty and responsibility.

The discussion of the case of the Comtesse de Tilly has almost thrown politics into the shade during the past week. In reality, nobody knows anything. M. Grévy has gone to open the shooting season at Mont-sous-Vaudrey in the Jura; M. Gambetta is amusing himself at Ville d'Avray, where he practises pistol-shooting and fishes for frogs in his private frog-pond. M. Gambetta, I may add, eats the frogs that he catches, and, according to the opposition journals, he pays his head cook 40,000f. a year to dress them. Most of the Ministers are in the country, and some of them are adopting the English fashion of addressing public meetings. At Montauban, for instance, M. de Freycinet made a speech last week which has delighted all the reactionary journals. He gave it to be understood that the Government did not intend to enforce the decrees of March 19 for the expulsion of unauthorised religious corporations; he declared that France was determined to continue a policy of peace in all her foreign relations; and, finally, that in the vineyard of the Republic the workmen of the eleventh hour would be rewarded as highly as those who had come in at the first hour of the day. M. de Freycinet, however, has but little influence even amongst his own friends, although he is Prime Minister, and so nobody pays much attention to his words. As regards the decrees concerning the religious orders, M. de Freycinet's promise means nothing at all. Negotiations are now being carried on between the Government and the Vatican, and much will depend upon the attitude which the Pope may finally assume. Meanwhile, in spite of M. de Freycinet's speech, the semi-official newspapers continue to announce that the decrees will be carried into effect on Aug. 31.

Much attention has been attracted here by the Allocution of the Pope, which the religious journals publish and praise as warmly as they praise M. de Freycinet's speech. It is a long document, which establishes the firm intention of the Court of Rome to persevere in the policy of the Syllabus and to continue against modern society the obstinate struggle of Pius IX. and of the Ultramontanes. The language of Leo XIII. differs in nothing from that of his predecessor. There is, it is true, no mention made of France in this Allocution, and only an indirect allusion to the decrees; but the wrath of the Holy Father against the Belgian Liberals is terribly significant.

Apropos of the workmen of the eleventh hour, it is curious to see the benevolence with which the Orleanist, Bonapartist, and even the Legitimist press speak of the Republic since M. de Freycinet has spoken. As regards the Bonapartists, this need cause no astonishment, for ever since the death of Prince Louis Napoleon in Zululand the party of the Appeal to the People has gradually fallen to ruin. The combat has ceased for want of pretenders, on the one hand, and of partisans on the other. Now, if you meet a Bonapartist in the street, you will find that he is the first to glorify the Republican régime. One of these days we shall be told that Bonapartism was never anything but a legend. The only Bonapartist who ever existed was Napoleon III., and, as M. de Morny used to say, "he was rather an Orleanist than a Bonapartist."

I read in a marvellous article in the Figaro the other day on chic that M. de Morny was the most chic statesman that ever existed. Amongst diplomatists, Duc Decazes had a great deal of chic; M. Challemel-Lacour is totally wanting in that quality. M. Gambetta, too, is not chic, but his speeches and his compliments to women are often chic. Chic men never speak of what they do, "it being understood in their sphere that people do nothing." There are also, I read, countries, towns, and nations that are chic. It is chic, for instance, to look like an Englishman, a Russian, or an Austrian; it is vulgar to look like an Italian or a German; Paris is chic in the spring, it is vulgar in the autumn. Following my ultra-snobbish guide, I find that it is always chic to travel in Scotland, but it is "poor form" to travel in Italy, and accordingly I may announce that three charming Parisian high-life ladies, the Vicomtesse Greffuhle, the Marquise de Breteuil, and the Vicomtesse O'Connor have accompanied their husbands to Scotland, to be initiated into the mysteries of grouse-shooting.

While my lips are still blushing with the honour of pronouncing the names of these noble dames, let me continue my chronicle of high life by saying that M. Gilbert de Polignac is about to marry Mdlle. Caroline Leroy. M. de Polignac belongs to the younger branch of the house whose evil counsels helped to bring about the ruin of Marie Antoinette. The Polignacs trace their descent not quite so far back as Adam, but to no less a personage than the Gallo-Roman Bishop Sidonius Apollinaris, who has spoken somewhere in his voluminous writings of his château of Apollinianum in Auvergne.

M. Sigismond Lacroix protests against the version which I sent you last week of the proposed suppression of the Grand Prix de Paris. M. Lacroix is willing to take no notice of the abstention of the members of the Jockey Club from the National Fête of July 14. The main arguments that he invokes in favour of the suppression of the subvention hitherto granted by the Ville de Paris to the Grand Prix are—That horse-races are materially and morally useless to the population; that they do not improve the breed of horses used either in agriculture, industry, or war; and that the subvention was granted under the Empire on the demand of the Duc de Morny. The origin of the institution in the eyes of the radical Municipal Councillors shows the interest which it deserves.

Victor Hugo has gone to spend a few days at Veules, on the Normandy Coast, with M. Paul Meurice.

The Comte de Paris will shortly publish the fifth and sixth volumes of his "History of the American Civil War."

Nubar Pasha, who has been staying with his family in Paris for a few days, has gone to Trouville.

Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt is expected in Paris to-night on her return from Copenhagen. Prince Orloff is also expected.

M. Sardou, the dramatist, has become the possessor of the door of the cabinet that Charlotte Corday opened in order to enter the quarry-floored room in which Marat was taking a bath in the famous baignoire-sabot, now, I believe, in the collection of Madame Tussaud. The door was recently pulled down, together with the house in which it was, in the Rue de l'Ecolé de Médecine. M. Sardou is a great hunter of bric-à-brac and curiosities relating to the Revolution.

How often does it appear that the Parisians are the slaves of the landlords when they are not the slaves of the door-porters? M. Henri Rochefort has been unable to find a landlord who would accept him as a tenant. It was not, they said, on their own account. Oh no! they would be only too flattered to have so distinguished a locataire as M. Rochefort; but as he would probably receive many visitors . . . of the Radical persuasion, the other tenants in the house might be shocked. And so it happens that M. Rochefort has been obliged to hire a little house all to himself in the Cité Malesherbes, in which he will stow away his bibelots and antique furniture. Like Sardou, Rochefort is an inveterate collector. He is, indeed, the author of a volume on the mysteries of the Hôtel Drouot, in which he relates the anecdote of an auctioneer's man who was singing, or rather shouting, the praises of a finely-smoked and varnished old master, "signed: Salvator Mundi;" then, after a pause, he added, for the edification of the ignorant: "Brother of Salvator Rosa."

NATIONAL ART COMPETITION.

The Science and Art Department of the Committee of Council on Education, South Kensington, have issued the following list of candidates who have been successful in obtaining Royal Exhibitions of £50 per annum each for three years, and free admission to the course of instruction at the following institutions:—1. The Royal School of Mines, Jermyn-street, London—R. T. Bodey, seventeen, student, Bristol; Henry F. Collins, fifteen, student, Truro; Codrington D. Selman, twenty-three, mechanical engineer, Bristol. 2. The Royal College of Science, Dublin—Ernest Lousley, twenty-five, engine fitter, Glasgow; Thos. E. Lones, nineteen, mechanical engineer, Tipton; Henry Thornley, twenty-one, weaver, Accrington.

The number of drawings sent up for examination this year was 169,147 from 151 schools. Of these works 989 were referred to the national competition, being 406 less than in 1879, when the number was 1395. The examiners in figure drawing and painting report—"The drawings from the antique reached a generally high level. Careful comparison showed that no one of the competing works combined all the qualities which are desirable in a gold medal work." On design, with architecture and modelling, the verdict is—"The modelling of the figure is still at a low standard in most of the schools." Designs "exhibited a general want of freshness;" but "the examiners emphasised by reward the originality displayed in some works which yet had many defects." The competition in oil and water-colour painting showed "a general extension of sound methods," but "no single work was characterised by such completeness or sense of perfection as to give entire satisfaction."

THE WAR IN AFGHANISTAN.

The British garrison, under General Primrose, in the Citadel of Candahar, is closely besieged; and a sortie on Monday week, to obtain supplies of provisions from a village on the east side of the city, was attended with disastrous results. Nearly two hundred officers and men were killed or wounded. But it is believed that there is no reason to fear that the garrison will not be able to defend itself in the Citadel until the arrival of the army led by General Sir F. Roberts from Cabul, which may be expected at the beginning of next week. The force to be conducted by General Phayre, from Quetta to the relief of Candahar, will probably get there a few days later.

We are indebted again to Major-General Sir Michael A. Biddulph, K.C.B., R.A., for several admirable sketches of the country which is likely to be the scene of military operations, and which he thoroughly explored, when in command of the expeditionary force advancing from Quetta, between November, 1878, and March, 1879. Our Extra Supplement Engraving, from one of his sketches, is a View of the Kadani Plains, from the signal station near the top of the Khojak Pass, by which General Phayre will march from the Pishin Valley, north-west of Quetta, on the road to Candahar. The view looks north-west towards Candahar, directly over the fort of Chaman, which is situated at the foot of the Khojak Pass on that side; the road from Chaman farther on is continued by Gatai, fourteen miles distant, and thence to the opposite range of mountains, near their right-hand extremity. It crosses the Kadani river, which traverses the plain shown in the middle distance of this View, from right to left, and which, farther to the south-west, receives the Tarnak, and joins the Argandab below Candahar. The road in the foreground, over which a convoy of laden camels with an escort of troops is passing, is that which was made in January and February of last year by Lieutenant Wells, R.E., with a working party of Ghilzais, and is practicable for traffic with carts. There are two or three other roads, besides the Khojak Pass, over this ridge of mountain, called the Khoja Amran, which separates Pishin from the Kadani plain. One road is from Gwaja, which is situated to the left-hand side of the View presented in our Engraving; it traverses the Kadani plain to form a junction with the Chaman or Khojak Pass road, at Takht-i-pul, beneath the remotest of the mountain peaks, shown in this View. General Biddulph describes the aspect of the plain as very remarkable when beheld from the heights of the Khojak, several thousand feet above; "the plain is laid out like a sea, and the mountains run out into isolated promontories. To the left, the desert is seen, having the appearance of a turbulent tide about to overflow the tranquil plains at our feet. Far away, in the midst of the desert, mountain tops appear already enveloped by the sandy waste."

The other two Views engraved from Sir M. Biddulph's Sketches were taken a short distance westward of Candahar, including the very ground which is now occupied by the encampments of different portions of the besieging Afghan army, commanded by Ayoub Khan, from Herat. The first is that looking to the west from the suburbs of Candahar, in the direction of Kokoran, a village five miles distant from the city on the Herat road. Here rises a mass of rugged limestone rock, which frowns above the site of Old Candahar; and to the right of this is seen the gap or opening through which the Herat road passes, winding between garden walls and villages, till it gains a more open country beyond these rocky hill-ranges. The town of Candahar is, of course, situated immediately behind the spectator in this view. The jagged hills to the right hand extend from Kokoran to Panjwai, fifteen miles distant, along the left bank of the Argandab. All these positions must now be in possession of the enemy, and available for the base of his attack on Candahar.

The second view is from Kokoran, which was the headquarters of Ayoub Khan while preparing the siege of Candahar. It is the reverse view to that presented in the other Engraving. It shows the north and south limits of that gap in the barrier of craggy hills, which was seen from the opposite direction in the view looking westward from Candahar. Part of the city, with the tomb of Ahmed Shah, may even be discerned from this point in the distance through that gap. The view from here looks up the valley of the Argandab, and over a richly cultivated plain watered by the many canals and watercourses taken from the Argandab to supply the town and fertilize its environs. General Biddulph remarks that "the energy and skill displayed in these extensive waterworks cannot be too highly extolled. Brought from a point many miles distant in the Argandab Valley, the chief canal, with its offshoots, conducts a vast body of water, which is dispersed along the contours of the declining plain in innumerable channels, spreading a rich fertility for many miles in a fan-like form to the south-east of the gap. Villages cluster around the city on three sides. Corn-fields, orchards, gardens, and vineyards are seen in luxurious succession, presenting a veritable oasis within the girdle of rugged hills and desert wastes all round. And if we turn to the aspect of the country beyond the gap, we see in the Argandab Valley along the canals and the river banks a fair and beautiful landscape of village and cultivated ground, stretching for many miles in each direction. If we could cast our eyes still further, we should see in the vales of the Tarnak and Arghessan districts scarcely less fertile."

The latest news received in London on Wednesday evening was by telegram from the Viceroy of India on Tuesday, communicating a message from Colonel St. John, the political agent at Candahar, dated last Saturday, the 21st. It gives particulars of the British loss in the sortie on Monday week; the officers killed were Brigadier-General H. F. Brooke; Captain G. M. Cruickshank, R.E., late Bombay Engineers; Lieutenant-Colonel W. H. Newport, 28th Bombay Native Infantry; Major R. J. Le Poer Trench, 19th Bombay Infantry; Lieutenant Francis Stevenson, 19th B.N.I.; Second-Lieutenants F. P. F. Wood and E. S. Marsh, of 7th Royal Fusiliers, and the Rev. G. Maxwell Gordon, M.A., chaplain. The officers wounded are Colonel Nimmo, of the 28th, Major Vandeleur, of the 7th, and Lieutenant Wood, of the Transport, all severely, and Lieutenants Malcolmson and Shewell, not severely. About 180 men were killed or wounded. The east face of the city is now considered safe. The troops immediately investing it are the Ghazis, or sworn Mussulman warriors of the faith, and the revolted soldiery of Candahar, while Ayoub Khan holds his other forces three miles off, on the Herat road. He has 5000 regular infantry, 5000 cavalry, and 10,000 Ghazis, with thirty-seven guns.

General Roberts was expected to reach Khelat-i-Ghilzai on Tuesday last, having met with no obstruction at Ghuzni. He may possibly be at Candahar on Monday next.

The Government have authorised an expenditure, not exceeding £2200 a year, for an improved mail-packet service between Aberdeen and Lerwick, in the Shetland Isles.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

There was an immense crowd, I am told, at the funeral of Miss Neilson, which took place at Brompton Cemetery, and beyond the outside public (who, I hear, seemed to look upon the mournful proceedings as a kind of show got up for their special gratification, and behaved themselves in a very rude and Bank Holiday sort of manner) there were gathered round the grave of this gifted, accomplished, and lamented actress a large number of her brother and sister artistes, and of her personal friends. Prominent among the latter were Lord Henry Lennox, Admiral Glyn (who, by all accounts, seems to have been the stanchest friend the poor lady had), Mr. Henry Labouchere, M.P., and Mr. George Lewis, the eminent solicitor. Among the professionals I note the names of Mrs. Alfred Mellon, Miss Carlotta Leclercq, Miss Emily Thorne, Mrs. Bernard Beere, Miss Ellen Barry, Mr. John Ryder (whose dramatic pupil the deceased had been, I believe), Mr. John S. Clarke, Mr. Fernandez, Mr. H. B. Conway, Mr. T. Swinbourne, and many more.

To a Leeds contemporary belongs the responsibility for the statement that the name of the fair young tragédienne on whose coffin-plate was inscribed "Lilian Adelaide Lee Neilson," was neither Lilian nor Adelaide nor Neilson (that she had been the wife of Mr. Philip Lee is beyond a doubt), and that her real maiden name was Elizabeth Ann Brown. Why the fable of her having been born at Zaragoza, in Spain, of a Spanish father and an English mother, should have been circulated it is not my business to inquire, and it strikes me that there is no need for any one to be very solicitous about the matter, seeing that it is not very probable that any extended biography of Miss Neilson will be attempted—in our time at least. But the theatrical chronicler of the future will be entitled to be made cognizant of the fact, as stated by my Leeds contemporary, that she was born in St. Peter's Square, Leeds, on the 3rd of March, 1839. Into any other details touching her private life I fail to see the good of entering. She was a very admirable and sympathetic actress, but scarcely a great one.

I knew Miss Neilson personally only very slightly. I happened to be in Birmingham on business about seven years ago, and, after dining with her and her husband, I went to the Theatre Royal to see her in Rosalind in "As You Like It." I thought her Rosalind a very bright and intelligent, but scarcely a highly finished, performance, artistically considered. But then I had been comparing her (unjustly, perhaps) with Helen Faucit and Ellen Tree. I saw her the next night in Juliet, and would willingly have gone to see her again in that character twenty times running. I was simply enchanted. She was more pathetic, more artless in her art, and more graceful than that delightful French actress, Mdlle. Stella Colas, who, some eighteen years ago, came over from the French Theatre at St. Petersburg to London to storm the town as Juliet at the Princess's Theatre. But Miss Neilson could speak pure and idiomatic English, whereas poor little Stella Colas (I think that she also took lessons from Mr. Ryder) had but an imperfect acquaintance with our tongue.

Miss Neilson was then (1873) on the eve of her departure for her first tour in the United States. There she made her grandest and, financially, her most profitable successes. I found the Americans positively raving about her last spring, and it was in America that she made her grandest successes, both artistic and pecuniary. I used to hear a great deal about her from poor Watts Phillips, in whose drama of "The Huguenot Captain" she was the original Gabrielle de Savigny. While studying the part she used frequently to visit Watts at his villeggiatura at Edenbridge; and he always used to speak to me most enthusiastically, not only of the talent which she then manifested, but of the exceeding bright promise which was within her. And there were few keener judges of the dramatic art than Watts Phillips. He was, himself, largely endowed with the mimetic faculty; had studied elocution a little with Samuel Phelps, just as he studied art a little with George Cruikshank; and, had he given his mind (with his excellent "stage face" and rich, resonant voice) to the sock and buskin, he would have made a first-rate tragic actor.

It was owing to a very curious chance that just before Christmas, 1869, I missed seeing Miss Neilson in the part of the heroine in Mr. Byron's pathetic drama of "Uncle Dick's Darling." On the same night of that piece was produced a burlesque or an extravaganza—I scarcely know what to call it—but I know that it was a very tedious and painful attempt to be funny, which was only rescued from utter failure by the talent and energy of Mr. Toole, Miss Nellie Farren, and Mrs. Leigh—called "Wat Tyler, M.P." The writing and the witnessing of the rehearsals of this unfortunate piece had inspired me with such an intense loathing and disgust for dramatic authorship that I mentally registered a vow never to witness the public performance of the abominable thing. And I never did see "Wat Tyler, M.P."—wither it!—although it ran, I believe, for some seventy nights or so. And that is the reason why, likewise, I failed to see Miss Neilson as Mary in "Uncle Dick."

I am told that she was a most warmhearted, compassionate, and charitable woman; and one who knew her very well assures me that he never heard her say an unkind, an ungenerous, or an envious word about any human being. Poor soul! The little feet will tread no more the mazes of Vanity Fair, and she is at rest from a wearisome and troublesome world. Abating her mouth, which was slightly out of drawing, she was one of the prettiest women that I ever remember to have seen. In what old Italian cathedral have I seen a slab with the simple inscription, "Martini Luigi Implora Pace"? That would be about the most fitting epitaph for poor Neilson.

And while the grave was closing over this gifted, harmless actress, so fortunate in the closing years of her brief but brilliant life, and whose death was surrounded by such darkly wretched circumstances, there died in peace and honour at her house in London the venerable relict of Charles Kean. She was seventy-five years of age. Ample professional biographies of this once-famous actress have appeared in all the leading journals; and it would be surplusage on my part were I to trace in this place her career, from her appearance as Miss Ellen Tree very early in the "twenties," at old Covent Garden Theatre, to her final retirement from the stage at the death of her husband, in 1868. What I have to say of the late Mrs. Charles Kean must be of the nature of a brief personal reminiscence, and relates to nearly thirty years ago. Of course, as a boy (and an intensely theatrical boy) I had seen her in all her great parts—Juliet, Julia, Rosalind, Ion, Mariana (in Sheridan Knowles's "Wife"), and so forth. She made a great impression on me, too, late in the "forties" at the Princess's (under the joint management of the Keans and the Keeleys?) in a very powerful play called "The Templar;" and did she not sustain the part of the heroine in the melodrama of "Pauline?" But I began to see a great deal of her and of Mr. Charles Kean in 1850, and especially in 1851, when the Princess's passed under the sole management of the Keans.

I had been an assistant scene-painter there, some years before, under Mr. William Beverly, during the management of Mr. J. M. Maddox, at the magnificent salary of fifteen shillings a week (a couple of shillings too much for a raw lad of my then ignorance and incapacity); but for years afterwards I had the "run" of the house, both before and behind the curtain, partly because the authorities were rather pleased that an old subordinate employé of the theatre should have taken up the trade of journalism, and partly because I had a dear (long since dead) brother who, under the name of Wynn, had long been an actor in the Princess's company. In the autumn of 1851 Mrs. Charles Kean asked my brother and myself if we would write the "opening" for a pantomime to be produced at Christmas. I (who was just beginning to "feel my feet," as the saying is, in "Household Words") was to find the plot and title and write the dialogue, the songs and the selection of the music were apportioned to my brother, and Mr. George Ellis, the then stage-manager of the Princess's, was to manage the technical arrangements. "Harlequin Billy Taylor"—I forget its subtitle, was duly produced in 1851, and had a lengthened and most successful run. I wish most heartily that the piece, scenery, dresses, and all had been sunk to the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean before ever it was produced. Some miserable business matters (into the details of which it is wholly unnecessary to enter now, seeing that all the parties to the wretched transaction, except myself, are Dead) led to a bitter quarrel between my poor brother and Mr. George Ellis. Naturally, I took my brother's part; as naturally, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean took the part of their stage-manager; and, notwithstanding the laudable endeavours of Mr. Dion Boucicault to pour oil on the troubled waters, the end of the matter was the withdrawal of my brother from the Princess's. Years afterwards I had the pleasure to shake hands with Mr. Charles Kean, whom I met quite accidentally one morning in the hall of the Reform Club. He had just returned, laden with golden opinions, substantial as well as figurative, from an extended theatrical tour in America and the colonies, and looked well and vigorous. I never saw him any more. As to his merits as a tragedian there may be divers opinions; but he was assuredly a consummate student of his art, a most blameless and high-minded gentleman, and a worthy consort of the accomplished and estimable lady who has just died.

MUSIC.

The Covent-Garden Promenade Concerts maintain their interest by a constant variation in the attractions offered. Mr. F. H. Cowen has proved that he not only knows how to conduct important orchestral performances, but that he also understands how to render the programmes attractive to all tastes by a judicious combination of the classical and the popular elements. That clever pianiste Miss Josephine Lawrence appeared at last Saturday's concert, and played with much success. Another "classical night" was given on Wednesday, when the programme included Mendelssohn's "Italian" symphony, Schumann's overture and entr'actes to "Manfred," and other interesting features.

The next important musical specialty will be the Gloucester Festival, beginning on Sept. 7. We have specified the leading features of the programme, and shall next week refer more fully to the arrangements for the forthcoming celebration.

London music will shortly regain its wonted activity. A new series of the Crystal Palace Saturday afternoon concerts will begin on Oct. 9; Her Majesty's Theatre is to open on the 16th of the same month for an autumn season of Italian opera performances; the Monday Popular concerts will be resumed on Nov. 8; the Sacred Harmonic Society's concerts will (as previously mentioned) be removed to St. James's Hall, where the new season will begin on Dec. 3. Mr. F. H. Cowen's orchestral concerts at St. James's Hall (to which we have previously drawn attention) will take place on Nov. 13 and 27, Dec. 4 and 18. A performance of Berlioz's "Faust" music will be given by Mr. Charles Hallé on Nov. 20, and Mr. John Boosey's London Ballad Concerts will enter on a new series on Nov. 24.

The once celebrated violinist, Ole Bull—whose death was recorded last week—was born at Bergen, in Norway, in 1810. He studied the violin under Spohr, but was not very successful in his early career. He afterwards devoted himself to the study of the law, but soon reverted to his former pursuit, in which he attained a world-wide celebrity, but rather as a player in the brilliant and eccentric styles than of the classical order. He purchased land in America and attempted to found a Norwegian colony. He likewise leased the New York Academy of Music for Italian opera, also with unsuccessful results. His career was altogether an adventurous one, his fortunes having been retrieved during the later years of his life.

A chromolithograph reproduction of the picture of "Psyche," by Robert Beyschlag, a Bavarian artist of repute, is published by Messrs. George Rowney and Co., of Percy-street. It merits notice as one of the most successful examples of that process. It was executed on their premises, under the immediate superintendence of Mr. F. W. Rowney.

Messrs. Sampson Low and Co. are bringing out a serial issue, in six parts, of Mr. Francis George Heath's charming edition of Gilpin's well-known "Forest Scenery." The first part of this monthly re-issue contains sixty-four pages of letterpress, three full-page wood engravings, and a smaller one (executed by Cooper). The illustrations include the frontispiece of the volume, Gilpin's church at Boldre, drawn by Mrs. Lister Kay, and three landscapes. The text of Part 1 comprises the Editor's introduction, including a sketch of Gilpin's life and work, a chapter on the character of Gilpin's illustrations of forest scenery, and completed chapters on the "picturesque beauty of trees," the "characters of trees," and on "the sources of picturesqueness in trees."

Mr. W. H. Smith presided on the 19th inst. at the eighth anniversary dinner of the Westminster and Pimlico Licensed Victuallers' and Beersellers' Trade Association, which took place at the Crystal Palace. Sir C. Russell, M.P., also was present. Mr. Smith, in proposing the toast of the evening, said the trade of the licensed victualler must be regarded as one which the State considered to be necessary in the interest of the public. While protesting against over-legislation, he advised the licensed victuallers to make it clear that any opposition which they had to offer to legislation was based on public grounds; and he suggested that they should take note of the waves of public feeling. He expressed a belief that the licensed victuallers did their best to carry out the regulations imposed upon them by the State, but pointed out that they must be at one with the public in the desire that the abuse of intoxicating liquors should not be permitted.

THE COURT.

The chief event of the last week's residence of the Queen at the Isle of Wight for the autumn season has been her Majesty's farewell visit last Saturday to the 1st Battalion (Prince Consort's Own) Rifle Brigade on board the Jumna at Portsmouth on the eve of their departure for India, the brigade, commanded by Colonel Lord Edward W. Pelham-Clinton, having a strength in rank and file of 900. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with Princes Albert Victor and George and Prince Leopold, visited the ship and took leave of the soldiers previous to the arrival of the Queen, and various officers were presented to their Royal Highnesses, the Prince cordially ending his farewell with "Good luck to you!" The Royal party returned in the Elfin to the Osborne, and shortly after the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, arrived in the Royal yacht Alberta, Captain Thomson, and went on board her Majesty's ship Jumna, Captain Parsons, where her Majesty was received by Admiral Ryder, Commander-in-Chief at Portsmouth, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Rear-Admiral the Hon. Fitzgerald Foley, and Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Edward Clinton. Her Majesty was conducted round the ship by Captain Parsons and Lord Edward Clinton, and saw the men of the battalion assembled on the troop-deck. At the conclusion of the inspection the officers of the battalion and the officers of the other regiments proceeding to India at the same time were presented to the Queen by Lord Edward Clinton. On leaving the ship the Royal yacht Alberta, with her Majesty on board, and the Victoria and Albert following in attendance, gave three cheers to the battalion on board the Jumna, which were returned by the battalion and ship's company, which manned yards. The Queen was much affected by the enthusiasm, and continued waving her handkerchief so long as it could be seen from the Jumna. Her Majesty landed at Trinity Pier, East Cowes, at half-past seven. Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry and the Hon. Lady Ponsonby, Admiral of the Fleet the Hon. Sir Henry Keppel, and Captain Lord Charles Scott, commanding her Majesty's ship Bacchante at Cowes, joined the Royal dinner circle. Prince Leopold returned the same evening to Osborne.

The Jumna went to sea on Sunday morning, and on passing Osborne the Queen, who witnessed her departure, signalled the following message, which was duly acknowledged:—"The Queen wishes you Godspeed, and her Majesty wishes Lord Edward Clinton to telegraph how you all are wherever the ship touches." Her Majesty's yacht Osborne, with the Prince and Princess of Wales on board, her Majesty's ship Bacchante, and her Majesty's ship Hector, in Cowes roads, manned the rigging and cheered as the Jumna passed to the westward.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service, performed at Osborne by the Rev. George Connor, Vicar of Newport. The Prince and Princess of Wales, with all their family, lunched with her Majesty.

Princesses Victoria and Louise of Schleswig-Holstein lunched with the Queen on Monday. Her Majesty drove to Trinity Pier, East Cowes, in the afternoon, and went in the Royal yacht steam barge to her Majesty's yacht Osborne in Cowes Roads and visited the Princess of Wales. Captain Thomson, her Majesty's yacht Victoria and Albert, was in attendance.

The Queen's dinner party at Osborne included the Princess of Wales, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Marchioness Dowager of Ely, Miss Knollys, Commander Lord Charles Beresford, her Majesty's yacht Osborne; Lieutenant-General the Hon. Arthur Hardinge, and Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar left Osborne the next day.

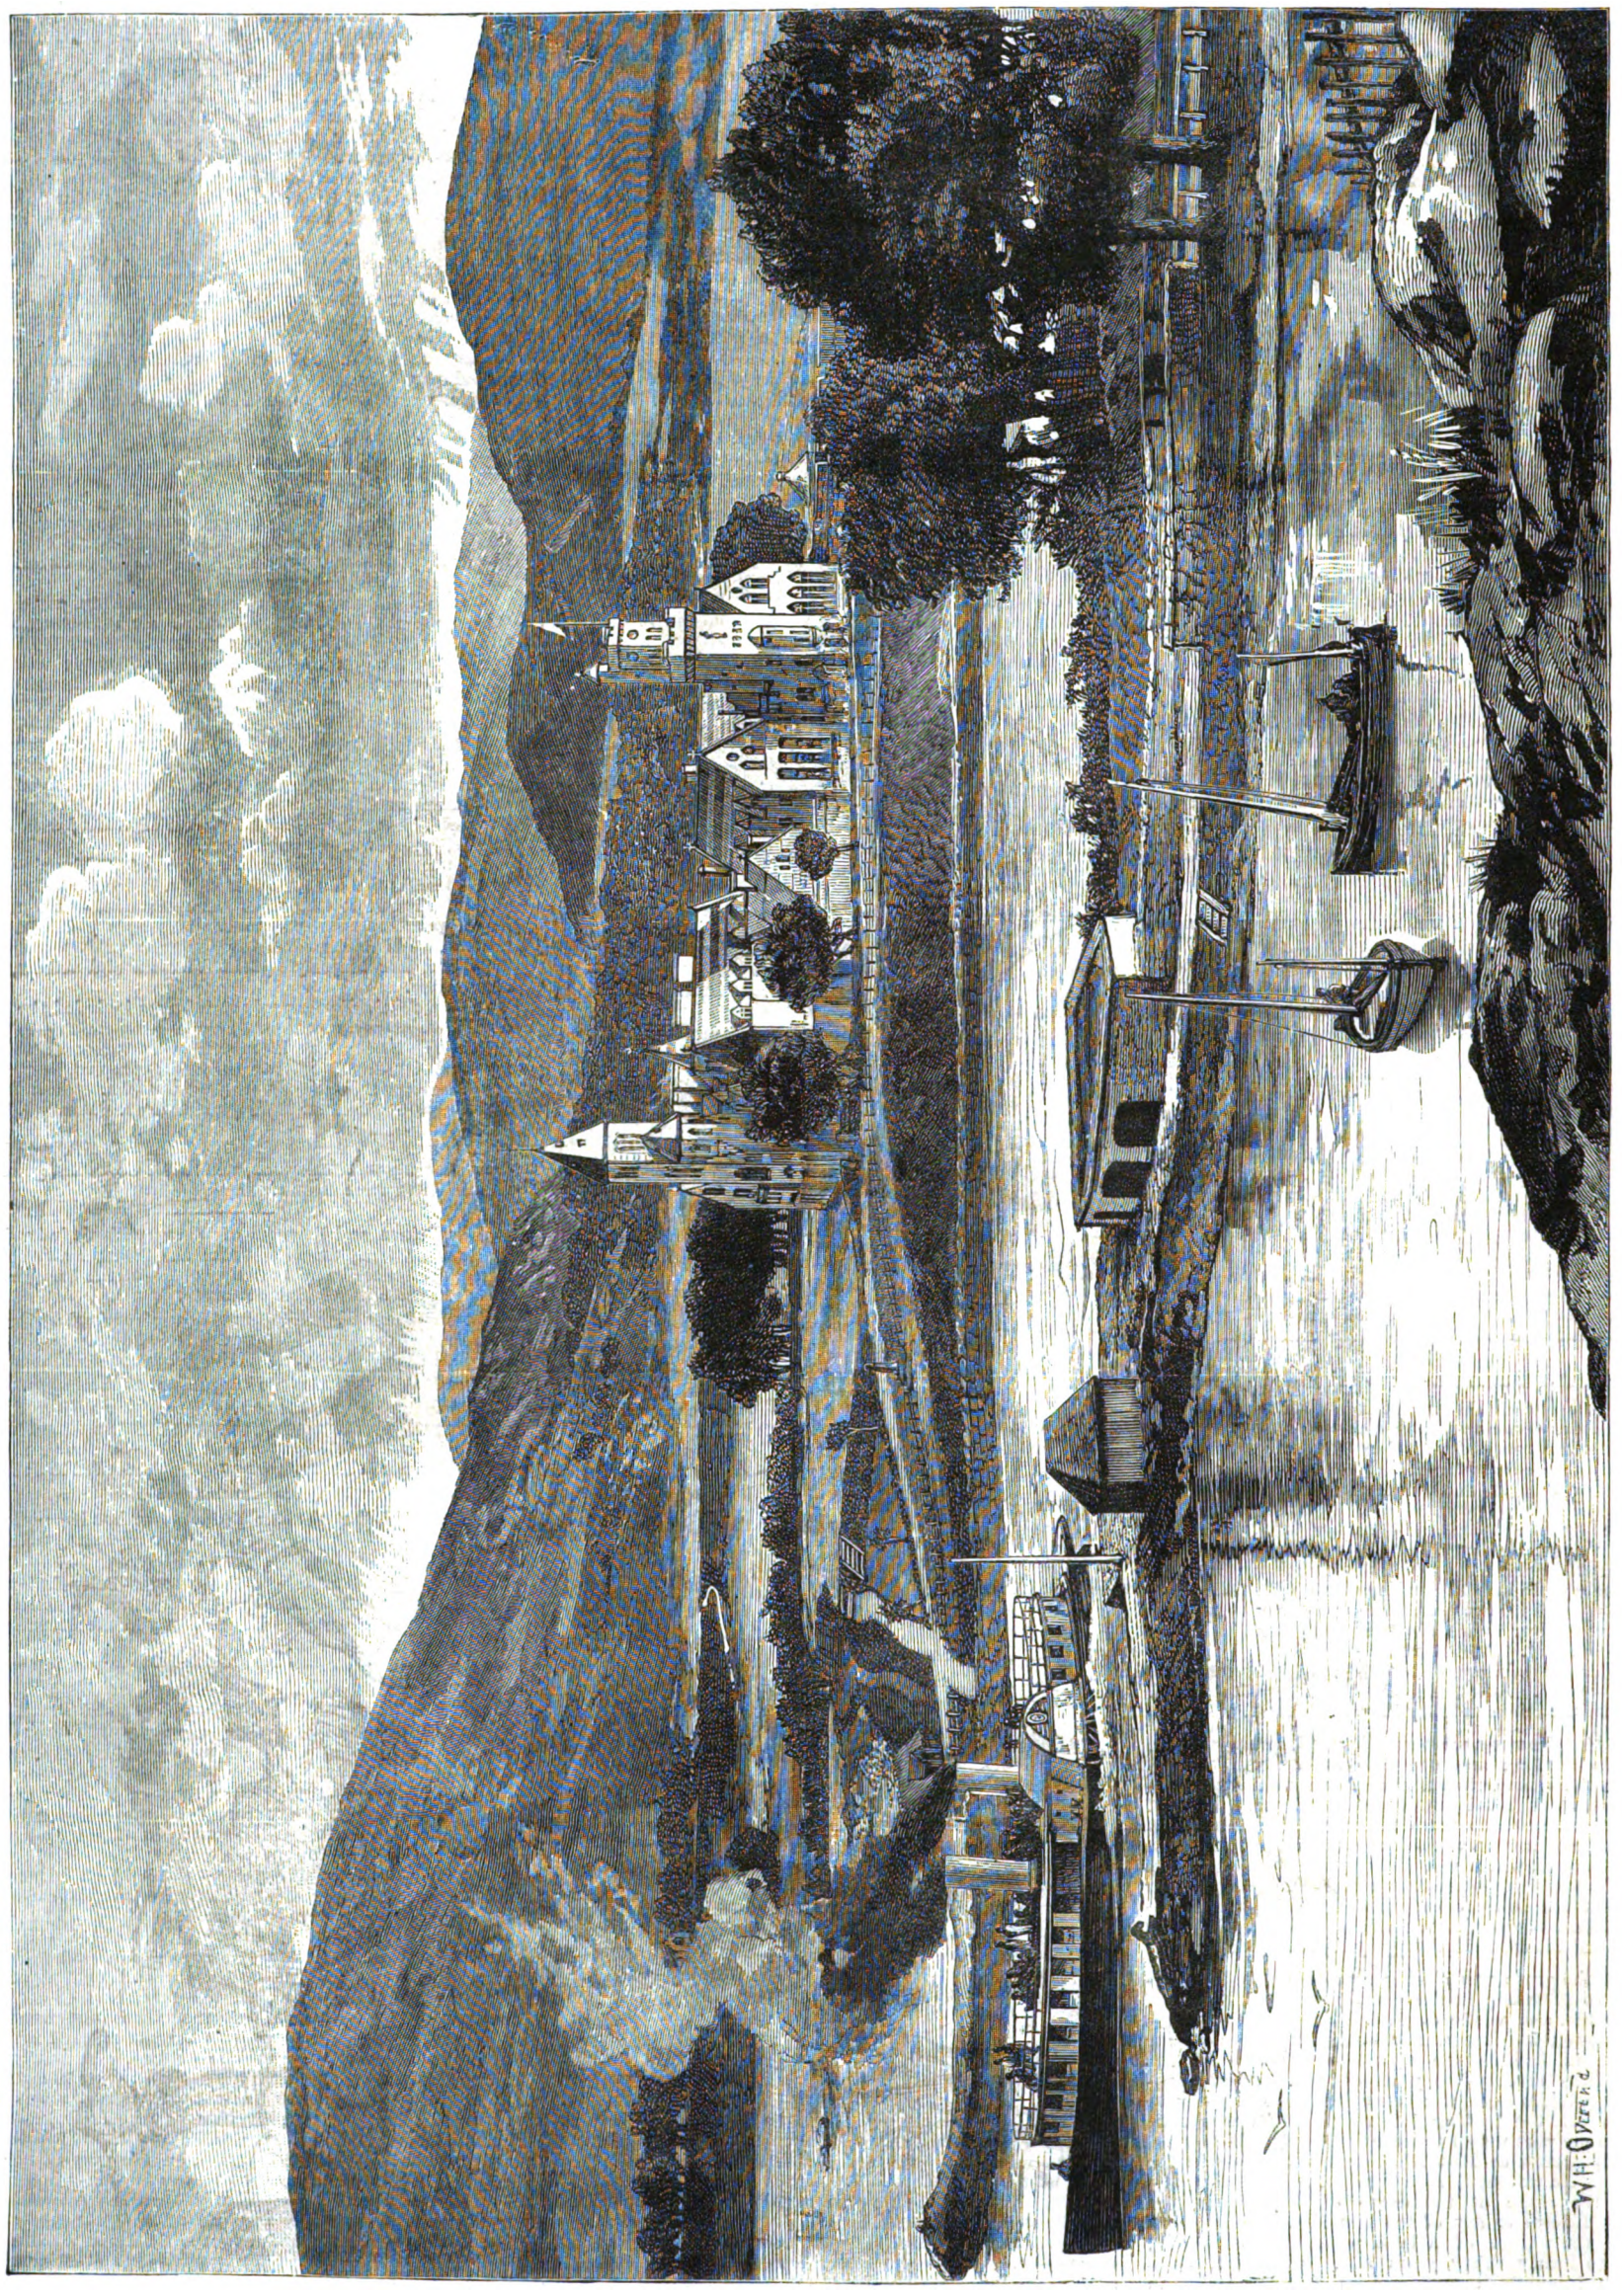
The Duke of Argyll dined with her Majesty before her departure for the Highlands, where the Court has gone for the remainder of the autumn.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, with their family, who have passed some weeks on board the Osborne off Cowes, will in a few days arrive at Deeside, preparations being made for their reception at Abergeldie Castle.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh arrived at the Duke's Palace, Coburg, on Monday. His Royal Highness has accepted the presidentship of the Leeds Musical Festival.

The Duke of Cambridge has arrived at Kissingen.

The Empress Eugénie at the close of her visit to the Queen at Osborne was accompanied in the Alberta across to Portsmouth by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, the Prince going with her to London, whence she proceeded to Chiselhurst.



It is stated that the Earl of Rosebery has been offered the post of Under-Secretary of State for India, vacant by the resignation of the Marquis of Lansdowne.

Major-General Higginson, Lieutenant-Colonel Stewart, 3rd Dragoon Guards, Captain Brooke, 15th Foot, and Lieutenant Roch, R.H.A., will represent our Army at the French military manœuvres next month.

A Sunday-school centenary meeting, at which 20,000 persons were present, was held on the 19th inst., at the Speech House, Woodlands, Forest of Dean. The president, the Rev. T. Nicholson, pointed to the large gathering of children as a proof that Evangelical Nonconformity had as great a hold on the country, and especially on the working classes, as ever it had.

An interesting gathering was held on Monday evening in the Brown's-lane House, Spitalfields, the occasion being the presentation to Lady Burdett-Coutts of a drawing-room table by the workmen of the neighbouring factory, whose tools her Ladyship replaced after a disastrous fire which occurred some time ago. The Brown's-lane House forms the centre of a large charitable work carried on in the east end of London under the care of the Baroness, and with the superintendence of Mr. John Sapsford, whose name is also identified with many corresponding efforts in the same quarter. The work originated nearly twenty years ago, in the formation of a society to ameliorate the condition of the then distressed hand-loom weavers, which afterwards became merged into a sewing school upon the Lancashire pattern, and finally into an institution for training the young of both sexes to enable them to obtain employment. Lady Burdett-Coutts was accompanied by Lady Keppel, Sir Francis and Lady Burdett, Mr. Henry Irving, and Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett. The proceedings were prefaced by the presentation, on the part of her Ladyship, of a pair of engravings to the sewing-school and the costermongers' club associated with the charity; and the workmen's gift—a handsome piece of furniture, elaborately inlaid—was then formally presented to the Baroness, who in two or three sentences expressed her appreciation of their kindness, particularly as the gift conveyed to her the assurance that the tools she had assisted them to recover had been employed in its workmanship. Sir Francis Burdett also, at greater length, acknowledged the presentation. The Rev. M. Sinclair and Mr. Sapsford afterwards addressed the assembly, which broke up with three hearty cheers for the Baroness.—Lady Burdett-Coutts has left Stratton-street for Holly Lodge, Highgate, for the season.

FRENCH FICTION.

Inasmuch as French dramas, which are frequently, if not almost invariably, founded upon French novels, find great favour with English playgoers, whether they understand the French language or not, in the form of an English adaptation, it has been reasonably concluded by Messrs. Vizetelly and Co., of Southampton-street, Strand, that a series of novels translated from the French of such elegant writers and ingenious, as well as amusing and interesting, story-tellers as About, Malot, Cherbuliez, Sandeau, and others of lower mark, perhaps, but of scarcely inferior popularity, would meet with wide acceptance among English novel-readers unacquainted with the mother tongue of those who wrote the works. The series, to judge from a few specimens, will be well chosen, readably rendered (though "elegant like she was" is a vile phrase), handy and sightly in form, clearly printed, for the most part in single, separate, complete volumes, and presumably very cheap. As the Lord Chamberlain with the plays, so the editor and publishers with the novels have a certain difficulty to contend with, arising from national differences of opinion and practice in respect of matters involving questions of delicacy and indelicacy; but the publishers declare that "especial care has been bestowed on the selection, only those works of an unobjectionable character, and which can be presented to the English reader in an unabridged form, having been chosen." For all their pains, however, the publishers may have let pass from time to time something open to a charge of being decidedly "risky"—so difficult is it to draw a hard and fast line, so various are tastes and susceptibilities, so differently do different persons regard and become impressed by a scene, a suggestion, a mere remark. On the other hand, there can be no doubt that, if the majority of the tales should be as unobjectionable as Samuel Brohl and Partner, by Victor Cherbuliez, English novel-readers will owe the publishers a deep debt of gratitude for providing an entirely new and harmless source of literary enjoyment, a fountain flowing with the milk and honey of culture, sparkling with wit and humour, having the flavour of real life and the colour of romance.

To anybody conversant with French literature it will seem late in the day to tell the story of "Samuel Brohl and Partner;" but the series of novels is intended for others, who are not so conversant. Be it known then to all whom it may concern that Samuel Brohl, son of a German Jew who kept a pot-house, is in partnership, as it were, with the departed spirit of a Polish count, whose name and attributes and achievements he assumes for his own sinister purposes, adding to those assumptions some accomplishments, especially music, which he has been taught under the auspices of an eccentric Russian princess, in whose eyes he found favour by reason of the physical beauty she detected beneath his coating of dirt and filthy rags. He behaves very unhandsomely to the lady whom it would be perhaps an abuse of terms to call his benefactress, turns rank adventurer, and, with the help of his own natural gifts and of the airs, ancestry, exploits, and misfortunes he borrows from his ghostly "partner," wins the heart and hand of a charming heiress; but, just as he is about to lead her to the altar, there appears upon the scene the Russian princess, who recognises, denounces, and ruins him. That is really all the story; but the charm, the irresistible charm, lies in the manner of telling it, in the exquisite descriptions, the sketches and studies of character, the cleverly-contrived surprises, the startling situations; above all, the piquant, brilliant, pregnant letters and dialogue. It is not a flawless gem; but it is a gem.

A terrible story, powerful after a sledge-hammer fashion in some parts, and wonderfully tender, touching, and pathetic in others, is Fromont the Younger and Risler the Elder, by Alphonse Daudet, the extraordinary popularity whereof may be inferred from the fact that this English version is said to be "translated from the fiftieth French edition." For, whatever difference there may be, as regards the usual number of copies printed, between an English and a French edition, fifty editions prove more than average popularity. The tale is not immoral in any sense of the word; but it deals with immorality and it contains an occasional expression and one or two scenes at which a very particular person might possibly take offence. The heroine, in fact, is the most deliberate, cynical, heartless, and vulgar of adulteresses; and the main purpose of the author is, apparently, to describe in plain, unvarnished language, without any grace of style, how a shop-girl, with a naturally bad, selfish, vicious disposition, having married a man much older than herself for the sake of his money, rushes of set purpose into a career of profligacy, dishonours her husband, tempting even his own brother, and ends by driving that husband to suicide by the diabolical act of presenting him with evidence of his deeply-loved brother's treacherous conduct, whilst she descends to her proper level of a creature very little above the painted horrors of the public streets. It is a painful sketch, not conceived with any remarkable originality or worked out with any remarkable skill; but in the episodes, in the accessory scenes and characters, there is an abundance of pure, delicate, affecting sentiments and incidents, as well as of admirable workmanship. Indeed, it is in the setting, rather than in the central jewel, that the beauties and the value of the work, whether intrinsic or artistic, reside.

A highly ingenious plot is developed in The Drama of the Rue de la Paix, by Adolphe Belot, in which a decidedly interesting and thrilling narrative is told with great force and passion, relieved by sprightliness and tenderness. To a certain extent the story seems to be a satire upon the manner in which criminal investigations are conducted in France; but the satirical purpose, if any, is by no means obtruded to the detriment of a romantic and tragic tale. A beautiful Italian lady, married to a French stockbroker, returns from a visit she has been obliged to pay abroad without her husband, is surprised not to find him awaiting her on her arrival in Paris, hurries to his house in the Rue de la Paix, and finds him lying dead in his bed-room, covered with blood, and with his hand still resting upon a book upon a page of which he had vainly attempted to write his murderer's name. To discover the murderer is, of course, her object and duty; and what happened in the prosecution of that discovery is, of course, the principal theme of the story. How exciting and telling are the situations and incidents may be gathered from the bare mention of two: the fair widow falls passionately in love with the man who committed the murder, and the detective who is employed to ferret him out falls passionately in love with the fair widow. This alone should be sufficient to whet the appetite of readers who like a mixture of crime and romance, put together with no little ingenuity, and flavoured with a liberal allowance of the marvellous and the emotional.

There is something very pretty, idyllic, and charming about Maugars Junior, by André Theuriet, though it may be considered a little too slight and a little common-place as regards the fundamental conception. That the son of the rich miser and usurer, of the malignant money-grubber who ruins his neighbours, should not take after his father, but should display a noble nature and should fall in love with the penniless daughter, or supposed daughter, of some one among those injured and ruined neighbours is an idea which has been worked very nearly threadbare; but, nevertheless, there is something very fresh and delightful in the tale, which tells how Maugars Junior differed from Maugars Senior, and sued for the pretty brown hand of the gentle Theresa, whose father, or supposed father, had been impoverished and persecuted by her lover's usurious sire. The novel will be chiefly appreciated for its simple, touching style, and for the glimpses it affords of French country-life.

ST. BENEDICT'S COLLEGE AND MONASTERY, FORT AUGUSTUS.

There is hardly a village in the romantic and beautiful Scottish Highlands more picturesquely situated than Fort Augustus. Its ancient name, some say, was Cuinean Fionn, so called after one of the ancient biographers of St. Columba. No one who has steamed down that great water-highway of Scotland, the Caledonian Canal, can fail to have been struck with its unique position. Standing on the green banks of the canal, it is bordered on the north side by the salmon-river Oich, and on the south by the river Turffe, while to the east lie spread out the deep waters of Loch Ness, with its retiring bays, the wooded slopes of its shores, and here and there rude, craggy cliffs. The serene grandeur of this lake is scarcely to be described. Nothing interrupts its course for twenty-four miles, till at length it discharges its water through the short, rapid river Ness into the Moray Firth.

At the dawn of Christianity in Caledonia, St. Columba sailed down the river Oich, and hallowed this neighbourhood by his footsteps. But not to the Monk of Iona was it given to erect here a Cloister and a College. William Byset, in 1231, gave the Parish Church and its lands to the Monks of the Priory of Beauly. In 1729, the English Government built Fort Augustus, so called out of compliment to the uncle of George III., with a view of overawing the Highlanders. It was capable of accommodating three hundred officers and men. As then constructed, it was square in form, with four grim bastions at the angles, each mounted with twelve six-pounders. It was further defended by a ditch, a covert way and glacis. These have now been converted into fine terraces and pleasure-grounds for the students of the Roman Catholic College. The Fort was once taken and partly destroyed by a portion of the Highland army, in March, 1746; and Prince Charlie passed by it, as he fled to the western coast after the Battle of Culloden; whilst Simon, Lord Lovat, and other gentlemen, were confined within its walls after that hapless day. It was occupied by a garrison until the Crimean War.

In 1857, the late Lord Lovat purchased Fort Augustus from her Majesty's Government for £5000; and, in 1876, the present Lord Lovat gave it to the Benedictine Monks. Under their hands, the fortifications and barracks have been completely transformed. On their foundations, a great monastic establishment has risen up within four years, that may vie with the abbeys of the Middle Ages. It comprises a spacious college, monastery, hospice, and scriptorium, all in separate buildings, but connected by cloisters, designed in the Early English Gothic style. The college is elaborately fitted up with the most recent and improved educational appliances. It is intended for the sons of the higher and more wealthy classes of the Roman Catholic community. Those youths are here prepared for the public competitive examinations, and for their various intended careers in the world. It is associated with the Glasgow University; and, in addition to the monastic professors, enjoys, through the munificence of the Marquis of Bute, the services of distinguished professors of our national Universities. The windows of the refectory are filled with the arms of the chief promoters and benefactors; amongst which are those of Lords Lovat, Bute, Norfolk, Ripon, Stafford, Herries, Denbigh, and Beaumont.

Our View is taken from the north side, showing the greater portion of the college and two of the old bastions, while to the east there rises the graceful tower of the monastery from which the great "matin bell" resounds through the heather-clad hills, startling the deer in the neighbouring forests.

The buildings were designed by Mr. Joseph Hansom; but the cloisters, the unique scriptorium, and the more artistic portion of the monastery are from the drawings of Mr. Peter Paul Pugin, of Victoria-street, Westminster. The cost of the buildings could not be less than £60,000.

HOME-RULE RIOTS IN GLASGOW.

It was mentioned last week that on Saturday, the 14th, there was a gathering of Irishmen in Glasgow for a political demonstration in favour of Home Rule, which led to some rioting. They formed a procession numbering about ten thousand persons, who marched to hold their meeting at Mary-hill. On returning to the town an Orange lodge was passed, from which a yellow banner was displayed. This raised the anger of the processionists, and a riot of very serious character took place. A force of seventy policemen were almost overpowered, and a detective and a constable were severely injured. The detective was stabbed on the head with a spear, a deep wound being made, and a large part of the bone exposed. Eight other officers were more or less hurt. They had to be taken home in cabs, and none of them will be able to resume duty for some weeks. After about half an hour's fighting of desperate character, about twenty arrests were made. Later in the evening another fight took place on Glasgow-green, and great alarm prevailed, but there was no actual loss of life.

The total cost for management of the Post Office Savings Banks in the year 1879 is shown by a return to have been £192,280, which included £115,163 for salaries, wages, and allowances; £5000 for rent, £30,958 for conveyance of correspondence, and £25,564 for the erection of a new office. The payment to postmasters for savings bank business is, by results, £5 for every thousand transactions, with a minimum payment of £2, and the amount thus incurred is, on an average, about £24,000.

A farmer named Anstee, who lived near St. Albans, was murdered early on Sunday morning. About two o'clock he was disturbed by a noise outside the house, and went to his bed-room window to ascertain the cause. He was immediately shot through the head, and his murderer afterwards got through the window by means of a ladder and ransacked the place. Three persons have been arrested on suspicion of being concerned in the crime.

It is stated that a young man named Jones, in humble circumstances, living in Pendleton, near Manchester, has become the recipient of a legacy of £200,000. The amount was bequeathed to him by his father, who was a wholesale bookseller and stationer in London, and died some years ago. Jones, it seems, ran away from home when he was young, and his whereabouts had been for some time unknown to his friends. He has been employed at an ironworks in Pendleton, unknown to his relatives. His father's solicitors advertised for him, and his attention was called to the advertisement.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

A week after the Twelfth! So late in August, could anything but a sparse attendance be looked for, albeit the theme under review was so important as that of Military Organisation as it affected the Isandlana disaster? Very, very few noble Lords, save those called there by duty, were present to listen to Lord Strathnairn's pointed attack on Lord Cardwell's short-service system. There were traces of the old fire and dash which enabled that tall, spare veteran commander to win more than one memorable victory over the mutineers in India. But it was exceedingly difficult to catch the words of the noble and gallant Lord far from the table, on the Opposition side of which he stood, addressing his arguments, not to Lord Chelmsford, who sat behind him to his right, plainly the most interested of listeners, but to the trio of Ministers whom he faced. Heedless of the dozing of one noble Earl and the smiles of a freshly ennobled Lord, regardless of the absence of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Strathnairn gallantly persevered with his task. Though Isandlana was his main text, his Lordship barely referred to that deplorable affair. On the contrary, he attributed blame for the African reverses not to the officers, who were "victims of an experimental, unmilitary, and impracticable Army reform," but, by implication, to "the short-service system framed by a civilian War Minister," who, he said, "knew no more of Army matters or military feeling and spirit than their Lordships did of Pushtoo." Medical inefficiency and faulty strategy led to the loss of Jena; medical causes prevented the Russians from marching from Adrianople into Constantinople in 1829; the want of obvious military precautions lost Austria Magenta and Sadowa, and France Sedan. Long service had won for England our Peninsular victories and Waterloo, Alma and Inkerman, and regained India for us; whilst to short service and consequent physical incapacity was the country indebted for the reverses in South Africa, desertion being also pointed to as a fruitful source of weakness.

Lord Chelmsford all this time had been eagerly biding his time on the second bench to left of the Throne; referring now and again to the bundle of notes he grasped in one hand, and occasionally leaning down to exchange a few words with Lord Ellenborough, conspicuous below him in an ample dust-coat. The late Commander of the British Forces in Zululand had well equipped himself for the attack which Lord Strathnairn never delivered. And Lord Chelmsford was not to be deterred by the noble and gallant Lord's suppression from entering into a clearly-delivered defence of his action in relation to Isandlana. His argument was simple. It was that before he left the camp explicit orders were given that it was to be defended; and it was known that the late Colonel Pulleine had repeated this command to the late Colonel Durnford, to whose departure from the camp to meet the Zulus Lord Chelmsford attributed the misfortune which overtook our troops, whom his Lordship considered sufficient in numbers to defend the camp had they remained compact. The Earl of Morley, as Under Secretary for War, paid a deserved tribute to the ability of Lord Chelmsford's speech; and then sought to show that the present military organisation was not altogether so bad as Lord Strathnairn had striven to make it appear. Lord Ellenborough concurred that the Isandlana disaster was due to Colonel Durnford; and, in the end, some military returns Lord Strathnairn wished to have were ordered to be prepared.

The plaintive air of "We've got no work to do-o-o-o!" having again been sung, this time with more emphasis, by the Earl of Redesdale, on the 20th inst., Earl Granville neatly replied that bills would probably be soon forthcoming if the noble Lord would use his influence with his friends on the Conservative side in the Commons to forward the business of the House. Yet another wail from Lord Granmore and Browne on the lawless condition of Ireland called up Earl Spencer, who condemned the action of the Land League and the speech of Mr. Dillon.

The noble Earl the Foreign Secretary was the bearer of serious news on Tuesday. Earl Granville read with due gravity the telegram sent home by the Viceroy respecting the sortie from Candahar on Aug. 16, attended with a considerable loss of British officers, Brigadier-General Brooke being the first named of the killed. These tidings were followed by a reassuring message from Colonel Tanner, who had telegraphed that he expected General Roberts at Khelat-i-Ghilzai on the 24th inst. Their Lordships were thereafter vouchsafed at last a Ministerial measure—the Employers' Liability Bill, which was read the second time on the motion of the Lord Chancellor, but not until Lord Brabourne from the Ministerial side, and Lords Cranbrook and Carnarvon on behalf of the Opposition, had adversely criticised the measure, which proposes to make employers liable for accidents sustained by their workmen owing to the neglect of foremen or fellow-servants.

COMMONS.

The Marquis of Hartington's straightforward habit of going direct to the point is daily winning for him the increased confidence of his supporters. If Mr. Gladstone discreetly remains absent from his seat till he is quite restored to health, Mr. Bright is still to be seen on the Treasury bench, ready to offer counsel to the new Leader of the House. Lord Hartington on Monday made a politic reply to Sir Michael Hicks-Beach's query as to the course of business. As bill-of-fare for the week, his Lordship offered the report on the seasonable and appetising Hares and Rabbits Bill, the last courses of the Grain Cargoes and Savings Banks Bills, Committee on the Burials Bill, and—the Irish Estimates. With a certain prescience, the noble Lord said it would depend upon the progress made with the votes in Supply whether the House could rise next Monday week.

The flowery talk of the more excitable Irish members has not contributed to bring about this desired consummation. The unquenchable loquacity of the Home-Rule Brigade has, on the contrary, once more hindered business—and proved afresh their incapacity or unwillingness to take a practical view of Irish affairs. Fresh from his flying visit to Dublin, Mr. Forster stood with Yorkshire equanimity the fusillade of questions and inflated speeches directed at him. The badgered Secretary for Ireland was able to inform the younger of the irrepressible, self-elected leaders of the Opposition, Lord Randolph Churchill, that the Government did not intend to have recourse to exceptional powers for the maintenance of peace in Ireland. With regard to the Dungannon riots, Mr. Forster was induced, by the reasonable suggestion of Mr. Mitchell Henry, to promise that the use of buck-shot by the constabulary should be reconsidered. Mr. Forster, questioned by Mr. Dillon, next manfully maintained the justice of every word he had used in denouncing the member for Tipperary's inflammatory speech at Kildare; and the Secretary for Ireland, albeit assailed on this point by Mr. A. M. Sullivan and other excitable Hibernian members afflicted with mental obliquity, had the satisfaction of being courageously supported by Mr.

Mitchell Henry, who pungently called upon the members concerned in fanning an insurrectionary flame in Ireland to put themselves at the head of the people if they had the courage of their convictions. With equal firmness and plainness did Lord Hartington censure the craven appeals to physical force. But Mr. Parnell and others had to loosen the floodgates of their eloquence; and not till a very late hour did the House go into Committee on the Civil Service Estimates.

Ireland, or, rather, the Irish Home Rule members, also monopolised all Tuesday's sitting, with the exception of the interval devoted to Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett's stale, flat, and unprofitable monologue on Bulgaria and Eastern Roumelia. Mr. O'Donnell wasted his sweetness on the desert air: no one answered his rambling remarks regarding the Irish constabulary. In a quiet and conciliatory speech, Mr. Parnell marshalled a host of arguments to support his motion in favour of some undefined plan by means of which Irish members might hold an Irish Parliament for the transaction of purely Irish business, whilst from an Imperial point of view the Government of the United Kingdom should remain intact. These were the terms of Mr. Parnell's resolution:—

That, in the opinion of this House, the rejection of the Compensation for Disturbance (Ireland) Bill by the House of Lords adds one more to the many overwhelming proofs afforded since the Union of the necessity for such a radical change in these relations as will permit legislative effect in future to the voice of the vast majority of the electors of Ireland constitutionally expressed.

Mr. Forster had no difficulty in demonstrating that the advantages of union and the disadvantages of disunion were so strong that not only the English and Scotch people, but also the Irish people themselves, would gradually become more and more aware of the advantages of union. Referring to the rejection by the Lords of the Compensation Bill, the right hon. gentleman intimated that he had seriously thought of resigning his office, but thought better of it. With regard to the general state of Ireland, he regarded the reported Fenian revival as a mere caricature; but was keenly alive to the lawless feeling which led to assassination and murderous threats. The Law must be respected. And, if the Government were driven to re-enact the Peace Preservation Act, they would not hesitate to call Parliament together for the purpose. At the same time, to the utmost of their power, they were determined to labour to leave Ireland better than they found her. Inevitably, a torrent of comment came from the inexhaustible members of "the third Party," whose right to speak for Ireland Mr. Litton, as an Irish member, pungently challenged, thereby exciting the ghastly irony of Mr. Sullivan. Eventually, the motion was withdrawn; and in Committee such small progress was made with the Irish estimates that Lord Hartington had emphatically to remind Irish members that the votes were urgently needed.

Lord Hartington's effective extinguisher of Mr. Balfour's motion against the introduction late in a Session of important measures deserves notice. The Leader of the House elicited laughter and cheers when he retorted by showing that the Session had been prolonged by the talkativeness of prominent members of the Opposition, Mr. Gorst having this Session spoken 105 times, besides asking 18 questions; Sir Drummond Wolff having made 68 speeches and asked 34 questions; Lord R. Churchill, 74 speeches and put 21 questions; Mr. Biggar, 58 speeches, and Mr. Finigan 47 speeches. If every member spoke as often and as long, each Session would last 215 weeks! The roused Opposition hurled similar statistics at the head of the noble Lord in reply—but Mr. Balfour's motion was defeated by 119 to 59 votes.

The Hares and Rabbits Bill on Wednesday yielded Mr. John Tenniel the subject for a remarkably graceful Punch cartoon, and afforded Mr. Gregory and Mr. Whitley the opportunity of encumbering the measure with new clauses somewhat akin to the steel-traps objected to, in that they are not unlikely to catch the unwary in the meshes of the law. Progress was so far made, however, that the third reading was fixed for Friday morning. Sir William Harcourt had the further satisfaction to see the schedule of the Savings Bank Bill sanctioned; and Mr. Chamberlain was relieved by hearing the Grain Cargoes Bill read the third time.

A serious accident occurred last Saturday evening to an omnibus which runs between Edinburgh and Newhaven. The horses became restive and ran against a lamp-post, and the driver and a man sitting beside him were thrown to the ground. The driver fell among the horses' feet and was trampled to death. The horses again started off and dashed against some garden railings, which gave way. The omnibus was then upset, and the passengers on the top were all thrown to the ground. About half a dozen injured persons were removed to the Royal Infirmary, but, with the exception of one, they were able to go home.

Certain scenes from "Romeo and Juliet" were produced last week in a remote part of the country, under rather novel circumstances. It seems that Madame Modjeska, with her husband, and the Forbes-Robertson Brothers, were sojourning for their holidays at the little inn which overlooks Cadgwith Cove, a romantic seaside retreat on the Cornish Coast. The neighbouring clergyman, the Rev. F. Jackson, Rector of the united parishes of St. Ruan and St. Grace, an amateur artist, whose productions have been noticed with public commendation when exhibited in London, bethought himself that the parish church of St. Grade was in want of an organ. He mentioned this circumstance to his friends, when Madame Modjeska and Mr. J. Forbes-Robertson, aided by the sister of the latter, Mrs. Valentine Bromley, and by Mr. C. Campbell Ross, of Penzance, agreed to help Mr. Jackson in getting his organ, by enacting the Balcony Scene, the Friar Scene, and the Parting Scene from "Romeo and Juliet." Under the superintendence of Captain Simmonds, R.N., the men of the coastguard service, entering heartily into the scheme, soon erected in the grounds of the rectory a capital stage. The entertainment was publicly announced from Falmouth to Helston and from the Lizard to the Land's End. A large audience was collected. When the night came, the weather was propitious and the moon at its full. Never was the balcony scene given with more propriety of scenic effect. The background was a mass of natural foliage; and when Romeo swears by the moon, the veritable orb herself was sailing in the heavens, "Tipping with silver all the fruit-tree tops." Mrs. Valentine Bromley gave character and individuality to the Nurse, and Mr. Campbell Ross threw himself very heartily into his personation of the Friar. But to the professional performers of the evening the chief honours were due. Few of the audience in the grounds of St. Ruan Rectory are likely soon again to see, either in Cornwall or elsewhere, such a Juliet or such a Romeo. Mr. Ian Forbes-Robertson, of the Prince of Wales's Theatre, acted as stage manager. This is the story that will have to be told when the organ of St. Grade is in after times referred to. The worthy Rector has been enabled to do much for his twin parishes in church-restoring and school-building, to which he has devoted the fund raised by the sale of his own works of art.

HOME NEWS.

Mr. John Dent Dent, of Ribston Hall, has been elected chairman of the North-Eastern Railway Company.

The Royal Lyceum Theatre, Sunderland, was on Thursday evening, the 19th inst., destroyed by fire.

A weekly paper, adapted to the requirements of boys, will be begun next month by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Co., under the title of The Boy's Newspaper.

The Earl of Carnarvon, at his half-yearly rent audit, recently held for his Highclere estate in Hampshire, returned his tenants 10 per cent upon the half-year's rent.

It is understood that the banquet to her Majesty's Ministers, which was fixed to take place at the Mansion House on the 6th inst., and which was postponed in consequence of the illness of Mr. Gladstone, has been finally abandoned.

On March 31 last the national debt amounted to £775,755,608, of which £710,476,359 was funded. After deducting loans recoverable, &c., the net value of the debt was £739,279,026.

In the annual narrative of facts issued by Mr. George Muller relative to his supported orphanage at Ashley Down, Bristol, it is stated that the total sum expended in the forty-one years upon the erection and furnishing of the orphan houses, now containing 2245 inmates, has been £115,000. The expenditure last year was £25,000, in addition to £15,000 spent for religious schools and mission work and the circulation of the Scriptures.

It has been arranged that the forthcoming congress of the National Association for the Promotion of Social Science will open at Edinburgh on Wednesday, Oct. 6. Lord Reay, the president, will give the opening address in the Free Church Assembly Hall. The law courts and various halls close beside them are to be placed at the disposal of the association. The presidency of the Art Department has been accepted by Mr. W. B. Richmond, Slade Professor of Fine Art at Oxford.

The street collection in London for the Hospital Saturday Fund has been fixed for Sept. 4. Over 200 ladies have volunteered their services to preside at tables in various parts of the metropolis, and it is hoped that at least 300 stations will be occupied. The counting of the boxes will take place, as usual, at Messrs. McDougall's, St. Paul's-churchyard. A sum of £21 6s. 9d. has been collected by working men in the village of Sidcup, and paid in to the credit of the fund.

A destructive fire occurred at Leith on Tuesday morning. A large warehouse, containing about £30,000 worth of flax and hemp yarns, and other American produce belonging to various merchants in the port, was destroyed; the South Leith Free Church adjoining was partly burnt down, and a neighbouring warehouse was much damaged by water. The fire is supposed to have originated through the spontaneous combustion of a bale of flax.

The scholarship in music for 1880-1 in the ladies' division of the Crystal Palace Company's School of Art, Science, and Literature, has been awarded to Miss Edith Welch, of Denmark-hill, one of Sir Julius Benedict's pupils in the school; the scholarship in modern languages, literature, &c., has been adjudged to Miss E. Beatrice Steinburn, of Gipsy-hill; while that in art has been gained by Miss Beatrice A. Brown, of Honor-oak, for her works in the sculpture class.

A Parliamentary paper has been issued containing "further correspondence respecting the allowance and travelling expenses of Sir Bartle Frere as High Commissioner of South Africa." In a despatch dated July 15, 1880, Sir Bartle Frere objects to the withdrawal of his special allowance of £2000, and says he is unable to see that such withdrawal is consistent with the terms on which the allowance was granted or justified by any reduction in the labours, responsibilities, or expenses of his office.

A number of students from all parts of the three kingdoms and the Principality have assembled for a six-weeks' term of study at the Tonic Sol-fa College, Forest-gate. Classes have been held and lectures given in a wide range of subjects, including method in teaching music, voice training, sight singing, ear training, the organ, acoustics, physiology of the voice, elocution, composition and counterpoint. The students are nearly all engaged in teaching, and have given up their vacation in order to improve their knowledge and skill in music. Several hold scholarships.

The ordinary session of the British Archæological Association came to a close last Saturday night. Earl Nelson, in closing the meeting, reviewed the work of the congress. He thought it had been impressed upon them by what had come before them that many churches which had been attributed to the Normans were originally built by the Saxons, of whose works traces were generally to be discovered. He also considered that they had been pretty well convinced that what were generally supposed to be camps established by the Romans were also of British origin, such as Vespasian's and Bratton Camps. The noble Earl, while attributing to the monks and abbots the credit of having done a deal of good in their day, pointed out that some of the monastic institutions had become so corrupt, even in the time of Henry V., that that King began the process of suppressing them, and that it was not Henry the Eighth who first interfered. As to Stonehenge, he hoped something would be done to restore some of the falling stones to their upright position, and that Vallum would be preserved intact, though unless some steps were taken there was danger of much damage being done. It was intimated during the evening that some action would be taken with reference to Stonehenge, and a hint was also thrown out that Silbury Hill might be re-explored. A discussion took place on the law as regards treasure-trove, with the view of initiating a movement for its amendment. The usual votes of thanks were passed, and the meeting was declared to be one of the very best ever held by the association. On Monday and Tuesday two supplementary excursions took place to Longleat (the Marquis of Bath's) and Savernake Forest (Lord Ailesbury's).—The Somerset Archæological Society held its meetings last week in the Townhall, Glastonbury, and, after papers dealing with local antiquities had been read, the society visited places of historic interest.

The twentieth annual report in reference to the work of the school-ship Cornwall, situated near the Essex bank of the Thames at Purfleet, has been issued by the School-Ship Society, of which the Duke of Northumberland is president. It appears that the average number of boys maintained on board the ship during the past year was 260, but there were 312 under detention on the last day of the year. The total cost during the twelve months was £6268 18s. 9d., the comparative cost per head on ordinary maintenance and management being £23 5s. 8d. The industrial profits amounted to £276 7s. Of 245 cases discharged in the three years 1876, 1877, and 1878, 211 are reported as doing well, 6 dead, 3 doubtful, 20 convicted of crime, and 5 unknown. The committee state that the progress of the boys in seamanship and in the elementary branches of education has been satisfactory, and that their general conduct has been all that could be desired. The sanitary condition has been good, with the exception of an outbreak of trichinosis, which occurred in December and January, and attacked, from first to last, 25 boys, one of whom died. The finances were by no means in a satisfactory condition, and the committee make an urgent appeal for help.

Amongst the successful candidates in this year's class-list of the Cambridge University Higher Local Examinations are Miss Helen Gladstone, daughter of the Premier, a large number of the collegians of Girton and Newnham, candidates from France, Germany, and Belgium, with a fair number from Scotland and Ireland. The divinity prize has been awarded to a young lady at Birmingham, whose name is not announced. The Lowman prize was awarded to Miss P. E. Plant, of Westfield, Retford, who was examined at the Cambridge centre, and passed with distinction in English history, English language and literature, and essays on English literature. The prize for Italian was gained by Miss A. Werner, of Zion House, Tonbridge, who passed in Greek, and with distinction in Latin, German, French, and Italian. The examinations have been held at Birmingham, Bristol, Cambridge, Cheltenham, Leeds, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Newcastle (Stafford), Norwich, Nottingham, Plymouth, Rugby, and Winchester. 811 were examined, and of these only 209 failed to obtain a pass in one or other group. 153 passed in divinity, 319 in English subjects, 182 in languages, 45 in arithmetic and mathematic group, 128 in political economy, logic, and history section, and 73 passed in group A, which comprises botany, geology, zoology, physiology, and physics. Eleven passed in music. Nearly all the candidates in this examination were women. Some passed in several groups.

The return of the Registrar-General for the week ending Saturday, Aug. 21, states that during the week 5862 births and 4014 deaths were registered in London and twenty-two other large towns of the United Kingdom. The mortality from all causes was at the average rate of 24 deaths annually in every 1000 persons living. The annual death rate was 17 per 1000 in Edinburgh, 20 in Glasgow, and 38 in Dublin; smallpox caused 5 more deaths in Dublin. The annual rates of mortality per 1000 last week in 20 English towns ranged from Brighton 16, and Bristol 16, to 40 in Hull. The deaths referred to diarrhœa in the 20 towns, which had steadily increased in the nine preceding weeks from 51 to 807, further rose last week to 864, and were equal to an annual rate of 6·0 per thousand. In London 2512 births and 1492 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 11, whereas the deaths were 72 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 4 from smallpox, 23 from measles, 49 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 24 from whooping-cough, 20 from different forms of fever, and 265 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 392 deaths were referred, against 522, 510, and 509 in the three preceding weeks. These 392 deaths were 46 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years, and were equal to an annual rate of 5·6 per 1000. The deaths referred to lung diseases, which had been 200, 175, and 152 in the three previous weeks, were 167 last week, and exceeded the corrected weekly average by 26: 93 were attributed to bronchitis, and 48 to pneumonia. In Greater London 3065 births and 1819 deaths were registered.

The mournful pilgrimage of the Empress Eugénie to the spot where her only son was killed in South Africa may be supposed to give some additional interest to a biography of that unfortunate youth. Miss Ellen Barlee has compiled the Life of the Prince Imperial, published in one volume by Messrs. Griffith and Farran, with a photographic portrait. She has been assisted by the Prince's military and academical instructors at Woolwich, and by other gentlemen who knew him during his residence in England, with some authentic particulars concerning that part of her subject. The "Life of Napoleon III.," by Mr. Blanchard Jerrold, and the French official documents relating to the downfall of the Empire in 1870, and the Empress's brief Regency, as well as the published accounts of subsequent affairs of the Imperial family in exile at Chiselhurst, with the Emperor's death in January, 1873, have contributed to the present work. A sketch of the history of the late Zulu War, condensed from separate writings on that topic, leads to the narrative of the young Prince's brief share in that disastrous campaign. The circumstances of his death by the hands of Zulu warriors are still fresh in our remembrance. They are simply and feelingly related by Miss Barlee, who ends with a description of the funeral at Chiselhurst.

THE LATE MISS NEILSON.

The almost sudden death in Paris on Sunday, the 15th, after a few hours' illness, of this young and highly-gifted actress, has been made a theme of regretful comment by our contributor "G. A. S." We here give the Portrait of Lilian Adelaide Neilson. She was born about thirty years ago, but the circumstances of her parentage and early life are not precisely known. In or about 1860, during a visit to Paris, she witnessed a performance at the Théâtre Français of "Phèdre," and from that moment determined to become an actress. In her fifteenth year she appeared at the Margate Theatre as Julia in the "Hunchback," a character with which her name was long associated. A few weeks later she was invited to play Juliet at the Royalty Theatre in London. The performance displayed high promise; and among those who encouraged her to persevere was Lady Becher (Miss O'Neill). Miss Neilson allowed no opportunity of acquiring experience of the stage to escape her. Such opportunities were afforded by the production at the Princess's of the "Huguenot Captain" and "Lost in London, at the Lyceum of "Life for Life," at the Gaiety of "A Life Chase" and "Uncle Dick's Darling," and at Drury Lane of "Amy Robsart" and "Rebecca." The leisure which these engagements left her was filled by performances in provincial theatres. In September, 1868, at the Theatre Royal, Edinburgh, Miss Neilson appeared as Rosalind, in "As You Like It;" followed by Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons," and by Julia in "The Hunchback." In October, at the same theatre, Miss Neilson acted the heroine's part in a play by Mr. Palgrave Simpson, entitled "Stage and State," founded on a French drama, "Beatrix, ou la Madone de l'Art," by Legouvé. The following month Miss Neilson appeared at Birmingham, in a play adapted from an early novel of Miss Braddon's, "The Captain of the Vulture." In March, 1869, at the Lyceum, in London, the first performance there of Dr. Westland Marston's play, "Life for Life," she acted the part of Lilian. In the following October, at the Gaiety, in the first performance of "A Life Chase," by John Oxenford and Horace Wigan, she played the leading rôle—Madame Vidal. In December, 1869, at the same theatre, in "Uncle Dick's Darling," she sustained the part of Mary Belton. On Monday, April 11, 1870, at the Gaiety Theatre, she appeared as Julia in a revival of "The Hunchback." During this year Miss Neilson gave an entertainment, under the title of "Dramatic Studies," at St. James's Hall, with great success. In 1870, on Sept. 24, in the first performance of "Amy Robsart," at Drury-Lane Theatre, she acted the chief part. The same year at Drury-Lane Theatre, Miss Neilson appeared as Juliet, the character in which she had made her earliest appearance on the London stage. In March, 1871, Miss Neilson entered upon a tour of the United Kingdom, appearing principally in her original part of Amy Robsart. On Sept. 23 of the same year she acted the part of Rebecca in the drama of that title, founded on Sir Walter Scott's novel of "Ivanhoe," performed at Drury Lane. On Dec. 18 she appeared at the same theatre as Rosalind in a revival of "As You Like It." In the month of September, 1872, Miss Neilson gave a series of farewell performances at the Queen's Theatre, Long-acre, prior to her departure for America. In these were included "Romeo and Juliet," in which she played Juliet, and "The Lady of Lyons," in which she acted Pauline. On Nov. 18, 1872, Miss Neilson "opened" at Booth's Theatre, New York, in her favourite character. Her acting was received with much enthusiasm. During the tour through the United States and Canada, which followed, she appeared in the following characters, in addition to Juliet;—Beatrice in "Much Ado About Nothing," Pauline in "The Lady of Lyons," Lady Teazle in "The School for Scandal," Julia in "The Hunchback," and Isabella in "Measure for Measure." In 1876, on Jan. 17, Miss Neilson reappeared on the Haymarket stage; and during the season played Juliet, Rosalind, Anne Boleyn (in the first performance of Mr. Tom Taylor's play of that title), Julia in "The Hunchback," and Isabella in "Measure for Measure." In 1877 Miss Neilson again visited the United States. During a season of eight months she appeared there as Viola in "Twelfth Night," and Imogene in "Cymbeline," both new characters to her. She appeared also in the before-mentioned characters—viz., Juliet, Rosalind, Isabella, Viola, and Julia—during her engagement at the Haymarket Theatre terminating in May, 1878. On Feb. 27, 1879, she appeared at the Adelphi Theatre as Queen Isabella, in the first performance of "The Crimson Cross," and afterwards during the summer season at the same theatre as Julia and Lady Teazle, and in her original part of Amy Robsart. She afterwards proceeded to America, and only returned to London the week before her death, which took place at Paris on the day above named.

THE FAMINE IN WESTERN ASIA.

The terrible distress prevailing in the Turkish provinces of Armenia and Kurdistan, and in the adjacent parts of Persia towards the Caspian, during the past six months, has been reported by many consular and other agents of the British Government. From Colonel Miles, at Mosul, from Major Trotter, at Diarbeker, from Consul-General Abbott, at Tabreez, and from Captains Clayton, at Van, and Everett, at Erzeroum, as well as from the Syrian and Armenian patriarchs and chieftains, deplorable accounts have been received. It is said there are three millions and a half of people starving. The heavy rains of harvest time last year, which destroyed both the grain and the grapes, followed by the drought of last summer, and the death of large numbers of cattle and sheep, were the combined causes of the famine in Mesopotamia and in the highlands north of that country. It will be remembered that on May 6 a meeting was held at the Mansion House, presided over by the Lord Mayor of London, and a subscription was opened in aid of the Relief Fund administered by the British Consuls, with the sanction of our Foreign Office. The relief is dispensed in concert with the heads of the various communities, and without respect to differences of race or creed. The treasurer of the fund here is Mr. Alfred Henriquez, 96, Gloucester-terrace, Hyde Park, and subscriptions are received also at the branch of the London Joint-Stock Bank in Craven-road, Paddington, or by Lady Strangford, 10, Chapel-street, Park-lane.

Our Illustration of the poor people assembled outside a relief-kitchen is from a Sketch taken at Bitlis, in Kurdistan. This is an ancient town situated in the mountains near Lake Van. Here the famine is severely felt, and the soup-kitchen was established in the city by the Rev. S. E. Knapp, an American Missionary, with funds given him for that purpose by Major Trotter, the English Consul. The wretched recipients of this bounty totter feebly about, and being as light as shadows, the slightest touch sends them over; they are so weak they lie where they fall until put on their legs again. Occasionally, it is true, some fellow impelled more by appetite than famine will push his way to the soup-kettle, his vigour betrays that he is not one of those reduced to extreme want. He is at once forcibly expelled by a Zaptieh on duty, as this form of relief is only intended for those who are absolutely starving. The broth is composed of meat and crushed wheat with a little salt, and about 350 rations are served out every other day.

The sketch was drawn by Colonel C. Grantley Norton.

MONTENEGRINS AND THEIR WAR-SONGS.

It is to be hoped, for the sake of humanity and the peace of Europe, that there is truth in the rumour that the Sultan has consented to give up the district of Dulcigno to the Montenegrins, as an alternative mode of settlement which would be accepted by the Powers represented at the Berlin Conference.

The warlike people of the Tzernagora, Montenegro, or Black Mountain, are in such an excited state, and so are their Albanian neighbours and hereditary foes, that it is most desirable to remove the present cause of hostilities between these races. Our Illustration shows one of their characteristic entertainments in the way of a rude style of minstrelsy, usually devoted to singing the glories of battle and bloodshed. It must be regarded as an exception to the poet's remark that "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast." This wild and enthusiastic strain, accompanied by playing a sort of guitar, the strings of which are struck with a plectrum or little finger-stick, is by no means soothing, or conducive to a placid and pacific mood.

A different kind of instrument is occasionally used. The "Guslar," or player on the Slavonic violin, like all highland bards, is a privileged and respected person, who, if not exactly a "seer," is at least the poetic historian of his race. The long-necked one-stringed "gusla," which he plays with a small bow, squatting, and handles like a miniature violoncello, is said to be identical with the ancient instrument employed by all Slavonic tribes from the earliest times. Hence, the name guslar, or player on this cithara, being applied to wizards, "appears to argue," says Sir Gardner Wilkinson, "the use of it in the days of their pagan superstition." A special training is, no doubt, required for the perfect appreciation of highland music. The rapture which fills the Celtic soul with the discordant "skirling" of the bagpipes is by constant application, it is said, communicable even to a Southron's senses. But by what educational process the lowland foreigner is to attune his outraged tympanum to the dismal raspings and rumblings of that most melancholy monochordium, the gusla, we cannot tell. A slate-pencil scraped over a schoolboy's slate, a moistened finger passed over a dry window-pane, a saw-sharpener re-setting a rusty saw, are sounds of dulcet sweetness compared with the excruciating notes of the one-stringed gusla. Yet the effect of this harrowing instrument appears to be entrancing to the Montenegrins. They will listen to it for hours, without a single symptom of its setting their ears on edge. There is hardly a homestead in that country where at nightfall its sounds may not be heard, the performer singing the glorious wars of Montenegrin and Servian heroes—of Tzerni George and Milosh Obrenovich, of Tzernoievich and Milosh Obilich, or of the far-famed Scanderbeg, under whom their ancestors fought against the Turks. Sir Gardner Wilkinson tells us that "the sounds of the gusla are not in accordance with European taste, and the tune is only varied by the intonation of the voice; but the enthusiasm of the performer compensates one for the monotony of the one-stringed instrument; for, like Taillefer, the minstrel of William the Conqueror, these men are warriors; and no one would venture to sing of deeds he could not emulate." The impression produced upon a Montenegrin by the recital of these songs is curious indeed, especially with the peculiar style and manner of their delivery. The commencement of each line is emphasised by a prolonged howl, and its termination accentuated by a suppressed grunt, not unlike the sound which issues from a pavior's lungs as he expends his whole force in bringing down his rammer.

But all the native minstrelsy of Montenegro is not equally harsh and uncouth. One of the most agreeable and accomplished performers on the gusla is the Hospodar himself. True to the traditions of the Petrovich family, Prince Nikita is a poet and musician. Peter II., the last of the Vladikas, or Prince-bishops, cultivated the muse, and published a collection of his own poems, printed in his capital, under the title of the "Hermit of Cettinje." The present ruler of Montenegro is likewise a writer of sonnets and lyrics, which are known beyond the Montenegrin borders.

THE VALE OF TEMPE.

Classical literature has made mention of this spot, which lies within the territory now proposed to be given by the Turkish Empire to the Kingdom of Greece, in terms of high admiration. It is a portion of the lower course of the Selemvria, anciently called the Peneus, the chief river of Thessaly, and is situated ten or twenty miles north-east of the city of Larissa. We take the following piece of description from Mr. Edward Lear's "Journal of a Landscape Painter in Albania:"—"I went onward into Tempe, and soon entered this most celebrated 'vale'—of all places in Greece that which I had most desired to see. But it is not a 'vale,' it is a narrow pass—and although extremely beautiful, on account of the precipitous rocks on each side, the Peneus flowing deep in the midst, between the richest overhanging plane woods, still its character is distinctly that of a ravine or gorge. In some parts the pass (which is five or six miles from end to end) is so narrow as merely to admit the road and the river. In others, the rocks recede from the stream, and there is a little space of green meadow. The cliffs are very lofty, and beautifully hung with creepers and other foliage. Well might the ancients extol this grand defile, where the landscape is so completely different from that of any part of Thessaly. Its scenery awakens the most vivid feelings of awe and delight, which are heightened from its associations with the legendary history and religious rites of Greece. As it was my intention to pursue the route towards Katamona, as far as time would allow, and to return to Babá at evening, I left the gorge of Tempe, and crossed the Peneus in a ferry-boat opposite a khan, at the eastern extremity of the Pass. Hence the scenery was precisely that of the finest English park—rich meadows and noble clumps of trees at intervals. In two hours we reached a guard-house, called Karà Alí Dervení, and from a rising ground above it I halted to make a drawing of the view, which is one of great beauty. The waters of the Peneus meandered sparkling in many a winding curve, through delightful meadows and woods, to the sea; beyond was the low isthmus of Pallene, and above it the lonely Athos, whose pyramid I gazed on a second time, without much hope of reaching it."

THE WELSH NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD.

A meeting of the Cymmrodorion Society, presided over by Mr. Lewis Morris, the poet, on Monday, inaugurated the National Eisteddfod of Wales, held this week at Carnarvon, under the respective presidency of Sir W. W. Wynn, M.P., the Lord Lieutenant of Denbighshire (Mr. Cornwallis West), Mr. Watkin Williams, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Puleston, M.P.

The committee, of whom Alderman G. R. Rees is the chairman, offered about £1000 in prizes, the great honour to be won being the choral competition for £150 and a gold medal, for which most of the representative choirs in Wales are entered, Dr. John Stainer, the organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, being the chief musical judge. Messrs. Bauer and other London musical firms offer valuable prizes for proficiency as pianists and violinists; and, through Mr. John Williams, of Liverpool, £50 is offered for an essay on the present condition of the Welsh nation, Mr. Morgan Lloyd, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Humphreys Owen being the adjudicators. The gentlemen attending the ore sales at Holywell offer thirty guineas for an essay on the metalliferous deposits of Flintshire and Denbighshire, and an unknown donor gives £20 for a Welsh essay on education in Wales. By permission of Sir Llewellyn Turner, the gorsedd, or meeting of bards, was held in the quadrangle of Carnarvon Castle. For the evening concerts the artistes engaged included Madame Patey, Miss Mary Davies, Signor Foli, Mr. Sauvage, Mr. Lucas Williams, and a large number of Welsh vocalists.

The Eisteddfod proper began on Tuesday, under the presidency of Sir W. W. Wynn. There was an immense attendance, and the proceedings created great enthusiasm. In his inaugural address the president touched upon the remarkable absence of crime in the Principality, and attributed the orderly conduct of Welshmen in a great degree to the national literary and musical meetings, which did much to improve the moral tone of the nation. The prize of £150 was awarded to the Birkenhead Choral Union, which beat those from Ruabon, Llangollen, and Holyhead. The chief literary prize was awarded to Mr. Reynolds, Merthyr Tydfil; Miss Griffith winning the prize for pianoforte playing. A prize of £5, with a medal, was awarded to Mr. H. T. Davies, of Pwllheli, for the best ode on health. For the best rendering of "It is enough," from "Elijah," Mr. Musgrave Tufnail, of Kent, was adjudged worthy of the prize of three guineas. Mr. G. Renshaw, Woodley Rock Ferry, carried off the first prize of ten guineas for the best glee, a composition of great merit. The prize of £15 for the best original oil-painting was awarded to Mr. Peter Wynne, of Bangor, but a protest was lodged on the ground that the picture exceeded the dimensions stipulated. In the evening a grand concert was given, which was largely attended.

The Eisteddfod was continued on Wednesday, under the presidency of Mr. Cornwallis West, the Lord Lieutenant of Denbighshire, who, in his address, spoke of the good results attendant upon the Eisteddfod, and recommended that greater attention should be paid to art subjects. The Prince of Wales, when witnessing the embarkation of the Welsh Fusiliers at Portsmouth last week, had desired him to express his regret at his inability to attend.

The proceeds of the Eisteddfod are to be divided between the University College for Wales, the Carnarvon Public Institute, the Anglesea and Carnarvonshire Infirmary, and the Clio industrial training-ship.

Messrs. Child's new banking-house—partly in Fleet-street and partly in the Strand—which has just been erected, consequent on the demolition of Temple Bar, was opened for business on Monday. The elevation, which is in Portland stone, richly carved and decorated, contains three lofty floors. The ground-floor portion, which is wholly appropriated as the banking-house, is elaborately rusticated, with a massive entrance at the east or Fleet-street side of the frontage, surmounted by a frieze and a bold, overhanging cornice and balcony. Above this is an ornamentally carved shield, with the arms of the "Marigold Tavern," which, according to tradition, stood upon the site some 300 years ago. At the west or Strand side of the frontage there is a corresponding balcony, with Messrs. Child's arms and crest.

EPPS'S COCOA. GRATEFUL and COMFORTING.
"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER
THE ADMIRATION OF THE WORLD. Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer is perfection for its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and quickly changing grey or white hair to its natural youthful colour and beauty. It is not a dye. It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandruff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

"AND TEETH LIKE ROWS OF PEARLS."
THE ORIENTAL TOOTH-PASTE.
The celebrated original and only genuine Oriental Tooth-Paste is signed "JEWSBURY and BROWN, Manchester. Established 50 years." PEARLY WHITE and SOUND TEETH, a healthy action of the gums, producing that firmness and rosy brightness of colour so essential to beauty, and fragrant breath, are all insured by the use of this most perfect Dentifrice. Pots, 1s. 6d.; double, 2s. 6d. All Perfumers and Chemists.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

PIESSE AND LUBIN'S
RIBBON OF BRUGES, for Sweet Fumigation.
Post-free, One Shilling.

TOURISTS. — Their skins always suffer. Blotches, roughness, and general coarseness disfigure it. THE ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the whitest and purest of all soaps, and by its wonderful purifying action preserves it soft and free from complexionable blemishes. Recommended by the entire Medical Profession. A boon to sensitive skins. By all Chemists, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. Chief Depôt, 332, Oxford-street, London.

A NEVER-FAILING REMEDY for LIVER COMPLAINTS.—Dr. SCOTT'S BILIOUS and LIVER PILLS, prepared without mercury, are invaluable to all who suffer from Bilious and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Wind, Spasms, Foul Breath, Irritability, Loss of Appetite, Sour Eructations, and General Debility. As a General Family Aperient Medicine they have no equal, being mild in their operation and grateful to the stomach. They will be found, in slight cases, by a single dose to restore health to the body with a happy frame of mind. Prepared only by W. LAMBERT, 14a, Vere-street, London, W. 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d.; or, post-free, 15 or 35 stamps, and sold by all Chemists. The Genuine are in a Square Green Package.

FER BRAVAIS (Bravais' Dialysed Iron), used in every Hospital. Recommended by all Physicians. For Anæmia, Chlorosis, Debility, Exhaustion, &c. FER BRAVAIS (liquid iron in concentrated drops) is the only one entirely free from acid; it is without smell, tasteless, and produces neither constipation, diarrhœa, inflammation, or fatigue in the stomach; it is besides the only iron that never blackens the teeth. It is the Cheapest of all Ferruginous Compounds, as a bottle of it lasts a month. General Depot in Paris, 13, Rue Lafayette (near the Opera); and at all Chemists. Beware of dangerous imitations, and see that the Trade Mark is on every Bottle, which can be had of all Chemists in the United Kingdom. Sold also at 8, Idol-lane; and Messrs. Barclay and Sons', 95, Farringdon-street, London, where the Pamphlet on "Anæmia and its Treatment" can be obtained.

LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.
THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.
THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be
THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL
which produces the full curative effects
CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

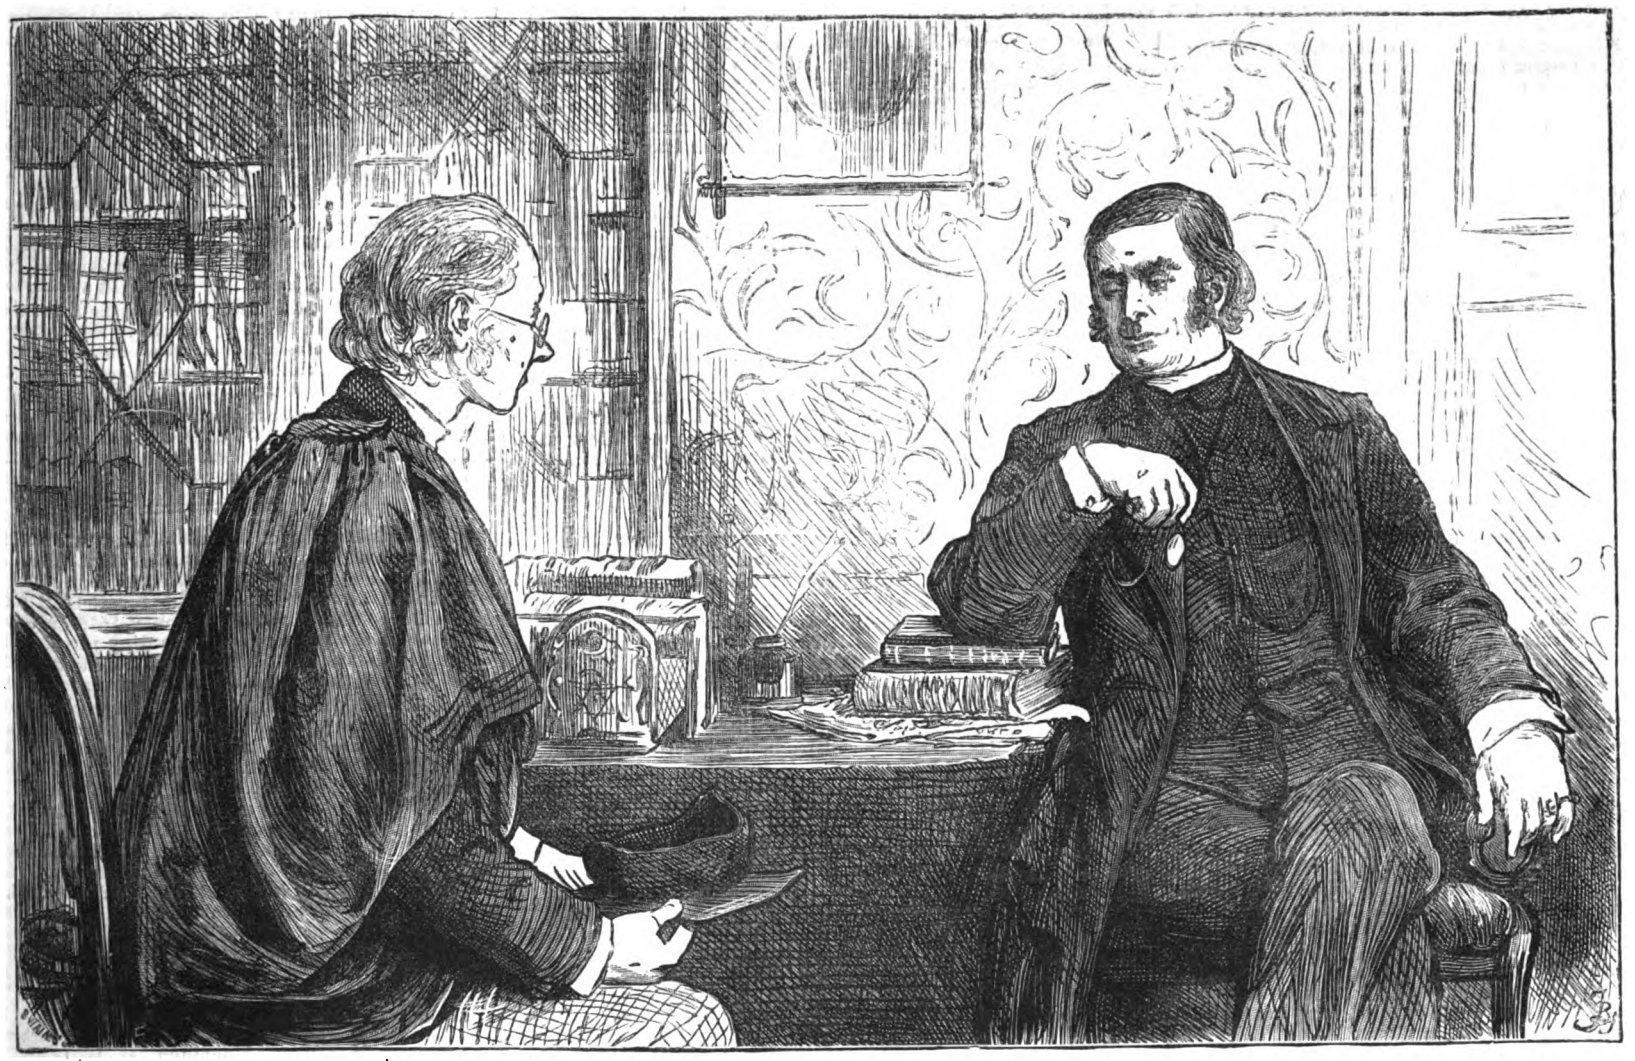
PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THAT ARTFUL VICAR."



No. X.—THE COLLEGE DON.

A pleasant gentleman and a dear friend of many whose friendship is not lightly given, is Dr. Goodfellow, Master of Muriel College, Oxford. Most notable, indeed, is the change which has come over University men within these last few years. The old traditional scholar in all the antique glory of untidiness is rarely seen within hail of the Bodleian. A smarter set of men than Christ Church tutors can hardly be found. The freshman who goes to one of them for lecture of a morning will have his eyes refreshed by long lines of fashionable boots as he ascends the stairs leading to the Don's sanctum. These boots are of all sorts, polished to a nicety; among them are, probably, top boots, for the tutor is often a hunting man, though the combination of clergyman, bookworm, and hard rider seems strange to folk with old-fashioned notions. If the tutor happens to be in holy orders, and the time is winter, he will perhaps be arrayed in a sealskin waistcoat of the true gold colour and most orthodox pattern. His necktie is likely to be of light blue and white, and the rest of his attire of a light grey. He certainly means riding, bold riding, and fast riding on a horse that can show the way to half the sporting squires in the county; yet he is as surely deeply versed in syntax and prosody. He has dodged the Greek language into all its aorists; he has doubts about some of the meanings given by Liddell and Scott: and his words are heard with respect in the schools, for he has won two scholarships and taken a double first easily. Till very recently members of the University were bound by oath not to wear any garments but of "a dark or subfusk" hue, and not a few readers of these lines may remember having been gravely reminded of the academical proprieties if they even ventured on a shooting-coat before breakfast-time. Now every man dresses after his own fancy; and an imaginative person of great erudition has sometimes a taste for such fluffy clothes that he can scarcely be distinguished from a large untrimmed poodle, save for the precious stores of information revealed in his discourse. The get-up of undergraduates is at times irresistibly funny. It is often the latest fashion conceived by some imaginative tailor absurdly exaggerated by boys who have unlimited credit with him.

Dr. Goodfellow, who is one of the great lights of the University, will never admit that he knows anything. "Pooh!" he exclaimed, good-humouredly, after giving a cursory sketch of the world in all ages, and parenthetically explaining the origin of electricity, with the squaring of the circle, "Pooh! I know nothing. I am but a weak-kneed traveller on the frontier of the great realm of learning. I shall die without having crossed it. The kingdom beyond stretches far and wide, out of the range of my feeble vision. You tell me I have done something here. Granted. Hope and labour joined in brave alliance will always make their mark, though but a small one. Fortune, too, whoever that lady may be, perhaps took a fancy to me. When I look back on my career over the Attic and Latian fields every step appears delightful to me. Every book I read was a conquest won from the future. Once the thoughts of mighty spirits mastered, they became a portion of my own mind. A new province of knowledge was annexed to my dominions, and was mine for ever. It needed no defenders, but strengthened instead of weakening the rest of the empire. I am using no figure of speech when I say this, or rather the figure I employ truly expresses my feeling. Every thought, every image, I gathered from written or unwritten books filled me with I know not what exultation at each fresh accession to my power. Such I have often thought must be the most constant and lively pleasure of those souls which are freed from the restraint of this earthly tabernacle. Never, I suspect, do men realise more than in youth the force of the axiom that knowledge is power. Now I know that I have done and can do nothing. My good thoughts, if good they be, are, as far as the outer world is concerned, no better than good dreams."

"That is of course the common lot" I said. "We were taught some 3000 years ago that power does not belong to men."

"Exactly," answered the Don; "I am only stating a fact, not making a lamentation. What I mean is, that we live in a mental atmosphere of our own up here. The echoes of our voices are not heard in the busy world outside. I breakfasted with the Vice-Chancellor this morning. There were five of us in all. What a stillness there is about Oxford life! Thompson, who is an excellent specimen of an Oxford man, of the best sort too, talked so quietly, looked at things so calmly, that nothing could stir his composure, yet poor Mr. Bradley, of New College, was drowned yesterday while rowing on the Isis, and I know Thompson was his friend; but when did any private calamity seriously affect a party of people whose material interests it left untouched? Not even the recent scandal, for so it is counted, of four converts going over to Rome aroused anything like excitement among us. Yet there were three men from Balliol, the crack college for clever fellows, with us. Balliol, you know, carries off by far the largest share of the firsts and scholarships. The truth is, that the authorities will have none but reading men within its walls.

"When I went home," continued the Master of Muriel, noting that his talk about dear Alma Mater interested me, "a man who has just been elected to a fellowship at University College called on me. He had curious manners and a simplicity of mind which rather surprised me; for my visitor was an old chum from Westminster, whom you may remember to have met at my wines in our salad days. I expressed a hope that he liked Oxford better than London. 'Yes,' he replied, meditatively, 'he thought he did, because there were more theological books at Oxford than could be got in London.' Were it not for this circumstance, he added, he would have preferred the latter city. That he said these things is a positive fact; whether he meant them is, perhaps, another question. I suppose even good and wise men are not wholly free from affectation. It has been even alleged that affectation is a cardinal sin of Oxford."

"You yourself won a fellowship, I think, did you not?" I inquired, to set my old friend on his hobby again.

"Won?" replied the Master of Muriel, with a demure sort of drollery, as though there were something to be said that it was not quite fair to say on that subject. "It is characteristic of Oxford that I was first informed of my success by the bellringer of All Souls', who came for his fees. The bellringer was perfectly conscious of the value of bringing good news, and chirped over it in an expectant manner, as one who had an immemorial right to handsome perquisites. He was a mellow old man, with a face like a winter apple; sharp as a ferret, too; and with a sly look of demure merriment which I think belongs to all college functionaries. He paid respect to the cultured youth of these realms, so to say, with his tongue in his cheek. I dare say he could have sung a capital comic song; but University etiquette is very strict, and forbids the mixture of classes, so that I never heard him. The fellowships at All Souls' are not worth much, but the honour is great, and I was proud of it. It is quite the crack thing to be a Fellow of All Souls', for you get into the most pleasant club in Oxford by this stroke of luck. The qualifications are generally understood to be good birth, a good coat, and a moderate amount of knowledge. I had them all. My family have been settled in Stirlingshire time out of mind, and Scotch cousinship has a long arm. My tailor is, was, and I trust ever will be, an artist of great merit, and I have never even pretended to have the materials necessary for setting the Thames on fire. Out of thirty Fellows of All Souls' when I was elected one was a peer, Lord Bathurst, and seven others were sons of peers. Whether this system of election was strictly in accordance with the intentions of the founder is not for me to say. One of his unrepealed statutes is that the Fellows shall pray for the souls of those who fell at Agincourt. A story current about the All Souls' fellowships is that the candidates are all asked to dinner and given cherry-pie, that the old fellows watch to see what they do with the stones, and that the discreet or ungentlemanly disposal of those superfluities is the real test of fitness, examinations in classic authors being gabbled through merely for form's sake. With respect to this legend, I can only say that I had no cherry-pie, though I have often asked myself nervously what I should have done with the cherry-stones."

We walked along the meadows silently for some minutes, enjoying the lovely English landscape softened by the haze of a mild afternoon late in autumn, and then the Don remarked, as though in answer to an unspoken thought of mine which he may have divined intuitively, so strong was the magnetic sympathy of our esteem and friendship—

"Satirists have been always fond of saying that we are a little more disposed to bend the back to rank than is becoming in sober schoolmen; and, indeed, we are a loyal company. But those who make a sin of our civility would do well to reflect that we are the instructors of youth, and therefore bound to teach what is good for them. Now, and at all other times, in England it is and has been a very wise thing to be on prudent terms with persons of quality. Rank has many methods of exalting itself at other men's expense in these islands, and very small scruple in using them."

There was a pungent humour in the Don's manner as he said this, but he was quite in earnest. I then asked him to tell me what were the enjoyments of the world in which he dwelt. He paused before replying, as one who muses deeply; and then, laying his hand affectionately on my arm, as he used to do in our school days, he said, simply—

"One Sunday, I well remember, while still doubting what career I should choose, I experienced a pleasure which the luckiest of us cannot often enjoy. It was that of listening to a great mind pouring forth its thoughts with eloquent utterance. For on that morning I went to St. Mary's Church to hear the University sermon. So large was the congregation that there was hardly standing room. The Regius Professor of Hebrew was to preach. He alone could command such a crowd of disciples. The organ was playing slowly as we entered, and soon appeared a gorgeous procession of Doctors robed in scarlet and black. It was preceded by vergers bearing maces and wands of office, and closed by two Masters of Arts in their simple habits of black and white. They looked to the eye of fancy like Dominican friars, and doubtless some present about to go over to Rome wished they had been. As the procession stopped, the whole congregation sang the Hundredth Psalm, and the simple words of the old version sounded wondrously sweet and cheering. By the time it was finished I looked up from my book and beheld a venerable, to me a glorious, form, for it was lighted up with the glow of eloquence and learning. I looked with a loving respect on the illustrious Pusey, "the Doctor," as we affectionately called him—for his influence over the hearts and minds of the young men of that day was very great, and I was not the least enthusiastic of his admirers. As the strains of the music died away, he bade us "pray for Christ's Holy Catholic Church, our Sovereign Lady the Queen, the Right Honourable Edward Geoffrey, then Earl of Derby, our Lord and Chancellor, and many others whom he mentioned by name. His text was taken from the beautiful words of St. Peter to our Saviour when He asked the apostles, "Will ye also go away?" "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of Eternal life." On this text the Doctor preached the finest sermon I ever heard. In these times, when many even well-meaning people who profess themselves friendly to the Church seek to refine away her holiest doctrines, it was inspiriting to hear the great preacher so boldly proclaiming the truth. For nearly an hour Dr. Pusey preached, addressing us as "My Sons;" and many remained standing the whole time so still that a pin might have been heard to fall. I have known few happier moments than that in which I knelt down and received the blessing of this great and good man, who, I felt, really did give us, for however brief a space of time, "the peace which passeth all understanding." That day decided my choice of a profession—eyes, ears, heart, and mind were all satisfied. I have never regretted it; I have never looked back. But it is time to dress. Come and dine."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The battalions and detachments of Rifle Volunteers authorised to drill with the regular forces at the Camp of Exercise, Aldershott, this month, have completed their training, the 6th and 7th provisional battalions, which went under canvas on the 14th inst., having left for their respective destinations last Saturday. Altogether, nearly 4000 officers and men have benefited by the instruction which has been imparted. The Articles of War are read to each battalion, and during the stay in every case of eight days the volunteers are to all intents soldiers. Work commenced every morning soon after reveille at five o'clock in battalion or company drill, the mornings were mainly devoted to manœuvres with the regulars in divisional and brigade field-days, and the afternoons to skirmishing drills and outpost duties. Occasionally some of the volunteer commanders also had their men out for a couple of hours at night on outpost work.

The official results of the competition for the challenge plates and other prizes of the St. George's Rifles, competed for at the Government ranges, Wormwood-scrubbs, were issued on the 19th inst. The first prize—the St. George's challenge cup, value 100 guineas, shot for at "Queen's" distances—was carried off by Captain Johnson, who made 82 points; he also winning the regimental gold badge, and a silver embroidered badge of the cup, to be worn on the left arm. The Turner Challenge plate, also of the value of 100 guineas, was won by Private Rosenthal with a score of 78 points, he being awarded the "St. George's" silver medal. The Ladies' challenge plate, of the value of 50 guineas, went to Private Fernhead, who made 77 points; he also takes a regimental silver medal. A silver challenge shield, value £25, presented by Messrs. Ortner and Houle, of St. James-street, was carried off by Captain Johnson. The other leading winners in the several competitions were:—Private E. Torr, Private Millbank, Private Dakin, Private Atkinson, Quartermaster Andrews, Sergeant Beeching, and Private Toake. The volley firing challenge plate, shot for by teams of ten efficient members per company, five shots at 500 yards, both ranks kneeling, was won by No. 3 (Captain Johnson's) company.

There was a review on Woolwich-common last Saturday evening by General Turner, commander of the Woolwich district, of volunteer corps comprised within that district. After the review General Turner addressed the volunteers in gratifying terms. The volunteer corps present consisted of the 2nd (late 9th) Kent (Plumstead) Artillery, under the command of Major T. Hughes; the 3rd (late 10th) Kent (Royal Arsenal, Woolwich), commanded by Colonel H. M. Hozier, late 3rd Dragoon Guards; and the 4th (Woolwich) and 26th (Royal Arsenal, Woolwich) Rifles, under Col. J. D. Farrell. Each corps was attended by its own band. The scene was one of great interest and animation, heightened materially by the gay appearance of the 16th Lancers, who assisted the Royal Horse Artillery in keeping the review ground.

The volunteers who have applied to attend the review to be held on Knavesmire at York, to-day (the 28th inst.) number about 10,000. They will be formed into six brigades and two divisions. The brigadiers will be Col. W. C. Bancroft (12th sub-district), Col. R. B. Chichester, C.B. (6th and 10th sub-districts), Col. F. Hardy (7th and 8th sub-districts), Col. R. Mockler (4th sub-district), Col. Manningham-Buller (19th and 20th sub-districts), and Col. C. Blewitt (9th sub-district). Cols. J. H. Dunne (28th sub-district) and J. S. Thompson (26th sub-district) will command the divisions. The bands of the various corps from Richmond, Leeds, Newcastle, Durham, Sunderland, Scarborough, Beverley, York, Sheffield, Bradford, Wakefield, Huddersfield, Doncaster, and Skipton will be massed for the purposes of the review, and will be conducted by Mr. Deacon (bandmaster of the 4th West York, Halifax).

At a meeting of the Balloon Society of Great Britain yesterday week it was decided to make eight ascents on Saturday, Sept. 4, at five o'clock, at the following places:—Wormwood-scrubbs, Epping Forest, Welsh Harp (Hendon), Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace, Lillie-bridge, Clapham Rink, and Kensal-green. Each balloon is to be occupied by an aeronaut, a member of the Meteorological Society (who will take observations as to the altitude of the balloons and the distances travelled), and a representative of the press.

A summary has been issued by the Board of Trade of accidents and casualties which have been reported to the board as having occurred upon railways in the United Kingdom during the six months ended June 30, 1880. From this it appears that the total number of persons killed was 510, and 1706 injured. Six passengers were killed and 300 injured by accidents to trains, rolling-stock, and permanent-way, and 58 were killed and 305 injured by accidents from other causes. Twelve servants of companies or contractors were killed and 41 injured by accidents to trains, rolling-stock, and permanent way, and 225 were killed and 930 injured by accidents from other causes. Thirty-five persons were killed and 12 injured while crossing over level crossings; 151 were killed and 76 injured while trespassing (including suicides); and 23 were killed and 42 injured in accidents not coming within the above classification. In addition to the above totals, 20 persons were killed and 1242 injured upon railway premises by accidents not connected with the movements of trains, thus bringing up the total to 530 persons killed and 1242 injured.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Stockton Meeting had virtually no effect on the St. Leger, as Teviotdale, after defeating the very moderate Fleecy Cloud, was not pulled out against Experiment for the Great Northern Leger. The filly, who is very well just now, won with the greatest ease; but she is not engaged at Doncaster, and cannot, therefore, assist Cipolata and Jenny Howlet to win another victory for the fair sex. A very poor half dozen contested the Hardwicke Stakes, and, after a bumping race, in which Amabel was considerably interfered with, she managed to scramble home a neck in front of Ollerton. The uncertain Humbert was made favourite for the Stockton Stewards' Cup, but could only finish a poor third to Rosemount. Blackthorn took another stake for Mr. Jardine, and little Kellett, who is unquestionably the light-weight of the day, wound up the meeting in a perfect blaze of triumph by riding three winners off the reel. The last three days of the week were divided between Oxford and Alexandra Park. Both fixtures were good enough in their way, though the racing needs no special reference.

After the incessant plating of the last two or three weeks, the York Meeting was eagerly anticipated on all sides. Yet we are bound to confess that the sport on the first day was only poor, and altogether unworthy of the cherished traditions of the Knavesmire. The opening event was reduced to a match, and Napsbury had such desperately hard work in beating the dark Sportsman that he is not likely to be saddled on the Leger day, in spite of the long shots that have been taken about him. Having won it five times in the last ten years, Lord Falmouth seems to have a sort of vested right in the Yorkshire Oaks; but Muriel could not quite manage to tread in the steps of Lady Golightly, Jannette, and Wheel of Fortune, as the much improved Belfry was a little too good for her, and placed the race to Mr. Bush's credit. Sir Charles, who, we suppose, is not quite up to the mark yet, was not sent to York, and in his absence the Convivial Stakes fell to Theckla, who showed a wonderful improvement on her Redcar form; Fairy Ring, a nice filly by Macaroni—Silver Ring, carried Lord Falmouth's colours into second place, and will do better in future; but the Sunshine filly, though she displayed fine speed, died away to nothing just when she appeared to be winning easily. Elizabeth had only the roaring Pride of the Highlands to beat in the Three-Year-Old Produce Stakes. The withdrawal of Rochampton and Fernandez from the Ebor Handicap caused a great deal of grumbling amongst their backers, still a field of ten assembled at the post. Robbie Burns (8 st. 11 lb.) was evidently by no means fit, and failed to show to advantage, the race falling to Novice (6 st. 6 lb.), with Stockmar (5 st. 8 lb.) second, and Coromandel II. (6 st. 8 lb.) third.

Another few days will see the last of the county cricket matches, and a great many have been wiped off the list during the past week. Yorkshire has beaten Derbyshire in a single innings with 57 runs to spare; Ulyett (56) and Emmet (54) did most of the run-getting for the winners, and, on the other side, only Mr. Cursham (40) and Platts (32) could do anything with the bowling of Peate and Hill. Thanks mainly to the brilliant batting of Mr. Hornby (64), Lancashire has defeated Kent by eight wickets. Barnes (71 and, not out, 26) was again in brilliant form for Notts, and the champion county beat Middlesex by eight wickets. Notts v. Gloucestershire ended in a draw all in favour of the former; Barnes (143) played a magnificent innings, and Mr. G. F. Grace (62) was in his best form. In the second match of the Cheltenham week, Gloucestershire beat Surrey by ten wickets. The scoring on both sides was very heavy, Midwinter (103), Mr. Townsend (83), and Dr. W. G. Grace (67 and, not out, 31), doing most for the winners; while, of the Surrey eleven, Read (68), and Messrs. W. W. Read (93) and J. Shuter (56 and 37) scored freely. Derbyshire has defeated Sussex by nine wickets. The Australians have sustained their first defeat since they landed in this country at the hands of an Eighteen of Scarborough and District. A slight disturbance occurred, owing to the colonials objecting to the bowling of Franks, which the umpire said was fair. It is a little singular that we heard nothing of any dispute while the matches were going all one way, and we are afraid that our visitors are as bad losers as ever.

The second meeting this season of the Worcestershire Archery Society took place last week at Madresfield Court, near Malvern, the residence of Earl Beauchamp. The list of prize-winners included:—Gentlemen's Challenge Prize (being the aggregate score of the two meetings), Mr. Vincent Acton. First Gentlemen's Prize, Mr. Vincent Acton; second prize, Mr. J. Swinton Isaac; third prize, Colonel Norbury. Greatest number of golds, Mr. A. H. Falkner. Best gold, Mr. Greswolde Williams. Ladies' Challenge Prize (being the aggregate score of the two meetings), Miss Berkeley. First Ladies' Prize, Miss Winifred Norbury; second, Miss Florence Norbury; third, Mrs. Garmston Hyde. Greatest number of golds, Miss Cook. Best golds, Miss Willis. At night a dance took place.

Mr. H. L. Cortis, the champion bicycle rider, has covered ten miles in 29 min. 54½ sec., which is the fastest time on record for either professionals or amateurs. He accomplished the feat at the Surbiton Grounds—probably the fastest in England at the present time.

The 500 Yards Amateur Championship Cup was swum for on Tuesday at the Wenlock Baths, and, after a splendid race, E. C. Danels (the holder) beat D. Ainsworth by rather less than a yard, in 7 min. 51¼ sec.

It appears from the official statement in connection with the Civil Service Supply Association that there are 4424 shareholders and 28,000 ticket-holders, being civil servants and their friends. The gross profit for the last six months has been £75,682, and the net balance £8465, a considerable increase upon the previous corresponding period. The working expenses have been £62,711. The shares, which were originally purchased at 10s. are now worth about £50.

The following is a list of candidates who were successful for appointment as surgeons in her Majesty's British Medical Service at the competitive examination in London on Aug. 9:—S. A. Crick, J. R. Dodd, A. J. Struthers, G. E. Twiss, R. F. Adams, C. G. D. Mosse, A. B. Cottell, T. Archer, S. G. Hamilton, H. J. R. Moberly, A. P. Hart, H. J. Barnes, R. W. S. Sawyer, W. G. A. Bedford, R. Jenning, S. C. B. Robinson, H. S. Parker, T. F. W. Fogarty, R. W. Ford, C. J. Coutts, A. Sharpe, A. L. Young, C. Reid, W. J. Baker, A. T. Sloggett, R. R. K. Elmes, H. K. Allport, E. Butt, S. Townsend, T. R. P. Woodhouse, J. Gibson, J. H. A. Rhodes, A. Hickman, T. C. Nugent, G. S. Lewis, L. W. Swabey, R. Haselden, R. E. Ricketts-Morse, W. J. B. Lyons, W. Rowney, T. J. R. Lucas, C. J. Addison, A. G. Kay, W. W. Pope, R. Porter, R. C. K. Laffan, C. A. Mitchell, G. J. Coates, G. W. H. Cook, T. B. A. Tuckey, F. A. Harris, C. B. Lewis, T. H. Parke, F. A. B. Daly, A. S. Rose, D. L. Porter, J. Battersby, J. Maconachie, A. H. Morgan, C. H. Dixon, T. Moynihan, M. W. O'Keeffe, T. J. O'Donnell, J. Osburne, H. E. R. Wolrige, R. P. Hetherington, R. C. Johnstone, T. A. Dixon, and W. C. T. Pooie.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

SPAIN.

Monday's Official Gazette publishes a Royal Decree annulling the Decree of May, 26, 1850, which provided that the first-born child of Spanish Monarchs should, without distinction of sex, bear the title of Prince or Princess of the Asturias, as the case might be. The present Decree declares that in future only the first-born male child of the Reigning Monarch shall bear the title of Prince of the Asturias from the moment of his birth. If the first-born be a girl she will simply be an Infanta, though recognised as an heiress to the throne, unless a male is born after. At the same time, the King can by a special Decree confer later on the title of Prince or Princess of the Asturias on the nearest heir to the throne, should there be no hope of direct male issue.

Señor Castelar has issued a manifesto to his adherents calling upon all of them to take part in the elections to be held on Sept. 5.

RUSSIA.

General Loris Melikoff's appointment as Minister of the Interior, and that of General Tcherevin, hitherto Director of the Third Section of the Imperial Chancellerie, as his Under-Secretary, were gazetted yesterday week. The St. Petersburg telegrams state that this ukase is "hailed with delight by the patriotic press, as a public announcement of the close of the era of domestic troubles and extraordinary measures." During the last four months 115 persons have been either returned to their homes or have received some mitigation of their sentences; 1696 individuals remain under police surveillance. The Emperor has commuted into penal servitude for life the sentence of death passed by the Military District Court of Kieff on the 14th inst. upon two of the persons charged with forming an illegal society with the object of forcibly overthrowing the existing order of the State.

The Marquis T'seng was received in audience by the Emperor of Russia on Sunday. The semi-official Agence Russe draws attention to the conciliatory spirit shown by the Governments of Russia and China for the settlement of pending questions, and mentions that the Pekin Government has lately settled, in a satisfactory manner, several matters in China in which Russian subjects were interested. In the evening the Marquis gave a banquet at the Embassy. His Excellency is said to be favourably impressed by the nature of his audience with the Emperor.

The Japanese Ambassador was also graciously received with his entire staff on Sunday. The object of his mission appears to be to revise the existing commercial treaties with the European Powers, commencing with Russia. Serious difficulties are not probable with this Government, especially in view of the important aid and facilities Japan can render the Russian naval operations in the Pacific, in respect to which a convention or understanding is said to have been concluded before the departure of the squadron under Admiral Lessowsky. The Emperor, it is reported, said he was always disposed to enter into friendly relations with the Mikado.

The Russian torpedo-boat Nadine, which recently crossed the Atlantic on a trial-trip, has been wrecked off Aracati, near the mouth of the Jaguaribe river, Brazil. Her crew were saved.

TURKEY.

Mr. Heap, the American Chargé-d'Affaires, has delivered to the Porte a Note demanding that the murderers of Mr. Parsons, the American missionary, shall be immediately brought to Constantinople and put upon their trial.

EGYPT.

Mr. Gerald Fitzgerald, Director-General of Public Accounts, has been appointed Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

The annual report of the directors of the Daira Sanieh has been issued. It states that, in virtue of the law of liquidation, the Daira Sanieh enters upon a new phase. The European system of public accounts will be introduced in order to facilitate the task of the directors in protecting the interests of Daira bondholders. The Daira Sanieh is now, for the first time, free of debt, and its revenue undoubtedly admits of considerable increase, which is principally dependent upon the carrying out of administrative reforms. The abolition of the moukabala tax, however, involves an increase of the taxation payable by the Daira to the amount of £E93,000, so that for the future the same revenue will be required to give a return of 5 per cent which formerly yielded 6 per cent. The next coupon of the Daira Loan will be at the rate of 4 per cent, nor is it expected that a higher rate will be paid next year. The report concludes by expressing confidence in the new Administration under Zekij Pasha.

AMERICA.

President Hayes has left Washington for a six-weeks' journey to the Pacific States.

Mr. Evarts, the Secretary of State, has sent a circular invitation to the Maritime Powers to send representatives to an International Sanitary Conference to be opened at Washington on Jan. 1, 1881, with a view to securing a system of notification of the actual sanitary condition of the ports under the jurisdiction of the respective Powers, and of the vessels sailing from those ports.

One thousand Sioux Indians have surrendered to the United States military authorities at Fort Keogh, and the submission of a thousand more is expected. The remainder of the tribe, it is stated, continue their depredations.

According to a statistical report just issued, 49,922 immigrants arrived in the United States in July. This number included 6067 from Ireland, 5388 from England, 11,275 from Germany, and 12,716 from Canada.

Judge Hilton and Mrs. Stewart, in administering the estate of the late Alexander T. Stewart, have appropriated sums, which will probably amount in the aggregate to 3,000,000 dols., to the establishment, at Garden City, Long Island, of a college for the education of young persons of both sexes at a charge of less than 100 dols. a year, including travelling expenses from New York or Brooklyn. The first building, nearly complete, will accommodate 500 students. Two other buildings of equal dimensions will be erected beside it. A building, to accommodate 300 young women, occupying twenty-five acres, with annexes and surrounding grounds, will also be completed very soon. A divinity school, to educate young men for the ministry of the Episcopal Church, will also be established in Garden City, where the remains of Mr. Stewart will be placed when the cathedral is finished. All these buildings will be furnished by Mrs. Stewart, dedicated to the memory of her late husband, and sufficiently endowed.

A fatal political riot is reported from Mississippi. At Coffeville, in that State, on Saturday, Mr. Pierson, the Greenback candidate for the post of Sheriff, shot a Democratic negro in a procession which was passing. The Democrats, rallying, killed Mr. Pierson and wounded two of his friends, a general fight followed, which was only quelled by the arrival of the military forces from Grenada.

CANADA.

A telegram from Ottawa, dated the 22nd inst., states that the Governor-General and party, who are making a tour on board her Majesty's corvette Druid, had arrived at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

The accounts of the Consolidated Fund of the Dominion show that during the fiscal year ending June 30 last the total revenue amounted to 24,760,585 dols., and the expenditure to 25,161,712 dols., consequently leaving a deficit of 393,127 dols.

SOUTH AFRICA.

The Governor's agent in Basutoland reports that the chief, Letsea, when required to arrest Masupha, was afraid to assert his authority by force, and has retired from Thababosigo.

AUSTRALIA.

A telegram from Brisbane states that the Treasurer introduced his Financial Statement in the Queensland Legislative Assembly on the 18th inst. He estimates the revenue at £1,700,000 and the expenditure at £1,670,000. The debit balance on June 30 was £190,000. The deficit is to be covered by transferring under the new statute to the consolidated revenue the receipts of the land department previously applied to railway construction. There is to be no increase of taxation except in the excise duties upon colonial spirits. The Treasurer considered that it would be unjust to augment the public burdens in order to push forward the construction of railways in the interior, when the sale of a portion of the land made accessible would suffice to pay interest on the capital required. British capitalists were offering to complete the railway system in consideration of a Government grant of land, and a bill to sanction that course would be introduced. The depressed state of trade was passing away, and there was a gradual increase of the revenue. Nothing was wanting for the restoration of the full prosperity of the colony but means for placing its surplus food and products within the reach of the British consumer. In the sitting on the 19th a vote of want of confidence in the Government on account of the Budget was moved by the Leader of the Opposition, but was rejected by twenty-seven votes to eighteen.

An anonymous donation of £10,000 has been given to Melbourne Cathedral.

The Colonial Government of Victoria has had a report drawn up concerning the number and occupations of the Chinese residing in the colony. It appears from this report that in 1859 there were 46,000 Chinese residing in Victoria; but the number has greatly diminished during the last twenty years, and does not now exceed 13,000. As far as can be ascertained, the number of Chinese in Queensland is 14,524; in Victoria, about 13,000; in New South Wales, 9500; New Zealand, 4433; South Australia and Port Darwin, 2000; Tasmania, 750: making a total of 44,207, being nearly 2000 less than in Victoria alone twenty years ago. The Chinese dwelling in the city of Melbourne are about 500, and in its suburbs 380. Of these, not more than sixty-six can be fairly considered to compete in the labour market with Europeans, and these are employed as waiters and domestic servants.

CHINA.

A Reuter's telegram from Shanghae announces that Chung-How, the former Chinese Ambassador to Russia, who had been sentenced to be beheaded for having negotiated the Kuldja Treaty with the Russian Government of the Czar, has been set at liberty.

The death is announced at Fürth, of Rabbi Neckarsulmer, one of the most distinguished Talmud scholars in Germany, at the age of eighty-two.

King George and his family concluded their visit to the King of Denmark on Sunday, and embarked in the evening at Klampenborg for St. Petersburg, on their return to Greece.

A Daily News telegram states that an enthusiastic meeting in favour of universal suffrage has been held at Venice, and that several workmen made speeches showing a thorough appreciation of the value of a vote.

Texan telegrams report the partial destruction of Brownsville, at the mouth of the Rio Grande, by a storm on the 13th inst. Many lives were lost. Three hundred houses were destroyed in Matamoros, and damage was done to other towns. The telegraph wires are thrown down in all directions, preventing the obtaining of details.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the first of the commissariat fraud cases, that of Sergeant M'Dermott, has been tried at Rangoon, before Mr. Allen, the additional Recorder. The prisoner was convicted of taking bribes, and was sentenced to one year's imprisonment and a fine of 500 rupees.

A correspondent of the Daily News at Alexandria has received the following intelligence from Aden:—"The captain of the pilgrim-ship Jeddah, who had arrived at Aden on the 10th on board the Scindia, reported that his vessel had foundered off Gardafui. The Jeddah, however, arrived at Aden as already announced, in tow of the steamer Antenor, on the 11th. The boilers having moved, there was some water in the ship. The cargo was apparently, however, little damaged. The second mate and ten natives are reported lost. The ship will be ready for sea in six weeks. The captain's certificate has been suspended for three years."

News has been received of the death, in Calcutta, on the 20th inst., of the Rev. Dr. Wenger, one of the oldest missionaries in Calcutta, who had given his special attention to the work of Biblical translation in the Sanscrit and Bengali languages. He was an accomplished Sanscrit scholar, and completed the work commenced by the late Dr. Yates. His version of the Bible is used by all denominations of Christians in Bengal. Dr. Wenger was a Swiss by birth, and went out to India in 1839 as an agent of the Baptist Missionary Society. Dr. Wenger was in his sixty-ninth year at the time of his death.

At a Consistory held yesterday week the Pope pronounced an allocution in which, after referring to the grievances of the Church in Belgium, he said he was quite ready to suffer personal insult on behalf of the Holy See, but would never allow the dignity of the Papacy to be insulted, even though its defence might cost him his life. The Pope concluded by saying that the injuries done to the Catholic Church were not limited to Belgium. On a future occasion he would refer to some other circumstances which were a source of sorrow and anguish to the Church. His Holiness afterwards announced a number of episcopal appointments, mostly for Italy and the United States.

Telegrams from St. Vincent state that the missing boat, with seven men and five bags of mails of the Union Company's Royal mail-steamer American, which foundered on April 23, was picked up by the Portuguese brig Tarujo, and landed at Loanda on July 21. The American, it will be remembered, was bound from Southampton to the Cape of Good Hope, and foundered close to the Equator, after breaking her main shaft. Three boats, with fifty-four persons who had escaped from the wreck on board them, were picked up by the British and African steamer Congo, and landed at Madeira on May 8; but five boats, which when last seen were making for Cape Palmas, were then still missing. Three of these boats were found on April 24 and 25 by an American vessel, and the passengers were transferred to the British and African Company's steamer Coanza on the same day and landed at Grand Bassa. They experienced shipwreck a second time on the way to Grand Canary, and one of the passengers was drowned. Her Majesty's gun-boat Firebrand then went in search of the remaining boats. Another of the boats was subsequently picked up by the steamer Cameroon, which landed those who were in it at Madeira on May 28.

The finest of the Brussels fêtes, in celebration of the Jubilee of the kingdom, was held on the 19th inst. It consisted of a grand historical cavalcade, setting forth the past and present of the Belgian nation; and a correspondent describes it as far surpassing other displays of a similar kind that have been given in recent years. Many thousands of people lined the streets to witness the procession, and among the spectators were the Royal family and the chief magistrates of the city of London. In the evening a banquet was given by the town at the Hôtel de Ville to the delegates of the foreign municipalities. The Burgomaster, who presided, made a short speech, welcoming his guests, to which the Lord Mayor of London replied.

An additional line of telegraphic communication across the Atlantic has been completed by the laying down of a new cable between the Anglo-American Telegraph Company's stations at Heart's Content, Newfoundland, and Valentia, Ireland. The work was most successfully carried out by the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company without a hitch having occurred during the whole operation. This is the seventh cable laid by the Telegraph Construction and Maintenance Company across the Atlantic for the Anglo-American Company and their predecessor, four of which are now in working order. The expedition started from Heart's Content on the 10th inst., and the final splice was completed off the coast of Ireland on the 21st inst., a period of twelve days, being the quickest Atlantic cable passage on record.

The fine steamer Lake Manitoba, which has arrived at Liverpool from Quebec, passed forty icebergs in the Straits of Belle Isle on her passage out. The Liverpool steamer Brooklyn also passed a large number in the same vicinity—in her case, between fog and ice, she was detained about thirty hours. The floating icebergs were immediately in the track of vessels, and form a source of much danger, particularly during the prevalence of dense fogs, with which the Straits were frequently visited. The schooner Challenge, from Bristol, under the command of Captain Dingle, had a narrow escape from being lost after collision with an iceberg, and when she arrived at Newfoundland she was in a disabled condition. Captain Dingle reports that on June 30, during a dense fog, while near Little Fogo Island, bearing W. by N. about thirty miles, the Challenge struck an iceberg, sustaining considerable damage. Fortunately the vessel was going at a moderate speed only, or she must have foundered instantly. The accident happened at night time, and some slight repairs were able to be made, by which means the vessel safely reached port.

AGRICULTURE.

There is considerable difference of opinion amongst experts as to the probable yield of the wheat crop in this country. The fact is that there is an unusual variation in the condition of the wheat crop in different parts of the country. On dry soils and in districts which did not get the worst of the July storms the crop is generally sound and full of corn. On wet lands and in parts of the country which suffered most from the heavy rains the crop is badly mildewed and otherwise defective. As heavy land prevails to a considerable extent in this country, and especially in the principal wheat-growing counties, it is to be feared that something like ten per cent under an average yield must be accepted as a reasonable estimate.

Mr. James Caird, in a letter to the Times, says that the publication of the agricultural returns for Great Britain and Ireland shows a slight increase of acreage of wheat, 7½ per cent deficiency in barley, 5 per cent increase in oats, and scarcely any change in potatoes, as compared with these crops in 1879. The quality of the wheat and its yield will be so greatly superior that, if the present splendid harvest weather continues a fortnight longer, we may reckon on a crop of probably from three to four million quarters, or nearly two months' consumption better than the ruinous crop of last year. The potatoes, Mr. Caird adds, promise most favourably, and grass and green crops, with the exception of mangold, are abundant. The first crop of hay was light, and has been much damaged by rain, but it will be largely supplemented by a heavy second crop. In regard to live stock, there is a deficiency in the numbers of both cattle and sheep—the first to the extent of 90,000, and in the sheep a loss of nearly two millions, equal to 5½ per cent. This was fully anticipated from the prevalence of rot, resulting from the excessive wet of last season, and it has seriously aggravated the heavy loss of capital otherwise sustained by the farmers of the low-lying counties.

Telegrams received from various parts of Europe and from New York of the prospects of the approaching harvest are, on the whole, favourable, although in some parts recent storms and heavy rain have disappointed the farmers' expectations. The United States are likely to have 200,000,000 bushels of wheat to dispose of.

An effort is being made to establish agricultural science schools in Lancashire. A meeting of agriculturists with this object was held at Preston last Saturday, presided over by Lord Winmarleigh. His Lordship urged agriculturists to take every opportunity of finding out means to meet the difficulties which at present beset them. The cause of those difficulties might be profitably discussed elsewhere, but not at that meeting, but they must bestir themselves to remove them. The South Kensington Institution, promoted by the Prince Consort, was doing a splendid work. In one of the South of England districts there was a class with which he was concerned which was connected with the institution, and it had been most successful. Upwards of 300 pupils had gained numerous prizes at South Kensington, and samples of their proficiency were seen in most English towns. The application of science to agriculture was a matter of supreme moment, demanding the attention of farmers. Mr. Buckmaster gave a capital address.—A meeting was held in the evening with the same object at Kendal.

The result of the examination by the Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board for Certificates in December, 1879, and June and July 1880, has been published. There were 708 students examined in Latin, Greek, French, German elementary and additional Mathematics, Scripture knowledge, English history, mechanical and chemical divisions of natural philosophy, botany, physical geography, and geology. The schools from which boys were examined included Eton, Harrow, Christ's Hospital, Rossall, Clifton, Marlborough, Radley, Sherbourne, Repton, King's College, Wellington, Dulwich, Cheltenham, Merchant Taylors', and others.

SWANSEA AND ITS NEIGHBOURHOOD.

The Congress of the British Association for the Advancement of Science is held this week at Swansea, and the members and visitors will enjoy the customary excursions in that neighbourhood, visiting the places of which we present some Illustrations.

The district of Gower, to use the old historic Welsh name, which is still popular with its inhabitants, is that peninsula of the coast of South Wales formed by Swansea Bay, to the east, and an inlet of Carmarthen Bay to the west, being part of the county of Glamorgan. It is about twenty-five miles long, and from five to eight miles wide. Its shores consist of rugged and rocky cliffs, chiefly of limestone, which assume picturesque and romantic shapes; and the small islets called the Mumbles, near Oystermouth, at the south-west extremity of Swansea Bay, have long been noted as a striking feature of seacoast scenery. The Gower peninsula is exactly opposite to Ilfracombe and Lynton, on the North Devon coast, and is quite visible across the Bristol Channel at a distance of twenty-five miles.

Swansea Bay, which is by nature very beautiful, with fine wooded hills rising behind it north and west, receives the small river Tawe, upon which the town is built. A few miles east of this, at Briton Ferry, is the outlet of the Neath, the valley of which, by its coal and iron mines, supports a large industrial population. Swansea has, within the last forty years, grown up to be one of the greatest metal-producing and metal-working towns. Its copper-smelting, iron and steel works, zinc and spelter, and manufacture of tin plate, at the Swansea Vale, Landore, and Morriston establishments, draw supplies of ore from all countries, and send their products all over the world. The population of the town, which was under 20,000 less than forty years since, has increased to 80,000. There is a considerable export of coal, and the trade of this port bids fair to rival that of Cardiff; an artificial harbour, or tidal basin, with docks, affording good accommodation for shipping, has been constructed, and other such works are in progress.

The town, apart from these commercial and industrial sources of wealth, is pleasant enough in its western part, on the hill-slope that rises from the right bank of the Tawe. There is the remnant of an old castle, which has seen a good deal of fighting in former ages, both when the Norman barons and knights held South Wales against the native Princes, or in the Owen Glendower rebellion, and in the wars of Cromwell and the Royalists in the seventeenth century. Parts of the castle have been used, at various times, for a Bishop's palace, a market-place, a townhall, a chapel, a store-house, and a post-office. The Keep, with its ornate parapet added in the fourteenth century by Bishop Gower, of St. David's, is still in good preservation. Swansea has several local institutions of merit; the Royal Institution of South Wales, with its Museum and Library, and an excellent Grammar School, are perhaps the most important. There is railway communication with England by the Great Western, the London and North-Western, and the Midland Railway systems.

Excursionists from Swansea, either by travelling westward through the pretty village of Sketty and over the hills, or by crossing the bay to Oystermouth, get into a very attractive and interesting region. Oxwich Bay, on the southern shore of Gower, twelve miles distant from the town, offers plenty of things worth seeing. To the scientific people of the British Association, it is presumed, there will be an especial subject of study in the Bone Caves. These resemble the bone caves of the South Devon coast, with their deposits of remains of extinct animals, supposed to have been carried there by the carnivorous beasts of a remote palæontological era. Oxwich Castle, built probably in the reign of Henry I. by Henry Beaumont, Earl of Warwick, called Henry de Newburgh, and Penrice Castle, which passed from the Pen Rhys family 1400, by marriage, to that of the Mansels, are not the only ruins of feudal strongholds in this district.

The one shown among our Illustrations is Oystermouth Castle, opposite the Mumbles; it has a noble situation, upon an eminence overlooking the bay, and sheltered by the rugged limestone cliff. It belongs to the Duke of Beaufort, who has taken good care of this relic of the Middle Ages. The general plan of the fortress is quite distinguishable; it was of polygonal form, but something triangular in ground plan, with lofty ramparts, but no bastions or flanking towers, except at the chief entrance, on the south-west side, which has a wide portcullis gate defended by advaneed towers. The great hall and the chapel, with their Gothic windows of ornamental tracery, are in a tolerably perfect condition. It was probably more a feudal mansion, or military governor's residence, than a fort destined to experience the actual shock and brunt of warfare. The ancient Norman church at Oystermouth, or partly Norman, part Early English, is another token of the dignity of this village as the capital of the province of Gower, long before Swansea became an important town. The name of the place is a corruption of some words in the Celtic language, meaning the mustering-place of an army. The name "Gower" is said to mean "curved" or "crooked," referring to the shape of this singular peninsula of the Glamorganshire coast. It should be noticed, as an interesting historical fact, that the rustic and seaside population of this district are not Welsh people by race, but of Flemish origin, the descendants of a colony of Flemings, refugees to England under the early Plantagenet Kings, transplanted hither by Royal policy to hold this piece of country against the Welsh nation.

The Mumbles lighthouse, erected in 1794 as a beacon of safety for mariners in the Bristol Channel, is shown in one of our Sketches engraved. The roadstead here has much commodiousness, with room and shelter for all the small coasting-vessels at once behind the promontory and the two little rocky islands, which are accessible by wading or walking from the mainland at low tide. Outside the headland, over a shoal, reef, or sand-bank, called "the Mixon," the sea at flood runs very high, and with great violence, in strong weather, making it a dangerous place for ships.

Our principal View is that of Swansea, as beheld from the sea, with its harbour, formed by two sea-walls, 215 ft. apart, extending forward 900 ft. from each bank of the mouth of the Tawe; its docks, the north and the south dock, the sea-float and half-tidal basin; its spacious quays and warehouses, its railways upon lengthy viaducts, its factories, foundries, and blast-furnaces, all presenting a business-like nineteenth-century aspect. A range of the blast-furnaces is also shown in a separate Illustration.

The excursions arranged for the British Association are to Dowlais Iron and Steel Works, on Thursday of this week; on Saturday (this day) to Pembroke Dockyard, Milford Haven, with the Great Eastern steam-ship, and Tenby; on the same day, to Haverfordwest and St. David's; also, to Oxwich Bay, Arthur's Stone, and other objects of interest in Gower; to Worm's Head, the most westerly point of that peninsula; to Bishopstone, Bacon Hole, Pwlldu, and the bone caverns along the shore; to the Mumbles, by special steam-boat; to Llwchwr, or Loughor, the Roman Leucharium, and the Ystitty Tin Works; to Llandilo, Golden Grove, Carreg-Gennen Castle, and Dynevor Castle. On Tuesday next, parties will be made up to inspect the Swansea Town Waterworks, at Velindra and Blaenant Ddu; the copper works and rolling-mills of Messrs. Pascoe Grenfell and Sons; the works of the Swansea Zinc Ore Company, and of the Villiers Spelter Company. The Hafod Copper Works of Messrs. Vivian, the Morfa and Landore Copper Works, the Swansea Waggon Works, Patent Fuel Works, East Dock Extension, and Gas Works are likewise to be visited any day in the afternoon. On Thursday, next week, there will be excursion parties to see the Dyffryn Tinplate Works, the Landore Works of Siemens steel, and the Swansea Tinplate Works at Cwmbwrla; to the oyster-dredging operations in the bay and round the coast: to Margam Park and Abbey; to Briton Ferry and Neath; and to several of the great collieries in that district.

THE CHURCH.

The conference of the clergy and laity of the diocese of St. Albans is to be held on Oct. 14 and 15.

On the 19th inst. the parish church of Wormshill, Kent, was reopened by Archdeacon Harrison, after a partial restoration under the care of Mr. Clarke.

A very interesting work has just been completed by Messrs. Mayer and Co. in Christ Church, Bootle, near Liverpool, by the filling in of the west window with Munich stained glass, as a token of regard to the Rev. E. L. Mather, who is retiring, having had charge of the parish from 1866 to 1879.

The old parish church of Bala, one of the most ancient and interesting ecclesiastical edifices in North Wales, was on the 18th inst. reopened after full restoration. The Bishop of St. Asaph, Archdeacon Ffoulkes, and the Rev. D. Howell, Vicar of Wrexham, were the preachers; and Sir Watkin Wynn, M.P., who has been a munificent subscriber to the restoration fund, presided at the luncheon held after the morning service.

Mr. William Hancocks, of Blakeshall House, near Kidderminster, has lately added to many former acts of liberality and munificence a gift of £1000 to the endowment of Cookley church, near Kidderminster, of which he is the patron. The Record states that this money has been lodged with the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who will pay the interest of it yearly to the Incumbent, and will add an equal sum annually to meet it from their own funds.

Preaching on Sunday morning at St. Thomas's Church, Red Bank, the Bishop of Manchester entered a vigorous protest against so much attention being paid to "disputable arguments and questionable points of doctrine" in the present state of society. There was, he said, a truth in the remark recently made by Mr. John Bright that men were weary of dogma. "They were weary of it as it had been fulminated again and again from pulpits; but he did not believe that Mr. Bright meant that men were weary of hearing of those great Christian truths which were the basis of all Christian hope and the foundation of all Christian faith." He was filled with anxiety to know how to deal with the phenomena which presented themselves in society, and he could not understand how men could persuade themselves to waste time on mere puerilities.

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE PASTORAL.

The annual Pastoral of the Wesleyan Conference, addressed to the Methodist Societies in Great Britain in the connexion established by John Wesley, is printed. It finds reasons for thankfulness that, amidst the restlessness of religious opinion which marks the age, the Methodist people retain their hold upon the doctrines which constituted early Methodist theology; and it also rejoices that the present modes of labour are but the extension of the lines upon which the founders of the denomination worked. Reference is made to the loss of thirty ministers who have died during the year, and a special tribute is paid to the names of the Revs. John Rattenbury and John Bedford, who each for half a century rendered invaluable service to British Methodism. Special attention is directed to the decrease in the membership of the connexion, and it is suggested that as soon as convenient the present state of the societies throughout the country shall be made the subject of solemn consideration in the various official meetings. The rapid growth and development of Wesleyan Sunday schools is shown by statistics—there being at the present time 6685 schools, containing 122,665 officers and teachers, and 811,583 scholars, of whom more than 62,000 members are members of the Church. Notice is taken of the marked success of the Thanksgiving Fund movement, which has now reached a total of £290,000, and attention is directed to the recurring deficiencies in the home income of foreign missions, which has necessitated a policy of retrenchment in all the foreign stations. Wesleyan Methodists are reminded of their responsibilities as citizens, and are strongly urged to give their hearty co-operation to all measures, whether local or national, which are calculated to arrest the vice of intemperance; to resist by every means in their power all attempts to desecrate the rest of the Sabbath by the opening of public libraries, museums, and picture-galleries, whether such attempts are made in Parliament or by municipal bodies, persistently to protest against the continuance of State patronage of vice, and to do their utmost to do away with the opium traffic between India and China.

A new Wesleyan church, built at a cost of £4000, was opened at Poole last week. The structure is Early Gothic in style, and has an octagonal lantern tower and a spire ninety feet high. There is sitting accommodation for 950 persons.

A supplementary estimate has been issued for £323,928 required to be voted for the service of the year ending March 31, 1881, in addition to the sums already provided in the Estimates presented in the current Session. The vote is to be apportioned as follows:—Public offices site, £68,600; Houses of Parliament, £300; furniture of public offices, £1556; surveys of the United Kingdom, £5000; public buildings, Ireland, £19,885; Public Works Office, Ireland, £21,742; prisons, England, £19,927; prisons, Scotland, £26,584; Science and Art Department, £6234; Customs, £8100; Inland Revenue, £55,000.

WELLINGTON COLLEGE COMMISSION.

The report of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into Wellington College has been issued, together with the minutes of evidence. The Commissioners were instructed to inquire and report upon what funds were originally subscribed, and upon what footing, for the purposes of the College? what moneys have since been received by the governors by gift, bequest, or otherwise, and how those funds have been applied? what number of boys are now maintained and educated on the foundation of the College, and at what expense to the College? and what other boys are educated in the college, and on what terms? and whether, having regard to the circumstances and objects under and for which the College was founded, the funds and property thereof have been administered so as to confer upon the orphan sons of officers of the Army the full amount of benefit which was intended for them?

After reporting in detail on each of these points, and recommending the appointment of a small executive committee, and the presentation of an annual report to Parliament showing the financial working of the school, the report says:—

We cannot but acknowledge that the governors of Wellington College have succeeded in creating an institution which ranks deservedly high among the public schools of this country; and the number of officers who have placed their sons in the college is an evidence that it is not unpopular among those who can afford to pay a high price for the education of their children. The list of honours obtained at the Universities and elsewhere by the scholars shows the goodness of the education, and the officers who have put their complaints before us have expressed no desire that cheapness should be purchased by any sacrifice in this respect. We have already expressed an opinion that, in every particular where it will not interfere with the maintenance of a high standard of instruction, the governors ought to make a severe economy the ruling principle of their administration. And we think the masters ought to aim in their training of the scholars at inculcating by precept and example a strict simplicity of life. If over-indulgent parents put any difficulty in the way of doing this, we think it would be right to make it clearly understood that parents who will not co-operate in this aim must remove their boys to a school of a different sort. We hold that it is as important in such a school as Wellington College to inculcate inexpensive habits and steady self-control as to teach classics or mathematics. And we are convinced that it will soon be found that a steady perseverance in this aim will add to the reputation, and even to the popularity of the school. Upon the whole, in answer to the question put to them whether, having regard to the circumstances and objects under and for which the College was founded, the funds and property thereof have been administered so as to confer on the orphan sons of officers of her Majesty's Army the full amount of benefit which was intended for them, the Commission state their opinion as follows:—The orphan sons of officers have not enjoyed the full amount of the benefit which was intended for them in the shape which was originally contemplated, inasmuch as the number of them educated at the College has not increased as it was intended it should increase; but, on the other hand, they have enjoyed and are still enjoying the benefits of an education and training far superior to what would have been given to them if the original plan with its cheap education and restriction as to the admission of others than the orphan sons of officers had been adhered to. It is not perhaps possible to weigh with precision what they have thus lost against that which they have gained; but we do not hesitate to say that in our opinion the governors have acted wisely and in the best interests of the officers by permitting the College to develope from an exclusive orphanage, conferring a cheap and necessarily inferior education, into a large public school, taking its place in the first rank of such establishments, and holding out to the objects of the charity social and educational advantages worthy alike of the name it bears and of the officers for whom it was designed. Although this result has up to the present time been obtained only by keeping down the number of foundationers to their original limit, we feel assured that with due economy, which in our judgment has not been sufficiently regarded, the number of foundationers may be considerably increased without in any degree endangering the high position and character of the school.

BATHING.

It is important to recognise that the only virtues of water as used by the bather are two—namely, its value as a cleansing agent and as a surface stimulant. In this last capacity it simply acts as a medium affecting the temperature of the part to which it is applied or which is immersed in it. Right views of fact in reference to this matter are important, because there can be no question that some persons overrate the uses of cold water, and run considerable risks in their pursuit of them. Every beneficial action that can be exerted by a bath is secured by simply dipping in the sea, or a very moderate affusion of cold water. Except in cases of high fever when it is desired to reduce the heat of the body by prolonged contact with cold, a bath of any considerable duration is likely to be injurious. Then, again, it is necessary to recognise the risk of suddenly driving the blood from the surface in upon the organs. The "plunge," or "dip," or "shower," or "douche," is intended to produce a momentary depression of the temperature of the surface in the hope of occasioning a reaction which will bring the blood back to the surface with increased vigour, and almost instantly. If this return does not take place; if, in a word, redness of the skin is not a very rapid consequence of the immersion, it is impossible that the bath can have been useful, and in nine cases out of ten when the surface is left white or cold it does harm. The measure of value is the redness which ensues promptly after the bath, and this reaction should be produced without the aid of much friction, or the bath is not worth taking. The rubbing employed to recover the circulation lost by the bath would probably have done more good without it! Another effect of the bath, when it acts properly, is to stimulate the nervous system, through the vast series of its terminal fibres which are distributed in the skin. In this way also, the action must be very rapid, or it is not efficacious. Unless the vigour of energy is quickly called out, the agent is useless; and if it produces either drowsiness or depression it acts mischievously, and lowers the power it is intended to stimulate and augment. Bathers should bear these facts in mind, and be warned by them not to trifle with an agency which if it is not of value is worse than useless, and can scarcely fail to do harm.—The Lancet.

The Portrait of the late Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, published by us this week, is from a photograph by Messrs. Boning and Small, of Baker-street, London, and of St. Leonard's-on-Sea.

Seventy delegates attended the British Pharmaceutical Annual Conference on Tuesday, at the Royal Institution of South Wales. Mr. W. Southall, of Birmingham, the president, delivered an address on the pharmacy of Celsus and most of the subsequent writers. During the day papers of a technical nature were read, and discussions carried on by Dr. Ward, Professor Allfield, Professor Marsh, of Philadelphia, Dr. Symes, Mr. Muncy, and others. The local committee entertained the guests at luncheon, and in the evening they visited the neighbouring copper and tin works.

The Associated Chambers of Commerce began their twelfth provincial autumnal meeting at Hawick on Tuesday. About 150 delegates met in the Temperance Hall—Mr. Whitwell, M.P., presiding. Provost Watson, of Hawick, in welcoming the delegates to the border, referred to the subject of pollution of rivers. Mr. Whitwell replied, observing that in dealing with that question there must be some consideration shown to the large manufacturing industries. A resolution was carried to the effect that the Rivers Pollution Act of 1876 has proved unsatisfactory in many districts, especially in Scotland, and requires amendment. In the evening there was a banquet in the Exchange, Mr. Murray, of Glenmayne, presiding.—The remaining business was discussed at Galashiels on Wednesday.

OBITUARY.

SIR JOHN BURKE, BART.

Sir John Charles Burke, fourth Baronet, of Marble Hill, in the county of Galway, Lieutenant 20th Hussars, died in Dublin on the 17th inst. He was born Feb. 7, 1858, the eldest son of Sir Thomas Burke, third Baronet, M.P. for the county of Galway, by Lady Mary, his wife, daughter of Anthony Francis, ninth Earl of Westmeath, and was educated at Oscott, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. After serving in the King's County Militia, he entered the 20th Hussars, Jan. 22, 1879, having previously succeeded to the baronetcy at the death of his father, Dec. 9, 1875. He was unmarried, and the title consequently devolves on his next brother, now Sir Henry George Burke, fifth Baronet. Beloved by all who knew him—especially popular with his brother officers—the youthful Baronet, cut off at the very opening of what appeared to be a brilliant carcer, is deeply and universally regretted. High and low, Catholics and Protestants, all assembled at his funeral to pay him the last mark of respect and regard.

SIR ROBERT GYLL.

Sir Robert Gyll, Knt., late of the 15th Hussars and of the German Legion, formerly Lieutenant of the Yeomen of the Guard, died on the 17th inst. at Cumbernauld Lodge, Feltham, aged seventy-five. He was youngest and last surviving son of William Gyll, Esq., of Wyrardisbury, Bucks, Captain 2nd Life Guards, Equerry to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex, by Harriett, his wife, only child of Hamilton Flemyng, the claimant of the earldom of Wigtoun. At the coronation of King William IV. he received the honour of knighthood, being at the time Lieutenant of the Yeomen of the Guard. He married, April 21, 1847, Jane Price, daughter and coheir of Sir John Pinhorn and widow of H. B. Thomason, Esq.

We have also to record the deaths of—

Henry Blencowe Churchill, Esq., of the Iuner Temple, barrister-at-law, on the 12th inst., at Wieland House, Reigate.

The Rev. John Kempthorne, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, on the 5th inst., at the Vicarage, Trumpington, aged forty-five.

The Rev. Edward Auriol, late Rector of St. Dunstan-in-the-West, Fleet-street, and Prebendary of St. Paul's, on the 10th inst., at 35, Mecklenburgh-square, aged seventy-five.

H. Clark Pidgeon, Esq., President of the Sketching Club, and a very old member of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours, on the 6th inst., aged seventy-three.

Anne, Mrs. Lucas, widow of the Right Hon. Edward Lucas, of Castle Shane, county Monaghan, on the 15th inst., at Kingstown. She was second daughter of William Ruxton, Esq., M.P., of Ardee House, county Louth.

The Hon. Mrs. Baillie (Anne), widow of the Hon. Charles Baillie, Lord Jerviswoode, and third daughter of Hugh, Lord Polwarth, on the 16th inst., at Dryburgh House, aged seventy-two. She was married Dec. 27, 1831, and was left a widow July 23, 1879.

The Rev. William Gifford Cookesley, Rector of Tempsford, Beds, and formerly Assistant-Master of Eton College, on the 16th inst., aged seventy-seven. He was editor of several school classics, including one or two Greek plays, and published an edition of Pindar with English notes.

Mrs. Charles Kean, formerly Miss Ellen Tree, the gifted and accomplished actress, on the 21st inst., in her seventy-fourth year. She married, Jan. 29, 1842, Charles Kean, and retired altogether from the stage at the death of her husband, Jan. 22, 1868.

Robert William Gaussen, Esq., of Brookmans Park, Herts, aged sixty-six. He was representative of a Huguenot family, which migrated to England at the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He was J.P. and D.L. for Herts, and served as High Sheriff in 1841.

Lady Drake (Katharine Stewart Forbes), wife of Sir William Richard Drake, of 12, Prince's-gardens, S.W., and Oaklands Lodge, Weybridge, Surrey, and daughter of Richard Thomas Goodwin, Esq., formerly Senior Member of Council, H.E.I.C., at Bombay.

Algernon Holt White, Esq., of Clement's Hall, near Rochford, Essex, J.P., at Bagnères de Bigorre, on the 18th inst., aged seventy-three. He was of an old family of White, from which also descended Gilbert White, the natural historian of Selborne.

Lieut.-Colonel William Arden, J.P. and D.L., late of the 14th Hussars and the 1st Stafford Militia, on the 14th inst., at Longcrofts Hall, Burton-on-Trent. He was youngest son of the Rev. Francis Edward Arden, Rector of Gresham, Norfolk, descendant of the very ancient Saxon family of Arden, of Longcrofts.

John David Hay Hill, Esq., of Gressenhall Hall, Norfolk, J.P., on the 9th inst., at his seat near East Dereham, in his seventy-sixth year. He was only son of the late John Hill, Esq., of Gressenhall, by Julia Anna, his wife, daughter of Colonel David Hay, R.A., and was educated at Eton, and at Trinity Hall, Cambridge. He married, in 1827, Margaret, second daughter of the late John E. Collett, Esq., M.P., and leaves issue.

Richard Henry Magenis, Esq., of Abington Hall, Cambridge, and Finvoy, in the country of Antrim, late Major of the 90th and 32nd Regiments, on the 4th inst., in his fiftieth year. He was eldest son of the late Colonel Henry Arthur Magenis, 27th Regiment. He married, in 1860, Lady Louisa Ann, daughter of Armar, third Earl Belmore. Major Magenis was J.P. for Cambridge and Antrim, and High Sheriff of the latter county in 1868.

Major-General John Singleton, formerly Royal Artillery, in his fifty-fifth year, at his residence, Quinville Abbey, Clare. He served in the Crimean War, including Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and Sebastopol; and in India, 1858, including the battle of Mooltan. He had the medal with four clasps, the Turkish medal, and the orders of the Medjidie and Legion of Honour. General Singleton was son of John Singleton, Esq., of Quinville Abbey, by Isabella Carew, his wife, only child of Michael Creagh, Esq., of Laurentinum. From the Singletons of Quinville descended, in the female line, the late John Singleton Copley, Lord Lyndhurst.

Sheffield has obtained the right to hold a separate Court of Quarter Sessions; and Mr. Wills, Q.C., of the North-Eastern Circuit, has accepted the recordership.

The entries of horses and ponies for the Irish National Horse and Ram Show, which will open in Dublin on the 31st inst., are 607, as compared with 628 last year, the falling off occurring in one class only—light-weight hunters.

WHITE (M. de T.)	BLACK (M. O.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th
2. P to K B 4th	P takes P
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to K Kt 4th
4. P to K R 4th	P to K Kt 5th
5. Kt to K 5th	P to Q 4th
The correct move here is 5. P to Q 3rd.
6. P to Q 4th
If 6. P takes P, Black's reply is 6. Q to K 2nd, with an excellent opening.
6.	Q to K 2nd
7. B to K 2nd
We prefer here, 7. Q B takes P; and if then 7. P to K B 3rd, 8. Kt to Q 3rd, &c.
7.	P to K B 3rd
8. Kt to Q 3rd
Weak; the following is a better line of play—
8. Kt takes P	B takes Kt
9. B takes B	P takes P
If—
9. Q takes P (ch), then 10. K to B sq
10. P takes P, with a winning game.
8.	Q takes P
9. Kt takes B P	B to Q 3rd
10. Kt to Q B 3rd	Q to K B 4th
11. B to Q 3rd
Better 11. Castles, Q to Q 2nd; 12. K Kt takes P, with a good game.
11.	B takes Kt
Black's game is very much compromised, but there is no necessity for sacrificing the Queen.
12. B takes Q	B to Kt 6th (ch)
13. K to B sq
We prefer the following:—
13. K to K 2nd	B takes B
14. R to K 3rd, followed by
15. K to Q 2nd, &c.

WHITE (M. de T.)	BLACK (M. O.)

23. R takes R (ch)	R takes R
24. Q to Q Kt 5th	Kt to K 5th
25. Kt takes K R P
Feebly played. He should have continued 25. R to K 2nd, and should Black reply with 25. Kt takes P (ch), 26. K to K sq.
25.	Kt takes P (ch)
26. K to B 2nd
26. K to K sq is the right move.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN SEPTEMBER.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Mercury on the 3rd; she is near Venus on the evenings of the 5th and 6th; she is near Mars on the 6th; she is near Jupiter from the time of rising on the 19th throughout the night, and near Saturn from the time of rising on the 20th throughout the night. She is nearest the Earth on the morning of the 13th, and most distant from it on the morning of the 26th. Her phases or times of change are:—

New Moon	on the	4th	at	52	min. after	4h.	in the afternoon.
First Quarter	,,	11th	,,	25	,,	6	,, afternoon.
Full Moon	,,	18th	,,	29	,,	3	,, afternoon.
Last Quarter	,,	26th	,,	9	,,	11	,, morning.

Mercury rises on the 4th at 4h. 6m. a.m., or 1h. 12m. before sunrise; on the 9th at 4h. 40m. a.m., or 47 minutes before the Sun; on the 14th at 5h. 16m. a.m., or 19 minutes before sunrise; on the 18th the planet rises at about the time of sunrise; and from this day till Nov. 23 he rises in daylight. He sets at sunset on the 10th, 11 minutes after sunset on the 19th, and at 5h. 58m. p.m., or 16 minutes after the Sun, on the 29th. He is near the Moon on the 3rd, in superior conjunction with the Sun on the 17th, and near Mars on the 28th.

Venus is an evening star, setting on the 7th at 7h. 5m. p.m., or 33 minutes after sunset; on the 17th at 6h. 43m. p.m., or 34 minutes after sunset; and on the 27th at 6h. 24m. p.m., or 37 minutes after the Sun has set. She is near the Moon on the 6th, and near Mars on the 7th.

Mars sets on the 7th at 7h. 2m. p.m., or 30 minutes after sunset; on the 17th at 6h. 32m. p.m., or 23 minutes after the Sun; and on the 27th at 6h. 3m. p.m., or 16 minutes after sunset. He is due south on the 1st at 1h. 6m. p.m., in the middle of the month at 0h. 44m. p.m., and on the last day at 0h. 21m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 6th.

Jupiter rises on the 6th at 7h. 30m. p.m., or 56 minutes after sunset, on the 16th at 6h. 50m. p.m., or 38 minutes after sunset; and on the 26th at 6h. 3m. p.m., or 19 minutes after sunset. He is due south on the 1st at 2h. 29m. a.m., on the 15th at 1h. 29m. a.m., and on the last day at 0h. 23m. a.m. He is near the Moon on the 20th, and at his least distance from the Sun on the 25th at midnight.

Saturn rises on the 6th at 7h. 57m. p.m., or 1h. 23m. after sunset; which interval gradually decreases to 1h. 5m. by the 16th, and to 49 minutes by the 26th, the planet rising on this day at 6h. 36m. p.m. He is due south on the 1st at 3h. 7m. a.m., on the 15th at 2h. 10m. a.m., and on the last day at 1h. 7m. a.m. He is near the Moon on the 21st.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Feb. 6, 1880) with codicil (dated July 13, 1880) of Samuel Sutton Rawlinson, of Clapham Park, who died on July 18 last, was proved on the 4th inst. under £60,000. There are various legacies to his son, Albert Rawlinson, his son-in-law, his grandchildren, solicitors, servants, and others, and the residue is left to his said son and the trustees of his daughter, Mrs. Albert Stretton. Testator's real estate at Battersea Park is devised to his daughter's trustees.

The will (dated Aug. 1, 1879) of Mr. James Beaumont, late of Arundel House, Lee, Kent, who died on May 21 last, was proved on the 14th inst. by Mrs. Eliza Charlotte Beaumont, the widow, Charles Shepheard, and William Coppard Beaumont and Edward Beaumont, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator gives £1500 to the Royal Female Philanthropic Society, £200 to the Society for the Suppression of Vice; £100 to his unmarried daughters for the purchase of penny and twopenny tracts to be distributed in the colonies or in workhouses and hospitals; bequests in favour of his children; annuities to his sisters; and pecuniary legacies and memorial rings to friends, clerks, and others. The residue of his real and personal estate he leaves to his wife.

The Scotch Confirmation (dated the 16th ult.) of Mr. Alexander Johnston, Writer to the Signet, formerly of Edinburgh, and late of Foveran House, Aberdeenshire, who died on June 14 last, granted to Dr. William Johnston, the nephew, and Arthur David Morice, the executors nominate, was sealed in London on the 26th ult., the inventory given in upon oath of the personal estate in England and Scotland amounting to upwards of £35,000.

The will (dated Dec. 23, 1878) of Mr. Philip Haughton James, formerly of Sidmouth, Devon, but late of No. 5, Southwick-place, Hyde Park, who died on June 2 last, was proved on the 28 ult. by Mrs. Alice James, the widow, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator, after making some bequests to his wife and giving some other legacies, leaves the residue of his personal estate upon trust for his children, if any; and in default of children, it is to be held upon the trusts of the marriage settlement of Mrs. Marianne Sarah Wrey. His real estate in the island of Jamaica and elsewhere he gives to his wife for life, and then to his children, if any. In default of children, the testator settles the same upon his brother, John Haughton James.

The will (dated Jan. 19, 1866) of Mrs. Millicent Clitherow, late of Green-street, Grosvenor-square, who died on the 9th ult., was proved on the 29th ult. by Mrs. Felizarda Rudge, the sister, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. The testator gives a legacy to her servant, and the remainder of her moneys, stocks, funds, and securities to her six nephews and nieces. The residue of her property she leaves to her said sister.

The Irish probate, granted May 31 last, at Dublin, of the will (dated March 10, 1874) with a codicil (dated July 28, in the same year) of Sir Edward Richard Borough, Bart., late of Glenaveena, in the county of Dublin, army agent, who died on Dec. 3 last, at 74, Lower Leeson-street, Dublin, to Lieut.-General Robert Wardlaw, C.B., and Miss Elizabeth Borough, the daughter, was sealed in London on the 14th ult., the aggregate personal estate in England and Ireland being sworn under £18,000. The only persons interested under the will are testator's four daughters, Dame Margaret Anna Maria Campbell, Miss Elizabeth Borough, Miss Augusta Frances Borough, and Mrs. Emily Georgina Brownrigg.

The will (dated Nov. 3, 1874) with a codicil (dated June 20, 1877) of Mr. William Love, formerly of No. 1, Lansdowne-terrace, Brixton, but late of The Park, Highgate, who died on Dec. 24 last, has been proved by the Rev. James Archer Spurgeon and William Burrough Hill, the nephew, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £14,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Mrs. Sarah Love, an annuity of £270, and also some house property for life: at her death the said houses are given to his brother and other relatives. There are numerous legacies to his executors, friends, and others, including an annuity to his sister; and he appoints the Rev. James Archer Spurgeon sole residuary legatee.

The will (dated Oct. 3, 1874) of Lady Charlotte Corker, formerly of Fenny Stratford, but late of Stony Stratford, Bucks, who died on Nov. 18 last, was proved on the 4th inst. by the Hon. Robert Massham, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £10,000. The testatrix bequeaths £500 to the Society in London for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, to be expended in mission work, and not added to capital. The deceased was the fourth and youngest daughter of the second Earl of Romney, and was married to the Rev. George William Corker, who survived her, but has since died.

The will (dated May 13, 1878) with two codicils (dated Jan. 16, 1879, and May 24, 1880) of the Rev. John Cale Miller, D.D., Canon of the cathedral church of Rochester and Vicar of Greenwich, who died on the 11th ult., was proved on the 7th inst. by the Rev. Henry Walter Miller and Francis Hugh Miller, the sons, and the Rev. Joseph William Marshall, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £8000.

The will (dated Feb. 11, 1880) of Mr. David Inglis Money, late of Stodham Park, Petersfield, Hants, who died on the 16th ult., was proved on the 30th ult. by William James Money, C.S.I., the son, and Wigram Eliot Money, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £7000.

The will (dated July 10, 1856) of Sir Edward Eyre Williams, formerly of Melbourne, one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the colony of Victoria, and late of No. 9, Raly-place, Bath, who died on April 30 last, was proved on the 16th ult. at the district registry, Bristol, by Dame Jessie Williams, the widow and sole executrix, to whom he gives, devises, and bequeaths all the real and personal estate to which he may be entitled at the time of his decease absolutely. The personal estate is sworn under £6000.

The will (dated Oct. 14, 1875) with two codicils (dated Jan. 1, 1876, and Sept. 5, 1877) of Mr. Henry Hyndman Kennedy, late of Pitmures and Nairn, N.B., and of No. 5, Clarendon-place, Hyde Park, who died on June 20 last, at Fort Augustus, Inverness-shire, was proved in London on the 7th inst. by Edward Tompson and David Brand, two of the surviving executors, the personal estate being sworn under £5000.

A new wholesale and retail fish market was opened at Newcastle-on-Tyne last week by the Mayor.

The Queen in Council has approved of the retirement, upon an allowance, of Professor Liston from the chair of Hebrew and Oriental languages in the University of Edinburgh. He was appointed in 1848.

A new life-boat, presented to the National Life-Boat Institution by Messrs. Townsend, of Manchester, at a cost of about £1000, and which is intended to be stationed at Saltburn, was launched at West Hartlepool on the 19th inst. A procession was formed, which paraded the town, and the life-boat was named the Charles and Ann.

THE LATE LORD STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE, K.G.

LORD STRATFORD DE REDCLIFFE.

This venerable, aged, and long renowned diplomatic servant of British policy in Eastern Europe, whose death was announced last week, was interred on Saturday at Frant, near Tunbridge Wells, where he latterly resided.

Stratford Canning was born in London on Jan, 6, 1788. He was the youngest son of Mr. Stratford Canning, a merchant in the City, but an Ulsterman, from Garvagh, near Londonderry. The Right Hon. George Canning, who became an eminent statesman, and Prime Minister in 1827, was his cousin, and helped him into public life. He was educated at Eton, and at King's College, Cambridge; after which he was employed in the Foreign Office. In 1808 he was sent as attaché to Sir Robert Adair on a special mission to Constantinople. He there became secretary to the Embassy. In 1814, promoted to the rank of Minister Plenipotentiary in Switzerland, he took part in framing the treaty by which the Swiss Cantons were united into the Helvetic Confederation. He was present at the Congress of Vienna in the following year. In 1820 we find him sent on a special mission to Washington. In November, 1823, he was made Plenipotentiary in London for negotiating certain important matters with the United States. In the following year he was sent on a special mission to St. Petersburg to ascertain the designs of the Czar towards Greece, whose cause the chief Powers of Europe were then anxious to maintain against the Turks. In 1825 he went as Ambassador to Constantinople, to use his influence with Sultan Mahmoud in favour of the Greek nation. He came to England in order to take part in the Conferences in London, before those measures which led to the battle of Navarino. Stratford Canning, after the death of his illustrious cousin, was rewarded for his diplomatic services with the Grand Cross of the Bath. He had, in 1828, been returned to Parliament as one of the members for Old Sarum. He sat, too, for one or two Sessions as member for Stockbridge, Hants. In 1831 Stratford Canning was intrusted, as Special Ambassador, with the settlement of the questions pending between the Porte and Greece. He visited Nauplia, where he attempted to compose the disputes of the Greek factions. Arriving in Constantinople, he carried on, with the French and Russian Ambassadors, negotiations on Greek affairs, the result being the definitive Treaty of July 21, 1832. This work over, Sir Stratford Canning returned to London. In 1833 he was appointed by Earl Grey to be Ambassador at St. Petersburg; but the Emperor Nicholas declined to receive him; and after some months he resigned his post. In January, 1835, he was chosen in the Conservative interest for King's Lynn, which he continued to represent in three Parliaments till the winter of 1841.

Then he was appointed to succeed Lord Ponsonby as Ambassador at Constantinople. It is in this capacity that the name of Sir Stratford Canning will be permanently remembered both at home and abroad. He held the post under several different ministries of opposite politics. Each succeeding Cabinet, in dealing with questions of foreign policy in the East of Europe, was largely guided by the information and advice which, from his vast experience, he was able to tender. His ability and authority were chiefly exhibited at the period of the Crimean War. It is certain that he exerted an unparalleled influence in the councils of the Porte, chiefly through the confidence placed in him by the Sultan Abdul Medjid. Probably no Englishman will ever again attain to a like power in Turkey, or find his name to the same extent an object of respect.

In the early part of 1852, during Lord Derby's first Premiership, Sir Stratford Canning was raised to the dignity of the Peerage by the title of Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe. This title he chose in order to assert his relationship to William Canynge, the munificent merchant of Bristol in the reign of Edward IV., who founded or completed the church of St. Mary Redcliffe at Bristol. Lord Stratford was twice married—first in 1816, to Harriet, daughter to Mr. Thomas Raikes, but she died in the following year; secondly, in 1827, to Elizabeth Charlotte, daughter to Mr. James Alexander, of Somerhill, near Tunbridge, a cousin of the late Earl of Caledon. By the latter marriage his Lordship had four children—three daughters, and an only son who died in 1878, so that the title has become extinct. One of the ribbons of the Order of the Garter becomes vacant by Lord Stratford's death.

THE NEW INLAND REVENUE ACT.

The Act 43 and 44 Vic., cap 20, which received the Royal assent on the 12th inst., has been issued, containing fifty-seven sections and several schedules on the new duties and the regulations to be enforced on the licensing system. The statute is divided into five parts. On Oct. 1 next the excise duties on malt are to be repealed, as also the customs duty on malt. Rules are to be observed to obtain an allowance on stock, and to be ascertained between Sept. 27 and 30, and officers to enter the premises of a malt trader. On and after Oct. 13 next the new licenses to brewers in the United Kingdom to be annually. On a license to be taken out by a brewer for sale £1, and on a license by any other brewer 6s. On and after Oct. 1 the excise duty on beer brewed in the United Kingdom to be calculated according to the specific gravity of the worts. Upon every thirty-six gallons of worts of a specific gravity of 1057 degrees the duty of 6s. 3d., and so in proportion for any difference in quantity or gravity. The duty on beer to become due on being charged by the officer, but to a brewer for sale to be made up at the close of each month, and the time of payment not to be later than the fifteenth day of the month succeeding the month in which the duty was charged. A "brewing book" is to be delivered to brewers, and entries to be made, and the vessels in the rooms to be marked. A fine of £100 can be levied for obstructing an officer. There are regulations as to brewers other than brewers for sale.

It is stated in the annual report of the Commissioners in Lunacy, just issued, that the total registered number of lunatics in England and Wales on Jan. 1, 1880, was 71,191, being an increase of 1306 over the total registered number on Jan. 1, 1879. The classification of the 71,191 lunatics is as follows:—4066 males and 3554 females, private patients; and 28,098 males and 35,473 females, paupers.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1880.

At length the end of the Parliamentary Session is close at hand. Next week, in all probability, we shall be able to speak of it as a matter of history. We defer till then any detailed account of the Measures which will have been passed, and of the state in which they passed. It has been a broken Session and an unusually troubled one; but it must be regarded as preliminary only. No great Measure has been introduced. The Legislation which has been proposed by Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet has necessarily been restricted to secondary matters. Time and circumstances equally forbade an initiation of what it has been the fashion to characterise as "heroic" changes. The House of Commons, however, has stood its first test without any serious detriment to its character. The majority has used its great power moderately and with consideration. It has borne provocation with patience. It has listened to reason, whenever and howsoever presented to it. It has worked hard. It has shown a capacity for self-denial rarely before exhibited. It has preferred the interests of the country whenever they came in conflict with merely selfish interests. Mistakes it has made, no doubt, but one can hardly call in question the patriotism of the motives which have usually influenced its proceedings. There has been, perhaps, too great a propensity to talk. On the part of some there have been proceedings which have borne the semblance of Party faction. Occasionally, scenes have occurred calculated to lower the dignity of the Legislature. Perhaps this was inevitable, considering the proximate antecedents of political parties; but, all things taken into account, the representatives of the people returned at the General Election have, we believe, fairly given effect to the views and wishes of the Constituent bodies from whom they received their mandate. The country, even at its highest pitch of excitement, was never in a revolutionary mood. The House of Commons has avoided all extremes. Liberal in its general tendency, it has been cautious in its practical decisions. It is now about to separate for the enjoyment of its hardly-earned holidays. Whether it will meet again before Christmas will mainly depend upon the condition of Ireland. The Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant seems tolerably confident that he may be able to get through the Recess and preserve order in the Sister Isle without need of imposing additional restrictions upon the Civil Rights of any portion of its inhabitants; and we think it may be fairly anticipated that the harvest which is now well on towards being secured will go far towards abating, for the time being, the distress and discontent which have recently pervaded some districts of Ireland.

The spell of fine, dry summer weather with which we have been lately favoured, locally chequered, it is true, by occasional storms of heavy rain, hail, and thunder, has also brightened, in some considerable degree, the outlook of Great Britain as to a revival of trade. An average yield of the fruits of the earth may now be relied upon, without much hesitation, for the ensuing year, and will stay, to some extent, the terrible depression under which agricultural employment has recently staggered. It will not, even at best, recoup the heavy losses which Tenant Farmers have sustained. It will not be followed by large profits to those who are mainly dependent upon the cultivation of the soil. But even the measured bounty of Nature, in return for the cost and care bestowed upon her, will probably suffice to prevent any large addition to the burdens or the losses which this important industrial class has been compelled to bear; and it will certainly tell with no little weight upon the activity and enterprise of Trade and Commerce. At any rate, it encourages the public to look forward with hope, if not with unfaltering faith, to next year's progress; and, while admitting the uncertainty of the future in all human affairs, it warrants a far higher degree of hopefulness, and even cheerfulness, than it has been possible to indulge in for some time past.

Nor is this brighter prospect much clouded over by existing perplexities and dangers in regard to our Foreign relations. On Monday night Lord Granville made a statement in the House of Lords respecting the present position of affairs in South-Eastern Europe. The picture, it must be confessed, was not very flattering. The Turkish Government, whether in regard to Montenegro, Greece, or Armenia, has not yet come to an end of its dilatory expedients for frustrating, if possible, the ameliorative stipulations of the Treaty of Berlin. But the concert of the signatary Powers remains unbroken. The decisions at which they have arrived, and which have been announced to the Porte in a Collective Note, are to be observed by the Sultan's Government without change. If a display of Naval Force should become necessary, it will be made. If more coercive means are required, they will be resorted to. The will of Europe having been ascertained and clearly defined, is to be eventually enforced, if so it must be. It is not, however, anticipated that the Government of the Sultan will seriously withstand the pressure about to be put upon it. It has almost come to the end of its pleas for procrastination. It begins to understand that they are not likely to be of the least avail for its purpose; and hence, although it will probably yield with an ill grace to what it finds it impracticable to evade, or to avert, it may be expected ultimately to swallow the bitter medicine commended to its lips, and thereby to remove all present danger to European peace. Of the Afghan War we need not speak, save to express our thankfulness that the dark rumours of the last fortnight have resolved themselves chiefly into fictions or fancies; that things look more hopefully as well in a political as in a military sense; and that, barring unforeseen incidents, there seems to be a reasonable probability of an early extrication of the Indian Government from the perplexities and perils which its invasion of Afghanistan brought upon it. The latest news from South Africa is, we may add, of a reassuring character. The spirit of aggression which the Cape Government had stimulated having toned down, Frontier relations are assuming a more peaceful form, and the firmness of the Colonial Office in refusing its sanction to violent measures will, it may be hoped, prevent any outbreak of further hostilities.

The protracted Parliamentary Session has placed its business in unfortunate competition with the Annual Meetings of several Associations, usually timed to follow the Prorogation of Parliament. The British Association at Swansea, the Archæological Association at Devizes, the Iron and Steel Institute at Düsseldorf, the Eisteddfod at Carnarvon, and the International Law Association at Berne, have discussed at their respective Conferences or Congresses, or whatever other designation their meetings usually take, various subjects of deep interest and, we may add, of considerable importance to society. We have no space now for commenting on their proceedings. This year, Politics present more attractions than Science. We regret that the opportunities of the former should have clashed with those of the latter, and can only hope that the contretemps will be as exceptional as it is disappointing.

The Ministerial Whitebait Dinner was held at Greenwich on Wednesday.

Her Majesty has approved the appointment of Viscount Enfield to the Under-Secretaryship at the India Office, in the room of the Marquis of Lansdowne, resigned.

As we announced some weeks since, the Right Hon. W. P. Adam, M.P., has succeeded the Duke of Buckingham as Governor of Madras. Her Majesty has been pleased to approve of the appointment. Mr. Adam's appointment will create a vacancy in the Ministry, where he holds the post of First Commissioner of Works, and in the Parliamentary representation of Clackmannan. For the latter it has for some time been arranged that Mr. Balfour, Solicitor-General for Scotland, shall present himself as a candidate. Mr. Adam will not leave England to assume his office in India until about the end of October. The Duke of Buckingham's term of office does not expire till Nov. 3 next. In a Committee-room of the House of Commons on Tuesday, Mr. Adam was presented with a testimonial, which had been subscribed for by members of the Liberal Party both in and out of Parliament. The testimonial consisted of portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Adam, and a piece of plate, which bore an inscription expressing the high appreciation by the subscribers of the political services rendered by the right honourable gentleman to his Party from 1865 to 1880.

The Patent Office of "Rouge Croix" Pursuivant in the Heralds' College, London, has been conferred by her Majesty on Mr. Henry Farnham Burke, eldest son of Sir Bernard Burke, C.B., Ulster King of Arms, and nephew of Mr. Serjeant Peter Burke, of the English Bar.

A distinguished service reward of £100 per annum has been conferred upon Sir W. M. Muir, M.D., K.C.B., Director General of the Army Medical Department, on the special recommendation of the Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief.

Mr. R. B. Chapman, C.S.I., Financial Secretary to the Government of India, intends, it is announced, to resign his appointment and return to England with Sir John Strachey.

The Queen has conferred the honour of knighthood on the following gentlemen:—Mr. Rupert Kettle, in consideration of his services in connection with the establishment of boards of arbitration between employers and employed. Mr. L. S. Jackson, on his retirement from an Indian Judgeship; and Dr. Edward B. Sinclair, in recognition of the services he has rendered to the Army by training nurses for its benefit.

Mr. Richard Bullen Newton, assistant naturalist, under Professor Huxley, in the Museum of Practical Geology, Jermyn-street, has been appointed second-class assistant in the geological department of the British Museum.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

France has had during the past week two heroes whose names and fame have been tossed on all men's tongues. One is a defunct hero—he has been dead, to tell truth, about a hundred and seventy years; and his countrymen during his lifetime treated him very shabbily, denying him bread, driving him out of France because he was a Protestant, and so forth. Now everybody is lauding him to the skies. The other hero is still extant; and the majority of Republican Frenchmen would dearly like to hang him or to burn him alive. Let us deal with the departed hero first. On Sunday last there was unveiled at the fine old city of Blois a statue of the celebrated Huguenot physician and mechanical inventor Dr. Denis Papin. The monument was inaugurated by a glowing oration from M. Ferdinand de Lesseps.

Now M. de Lesseps is a very clever and a very energetic gentleman; but on reading the speech which he delivered last Sunday the mind is irresistibly led to adopt one of two conclusions: either that M. de Lesseps has failed to make an exhaustive study of the history of the Steam-Engine, or that his ardour as a patriot has militated against his accuracy as a scholar. "The Watts, the Fultons, and so many more," said M. de Lesseps, "have only 'agencé,' combined and modified, that which Papin discovered. Who, then, is the real inventor of the Steam-Engine? Posterity has replied—'A Frenchman, a Blesois, Denis Papin.'" M. de Lesseps' eloquent but unhistorical peroration was greeted by loud shouts of "Vive Denis Papin!"

As a matter of fact, Posterity has not by any means pronounced the reply ascribed to her by the indefatigable promoter of the Suez Canal. There can be no doubt that Denis Papin was the inventor of the safety-valve, which formed an integral part of his famous marmite or Digester; and the principle he introduced therein is still observed in the pin-hole made in the soldered down can of meat when it is to be subjected to the action of extreme heat for the purpose of preservation. But Papin did not, any more than did his contemporary Savery, discover the principle of the formation of a vacuum by the condensation of steam; the fact that such a vacuum could thus be formed having been known long before their time, and even long before the principle of atmospheric pressure had been established. In his attempt to construct a practical working steam-engine it is well known that Papin broke down; and he was so thoroughly convinced of the superiority of Savery's engine (soon to be superseded by Newcomen's) that he abandoned his own contrivance and adopted Savery's. Denis Papin was no more the "inventor" of the steam-engine than Lord Brougham was the "inventor" of photography, to the discovery of which the versatile Peer laid claim in his Autobiography.

According to the writer of an able article on Denis Papin in the Pall Mall Gazette, we must abandon as a myth that dear old story of James Watt having learned his first lesson in the dynamics of steam from his mother's tea-kettle. The writer in the Pall Mall states that Watt's earliest instructor in steam-power and the utility of the safety-valve was a Papin's Digester. It is as likely as not that such an apparatus may have formed part of the stock of his father, who was a most ingenious and mechanically minded man—a dealer in ships' stores at Greenock. It is more probable, however, that young James's attention was first seriously directed to safety-valves, piston-rods, and cylinders, when Professor Anderson intrusted him with the task of repairing that model of Newcomen's engine which is still preserved in the Hunterian Museum University of Glasgow.

Mem.: Did you ever see a Papin's Digester—which will dissolve bones, they say? I never saw one, although I have a working drawing of the once renowned marmite autodare lying before me, as I write. But here is a curious suggestion of the association of ideas. You know how often Papin's Digester, as a satirical metaphor, turns up in the writings of Mr. Thomas Carlyle. I wonder whether Mr. Carlyle, in his studious youth, ever mused over that model of Newcomen's engine in the Hunterian Museum at Glasgow, and whether anybody ever told him the story of young Watt, and the Digester at Greenock.

As regards Hero Number Two, he bears the scarcely euphonious name of Marcerou. He is the Commissary of Police attached to the Versailles Railway station, and was formerly a Lieutenant in the regiment of "Lanciers de l'Impératrice." He has filled, too, another post—having been governor of the prison called "Les Chantiers," in which, in 1871, a vast number of Communist prisoners—men, women, and children—were confined. It will always remain one of the most horrible features of the French internecine struggle of '71 that not only women but the merest brats were made political prisoners of, and tried by court-martial.

Commissary Marcerou is accused by the Radical Republican press in France, and notably by the irreconcilable Intransigeant, the organ of the amiable M. Henri Rochefort, with having, during his tenure of power at Les Chantiers, systematically maltreated and tortured his prisoners, especially the women and children, in the most fiendish manner. All the prison horrors depicted in Mr. Charles Reade's "It is Never Too Late to Mend" (they are not by any means ideal horrors, but are based on the real brutalities inflicted on prisoners by a former governor of Birmingham Gaol), all the sickening details of the cruelties wreaked by the horrible Huggins (see Hogarth's engraving of a Committee of the House of Commons examining the instruments of torture) on the miserable captives in the Fleet, seem, to believe the Intransigeant and its partisans, to have been surpassed by this man Marcerou. The witnesses against him make their accusations openly and give their names and addresses; and for at least three weeks M. Rochefort has been "hammering away," so to speak, at the Government with the demand that an official inquiry should be made into the Marcerou case. At length it has been officially intimated to the Versailles Commissary of Police that he must either bring an action for libel against the Intransigeant or resign his post.

In matters affecting the primary liberties of the subject our Republican friends in France, for all their fine talk about Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity, and the Rights of Man, do not appear to have mastered, as yet, even the A B C. In England, whether a Liberal or a Conservative Government was in power, the Marcerou case would be at once taken up by authority and sifted to the bottom; but so bitter and so lacking in impartiality are party politics in France that for a long time the reactionary press completely ignored the charges against Commissary Marcerou; and even now, when the Government has reluctantly taken action in the matter, the journals reputed to be bien pensants plead that, as the Communists have been amnestied, Marcerou (supposing him to have been guilty of the enormities alleged against him) is also entitled to an Act of Oblivion. The Government and the people of the United States were not of this opinion when, at the termination of their Great Civil War, they insisted on the trial and condign punishment (he was most satisfactorily hanged) of a wretch whose name I am glad to forget, who had tortured to death the Federal prisoners of war intrusted to his keeping.

In any case, Marcerou is not a pretty name; and this reminds me that a considerable number of my correspondents argue that there is really nothing in a name, and that its seeming euphony or cacophony depends entirely on surrounding circumstances and dependent associations. One lady correspondent, however, taking an opposite view, points out that Napoleon the First, in one of his conversations at St. Helena, ascribed much of his success in his first campaign in Italy to the mellifluous influence of his name over the people. "Napoleone Buonaparte" is certainly a most beautiful name, although at a ball at Milan, once, it afforded an Italian lady the opportunity of saying a very witty and a very bitter thing to the victor of Marengo, who (he was habitually rude to ladies) had snatched a flower from her corsage, saying "Tutti gli Italiani sono ladroni:"—all Italians are thieves. "No, Signore Generale," replied the lady with a low curtsey; "non tutti, ma Buona Parte:" not all Italians, but a good part of them. She had him there.

I happened to mention champagne last week in connection with whitebait. The bibliography of the Queen of Wines—Burgundy is King—would make a very interesting study—as interesting as that of cigars. What were the earliest brands of champagnes popular in England? Coleridge mentions having drunk "Mr. Mumm's Rudesheimer" at Cologne; but he says nothing of Mumm as a manufacturer of champagne at Rheims or Epernay. The earliest champagne brand that I can remember is Clicquot; and nearly forty years ago, when Mr. Thackeray was writing his "History of the Next French Revolution" in Punch, the two champagnes which he particularised were (if I remember aright) Ruinart, and Moet and Chandon. There must have been a goodly quantity of champagne drunk at Whitehall in the reign of Charles the Second, when we were at peace with France. What was the average price of champagne in England between 1660 and 1680? And, again, how much did champagne cost in 1810, when we were at the fiercest of wars with our gallant neighbours, and the Berlin and Milan decrees on one side the Channel and our Orders in Council on the other were in fullest force?

Champagne was drunk in Scotland, too, although, of course, not to the extent to which claret was consumed, early in the last century. I read in Robert Chambers's Domestic Annals of Scotland that, about 1720, the too hospitable Laird of Culloden used to make every visitor on his first coming to his house "crack his nut," as he phrased it. This was a cocoa-nut holding about a pint; and the nut was filled with champagne, and had to be "cracked" or emptied forthwith.

Among the minor curiosities of a History of Toryism, which I should dearly like to write after I had concluded an Essay on the Wisdom of our Ancestors, as shown by the Stake, the Rack, the Gallows, the Block, the Pillory, the Branding-iron, the Whipping-Post, the Stocks, the Game Laws, the Laws of Primogeniture and Entail, Tithes, Imprisonment for Debt, Intramural Interments, and the Ecclesiastical Courts, it might be noted that the proper Tory thing at the beginning of the century was to deny the right of Napoleon to Gallicise his surname into "Bonaparte." The wicked Usurper—the Corsican Ogre—was bound to be Buonaparte (pronounced "Boneyparty") to the end of the chapter.

Still I contend that there is something in a name, and the quotation of a line from a paragraph in this week's World may help to prove my position. "Ugbrooke Park, for many generations the seat of the Cliffords," says "Atlas," "and where the late Lord died, is to be shut up for a year." Now, Clifford is undeniably a very handsome name; but will anybody contend that Ugbrooke is a pretty one?" Think on the lovely appellations of the seats of some of our great nobles and gentles—Chatsworth, Goodwood, Highclere, Belvoir, Beaudesert, Mentmore, Arundel, Trentham, Clieveden, Knole, the Deep Dene; and then think of Ugbrooke.

And, in connection with sponsorial names, a correspondent, writing from the St. Stephen's Club, mentions the following interesting fact which came under his notice lately while unravelling a law case. Last November there was buried in Cheam Churchyard an old lady, the widow, long surviving, of a gentleman who had for his godfathers two no less distinguished personages than Lord Nelson and General Washington. The gentleman's name was Horatio Washington Kirkpatrick. Was he baptised in America, or did Washington stand godfather by proxy? If the first were the case, it would have been quite possible for Nelson and Washington to have stood together at the baptismal font, assuming Nelson, while in command of a man-of-war, to have visited some Atlantic port. The Duke of Kent, the father of her Majesty Queen Victoria, was present at one of "Lady" Washington's New-Year's receptions at New York.

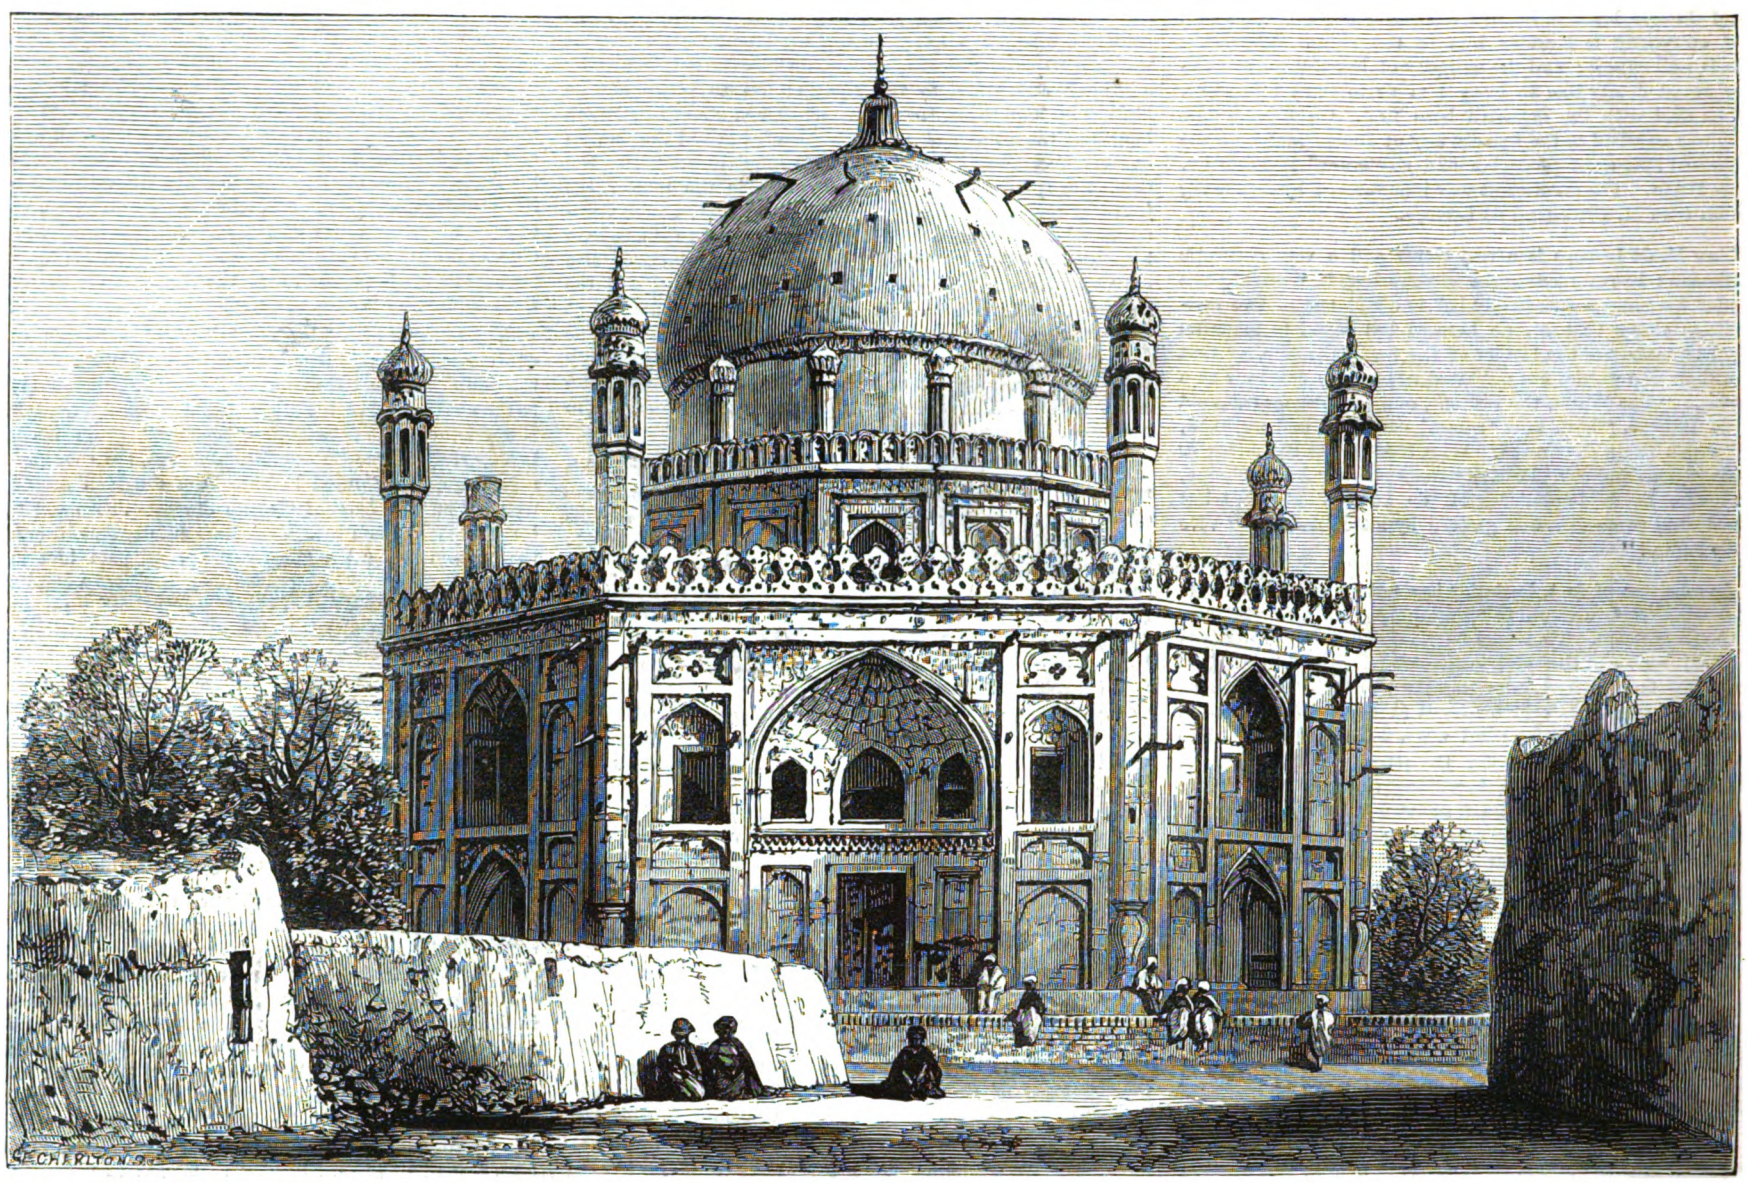
Mem.: There is much matter for curious reflection not only in "odd meetings," but of the odd failures of people to meet one another. Is it generally known that Talleyrand, Alexander von Humboldt, and John Singleton Copley, afterwards Lord Lyndhurst, met quite accidentally at the Falls of Niagara? On the other hand, it is very problematical (of course I do not forget the waiting-room at the Admiralty story) whether Wellington and Nelson ever met. Wellington never saw Marshal Soult until he met the Duke of Dalmatia at the Coronation in 1838. Napoleon certainly did not see Sir Hudson Lowe more than four times during Sir Hudson's five years' governorship of St. Helena. I wonder whether our Charles the Second ever met Molière. He could have easily done so during his ten years of exile. I have an idea, from a passage in St. Evremond, that the Merry Monarch did once meet Ninon de l'Enclos.

The burning of Whitechapel Church has incited an antiquarian-minded gentleman to write to the Times to remind the public that in the month of June, 1649, there was buried in the churchyard of St. Mary Matfelon the body of Richard Brandon, commonly called "Gregory" (from his father's having really borne that Christian name), the common hangman, who was reputed to have been the Man in the Mask who cut off the head of Charles the First. An old tract in the British Museum recites circumstantially that Brandon had thirty pounds for his ghastly work, all paid him in half-crowns, and that he had besides as perquisites a handkerchief and an orange stuck full of cloves which the King had carried in his hand on the scaffold. A gentleman in Whitehall offered him, it is said, twenty shillings for these relics. He refused the offer; but the same night (Jan. 30, 1648-9) he sold the orange and the kerchief in Rosemary-lane for ten shillings.

Mem.: We know from the curious anecdote of Cromwell when Protector asking for an orange as a condiment to a loin of veal at dinner, and his economical lady telling him (we were on the brink of a war with Spain) that "oranges were now oranges indeed," that in the middle of the seventeenth century oranges were held to be dear at a groat, or fourpence apiece.

I read in The Times, in a critique on Mr. Ruskin's "Notes" on William Hunt, the "good old peach and apple painter," aye, and of birds'-nests and eggs and wild flowers, that "he concentrated his finest efforts on the delineation of what may be called the 'comic ploughboy,' and that this individual had in Hunt's paintings exactly the same element of truth to nature that the creations of the late Charles Dickens possessed." What does this mean? If it means that the writer considers such creations of "the late Charles Dickens" as Fagin, Smike, Sykes, Squeers, Sir Mulberry Hawk, Mr. Crummles the Manager, Newman Noggs, Mr. Pecksniff, Mr. Micawber, Mrs. Gamp, and Mrs. Nickleby as untrue to nature, why, I humbly beg his pardon, and will not venture (life being short, and art long) to discuss the matter with him. "Such was the ploughboy" continues the writer "of the Minerva press, such the suburban idea of what a ploughboy should be; and it is always necessary to remember, when thinking of Hunt and his work, that he was essentially a Cockney, and had his only permanent abiding-place in the Hampstead Road."

Why, Lawful Sakes! Mr. Critic, Gainsborough (I suppose it will be admitted that the painter of the "Market Cart" and the "Cottage Girl" knew something about rustic life) was quite as much as, if not more of, a Cockney than William Hunt. He came from Sudbury to London when he was fourteen; he settled successively at Ipswich and at Bath, and for many years his "permanent abiding-place" was Pall-mall, S.W., where he died. George Morland, again (surely he knew something about ploughboys, and pigs to boot), was so "essentially a Cockney" that he was born in the Haymarket, passed most of his wretched life in the taverns and debtors' prisons of the metropolis, and died in a spunging-house in Air-street, Piccadilly. What matters it where the man of genius lives? Tasso wrote the "Gerusalemme" in a madman's cell. Mirabeau penned the "Lettres à Sophie" in the donjon of Vincennes. The fleshly envelope of William Blake dwelt in a mean London lodging; but his heart was in Fairyland. John Flaxman was also "essentially a Cockney" (I do not use the word in the Bow Bells acceptation of the term), for, although he was born at York, he spent (with the exception of his journey to Italy and a brief trip to Paris) the whole of his long and glorious life in London, where he died, in Buckingham-street, Strand, and he was buried in the churchyard of St. Giles's-in-the-Fields. But the artistic soul of John Flaxman lived at Athens, "the Eye of Greece," in the Acropolis, in the shadow of the Parthenon, next door but one to a sculptor by the name of Phidias.



I learn that the office of Rouge Croix Pursuivant-at-Arms (once held, prior to his promotion to a heraldship, by the lamented Mr. James Robinson Planché), and one of the most ancient posts in the London Heralds' College, has, on the nomination of his Grace the Duke of Norfolk, Earl Marshal, been conferred on Mr. Henry Farnham Burke, eldest son of Sir Bernard Burke, Ulster King-at-Arms, and nephew of Mr. Serjeant Burke. But Blue Mantle, I take it, must be the most ancient of the Pursuivants, since I read that he was created by Edward III. at the time when Norroy King, and Windsor, and Chester Heralds were instituted.

Will somebody pity me? The weather is oppressively warm. I have on my "Echoes" file eighty-seven letters from kind correspondents, all really requiring replies, and not one of which I am able to answer this week. All of my editors have written cheerily to me to say that they are about to take their little annual holiday, and that they hope that I intend to remain in town, and "stick to the ship." To-morrow I am going to a wedding, and (according to this week's Punch) I have had my hair cut. Please to pity me, somebody.

THE AFGHAN WAR: PLAIN OF KILLA ABDULLA KHAN, LOOKING EAST OVER PESHIN.

SKETCHES OF AFGHANISTAN.

We are indebted again to Major-General Sir M. A. Biddulph for the Sketch of Killa Abdullah Khan, at the foot of the Khojak Pass on the road from Quetta to Candahar, with the view looking eastward over Peshin, the territory ceded to the British Government by the treaty of Gundamuk. Our Illustrations of Candahar, the North Gate or Eedgah Gate of that city, the old Palace of the Afghan Khans in the Citadel, and the Tomb of Ahmed Shah, are supplied by the series of Candahar photographs from which we have already borrowed, those taken jointly by Major A. G. Owen, 19th Bengal Lancers, and Dr. Whylock.

We have, in our publications of the 7th ult., the 14th, and two following weeks, given much detailed description of Candahar. That city, the capital of Southern Afghanistan, with its citadel held by the British garrison under General Primrose closely besieged during the whole of last month by the large Afghan army of Ayoub Khan from Herat, was delivered only this week by the arrival of General Sir F. Roberts with the British force marching from Cabul. It has thus lately been a place of the greatest interest to our own people, and this will be a sufficient excuse for the multiplicity of our Illustrations. The Eedgah Gate, on the north side of the city opens on the road to the Argandab Valley, where a great battle is likely to be fought this week. The city walls are built mostly of hardened clay, 30 ft. high, and 36 ft. thick at the base, diminishing above to 12 ft.; but they are much broken and worn down, so that it would be easy to scale them without ladders. The area comprised within these walls is about one square mile; its form, as shown in a Plan which was engraved for our Journal of the 7th ult., is an irregular oblong, with a gate in the middle of each of the four sides, and with two main streets crossing each other in the centre, where stands a domed building called the Char-su, the meeting-point of the different bazaar lanes or alleys. Besides the Eedgah gate, on the north side, there is one near the north-east corner, the Durani gate. There are circular bastions at the four corners of the city, but very much out of repair, and they seem not to have been used by the garrison in the recent defence. The citadel, which consists of an inner quadrangle within the city wall, about seventy yards square, is in the middle of the north side, near one of the city gates, and has spacious open parade-grounds adjacent. It is fortified with towers and bastions, and contains the old Palace of the Afghan rulers, once a stately and beautiful mansion, but now in a ruinous condition. The tomb of Ahmed Shah, founder of the Durani dynasty in Afghanistan, stands a little west of the Citadel. It is an octagonal structure, with a cupola and four minarets, rising to the height of 70 ft. above a stone platform which supports it; the diameter is about 40 ft. It is built of coarse stone, intermixed with rude brickwork, and covered with stucco, which is painted red and blue, and has been decorated with figures of flowers and other ornamental devices. The interior, lighted by windows of stone trellis-work, is at once a sepulchre and a mosque, attended by a company of Mollahs, who reside on the premises like monks, and one of whom is always employed in reading the Koran aloud at the founder's tomb. This is covered with a rich shawl, and the pavement with a carpet not less sumptuous; the twelve smaller tombs of Ahmed Shah's children stand round about that of their august sire. The reign of this conquering monarch, who was crowned at Candahar in 1747, continued twenty-six years, and was occupied with incessant warfare, extending his dominions from Persia to the Punjaub, and from Bokhara to the seacoast of Beloochistan. Great part of these conquests, however, was speedily lost by his immediate successor.

The View from Killa Abdullah Khan, sketched by Major-General Sir M.A. Biddulph, who encamped there in December, 1878, with the column of troops under his command advancing from Quetta, looks back over Peshin or Pishin, and is bounded by the Toba mountains. This tract of country, through which lay the route of General Phayre to relieve the garrison at Candahar, has in the last week or ten days been greatly infested by hostile risings of the native tribes, so that his movements, especially the transport department, have been delayed beyond expectation. Killa Abdullah Khan is at the foot of the Khojak Pass on the eastern side, as the fort of Chaman is on the western side, towards Candahar, at the verge of the Kadani plains, shown in General Biddulph's Sketch that was published in our last Number.

We also present a view of the British encampment at Pezwan, from a Sketch by Major J. W. Taylor, the transport officer with that detachment.

IN THE PARK AT ROTTERDAM.

The briskness and gaiety of external aspect, characterising this Dutch commercial city, must be a surprise to foreign visitors accustomed to think of the Dutchmen as a dull and phlegmatic race. Very picturesque and animated scenes are presented by the Boompjes, or quays planted with stately linden trees, where steam-boat passengers land; the windmills rising beside the church steeples; the numerous canals intersecting the streets of the town, so that quaint, old-fashioned houses, carts and horses on the bridges, and the busy crowd of pedestrians, are intermixed with barges and shipping; the gardens, with their brilliant tulip-beds and their brightly-painted summer-houses, on the canal banks; and the industrious washerwomen, never tired of rinsing their linen in the public waters. It is a place full of amusing novelties to the English tourist, and may remind him of some description he has read of the city of Osaca, in Japan. But nothing of all these Rotterdam curiosities is shown in the pleasant and tranquil scene of refined social enjoyment that appears in our front-page Engraving. It is from the drawing by Mr. A. E. Emslie. The city is well provided, as befits its mercantile importance, with museums and galleries of art, Zoological Gardens, and a very pretty park, which last-named public resort, with its trim lawns, parterres, groves, and shrubberies, its concert-rooms, its "buffet" and "buvette," and other refreshing attractions, may even console a Frenchman for not being in Paris. A Dutch private family of the better class, seated at their small tea-table al fresco, on a fine summer evening, while listening to the music of an excellent orchestra in the pavilion above, should pass a very happy hour.

MR. GLADSTONE'S SEA TRIP.

Mr. Gladstone, accompanied by Mrs. Gladstone, several members of his family, and a party of friends, left Charing-cross Station on Thursday week for Gravesend, where he embarked on Messrs. Donald Currie and Co.'s Royal Mail-steamer Grantully Castle, which has been placed at his disposal for a sea trip. The right hon. gentleman was cordially cheered at Charing-cross Station, and had a hearty reception at Gravesend. An address was presented to him from the Liberal Association of that borough. The vessel started on her voyage about four o'clock.

The Grantully Castle arrived at Dartmouth yesterday week, having called at Portland and Torquay on the way thither. Early in the morning there was a thick fog, which delayed the vessel. The ship reached Dartmouth just as a yacht-race, in which the Prince of Wales was taking part, was near the finish. His Royal Highness recognised the Premier and Mrs. Gladstone, waving a salute to them, which was at once seen and acknowledged. The party afterwards proceeded in a steam-launch for a trip up the Dart, Mr. Gladstone being cheered in his progress. On the return journey to the ship he was presented, through Mr. Currie, with an address of sympathy and congratulation from the inhabitants.

During the night the vessel once more cast off, steamed quietly along the coast around Start Point, past the Eddystone Lighthouse and into Plymouth Sound early on Saturday morning. The Grantully Castle resumed her voyage at six a.m., reaching Falmouth the same morning. The Mayor and ex-Mayor of the place had an interview with Mrs. Gladstone, and expressed their regret that the illness of the distinguished statesman prevented them giving him such a reception as they would desire. At Kingstown, where the vessel was late in its arrival, through encountering a fog, the Premier was received with loud cheers by an immense crowd. He afterwards went to Dublin by train, and attended Christ Church Cathedral. Returning to the Grantully Castle, the trip was continued.

Mr. Gladstone reached Greenock early on Monday morning. During the forenoon he visited the ironclad Hercules, which is stationed off that port. A deputation from the Greenock and Renfrewshire Liberal Association waited on the Prime Minister to bid him welcome. In his reply, he said that the Government had not been unmindful of the declarations which they put before the country at the general election, and that as they had begun so would they continue. Hearty cheers were given for Mr. Gladstone from the ships passing up or down the Clyde.

After leaving Greenock on Monday, the Grantully Castle steamed down the Clyde, rounded the Mull of Kintyre, and, after cruising around the Isle of Islay, brought to an anchor off the Isle of Colonsay for the night. Mr. Gladstone was delighted with the scenery which he passed on his journey thither. In the early morning the steam-ship was again under way, and brought to in Oban Bay, at a point from which Donolly Castle, on a rocky promontory to the north of the town, was seen to the best advantage. Mr. Gladstone, Miss Gladstone, and Mr. Currie landed and proceeded to the post office, to receive and dispatch letters, but their stay on shore was only a short one. The Grantully Castle cruised around the west coast of Skye, stopping for the Prime Minister to inspect the Island of Staffa, on which is the celebrated Fingal's Cave, and returned late in the evening to Oban.

Mr. Gladstone has been greatly benefited by the change, and enjoys the voyage immensely. He is in excellent spirits.

The Guildford coach was taken off the road for the season last Saturday, and the horses, twenty in number, are to be sold at Tattersall's next Monday.

FOLKLORE OF SEPTEMBER.

One of the popular names given to the present month by our forefathers was "Barley Month," because, having nearly completed gathering in their barley crops, they commenced paying their attention to the important task of brewing, and getting ready their winter cheer. The many ceremonies, too, which graced the ingathering of the harvest were, formerly, celebrated in the course of this month; and the harvest-home festival was observed with no small rejoicing in most villages, when, from a thousand voices, might be heard the jubilant song of rejoicing—

We have ploughed, we have sowed,
We have reaped, we have mowed,
We have brought home every load,
Hip! hip! hip! harvest-home!

Holy Cross or Holy Rood Day (14th), known also as the "Exaltation of the Holy Cross," was instituted in the seventh century on the occasion of the recovery of a large piece of the pretended real cross by the Emperor Heraclius. In Lincolnshire, it is called "Holy Loo Day." In days gone by, it appears to have been customary to go nutting upon this day, an allusion to which we find in the old play of "Grim, the Collier of Croydon":—

This day, they say, is called Holy-Rood Day,
And all the youth are now a-nutting gone."

In the "Gentleman's Magazine" occurs the following:—"Tuesday, Sept. 14, 1731, being Holy Rood Day, the King's huntsmen hunted their free buck in Richmond New Park, with bloodhounds, according to custom." In an old manuscript, entitled "Status Scholæ Etonensis," dated 1560, we are informed that on a certain day in September (most probably the 14th) the boys of Eton were accustomed to have a holiday, when they wrote verses on the fruitfulness of autumn and the deadly cold of the coming winter; afterwards they went out to gather nuts, which they presented to their masters. In "Poor Robin's Almanack" for the year 1709 we read the following:—

The devil, as the common people say,
Doth go a-nutting on Holy Rood Day;
And sure such evil in some doth lurk,
Going a-nutting do the Devil's work.

St. Ferrol's Day (18th) is celebrated at Marseilles with great pomp. The houses and ships are decorated with flags and flowers; a grand procession takes place, in which gardeners carry wax tapers ornamented with bouquets, as well as vegetables and fruit, and nests of birds. The streets, too, are scattered with flowers; and, on the arrival of the procession at the quay, the prelate blesses the seamen of the port, after which bell-ringing and merriment take place.

There are many proverbs associated with St. Matthew's Day (21st). Owing to the shortening of the days at this season, they have this saying in Germany—

St. Matthew
Get candlesticks new.

And in Italy fine weather is now said to be at an end, the Milan peasantry affirming that "after St. Matthew you will not see many fine days." There is, too, a similar notion in our own country; for, according to a well-known couplet,

St. Matthee,
Shut up the bee.

On this day it has been customary from time immemorial for the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and governors of the several Royal hospitals in London to attend Divine service at Christ Church, Newgate-street, and afterwards to visit the great hall in Christ's Hospital, where two orations are delivered by the two senior scholars of the grammar school. In accordance, also, with an old custom, the principal members of the Fruiterers' Company wait upon the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House and present, for the acceptance of the Lady Mayoress and himself, a splendid assortment of all the choice fruits of the season. It was once the practice for a staff of gaily-dressed porters, walking in single file, to bring the fruit through the City from Farringdon Market, when, it is said, the Lady Mayoress not only gave each carrier a bottle of wine to take home in his empty basket, but, as the Ceremonial Book has it, "regaled" them with a dinner.

At Biddenham, in Bedfordshire, a curious practice is kept upon the 22nd of this month. Shortly before noon, a little procession of villagers convey a white rabbit, decorated with scarlet ribbons, through the village, singing a hymn in honour of St. Agatha. All the young unmarried women who happen to meet this procession extend the first two fingers of the left hand, pointing towards the rabbit, at the same time repeating the following doggrel:—

Gustin, Gustin, lacks a bier!
Maidens, maidens, bury him here!

This ceremony is reported, according to tradition, to date from the year of the first Crusade.

In Laud's Diary, under Sept. 24 (1635), mention is made of Scalding Thursday, which a correspondent of Notes and Queries suggests was a homely term for the day of preparation for that high day Michaelmas, when the victim goose was scalded, plucked, and hung—a week's hanging being the rule for a goose.

Michaelmas Day is nowadays only remarkable as being one of the four quarter days and for the popular custom of eating goose at dinner—a practice, indeed, which has much exercised the ingenuity of antiquaries. The notion that the custom arose from the circumstance that Queen Elizabeth was partaking on this anniversary of a goose, when the news was brought of the defeat of the Spanish Armada, is disproved by the fact that, as far back as the reign of Edward IV., we read of one John de la Hay bringing "one goose fit for his lord's dinner on the Feast of St. Michael the Archangel." Some think it originated in a practice among the rural tenantry of bringing a fine stubble goose to their landlord at Michaelmas when paying the quarter's rent, in the hope of making him lenient. The most probable reason, however, is that Michaelmas Day was a great festival, and geese at this time were most plentiful and in prime condition. In "Poor Robin's Almanack" for 1695 are the following quaint lines:—

Geese now in their prime season are,
Which, if well roasted, are good fare:
Yet, however, friends, take heed,
How too much on them you feed,
Lest when as your tongues run loose,
Your discourse do smell of goose.

It is a popular saying, "If you eat goose on Michaelmas Day you will never want money all the year round." In Yorkshire the festival is known as "Hipping Day," from its connection with a confection of hips, the red berries of the wild rose. At one time Michaelmas was a noted season for provincial fairs, but the greater part of these have been gradually discontinued from year to year. Michaelmas is not without its superstitions. Thus, in Staffordshire, there is a notion prevalent among the peasantry that the Devil always puts his cloven foot upon the blackberries on this day. It is considered, therefore, highly unlucky to gather any more during the remainder of the year—an idea which exists in Ireland. In Suffolk, we hear of the subjoined rhyme:—

At Michaelmas-time or a little before,
Half an apple goes to the core;
At Christmas time, or a little after,
A crab in the hedge, and thanks to the grafter.

There is also a good deal of curious weather-lore. One popular saying informs us that "so many days old the moon is on Michaelmas Day so many floods after." And in some places it is said that if Michaelmas be fair, the sun will shine much in the winter, though the wind will frequently be found in the north-east, and be very sharp and nipping. Another adage tells us how—

The Michaelmas moon
Ilises nine nights alike soon.

The nearest moon to the autumnal equinox is called the "Harvest Moon," rising nearer to the same time each succeeding night, at this time of year, than it does at any other. In Scotland, was formerly made the St. Michael's or Bannock cake, of which all the family and visitors partook. It was the scene of much merriment, as, a wedding-ring having been previously put in it before baking, the person who was lucky enough to get the slice with the ring in it was "was sure to be married before next Michaelmas."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

It would be strange indeed if the York Meeting passed over without leaving any mark upon the Leger quotations, and yet the late gathering on the Knavesmire has left matters almost as they were. None of the cracks engaged at Doncaster left their training-quarters; still the result of the Ebor Handicap and the Great Yorkshire Stakes brought Novice and Napsbury into some slight notice. The performance of the filly in particular was rather smart, as she is evidently a thorough stayer, conceded 12 lb. to the useful Stockmar, and won with a good deal in hand. Turning to the other events of the Wednesday, Metiora proved too good for Clinkumbell in the Filly Sapling Stakes; and a very moderate quartette turned out to oppose the unbeaten Bal Gal in the Prince of Wales's Stakes. President sadly disappointed Robert Peck, who had high expectations of him; and though the Sunshine filly passed the judge's box only half a length behind the "modern Achievement," she could not have finished anywhere near her, except on sufferance. We fear that there is no doubt that Bal Gal inherits her dam's roaring propensities, and, this being the case, she cannot possibly tread in the footsteps of Wheel of Fortune, and add a One Thousand and Oaks to her list of victories. Wandering Nun beat Lucy Glitters and Melmerby very cleverly in a Biennial. The winner has gone on the right way since she made her successful début at Lincoln; but Lucy Glitters, a very nice daughter of Speculum, has been amiss for the greater part of the year, and will see a far better day. On the Thursday, the very useful Simnel had nothing to beat in the Gimcrack Stakes, so he made very light of his penalty; and then Elizabeth once more displayed her brilliant speed by giving Belfry 10 lb. and an easy beating in the Harewood Plate. It is nearly a quarter of a century since a field of eleven turned out for the Great Yorkshire Stakes, and it is as well to make a point of the number, for, when we come to quality, assuredly nine of the eleven were within a stone of such horses as Blair Athol, Achievement, Cremorne, Apology, and Wheel of Fortune, all of whom figured in this race within the past sixteen years. Still, Victor Emanuel, Apollo, and Co., managed to furnish another of those surprises for which this race is so notorious, as they all succumbed to the despised Napsbury, who at once came to 33 to 1 for the Leger, for which he is likely to finish about fourth or fifth; Jenny Howlet was once more well beaten, and the Oaks fillies must have been the worst lot that have contested that race within the memory of man. A very pretty race between Belfry and Stockmar for the Queen's Plate resulted in favour of the former by a head, and this form says a good deal for Novice, who is clearly some 21 lb. in front of Muriel, and may possibly get a place at Doncaster. The meeting wound up very tamely with a couple of walks over.

Meetings have been held during the past few days at Scarborough, Huntingdon, Weymouth, and Warwick; but the results of the various races were only interesting to the persistent followers of the sport.

Monday was the first day of the Torbay Royal Regatta, when prizes amounting to nearly £200 were sailed for. The competitors in the first class were the Formosa, Florinda, Miranda, and Samæna. The Florinda wrested the prize of £75 from the Miranda by thirteen seconds, the latter vessel taking a second prize of £25. The vessels went three times round a twelve-mile course, but before concluding the third round the Formosa, with the Prince of Wales on board, gave up, being a long way astern. In the race for cutters Coryphée was first, with Bloodhound second. The Sayonara carried off the first prize for the 20-tonners, leaving the second prize to Euterpe; whilst Madge was first in the 10-ton class, and Maharanee second.

There is plenty to chronicle in the way of cricket, and, in consequence of the continued fine weather, some very long scores have been made all over the country. Gloucestershire has beaten Lancashire by seven wickets. Dr. W. G. Grace (106), who is in his very best form just at present, batted brilliantly, and, on the other side, Messrs. Taylor (66) and Robinson (51) compiled really good scores. Kent has defeated Derbyshire by ten wickets, this result being mainly due to the fine bowling of Mr. Cunliffe, as no one on either side "came off" with the bat. Sussex v. Hampshire ended in favour of the former by five wickets, no sensational score was made on either side. At the end of last week the Australians sustained their first defeat, at the hands of an Eighteen of Stockport and District, with Emmett, Bates, and Hill. The Colonists were much weakened by the loss of Spofforth and Blackham, and, during the match, Bannerman also hurt one of his hands, and was rendered hors de combat. England v. Australia, which will be played at Kennington Oval on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday next, is exciting an immense amount of interest, and will probably attract an assemblage of something like 20,000 spectators. At present odds of 6 to 4 are laid on England.

On Monday evening W. G. George, amateur champion at one and four miles, will attempt to beat the best time on record—20 min. 22 sec., accomplished by Walter Slade—for the latter distance.

An "All-England Angling Contest" for prizes from £30 downwards, and amounting in the aggregate to £100, took place on the River Witham, between Boston and Lincoln, on Monday. There were 597 competitors, and the winner of the first prize caught 9 lb. 6 oz. of fish. Another competitor, who failed to weigh in, caught 20 lb. of bream.

Partridge shooting began on Wednesday. The reports from various parts of the country differ considerably in their account of the condition of the birds. In some places birds are plentiful, in others scarce; while in many districts shooting will be delayed by the harvest operations. On the whole, however, it would appear that sport is likely to be good.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

On Monday last, at the Gaiety, those talented and popular comedians Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence renewed, under exceptionally gratifying circumstances, their long since formed acquaintance with a British audience. The piece selected for their rentrée was the American drama, in Four Acts, by Mr. B. C. Woolf, called "The Mighty Dollar," described as "an American play" in four acts, by Mr. B. E. Woolf.

Dramatically, "The Mighty Dollar" is rather a "weak-kneed" production. The plot is a feeble one; the characters, apart from those admirably sustained by Mr. and Mrs. Florence, are but pale and shadowy creations; and the piece, with the exception of a fainting-fit or two, is devoid of any striking situations. As for the plot, it may be very briefly summarised. Colonel Tom Dart (is there not a dreadful Colonel Dart in Mrs. Trollope's novel of "Jonathan Jefferson Whitlaw"?) is a "millionaire Railway King," whose wife, Clara, has married him for his millions, her heart having been really given to Roland Vance, a rising young journalist, who has got his own broken heart mended again, and who has fallen in love with Miss Blanche Mossthorne, a very "whole-souled" young lady, who has no yearning for millions and does not jilt him. The millionaire's wife, however, retains sufficient tenderness for her old flame Roland as to seek his forgiveness in a tête-à-tête by moonlight, where her perfectly innocent conversation is overheard by the villain of the piece, an adventurer, named Arthur Lemaitre, and a most contemptible "cuss." Mrs. Dart is subsequently imprudent enough (always with the most innocent intentions in the world) to write to Mr. Vance, asking him to call on her. The villanous adventurer gets hold of this note, and uses it as a means of getting Mrs. Dart into his power, working on the jealousy of the Railway King, her husband, and furthering some "financeering" schemes of his own. All these schemes centre in a certain railway bill then in Congress, and in this bill the Hon. Bardwell Slote, Member of Congress from the Cohosh District (it is not mentioned what State), a "financeering" politician, lobbyist, "log-roller," "wire-puller," and "ringster" is also largely interested. If Congress decree that the projected railway is to pass a place called Chalkville instead of another place, the name of which I failed to catch, but which sounded "Mugglemush," the interested parties will make several millions of dollars all round. In the end the bill is passed, and it is provided that the railroad shall go not by the way the villanous adventurer wishes it to traverse, but through several hundreds of acres of land owned by Roland Vance, who will thus become a millionaire. The Hon. Bardwell Slote is consoled for his misadventures as a financier by marrying the wealthy widow, Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory, "who has lived so long abroad;" the now "Great Vance" espouses the unmercenary Blanche Mossthorne; Colonel Tom Dart is reconciled to his innocent but injudicious spouse; Libby Ray, the niece and ward of Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory, is united to the man of her heart, Charley Brood, instead of an inane British nobleman, called Lord Cairngorn; and the villanous adventurer, foiled and baffled at every turn, is contumeliously kicked out. It would seem to be impossible for any "American" comedy-drama to be constructed without the contumelious kicking out of a villanous adventurer in the Fourth Act.

So much for the plot of "The Mighty Dollar," which, quite as appropriately might be entitled "Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence at Home." They are not only the life and spirit of the piece, but when they are off the stage the action lags and becomes wearisome. The fate of a railroad bill does not in fact possess sufficient humorous interest to enchain the attention of the audience; but directly Mr. and Mrs. Florence reappear, either together or singly, interest is re-awakened again, and the piece goes trippingly. Mr. Hollingshead, who can rarely resist the temptation of being a little didactic and instructive on his play-bills (on revient toujours à ses premières amours), tells us that all Members of Congress in America are "allowed" to use the prefix "Hon." There is no question of "allowance" in the matter, since any American Citizen may call himself anything honoritic that he pleases, but the title of "Honourable" is given by courtesy not only to Senators and members of the House of Representatives, but also to diplomatists, and even to untitled Englishmen travelling in the States. The begging-letter writers, especially, never fail to address you as "Honourable." Mr. Hollingshead says that the Hon. Bardwell Slote is a "slightly exaggerated portrait of a Western Congress man." Now there are Congress men and Congress men. General Garfield, for example, is from the West, and he is an accomplished gentleman. The Hon. Bardwell Slote might hail as a Congress man from the Middle States, or from New York; or he might be a "carpet-bagger" who has got in for a Southern district; but the portrait embodied for us by Mr. W. J. Florence is to my mind not in the slightest degree exaggerated. I have met with scores upon scores of Americans of the stamp which he exhibits—grandiloquent utterers of "tall talk" full, not only of patriotic "buncombe," but of technological forms of speech drawn from the vocabulary of local law courts and local legislatures, rough humourists, and, withal, exceedingly shrewd men of business. But it is a transparent mistake to call "The Mighty Dollar," as it is called in the playbill, a drama "illustrating Life and Manners in the American Capitol" (sic). It only illustrates two particular phases of that life and those manners:—"lobbying" and "financeering." As well might we say that an English drama dealing solely with the mysteries of stock-jobbing and the dealings of Parliamentary agents was illustrative of "Life and Manners in the British Metropolis." It so happens that some of the best and most cultivated society in the world is to be found, during the sitting of Congress in the Federal Capital—at Washington in the District of Columbia. The leading statesmen of the Union are constantly entertaining or being entertained by a brilliant Corps Diplomatique and an affluent banking community. The most renowned Northern and Southern belles come habitually to winter in Washington; the Judges of the Supreme Court give tone and dignity to society; and altogether life in the "Federal Capitol," although not so luxuriously extravagant as at New York and San Francisco, nor so severely intellectual as at Boston, is in the highest degree polished, refined, and enjoyable. Americans, at least, will understand what I mean when I say that the Hon. Bardwell Slote and Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory would patronise Willard's Hotel in preference to Wormley's—which is the American Long's or Claridge's.

As for Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory, as represented by Mrs. W. J. Florence, she is simply superb. She is impayable, or "ongpayable," as she herself would say in her inimitably atrocious French. Again, Mr. Hollingshead didactically warns us that Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory is a "slightly exaggerated portrait of an American travelled lady, rich, good-natured, and somewhat vulgar." Again, on my part, do I fail to see the slightest exaggeration in the portrait; only it might just as well be the portrait of an English as of an American travelled vulgarian. If Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory calls the Pyramid of Cheops the "Pyramid of Chops," did not Theodore Hook's Mrs. Ramsbottom call the Laocoon the Racoon, and define the Vatican as the "Stable where the Pope kept his Bulls?" With my own ears did I, at a table d'hôte at Rome, hear a very wealthy travelled lady, my own countrywoman, remark that she had just been to visit the "Maritime," meaning the Mamertine Prisons, and that she intended purchasing some "Amalakite," meaning malachite jewellery. Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory is not an original character. She is a combination of Mrs. Ramsbottom aforesaid, Mrs. Malaprop, and the Begum, in "Pendennis;" but her wit, her humour, her good-nature, and her wonderful French are all Mrs. W. J. Florence's own. I have seldom seen a part so naturally and unaffectedly acted; and, looking at the drolly farcical elements in the character, it is surprising to mark how very rarely the fun of Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory is strained to caricature.

There is not much to call for remark in the subordinate characters. Mr. F. W. Wyndham, a very promising light comedian, was very modest and unassuming in the part of Roland Vance, and in the few situations where vigour was called for he showed symptoms of much latent power. Mr. Shine made as much as was practicable of the sketchy part of the English tourist. Lord Cairngorn, who is always telling his American friends that they are a very young people, and seems to forget that he is a very young man himself. Mr. Fawcett gave proper emphasis to the extremely repulsive part of the villanous adventurer and "mean cuss," and Mr. Squires did his best to look like a millionaire railway King and an injured husband in Colonel Tom Dart. If the name of Colonel Dart's negro butler is Lafayette Berry, the part was capitally played by Mr. Crutwell. Miss Kate Vaughan was gorgeously apparelled as Blanche Mossthorne (and, indeed, all the ladies appeared to take delight in frequent changes of sumptuous raiment); and Miss C. Gilchrist made a frolicsome and graceful Libby Ray. In time she should develop into a very captivating Ingénue. But as Libby Ray she speaks of herself as being seventeen years of age, and she was clad in the abbreviated costume of a schoolgirl. Surely, peers of the realm do not propose to, and young American gentlemen do not marry, young ladies who, to judge from their attire, might be fourteen. If Miss Gilchrist is to continue to play Ingénues it is time for the sumptuary authorities at the Gaiety to put her into trains.

The length to which these remarks on the "Mighty Dollar" has extended prevents me from doing justice to a capital new ballet at the Alhambra, called "The Alpine Brigands." I shall mention it next week.

P.S.—By a printer's error it was stated last week that poor Miss Neilson was born in 1839: obviously it should have been 1849. Another correspondent tells me that her real name was not Brown, but Bland, and that she was born, not at Leeds, but at Guiseley. Surely it does not matter much now. "The Two Narrow Words Hic Jacet" cover all. G. A. S.

MUSIC.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

The forthcoming meeting of the three choirs of Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester will be the one hundred and fifty-seventh occasion of the kind. The origin and growth of these Festivals, and their speedy development from mere choral performances of services and anthems with organ accompaniment, to grand performances of oratorios with orchestra and eminent solo singers, have too often been narrated in detail to need fresh recapitulation. It is scarcely necessary to remind readers that the object of these festivals is to bring money aid to the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy of the three dioceses. This aid is entirely derived from contributions at the cathedral doors after the services and performances of the week, and from donations otherwise subscribed; the proceeds from the sale of tickets being usually absorbed by the expenses of the festival. In many past instances, indeed, these have exceeded the receipts, and the number of the honorary stewards who are liable for the deficit has been gradually augmented. At the approaching festival the list comprises the names of upwards of 170 of the neighbouring nobility, clergy, and gentry, the president of the festival being the Duke of Beaufort, and the vice-presidents the Lord Lieutenants of the three counties, and the Bishops of the Dioceses.

According to long-past usage, the organist of the cathedral of the city in which the meeting is held acts as conductor; in this case, Mr. C. H. Lloyd; Mr. L. Colborne (of Hereford) presiding at the organ at the oratorio performances in the Cathedral, except on the Wednesday evening, when the organist will be Mr. Done (of Worcester), who will also be the pianoforte accompanist at the secular concerts, and organist at the early cathedral services held on each festival day.

The solo singers engaged are Mesdames Albani and Patey, Misses De Fonblanque, Anna Williams, H. Wilson, Wakefield, and Damian; Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. J. Maas, Mr. Santley, Mr. F. King, Mr. Francis, and Signor Ghilberti.

The band consists of nearly seventy instrumentalists, headed by M. Sainton as principal first violin. The chorus includes—as a matter of course—the three Cathedral choirs, which are augmented by choristers from Huddersfield, Oxford, Bristol, and London.

The festival opens on Tuesday next, and will be inaugurated, as usual, by a special service in the Cathedral, with a sermon, appropriate to the occasion, to be preached by the Dean of Worcester. After a short interval, the festival performances will begin with "Elijah;" the programme of the second morning being a composite one, opening with the two completed movements of Schubert's unfinished symphony in B minor, which is to be followed by Mozart's "Requiem," Spohr's "Last Judgment" completing the day's performances. In the evening (also in the cathedral) "St. Paul" will be given; Thursday morning offering another varied programme, comprising Leonardo Leo's "Dixit Dominus," Palestrina's "Stabat Mater," Mr. Henry Holmes's sacred cantata, "Christmas Day" (first time of performance), and Beethoven's great Mass in D. "The Messiah" will be performed, according to custom, on the Friday morning, and the festival will close, as it opens, with a special cathedral service, including a new "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis," by Mr. C. H. Lloyd, and an anthem by Dr. Stainer, all composed expressly for the occasion.

The first concert of secular music in the Shirehall, on Tuesday evening, will include the performance of Mr. C. H. Parry's setting of scenes from Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound," for solo voices, chorus, and orchestra—composed for this festival. The programme also comprises Mozart's symphony in E flat and Beethoven's overture to "Fidelio," and vocal performances by Madame Albani and other principal singers. At the second concert, on Thursday evening, Schumann's first symphony (in B flat) and Sterndale Bennett's overture, "The Wood Nymph," will be given, and the selection will comprise pieces by the solo vocalists.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"Sacred Songs for Little Singers"—the words by Frances Ridley Havergal, the music composed and arranged by Mr. Randegger—are well adapted to interest juvenile vocalists. The melodies are pleasing, and lie within limited compass, and the pianoforte accompaniment is simple. Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. are the publishers.

"Autrefois, Allegretto par Brinley Richards" (Messrs. R. Cocks and Co.), is a pretty little pianoforte piece, easy of execution, and well calculated for teaching purposes.

Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co. have issued some pleasing vocal and pianoforte music. Among the former are "'Tis years since I beheld thy face," a melodious romance, by Lillie Albrecht; "On the Golden sands," a simple and expressive song, by Isidore de Lara; and "The Cheery Mariners," a bold nautical song, by H. C. Hiller. The same publishers' instrumental issues comprise an effective transcription for the harp, by Mr. Oberthür, of the Bridal chorus, from Wagner's "Lohengrin"; "Souvenirs" (for the pianoforte), from the same composer's "Der Fliegende Hollander," "Rienzi," and "Tannhäuser," some prominent themes from which have been brilliantly arranged by G. Gariboldi, of an easier description, being a series of four pianoforte pieces, entitled "Old England," in which some favourite airs are arranged by Mr. R. Harvey, with a successful combination of brilliancy, and the avoidance of difficulty.

"The Imperial Tutor" for the pianoforte, published by Messrs. Wood and Co., is a well-compiled method of instruction by Carlo Tiesset, who has put together, comprehensively and succinctly, a large amount of valuable information, together with numerous practical exercises—altogether calculated to promote the student's advancement.

Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co. have published a very pleasing canzonet, "I prithee send me back my heart," the words by Sir John Suckling, the music by Maude Valérie White, some of whose songs have lately been very well received in public. The piece now referred to has been sung with success by Mr. Santley. The same publishers have issued "Now was I wrong" and "A face in the crowd," two songs by Louis Engel, the first in spirited waltz temps, the other in the sentimental style; "Stars are with the voyager" and "I think on thee," two very expressive songs by Frank H. Simms, the latter having a violin (or violoncello) obbligato in addition to the pianoforte accompaniment.

"Love bears the Spring" ("Si j'étais garçon"), "Like a young bird" ("Comme un petit oiseau"), and "Oh! how sweet are the flowers" ("Que vous êtes jolies") are songs from Paladilhe's opera "Suzanne," which has obtained much success abroad, and was announced for probable production at the Royal Italian Opera during the past season, but was not brought out. The extracts above specified are pleasingly melodious and essentially vocal in style. They are published by Mr. J. Williams, of Berners-street and Cheapside, who has also issued two Fantasias for the Pianoforte founded on themes from the same opera, one by C. Neustedt, the other by H. Duvernoy. In each of them the subjects chosen are very effectively strung together and elaborated with passages that, while brilliant, are comparatively easy of execution.

From Messrs. Duff and Stewart we have "Among the Sweet Bluebells," ballad, by E. L. Hime; "Thine is the Name," song, by E. R. S. Jervis; "Rimprovero," canzone, by G. Tartaglione; and "A Lock of Golden Hair," by G. F. Kendall. All these are pleasingly melodious, and devoid of any special difficulty. "Ruby—Idyll," by Carl Haruse, and "Rosa Bianca—Valsa Sympatica," by G. Lardelli, are two spirited and effective pianoforte pieces, issued by the same publishers.

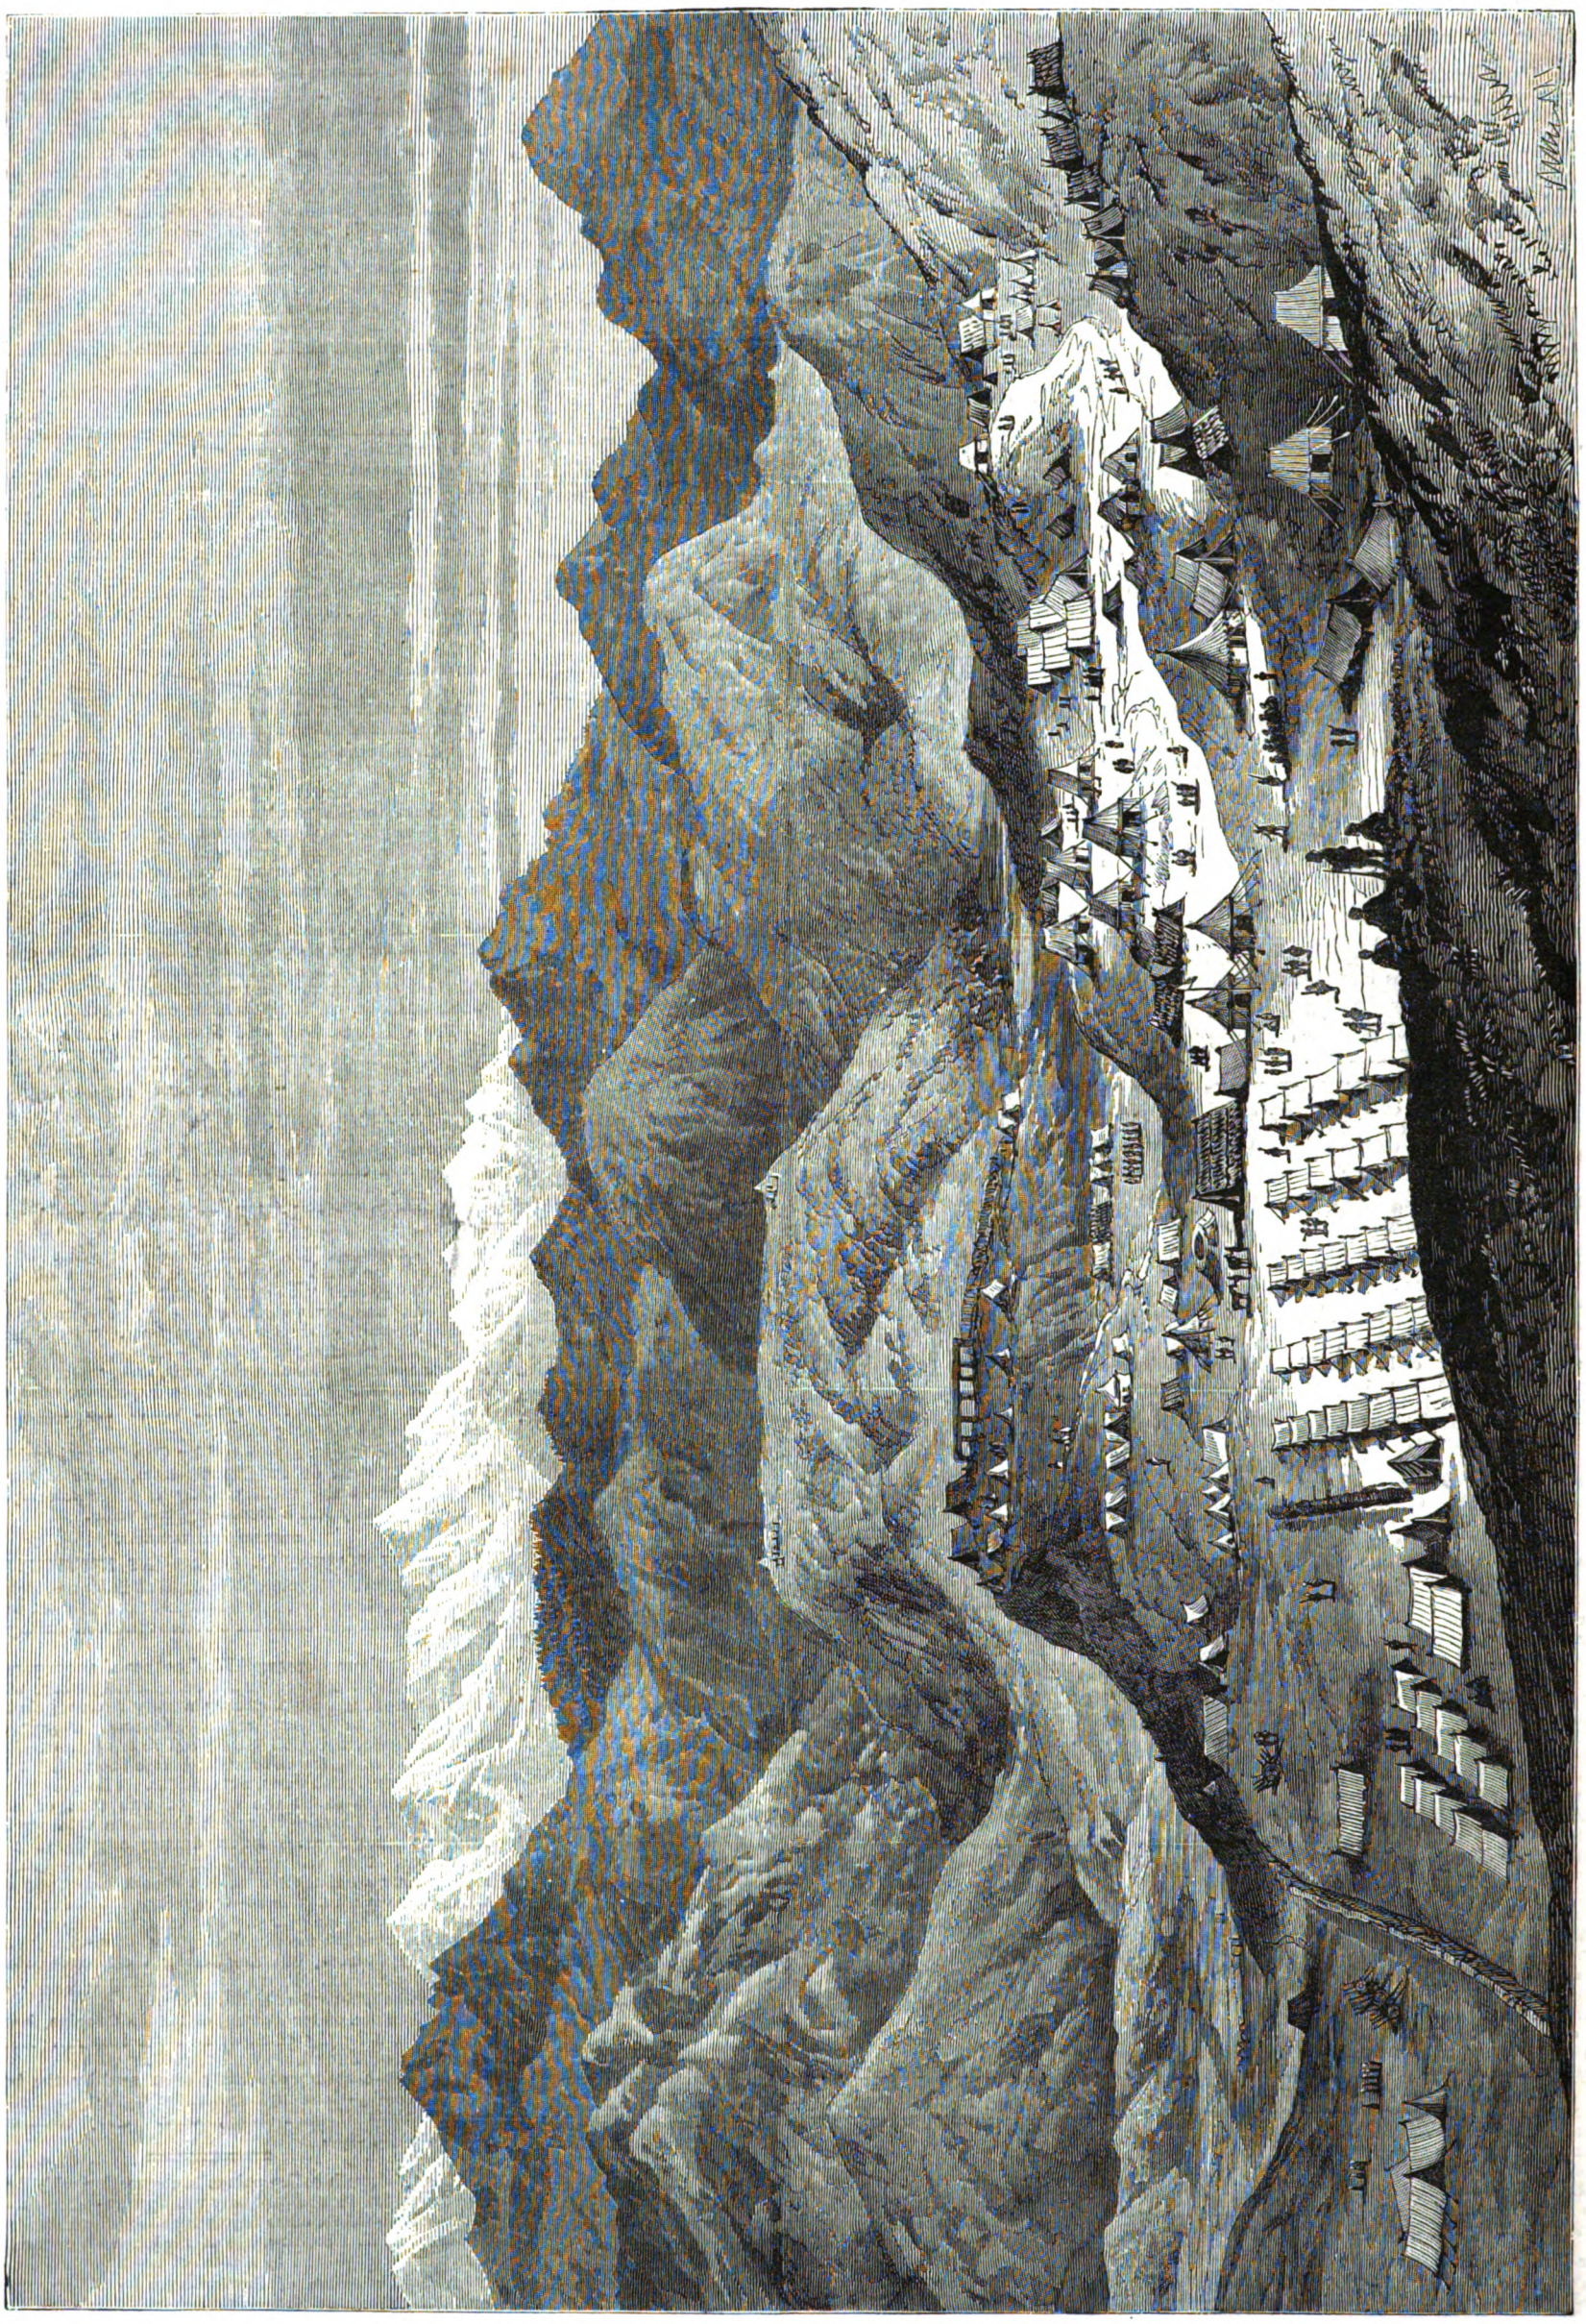
Messrs. Patey and Willis publish some vocal music that will be welcome in drawing-rooms. Signor Pinsuti's song, "The Ferryman," is characterised by great boldness of rhythm in the vocal portion, which is well set off by a florid accompaniment. "The Old Harpsichord," song, by J. L. Roeckel, is simpler in style, but is expressive, and has much of the old English character in its melody. "In a Devonshire Lane," and "Shamrock or Rose"—songs, by Dermott Foyle—are in a pleasing ballad style; as is, also, "Gone!" song, by Agnes Winton. "Twilight" is an expressive duet, by Fabio Campana, in which two equal voices are alternated and combined with pleasing effect.

In "The Linnet's answer," by Ciro Pinsuti (published by Mr. B. Williams, of Paternoster-row), there is much light grace, both in the vocal melody and the accompaniment. It will especially suit a mezzo-soprano voice.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE-BOAT INSTITUTION.

At a meeting of this institution, held at its house, John-street, Adelphi, on Thursday, rewards amounting to £160 were voted to the crews of life-boats for services rendered during the past month.

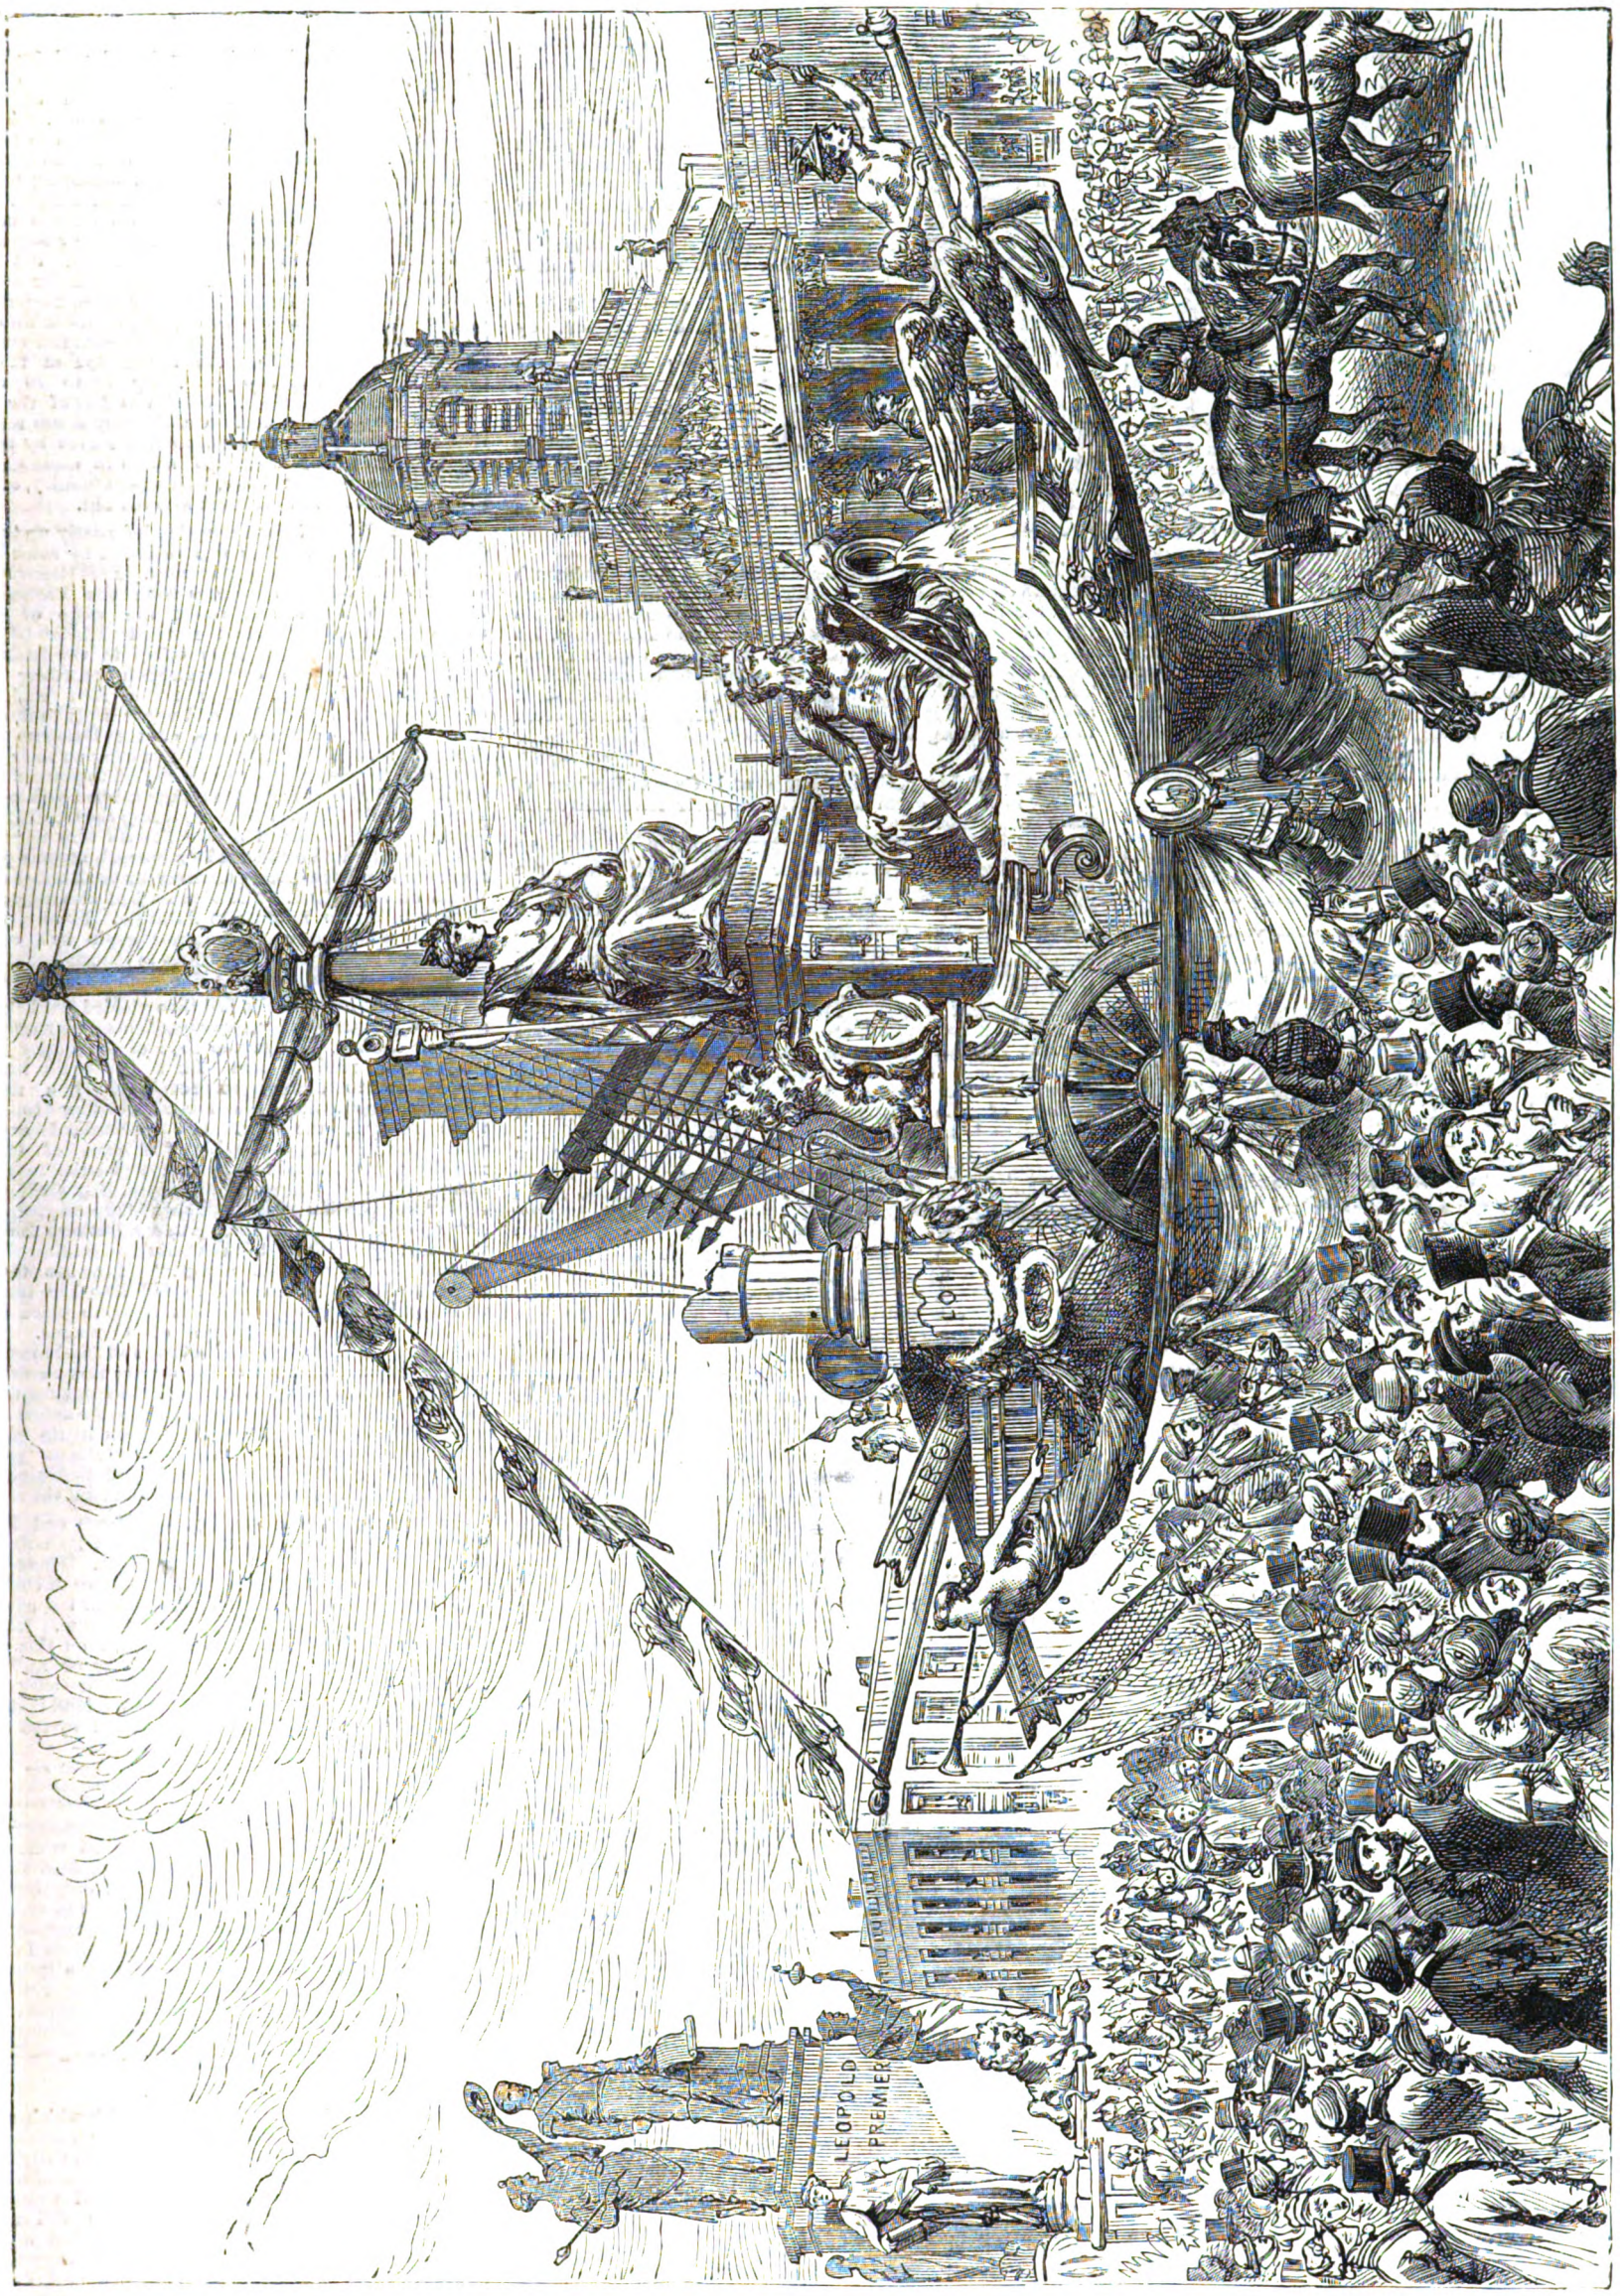
The Burnham (Somerset) life-boat saved seven persons from the rigging of the schooner Burne, of Bridgwater, which had sunk near Highbridge during a very severe gale from the W.N.W. The Porthdinllaen life-boat, during a heavy northerly gale, rendered timely aid to the distressed schooner Thetis, of Pwllheli, and brought ashore the master's wife from the schooner Sarah Jane, of Chester. The Newquay (Cornwall) life-boat saved the crew of two men of the smack Harriette, of Barnstaple, which became a total wreck on the rocks at East Pentire Point during a gale of wind and heavy sea. The Withernsea life-boat was also the means of saving four of the crew of the smack Excel, of Grimsby, which was driven ashore at Waxholme Mill in thick weather, accompanied by a high sea. Several other life-boats had also been launched last month, during stormy weather, to the aid of vessels in distress, but fortunately their services were not eventually needed. Payments amounting to £670 were made on different life-boat establishments.



The late Mr. Peter Brown, of Castle Douglas, has left the institution a legacy of £100, and the late Mr. Aldborough Henniker, of Eatcott, Somerset, £100.

New life-boats have recently been sent by the institution to Saltburn-by-the-Sea, Brightstone Grange (Isle of Wight), Sennen Cove (Land's End), Giles' Quay (Dundalk), and Fraserburgh, N.B.

The thirteenth coffee palace in connection with the London and Provincial Palace Company was opened on Monday evening at 4, Oxford-street, close adjoining the Oxford Music-hall, by the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, one of the directors of the company, who was accompanied by several of his brother directors.



A demonstration of Sunday-school children, numbering over 8000, from the Nonconformist schools in Wolverhampton, was held on Monday in Queen-square, in celebration of the centenary. There was a large display of handsomely embroidered flags and banners; and, after singing suitable hymns, the different schools moved off to some fields outside the town, and there enjoyed a good afternoon's recreation, followed by a plentiful distribution of plum-cake and tea.

BELGIAN FESTIVAL OF INDEPENDENCE.

The series of festivities that lately took place at Brussels, in commemoration of the Jubilee, or fiftieth anniversary, of the establishment of Belgian national independence, have been mentioned in this Journal. Our Illustration shows the grand procession of all the Guilds, or trading and industrial companies, of Belgium, on the 18th ult. The sketch we have received is one by M. Leo von Elliott, of Brussels.

This procession was formed in the Place de la Reine, between twelve and one o'clock at noon, and took the following route:—Rue Royale Sainte-Marie, Rue Royale (exterior and interior), Rue de la Loi, Rue Ducale, Place des Palais, Place Royale, Rue de la Régence, Porte Louise, by the Boulevards of Waterloo and the Midi, to the Southern Railway Terminus, on by the Boulevards Hainaut, Anspach, and Du Nord to the Northern Railway Terminus, thence to the Rue de Brabant, and by the Place Liedts and the Rue Van der Meerschen back to the Place de la Reine. There were more than 1500 individuals in the procession, including nine hundred on horseback. One hundred and fifty draught horses and twenty-four oxen were employed drawing the huge wains and symbolic chariots. Fifteen bands, some mounted and some on foot, assisted in the spectacle, as well as five choral societies. The procession represented the three great episodes in Belgian history—the Communal period, the Provincial period, and the Modern period—and was divided into eleven groups.

The first group, or that of the Communal epoch, was typified by sixty cavaliers dressed in costumes of the thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries, bearing the standards and escutcheons of Ghent, Bruges, Liège, and other municipal districts. These were followed by trumpeters, mace-bearers, ensigns of the Guilds of St. George and St. Sebastian, and men carrying badges of different trades and escorting the car distinctive of Communal liberties.

The second group, which had to do with the Provincial epoch, was preceded by trumpeters heralding seventeen Amazons representing the provinces. In the body of the group were Knights of the Golden Fleece and cavaliers bearing the standard of Burgundy, the ensign of Philippe le Bon, and banners of the great personages of Belgium. Pages, musicians, and choristers were scattered in this, one of the prettiest portions of the pageant. A band in sixteenth-century garb followed, in which hautbois and reed instruments predominated.

The third group, ushered in by fifes and drums, was that of the Empress Maria Theresa, a stately female on horseback, under a canopy surrounded by pages and nobles, and escorted by the Royal Guards with the Standard of Austria immediately preceding her.

The Modern epoch, of the independent Kingdom of Belgium, was introduced by the fourth group; that of Leopold I., consisting chiefly of bandsmen attired as Cossacks of the Meuse, the patriotic survivors of 1830, with the chariot of the late King, encircled by a perfect galaxy of gonfalons and pennons.

The fifth group represented the Agricultural Establishments of Belgium. Its most conspicuous feature was a waggon drawn by a team of two dozen oxen, with genuine Luxembourg herdsmen and shepherds in attendance, and various husbandmen bearing standards of eminent agriculturists.

The sixth, seventh, and eighth groups consisted respectively of "Industry," "Commerce and Navigation," and "Railways." These were personified by delegates from the various trades of the country, such as gunmaking, tapestry, lace and paper, and other manufactures; while deputations of railway officials and specimens of railway stock represented the post and telegraph.

"Arts and Letters" were illustrated in the ninth group by a chariot furnished by the City of Antwerp. Banners, with portraits of distinguished Belgian composers, painters, and literary men, were likewise borne by a staff of men who did not look exactly like disciples of the Muses.

"The Press" was represented by a distinct group, more accurately described as "The Printing Trade." The eleventh and last group was unusually large, comprising a squadron of some 150 horsemen, symbolising the various cantons of modern Belgium. The band of the crack cavalry corps, the Guides, played in this final picture in a panorama which fittingly ended with a car symbolical of Belgium.

Among those who were spectators of the sight were their Majesties the King and Queen of the Belgians, the Count of Flanders, and the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of the City of London, accompanied by a party of municipal notabilities. All Englishmen who had the privilege of witnessing this procession agreed that it was as complete and magnificent in execution as it was unique and artistic in design. The pageant, which had cost a million francs to get it up, was repeated a second time on Friday, the 20th, and will be exhibited again, as announced, on Sunday next.

CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA.

The following are the names of the gentlemen selected in 1878, who, after two years' training in this country, have passed the final examination:—

Candidates selected at Easter, 1878:—John Denman, North-West Provinces; Paul Gregory Melitus, Lower Provinces; Thomas John Kennedy, North-West Provinces; Ramsay Douglas Broadfoot, Madras; James Richard Holt, North-West Provinces; Arthur Stephen Moriarty, Bombay; Leslie Melville Thornton, North-West Provinces; Henry Moberly, Madras; William Robert Bright, Lower Provinces; Edward James Harry Osmond Gleeson, Bombay; Thomas Inglis, Lower Provinces; Francis Angelo Theodore Phillips, North-West Provinces; Francis Edward Keir Wedderburn, Madras.

Candidates selected in July, 1878:—Edward Creswell Rawson, Madras; Bannatyne Macleod, Madras; James Edgeworth Innes, North-West Provinces; Charles Wynter Payne, North-West Provinces; Charles G. Bayne, Lower Provinces; John Samuel Champion Davis, North-West Provinces; John Hewitson, Madras; Robert Warrand Carlyle, Lower Provinces; William George Stack, North-West Provinces; John De Courcy Atkins, Bombay; Kenworty Brown, Lower Provinces.

An extension of the East Norfolk Railway from Alysham to Cawston was opened for traffic on Wednesday. The line is being further continued to Reopham.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the third week in August was 82,792, of whom 46,265 were in workhouses, and 36,532 received outdoor relief. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 718, of whom 508 were men, 165 women, and 45 children under sixteen.

A Portrait of Mr. Carl Bock, the traveller in Borneo, with an account of his overland journey in the unexplored part of that island, was published in this Journal many weeks ago. We have now received a letter from Mr. H. de Windt, of Kuching, Sarawak, in Borneo, disputing the remark that Mr. Bock was the first European who had met with people of the Orang Poonan tribe. Mr. H. de Windt, who is brother-in-law to Rajah Brooke, of Sarawak, and was formerly in his service, has met with some of them at Kapit, 120 miles up the Rejang river, the head of which is near that of the Koti, where Mr. Bock has been travelling. It is Mr. H. de Windt's opinion that the tales of cannibalism among those tribes in Borneo are rather fabulous.

THE COURT.

On the eve of her Majesty's departure for Scotland the Queen gave an audience to the Judge Advocate-General; and entertained at dinner the Countess of Dudley, Mrs. Keith Fraser, Lord Rowton, and Captain Thomson.

Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph, K.C.B., took leave of the Queen on board her Majesty's yacht Alberta, on her crossing the Solent, previous to his departure for India.

The Queen, who left Osborne on Thursday week, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, left Gosport at a quarter past six in the evening, and arrived at Perth the next morning for breakfast, which was served at the station, as usual. The Lord Provost and other dignitaries, with a large assemblage of citizens, welcomed her Majesty. In the course of an hour the Queen resumed her journey, which was continued to Ferryhill, where again a warm welcome was accorded her Majesty during the short halt, the Lord Lieutenant of the county and other officials being present, the Queen gracefully acknowledging the loyal demonstrations. Upon arriving at Ballater there was a general assemblage of the inhabitants of Deeside, and a guard of honour of the 71st Highlanders was in attendance. The Royal travellers arrived at Balmoral at three o'clock, after which the Queen took a drive within the Royal demesne.

On Sunday her Majesty, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attended Divine service, performed at Balmoral by the Rev. Archibald Campbell, of Crathie.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, is enjoying the quietude of her northern home, and makes frequent excursions to her favourite localities. Prince Leopold walks and drives out daily.

Mr. E. Burton Barber has painted several pictures of horses and dogs belonging to her Majesty, as well as the chargers of the late Emperor Napoleon and of the Prince Imperial, which the Queen has presented to the Empress Eugénie.

The Prince of Wales has been taking part in the Dartmouth Regatta on board his yacht Formosa. His Royal Highness has been the guest of Mr. T. G. Freke, of Wardleet House. As this year the Prince has no grouse-shooting at Abergeldie, his Royal Highness has arranged to shoot for a few days at Invermark, where he will be the guest of Sir John Harvey, M.P. The Princess of Wales, with her family, has passed the week at the Isle of Wight. The Prince and Princess are expected to arrive at Abergeldie early next week.

The Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and their daughter have arrived in town from Paris.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

The marriage of Lord Alexander Victor Paget, fourth son of the second Marquis of Anglesey, and brother of the present peer, with the Hon. Hester Alice Stapleton-Cotton, youngest daughter of Viscount Combermere, and grandniece of the Archbishop of Canterbury, was celebrated in the private chapel of Lambeth Palace at noon on Thursday week, by the Archbishop, under his Grace's special license. The Rev. W. A. Spooner, Fellow of New College, Oxford, attended as his Chaplain, and the Rev. T. E. Meredyth, Incumbent of Burleydam, Cheshire, and Chaplain to Lord Combermere, assisted at the ceremony. The registers were duly signed in the public library of the palace, the ancient register-book of the palace being attested by the Archbishop only. Mr. Edgar Sebright was best man, and the bridesmaids were the Hon. Maud Russell, Miss C. Peel, and Miss Hester Stapleton-Cotton, nieces of the bride; Miss Albertha Paget and Miss Cadogan, cousins of the bridegroom. The bride, who was given away by her father, was dressed in ivory broché satin, draped with old Brussels lace, the bodice being trimmed with natural gardenias and orange-blossoms, and over a wreath of the same flowers was a Brussels lace veil. Her jewels comprised a diadem of diamonds, the gift of Lord Alexander Paget; a diamond pendent necklace, a testimonial from the tenants on Lord Combermere's estate; a diamond and pearl spray from the Dowager Marchioness of Downshire; and a diamond and pearl bracelet from her brother, the Hon. Richard Stapleton-Cotton. The bridesmaids were attired in dresses of cream-coloured Surat silk, with toques of the same tint. Each carried a bouquet of tea roses, and wore a brooch, presented by the bridegroom, in the form of the Staffordshire knot in pearls, connecting the initials of the bride in diamonds, the brooches being designed by Lord Alexander. The wedding breakfast was given by Viscountess Combermere at her residence in Belgrave-square, after which the bride and bridegroom left for the seat of the Hon. Wilbraham F. Tollemache, M.P., Dorfold Hall, Cheshire. Viscountess Combermere later in the afternoon had a tea party, the guests including some of the Corps Diplomatique; and she also entertained a party of friends at dinner.

The marriage of Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Maynard Ives and Miss Amy Violet Barnes, daughter of the late Mr. S. J. Pullin, was solemnised at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, on Monday. The Rev. W. Littlewood, cousin of the bride, officiated. Only the immediate and nearest relatives of the bride and bridegroom were invited to the wedding. Lieutenant-Colonel Gordon Ives was accompanied by Colonel Phillips, Grenadier Guards, as best man, and by his brother, Colonel Cecil Ives, Royal Horse Guards, and Colonel Malet, late Grenadier Guards. The bride was accompanied by her brother and by her mother and sister. Directly after the ceremony Lieutenant-Colonel and Mrs. Gordon Ives left London to pass a short time at the Villa Ives, his mother's place near Nice. Amongst the many presents was a diamond necklace from the Hon. Mrs. Ives; a ring of large diamonds from Colonel and the Hon. Mrs. Cecil Ives; a diamond spray from Colonel Phillips; and a large silver vase from Colonel Malet.

The marriage of Captain Newenham with the Hon. Louise Edwardes will take place on the 23rd inst.

A severe thunderstorm passed over the Sheffield district on Monday. At Earl Fitzwilliam's seat (Wentworth), three buffaloes and six stags were killed by the lightning while grazing in the park.

Lord Powis, upon whose land will be situated the new embankment in connection with the scheme for supplying Liverpool with water from Lake Vyrnwy, has been invited by the Water Committee to lay the foundation-stone or cut the first turf, and his Lordship has accepted the invitation.

The second annual report of the Prison Commissioners for Scotland has been issued. In continuation of the reports of the late General Board of Prisons and the managers appointed under the Act of 1880, this makes the forty-first annual report on prisons in Scotland. The report is followed by twenty-three appendices, giving various details and statistics connected with the subject.

PARLIAMENT.

LORDS.

The Chamber of Peers has witnessed quite a resurrection. To the funereal dulness of empty benches, with a plaintively remonstrant Lord Redesdale and napping Foreign Secretary, has succeeded the comparative liveliness of a battalion of renovated hereditary legislators, led with accustomed adroitness by the Earl of Beaconsfield, to whom the rest and retirement of Hughenden appear to have done as much good as the sea voyage on board the Grantully Castle has done the Prime Minister.

Their Lordships, in their reawakened zeal for legislation, on Aug. 26 vitally changed the principle of the Employers Liability Bill — mainly at the solicitation of the newly ennobled Lord Brabourne, strange to say. This Whig luminary of the railroadocracy (if the term is permissible) procured in Committee the exclusion of the clause making employers responsible for accidents occurring to workmen in their employment when a foreman or another happened to be in charge. Encouraged by his success in securing the rejection of this clause, Lord Brabourne essayed to obtain another concession to the railway interest, but was there checked by Lord Beaconsfield. Albeit the latter noble Lord's amendment had been mislaid by a boy (who, in putting it in his pocket, had done the best possible thing with it, Earl Granville drily suggested), the noble Earl did not feel precluded from moving that the application of the measure should be limited to two years. By 72 to 40 votes, this amendment was adopted. What was left of the bill then passed through Committee. On Tuesday it was read a third time and passed, after an expression of regret by the Earl of Shaftesbury at their Lordships' action in excising the third sub-section of the first clause, which Lord Stanley, of Alderley, in vain endeavoured to reinsert into the bill.

A tame sitting of short duration led gently up to the lively debate of Monday. This was preceded by some important statements by the Foreign Secretary. Earl Granville had the satisfaction to read telegrams from the Viceroy showing that Ayoub Khan had raised the siege of Candahar, and General Roberts had reached Khelat-i-Ghilzai on Aug. 23 on the march from Cabul to the lately besieged city. His Lordship's communication regarding the Porte was also of interest. The noble Earl said, in consequence of the Porte's dual and vague reply to the Collective Note insisting on the cession of the Dulcigno district to Montenegro, the Powers were deliberating on their rejoinder, but had meantime ordered the allied fleet to proceed to Ragusa, our Admiral in charge having been furnished with instructions. In reply to the Turkish Note regarding the Greek frontier, the Porte would be informed by the Powers that negotiations as to the frontier line could not be reopened, but any proposal to facilitate the evacuation of territory by the Turkish authorities would be considered. The Powers had also agreed upon a Note relating to reforms in Armenia. Finally, the International Commission at Constantinople had come to a unanimous conclusion with respect to the project of law to be recommended for adoption in European Turkey.

The Hares and Rabbits Bill then yielded Lord Beaconsfield a new opportunity of "educating" his Party after his own peculiar fashion. When the Earl of Kimberley had moved the second reading, and Lord Redesdale had begged the House to dismiss so revolutionary a measure by formally postponing the second reading to that day three months, the Earl of Beaconsfield overwhelmed with compliments the noble Chairman of Committees, roundly protested against hurried legislation in September, and particularly condemned in ornate Disraelian phrase the sub-section which proposed not only to arm the farmer and his sisters, and his cousins and his aunts, but also the "expert" who had previously been wont to confine his depredations to "moonlight nights." Let not their Lordships, however, be tempted to fall into the trap laid for them, and so by opposing this measure place themselves in conflict with the House of Commons. Let them rather allow it to go into Committee, and there amend it. The only noteworthy features of the debate that ensued were the eccentric utterances of Lord Hardwicke against the bill, an able speech from the Duke of Argyll in its defence, the clear and practical address of Lord Carrington in its support, and Lord Shaftesbury's doleful condemnation of it as "pernicious." By a majority of 48—68 to 20—was Lord Redesdale's amendment negatived. The measure was then read the second time.

In Committee, on Tuesday, the Hares and Rabbits, or Ground Game, Bill was so mutilated that its authors in the Lower House would hardly recognise it. There were fresh protests against the infringement of freedom of contract; and a majority of noble Lords quite agreed that too many persons were authorised to carry guns by the measure. Lord Balfour of Burleigh introduced an amendment on this point, but the common-sense remarks of the Duke of Richmond and Lord Derby induced him to withdraw it—only to let the similar amendment, however, of Lord Aveland spring up in a Jack-in-the-box manner, and be carried by 108 against 58 votes. Thus was the amendment worded:—

The occupier himself or (in lieu of the occupier) one other person authorised in writing by such occupier shall be the person on the part of the occupier entitled under this Act to kill ground game with firearms.

The Earl of Ilchester fathered the next successful amendment, and had the pleasure of seeing 94 contents against 59 non-contents sanction the proposition that the right of killing ground game should be exercised only from the first day of August till the last day of March. The amendment of the Earl of Faversham favouring "mutual agreement" between landlords and tenants in regard to game then led to a protracted discussion, but was withdrawn at the instance of the Duke of Richmond and Lord Beaconsfield. Eventually the measure passed through Committee, and the report was agreed to on Wednesday. Their Lordships the same day threw out the Registration of Irish Voters' Bill by 42 against 30 votes.

COMMONS.

Parliament dies hard. The tenacity with which a section of the Irish Home-Rule Party clung to the Parliamentary life which feeds their vanity by advertising them daily throughout the country was exemplified last week by another all-night sitting. Twelve hours of this prolonged wrangling were entirely thrown away. The lost time did not benefit Ireland one whit. Lord Randolph Churchill appropriately opened fire upon the Government on the Thursday evening in question by complaining, in a speech suited to Coger's Hall, of Mr. Forster's fair and equitable declaration respecting the preservation of peace in Ireland. Without dwelling on Mr. Forster's dignified answer, Mr. Gibson's Party retort, or upon the desultory file-firing that ensued from the Home-Rule benches, we may state that Lord Hartington neatly extinguished Mr. Gorst, and that, in Committee of Supply, it was in vain the Ministry sought to obtain the vote for the Irish Constabulary. Irish member after Irish member rose to protest against that armed force; and, after Mr. Dillon had spoken, Mr. Bright felt impelled to rise, and make a speech of marked eloquence and power to remind Ireland and Irish members that there was in office a Government which thoroughly understood the necessities of the sister isle, and which, having in the past proved its sympathy by disestablishing the Irish Church and by reforming the land laws, deserved to be trusted in the framing of further measures for the amelioration of the condition of the distressed peasantry, and for the promotion of a happier state of things in Ireland. The right hon. gentleman spoke with much of his old pungency and fire; and there the debate might rationally have ended. But throughout the night, and till close upon one o'clock the following afternoon—for twenty-one hours altogether—was the sitting delayed by repeated motions for the adjournment or for reporting progress, Mr. Sullivan distinguishing himself by supping or breakfasting in the House on buns, and other hon. members eking out their strength with potations possibly stronger than water. It was not, indeed, until the Government had on Monday endured a farther series of lectures from Mr. Parnell and his coadjutors that Mr. Forster was permitted to take the Irish Constabulary vote of £564,461, and one or two other votes that were not agreed to on the previous Friday.

The Administration may think it a point gained, that Mr. Parnell on Monday promised, if Mr. Forster exerted himself to discountenance and discourage unjust evictions, he would be glad to use his influence "to prevent the commission of outrages and cruelties."

With what industry the Commons can work when in a business-like humour was shown on Saturday, when the Burials Bill was passed through Committee, Mr. Bright taking an active part in pushing the measure through, and, in fact, acting as the leader of the Government on the question—with Mr. Osborne Morgan in the forefront of the battle, of course. The debating vigour of Mr. Bright was particularly conspicuous in his animated reply to Mr. E. Clarke's attack on the bill. Mr. Caine's amendment, moved by Mr. Bradlaugh, to enable Nonconformists to be buried on Sundays, Good Fridays, and Christmas Days, was lost by but a few votes, it being negatived only by 103 to 100 votes. But Mr. Illingworth's motion to substitute "Christian or other orderly services" for "Christian and orderly services" was rejected by 125 to 59 votes. Some amusement was caused later on by the Home Secretary's rushing to oppose an amendment which Mr. O. Morgan had accepted. After that the bill passed through Committee, amid cheers. Late on Tuesday it was read the third time, after another vain endeavour to bring about Sunday funerals, Mr. Morgan making a concession, however, in the shape of an amendment calling upon clergymen to signify in writing any objections they might have to funerals on the Sabbath.

Tuesday's sitting was chiefly taken up with a conversation between Sir J. Hay, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, Mr. W. H. Smith, and Captain Price on the state of the Navy; and by a recapitulation on the part of Mr. Courtney, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, Mr. Grant-Duff, Lord Elcho, Mr. Chamberlain, and others of their well-known views regarding the annexation of the Transvaal, the hon. member for Liskeard being duly eulogised for his consistency in opposing that annexation.

On Wednesday, the Attorney-General secured the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the Gloucester Election by a majority of 79—98 to 19—over Mr. R. Yorke, who moved its rejection. Chester, Canterbury, Macclesfield, Knaresborough, Oxford, Boston, and Sandwich are also to be brought under the fierce light of a Royal Commission. The Lords' rejection of the Irish Voters' Registration Bill gave the Home-Rule members an excuse for delaying the Appropriation Bill's passage—a temporary delay, which Ministers probably felt the less, inasmuch as directly the House rose they proceeded by the London Steam-Boat Company's dainty saloon-boat Victoria to Greenwich for the annual whitebait dinner, having in view the possibility of Parliament being prorogued next Monday.

CHAMOIS-HUNTING IN THE TYROL.

The Sketches designed to illustrate the day's adventures of a Tyrolese hunter—no amateur sportsman, but a hardy mountaineer who earns his livelihood by this arduous pursuit—were drawn by an Artist who is a native of Austria, and is well acquainted with the subject. Zoologists will not find much fault with his representation of that strong and nimble beast called Rupicapra in their learned language of scientific classification, which they reckon a species of antelope, inhabiting the Alps and Pyrenees, as well as the mountain ranges of Eastern Europe. Its horns are familiar to every tourist in Switzerland, as they are the common ornament of the alpenstock which it is the fashion to carry, whether or not one chooses to climb the mountains. These horns are small, black, and smooth, rising from the animal's forehead, just above the eyes, almost perpendicularly for six or seven inches, and nearly parallel to each other; but the upper extremity of each horn, bending backwards, forms a sharp hook, with a very acute point turned towards the ears. Both the male and female are horned. The ordinary size of the chamois is about 3 feet 3 inches long in the body, above 2 feet high, with a small head and very short tail; but its chest is wide and deep, and the shoulders and haunches are powerful. Its body is covered with long brown hair, under which it has a close, thick coat of fine wool. Some parts of the body turn white or grey in winter. The amazing surefootedness and agility of this wild creature, with its keenness of scent as well as of sight, make its chase, at least by a single rifleman without the aid of others to surround and drive in the herd, a matter of great difficulty, requiring the utmost skill, and few except born and bred Alpine mountaineers can achieve much success. The Tyrolese hunter usually carries a short, heavy, large-bored rifle, in the use of which, at moderate ranges, he is very expert. His costume, with the buskins and the conical hat adorned with a cock's feather, has been considered rather picturesque.

BOULOGNE FISHERMEN'S WIVES AWAITING THE BOATS.

In this drawing by Mr. Lionel Smythe, which was in the Black and White Exhibition, a rather touching scene of humble life, often witnessed by English visitors to the most accessible of French watering-places, is represented with striking truth and a high degree of sympathetic feeling. The hard-working poor women and girls of the St. Pierre quarter, in the upper part of the town, come down to the steps of the harbour-pier, early in the morning, with their baskets to receive the produce of the fishermen's nightly toil at sea, ready to carry it to the market for sale. Many of them, perhaps, having been kept awake by a crying infant, or by some anxious thoughts of danger to those whom they hold most dear, are still in need of a little more rest before they are compelled to begin the labours of the new day. Some are, therefore, observed to lie sleeping on their stony pillow, or leaning against one another as they sit, while those not overcome by slumber are chatting or knitting and frequently looking out to sea for the approaching fleet of boats. There are more than a thousand fishing-boats, we are told, belonging to this port; but many of them repair to the coast of Scotland, or even go so far as the Shetland Isles, for the herring fishery. They are the largest and best worked in the British Channel. This class of the Boulogne townsfolk have some distinctive and peculiar customs: and neither in their dress nor in the patois of their language resemble the ordinary French population. It is worth while for the visitor to Boulogne to stroll through the streets of their habitation, where nets are hung up to dry in front of almost every house.

THE MAGAZINES.

The American and Australian magazines supply, as usual, a great deal of instructive and amusing reading. The American periodical of highest literary pretension is, indeed, perhaps too exclusively devoted to articles of the former type, although Herr Busch's reminiscences of Prince Bismarck's conversation contain not a little that is entertaining as well as suggestive. Professor Newcomb's discussion of the principles of taxation is valuable, if somewhat dry. Mr. Dana's criticism of President Lincoln's emancipation proclamation takes no account of the military and political considerations which justified its issue and rendered its technical legality a matter of little moment. The Atlantic Monthly has a continuation of the excellent papers on Washington under past Administrations, Mr. Grant White's notes on Oxford and Cambridge, some interesting notes on dreams, one of Mark Twain's irresistibly absurd extravaganzas, and a little poem of singular merit by Celia Baxter. Among the profuse contents of Scribner we especially remark the richly illustrated paper on "Pickwick" and "Nicholas Nickleby," the memoirs of the American poet Stoddard and the French painter Millet, and Mr. Washburne's valuable essay on Thomas Paine's share in the French Revolution. Victoria sends us two periodicals and New South Wales one. The latter, with the fewest literary pretensions, is, perhaps, the most characteristic. Its title, the Australian, promises an especial attention to colonial matters, and the promise is redeemed by some highly graphic descriptions of New South Wales scenery and manners. The Melbourne Review and the Victorian Review contain hardly anything specifically Australian, except the note of alarm sounded by the latter respecting "the decay of marriage in Victoria."

Temple Bar's serial stories continue interesting, and it has also good critical papers on De Musset, Milton, and Wordsworth. The Gentleman's Magazine is particularly rich in light, but at the same time instructive, articles. Mr. Dutton Cook investigates the temporary neglect into which Shakspeare fell during the latter part of the seventeenth century, Dr. Richardson caps Dr. Tanner's fast with anecdotes of still more remarkable performances, and Miss Hunt describes what now appears the unaccountable literary success of Hannah More. Mr. Mattieu Williams's "Science Notes" promise to become an important auxiliary to the success of the magazine; they are very wide in range, and expressed with the freedom of a man independent of all coteries. Belgravia is chiefly remarkable for one of those short stories in which "Ouida" does herself more justice than in her more ambitious efforts. "The Leaden Casket" is continued with spirit, and "Literature as a Profession" is an amusing paper. London Society has a very pretty sketch of the Forest of Fontainebleau. The Antiquary and the Theatre abound with excellent matter in their respective departments.

Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin's excellent serials comprise the Magazine of Art, Family Magazine Quiver, Old and New London, Technical Educator; Longfellow's Poetical Works, Illustrated; Science for All, Illustrated; Familiar Wild Flowers, with Coloured Plates; an Illustrated Book of the Dog; and Part I. of Paxton's Flower Garden, with coloured plates, revised by Thomas Baines, F.R.H.S.

Mr. Mackeson, the Editor of the Churchman's Shilling Magazine, announces a novel feature for the twenty-eighth volume of Messrs. Houlston's serial, which begins with the present part. A series of papers on "The Resurrection," by an eminent theologian, will be published in the magazine, examining and refuting the arguments brought forward by recent writers against the cardinal doctrine of Christianity; and the writer invites his readers to forward, through the editor, a statement of any difficulties which may present themselves to their minds in connection with the subject. All such references the author will carefully consider and deal with in a supplementary paper.

We have received the Shilling Serial Issue of Mr. Heath's Fern Paradise, Tinsley's Magazine, London Society, St. James's Magazine, Argosy, Good Words, Victoria Magazine, Colburn's New Monthly, St. Nicholas, Science Gossip, Men of Mark, Covent-Garden Magazine, Welcome, Kensington, the Month, Golden Hours, Peep-Show, Animal World, Mission Life, and Chatterbox. Among the Fashion Books are Le Follet, Ladies' Gazette of Fashion, Myra's Journal, Myra's Mid-Monthly, Weldon's Ladies' Journal, and Illustrated Household Journal. We have also received Monthly Parts of All the Year Round, Once a Week, Leisure Hour, Sunday at Home, Sunday Magazine, Gardeners' Magazine, Gardening Illustrated, Day of Rest, Social Notes, Boy's Own Paper, Girl's Own Paper, Young England, Union Jack, the Daisy, and the Christian Age.

Several magazines which were not in time to be noticed in this number will be reviewed next week.

We learn from the Law Times that the annual report of the Commissioners of Patents shows that 5388 applications were made for patents during 1879, being five less than were made during the previous year. Of those 3461 were granted.

HOME NEWS.

The first stone of the terminal station of the new railway to Clacton-on-Sea was laid on Monday, and it was announced that the line would be open for traffic before the end of this year.

Amongst the novelties in Christmas cards Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co. are preparing for the forthcoming season, is a set of six folding tryptich cards illuminated in the highest style of chromo-lithography, with original songs set to music.

The Leicester Town Council, at a special meeting on Tuesday afternoon, decided to establish a permanent Art-Gallery at Leicester, under the provisions of the Free Libraries and Museums Acts, the gallery to be maintained by rate and managed by the Corporation.

The Tonic Sol-fa Association gave its annual choral concert at the Crystal Palace on Saturday last. The choir numbered about 3000 singers, and the programme comprised hymns, anthems, part-songs, and selections from Handel, Mendelssohn, and Donizetti, with one or two comic pieces. Mr. Proudman was the conductor.

Under the presidency of Dr. R. E. Owen, the annual meeting of the North Wales branch of the British Medical Association was held at Beaumauris on Tuesday. There was a numerous attendance of members from all parts of the Principality. Prior to the general meeting, at which papers were read by Dr. Richards (Bangor) and others, the Clio industrial training-ship was inspected. The private grounds of Baron Hall, by Sir Richard Bulkeley's kindness, was thrown open during the day.

The Royal Commission of inquiry into the working of the Irish Land Act held a preliminary sitting on Tuesday in Dublin, at which it was determined to hold sittings during the week and until Sept. 10. Immediately afterwards the Commission will proceed to Ulster, and hold sittings in that province. The public will not be admitted to these sittings, but the evidence of the witnesses will be published, subject to corrections. This evidence will finally be published by the Commissioners as an appendix to their report. Should any witness so desire, the publication of his name will be withheld.

At the last business meeting on Wednesday week of the Associated Chambers of Commerce, at Galashiels, resolutions were passed relative to the abolition of compulsory pilotage, a Parliamentary inquiry into subsidies for mail steamers, the operation of judgments or decrees in the United Kingdom, the appointment of a Minister of Commerce, treaties of commerce, wine duties, and the liability of owners of vessels in case of loss while deviating from their course. Next day was devoted to an excursion to Newark Tower, the delegates visiting the most famous parts of the border country.

On Monday, the half-yearly election of candidates for admission to the Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, which is under the patronage of the Queen, and is situate at Snaresbrook, Essex, took place at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street. Mr. Edward S. Norris presided. There were vacancies to be filled up by the election of fifteen boys and as many girls. The total number of eligible candidates was thirty-nine, of whom twenty were boys and nineteen girls. The asylum at the date of the last annual report maintained 238 children—159 boys and seventy-nine girls.

The Braemar gathering took place last week in the grounds of Braemar Castle, and was favoured with magnificent weather. Throughout the heavy competitions George Davidson carried everything before him. The dancing in the various contests was very attractive. Following the last of the games and the grand hurdle-race came the closing event—the tug of war. It took place between ten Farquharsons and a similar number of the Fife clan—the captains of the respective teams being Mr. George Hutchinson and Mr. Donald M'Donald. After one of the hardest pulls ever experienced, wherein every second seemed a long minute, the Farquharsons gradually began to lose by inches, and at last gave way altogether. In the evening the customary ball took place at the castle.

The Yorkshire Archæological Association held its annual gathering at Rotherham last week. The members first visited the site of the old Roman encampment at Templeborough, supposed to have been formed by Agricola, A.D. 79, and where the remains of a Roman prætorium were excavated about two years ago. They next proceeded to Earl Fitzwilliam's seat at Wentworth. Subsequently luncheon was served at Rotherham, after which the old parish church, a fine example of the Perpendicular period, was visited.—The Cambrian Archæological Association, which held its annual congress at Pembroke during the past week, brought its proceedings to a close on Friday night. The daily excursions were carried out with great success, the weather being most favourable throughout, and the evening sittings produced one or two interesting papers and short discussions.

The return of the Registrar-General, just issued, shows that during last week 5693 births and 4118 deaths were registered in London and twenty-two other large towns of the United Kingdom. The mortality from all causes was at the average rate of 25 deaths annually in every 1000 persons living. The annual death-rate was 17 per 1000 in Edinburgh, 19 in Glasgow, and 38 in Dublin. In London 2497 births and 1488 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 70, whereas the deaths were 6 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The annual death-rate from all causes, which had been equal to 24·2, 23·8, and 21·3 in the three preceding weeks, was last week again 21·3. The deaths included 3 from smallpox, 16 from measles, 53 from scarlet fever, 13 from diphtheria, 23 from whooping-cough, 17 from different forms of fever, and 270 from diarrhœa.

VOLUNTEER ARTILLERY, SHOEBURYNESS.

The annual meeting for competition in practice of the different Volunteer Artillery Corps from various parts of the kingdom came to an end at Shoeburyness on the 12th ult., when the prizes of the National Artillery Association were presented to winners by the Marchioness of Londonderry. The camp was occupied successively by two separate divisions of volunteers; in the first week there were about eight hundred living there under canvas, but the second division numbered more than a thousand, of whom a large proportion were from Lancashire and Cheshire. On the last day of the meeting the Royal Artillery competition with the 10-inch gun came off, and attracted more attention than any contest among the volunteers. The competing detachments of the Royals fired five rounds of shell at 1200 yards. Better firing with the 10-inch has never been seen at Shoeburyness, or probably elsewhere, the representatives of the eleventh brigade from Sheerness, with Sergeant West as No. 1, making the fine score of five direct hits in 7 min. 35 sec. Loud applause greeted the Sergeant, who received a silver cup and £10, £1 15s. being awarded to each of the other members of the detachment. The detachment of the 10th (Cork) brigade were second with three direct hits in 6 min. 4½ sec. The only match that day among the Volunteers was a 10-inch gun competition between officers of the Artillery Corps belonging respectively to North Britain and to the South of England. This match, of which we give an Illustration, was won by the Northern men, who fired twenty-four rounds in eight minutes three seconds, while the Southern men only got through eighteen rounds in about nine minutes and a half. The cup was therefore awarded to the men of the North of England and of Scotland, who were associated together in this competition. The two highest scores made for the Queen's Prize at this meeting were achieved respectively by a detachment of the 2nd Durham (Seaham harbour) and one from Mid Lothian; those which came next were the 2nd Middlesex and 4th East York. The 3rd Kent, 1st Edinburgh, and 2nd Devon, won the first, second, and third prizes in the 10-inch gun competition.

THE NEW BOW-STREET POLICE COURTS.

About twelve months ago the Office of Works commenced a new building for the chief police court of the metropolis. This new building, like its predecessor, stands in Bow-street, opposite Covent-Garden Theatre and the Floral Hall. Its main façade stands nearly sixty feet high in the centre, and from end to end is about 180 feet. The original plan was for a red brick and Portland stone front. The red brick, however, was eliminated, and the whole front is now of stone. It looks, as shown in our illustration, larger than police court requirements can reasonably demand, and as a matter of fact only about one third of the Bow-street front belongs to the court. The other two thirds constitute the Bow-street Police-station and "section house" for the accommodation of somewhere about one hundred policemen. The court and station are contiguous, though the only internal connection they have is through a covered corridor across the interior quadrangle, for the conveyance of prisoners from the police-court cells to those in which they will await their turn to appear in court. This quadrangle, by-the-way, seems a very convenient feature of the new premises. The prison-vans, instead of standing in the open thoroughfare and receiving or discharging prisoners, will pass into this inclosure, and take up or set them down with convenience and safety, and without obstructing the thoroughfare. The public entrance to the new building is at the corner just opposite Hart-street. A handsome doorway here opens into a vestibule from which a door on the left leads directly into the larger of the two courts. This room, which is about thirty feet by forty, islighted by a sloping lantern light, warmed by hot-water pipes, and thoroughly well ventilated. The floor is made quite level, except that the bench is elevated about a couple of feet. The walls for about six feet up are covered with ornamental glazed tiles, and a sunlight burner will illuminate the court when required. There is a similar, but rather smaller, court to be reached by a broad stone staircase from the entrance-hall, and to both courts convenient doorways are provided for magistrates, witnesses, and solicitors. One valuable feature of this new edifice, the lack of which had always been felt a serious inconvenience, is the ample accommodation for a meeting of metropolitan magistrates, for which Bow-street has, of course, always been the most appropriate court, but for which no convenience whatever has hitherto been enjoyed. The entire cost of this new work has been somewhere about £40,000. The architect is Mr. John Taylor, of the Government Office of Works. Messrs. G. Smith and Co. were the contractors.

At the half-yearly meeting of the Civil Service Supply Association, recently held at the Cannon-street Hotel—Mr. Roberts presiding—the number of shareholders was stated to be 4424, and tickets had been issued to 7714 members of the Civil Service, 15,000 to friends of shareholders, and to 6452 special nominees. The purchase of goods during the half-year had amounted to £587,863, and the sales to £676,865.

NEW BOOKS.

All that is known, with any degree of certainty, about Socrates, of whom everybody has heard perhaps as much as the name, and about that great philosopher's teaching, will be found collected within reasonable compass and set forth in unusually readable form under the title of The Trial and Death of Socrates: by F. J. Church (Macmillan and Co.), a translation, executed by the accomplished Dean of St. Paul's, of Plato's Euthyphron, Apology, Crito, and Phædo. It is by no means the first time that these dialogues have been translated, and it is by no means the first time that at least one or two of them have been translated in a style upon which it would not be easy to improve; but it is the first time, if there be no mistake, that the four dialogues, which may be considered to contain a special commemoration of Socrates, have been gathered into a single volume, in a version so rendered that it may be read with pleasure and profit by those who are unacquainted as well as by those who are familiar with the language in which Plato wrote. And if anybody should ask what peculiar charm there is about these dialogues in their English form, let the Dean of St. Paul's himself give the sufficient answer: "It might sometimes almost be thought that Socrates was speaking, not to the Athenians, but to us," for it is as necessary now, as it was some centuries B.C., to impress upon a man that the "first and chiefest care should be for wisdom and truth and the perfection of his soul," and that "an unexamined life is not worth living." Indeed, there are persons who maintain that in these headlong days the admonition is more than ever needed, that in the general hurry-scurry and the mad race for gold, and even for a bare existence, the majority of us may fail to find that "peace at the last" which can only come either from stupefaction, counting for nothing, or from a consciousness that the books of life have been as regularly kept as is consistent with human weakness. The state of mind in which it is advisable for a reader to approach the perusal of the dialogues will be greatly promoted by the description given in the "Introduction" of Socrates' personal appearance: he resembled a Satyr rather than a Hyperion; and this fact, if it be carefully kept in view, will not be without effect in producing the desirable impartiality and mental equipose. Socrates, however, though he had not the beauty of his friend Alcibiades, was a physical as well as an intellectual athlete; he was a soldier, and a stout one, who no more flinched from the face of the foe than from the logic of a syllogism. As for the drift of each dialogue in the collection, it may be mentioned, if this be news to anybody, that the "Euthyphron" resolves itself into an unsuccessful attempt to arrive at a definition of piety; that the "Apology" is Plato's conception of the defence which Socrates might, could, would, or should have made before his judges, together with an address in which Socrates is supposed, contrary to probability, to have bidden farewell to the dicasts, both to those who voted for him and to those who voted against him; that the "Crito" contains the arguments which Socrates is represented by Plato, an inventive genius, to have used to convince Crito that it would be wrong to attempt an escape from prison, wrong to return "evil for evil;" and that the "Phædo" is, for the most part, Plato's version of Socrates' views about the immortality of the soul—views which Socrates, there is reason to believe, could not have held, or, at any rate, could not have advocated in the manner attributed to him by Plato. The reader will find some interesting remarks touching Socrates' famous "demon," and will probably come to the conclusion that the celebrated "protomartyr of philosophy," like Joan of Arc, heard "voices," or, at any rate, seemed to hear them. What the effect of reading the "Phædo" would be upon the mere English reader would depend, no doubt, upon the natural capacity of what that reader might be pleased to call his mind; but there is an anecdote, perfectly trustworthy, bearing upon that point. An undergraduate, a candidate for classical honours at Cambridge, was requested to lend his "gyp" a book for "Sunday reading," and lent accordingly a translation of the "Phædo," which the "gyp" duly returned, with many thanks and a somewhat sardonic grin. "Well, Thomas," asked the undergraduate, "what did you think of it?" "I thought, Sir," answered the "gyp," with some hesitation, "that that there So-crates (dissyllable) must have been a very determinate sort of a person." And that was the only impression, apparently, made upon the "gyp:" that the "protomartyr of philosophy" was, in other words, a "difficult customer." So much difference does it make whether the Socratic seed falls upon the soil of a Plato or of a "gyp."

Interesting beyond the majority, and more troublesome to work up, perhaps, than any, of the volumes belonging to the series of "English Men of Letters," edited by John Morley, must have been Alexander Pope: by Leslie Stephen (Macmillan and Co.), a volume which will be as interesting to the reader as it must have been to the compiler, whilst the former will be saved all the irritation and labour from which the latter cannot fail to have suffered, because, as a "prefatory note" sets forth, "the life and writings of Pope have been discussed in a literature more voluminous than that which exists in the case of almost any other man of letters," and yet "no biographer," for all that, "has produced a definitive or exhaustive work." Such a work, in ten volumes, seemed to be forthcoming, when Mr. Elwin began the publication of his elaborate edition in 1871; but, "unfortunately for all students of English literature, only two volumes of poetry and three of correspondence have appeared." The volume begins with a rapid but impressive sketch of Pope's earliest years, from the birth of the "little nightingale," in 1688, when his father and mother were both forty-six, to his quarrel with Wycherley in 1710; and passing mention is made of the lesser or greater causes which may have had an effect upon the formation of his future character, such as the headaches he inherited from his mother, the crooked figure transmitted to him by his father, and the disabilities under which he and his family laboured because of their religion, at a time when "a Catholic was not only a member of a hated minority, regarded by the rest of his countrymen as representing the evil principle in politics and religion, but was rigorously excluded from a public career, and from every position of honour or authority." Then the first period of his literary career is dealt with, the period when he was making "experimental excursions into various fields of poetry, with varying success and rather uncertain aim," original poems, imitations, translations. After this there is a pretty full account of that great performance, "Pope's Homer," whereof the best criticism, perhaps, might be tersely expressed in a slight alteration of a famous saying, "It is magnificent, but it isn't Homer." Hereupon follows a chapter concerning "Pope at Twickenham," and scenes in which the faces of "Lady Mary" and "Patty Blount" peer out with alternate smiles and frowns. The next chapter is devoted to "the war with the dunces;" and it is shown how the "Dunciad," which was "a declaration of war against the whole tribe of scribblers," was destined, "like other such declarations," to bring "more consequences than Pope foresaw." In the next chapter is described "one of the most singular series of transactions to be found in the annals of literature," involving a plot whereby "Pope had printed his own correspondence, and had tricked Curll into publishing the book piratically, whilst the public was quite prepared to believe that Curll had performed a new piratical feat," leading to the conclusion that Pope "was—if we must speak bluntly—a liar and a hypocrite," though, of course, with extenuating qualities and misfortunes. The next chapter deals with the "most ambitious" of Pope's performances, the "Essay on Man." This is followed by a chapter treating of the "Epistles and Satires," in which it becomes necessary "to notice the worst of all the imputations upon Pope's character," an imputation connected with his behaviour towards the Duchess of Marlborough: the verdict appears to be nothing better than "not proven." Then comes the last chapter describing "the end," which was "a soft and touching end," when the poet, on May 30, 1744, "died so peacefully that his friends could not determine the exact moment of death." Chesterfield, however cynically, made an apt allusion when he said that Pope, having admitted a priest and received the last sacraments, had "sacrificed his cock to Æsculapius;" for the sickly poet's life had truly been a "long disease," for which death was the only cure.

"The Cosmogony, or creation of the world," is a subject that, since the time of Mr. Ephraim Jenkinson's discourse with the Vicar of Wakefield, not to mention those antique sages, Manetho and Sanchoniathon, has occupied many learned men. We must freely admit that Mr. Robert Ward, author of a volume on The Constitution of the Earth (G. Bell and Sons), which aims at the exposition of physical development of the earth, and of all its organic life, from solar emanation, has a claim to serious attention. He has made this subject one of diligent and reflecting study during nearly forty years, and so long since as 1844 published an essay which contained, in a more or less crude and unverified condition, the main ideas of his present carefully written treatise. We are disposed, at the outset, to assent to his claim that the proposition he sets forth should be considered entirely without prejudice to any theological principles or questions at issue between religious philosophy and the Materialist or Agnostic schools, which reject all ethical and metaphysical arguments for the existence of Creative Design and Rule. The law of development, whether in the origination of species among the organised inhabitants of this globe, or in the production of this globe itself from elements and by forces inherent in the physical conditions of the universe, might easily be proved consistent with the perpetual direct superintendence of its processes by a Divine Author. It is in this mood, as a fearless but reverential scientific inquirer, that Mr. Ward enters into the consideration of his interesting theme. We are not prepared to venture an opinion regarding the correctness of his views; but he seems to have a fair general acquaintance with geology, astronomy, and rudimentary physics, as well as with the discussions of recent natural philosophers, especially what is called the Darwinian theory, and the negative dogmatism of Professor Haeckel. This small book may at least be recommended as an example of the spirit in which it is possible to receive the largest, the most far-reaching conceptions of physical laws and their adequate agency, without abandoning the intellectual foundations of true religious faith.

HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. LAURIE, M.D. Completely rearranged, revised, re-written, annotated, and brought down to the present time, with a copious introduction, by R. S. Gutteridge, M.D. The present edition contains many important new chapters and sections, with new features and matter pertaining thereto, including the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of women and children. Diseases of Tropical Climates are fully considered, and the volume may be pronounced of the greatest value to families, emigrants, and missionaries.

Of this work a Physician of high standing writes:—"I have gone pretty well through your Edition of Laurie's Domestic Homœopathic Medicine, and I can truly say that it is the most perfect work of its kind ever published; in fact, it is, to my mind, too good for the general public, as it enlightens them too much in the art and mystery of medicine and surgery. For young medical beginners such a work is invaluable, as it would save them a great amount of reading. It is really superior to any Domestic yet published. I have the First and Second Editions of Laurie, and your Edition only shows what the work has developed into."

EAU DE SUEZ.

EAU DE SUEZ immediately and permanently cures toothache, whitens and preserves the teeth, removes all unpleasant odours, including that of tobacco, and secures a pure and healthy state of the gums, mouth, and throat. There are three kinds, distinguished from each other by a Yellow, Green, and Red Silk Thread.

EAU DE SUEZ.—GREEN THREAD must be considered the most valuable of all and should be used as a daily mouth-wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning.

EAU DE SUEZ.—YELLOW THREAD instantly removes toothache, however violent it may be.

EAU DE SUEZ.—RED THREAD is used in the same manner as the green, but is specially adapted for children.

SUEZ TOOTH-BRUSH.—This brush is soft, being made of the finest badger-hair. A hard tooth-brush is not only a foolish, but also a criminal instrument, so to speak. For by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will evidently become spongey and weakened, thus being no longer of any use in protecting the roots of the teeth, which naturally become exposed, and impart an offensive smell to the breath.

SUEZ ORANGE TOOTH PASTE secures the permanent removal of tartar, and by daily use restores the whiteness of the teeth.

EAU DE SUEZ.—To guard against counterfeiting, buy only those tooth-brushes which are stamped on the handle with the name "Suez," and those bottles which bear the words "Wilcox and Co., 336, Oxford-street, London," on the labels.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT. Trade Mark, "Anti-Fat" (Registered), is purely vegetable, and perfectly harmless. No change of diet required. Will reduce from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. Acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT is endorsed by those eminent in the medical professional. The late THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to Her Majesty the Queen, referring to ANTI-FAT in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail."

TAILOR-MADE COSTUMES. Debenham and Freebody have made extensive arrangements for the production of these useful Costumes, and beg to direct attention to their New Patterns for the present season in tailor-made Tweed and hand-braided Serges. The simplicity of the design and the excellence of the materials employed are maintained, while several novelties in military braiding have been introduced, and the arrangements generally ensure the perfection of fit and the best style of workmanship and finish, considerably below the usual price for this description of Costume. Sketches in various styles, with Patterns of Materials and Prices, post-free on application. DEBENHAM and FREEBODY, Wigmore-street, Welbeck-street, London, W.

PRATT'S LADIES' BELTS AND ABDOMINAL SUPPORTS ARE CONFIDENTLY RECOMMENDED AS THE MOST COMFORTABLE AND EFFICIENT EVER MADE. Apply to the Ladies' Attendant, J. F. PRATT, 420, OXFORD-STREET, LONDON, W.

NUDA VERITAS.—GREY HAIR restored by this valuable specific to its original shade, after which it grows the natural colour, not grey. Used as a dressing, it causes growth and arrests falling. The most harmless and effectual restorer extant. One trial will convince it has no equal. Price 10s. 6d., of all Chemists and Hairdressers. Testimonials post-free.—R. HOVENDEN and SONS, London.

GOLDEN HAIR.—ROBARE'S AUREOLINE produces the beautiful Golden Colour so much admired. Warranted perfectly harmless. Prices 5s. 6d. and 10s. 6d., of all Perfumers. Wholesale, HOVENDEN and SONS, 5, Great Marlborough-street, W.; and 93 and 95, City-road, E.C. London. Pinaud and Meyer, 37, Boulevard de Strasbourg, Paris; 31, Graben, Vienna; 44, Rue des Longs Chariots, Brussels.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

BREIDENBACH'S WOOD VIOLET Fresh as the flower itself. Price 2s. 6d., 5s., 10s. Bottle. Sold at all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the Universe; or Breidenbach and Co., Distillers of Wood Violet to the Queen, 157B, New Bond-street, W. Trade-Mark, the "Wood Violet."

MITCHAM LAVENDER.—PIESSE and LUBIN. LAVENDER, Sweet Lavender.—PIESSE and LUBIN are now distilling, at their Flower Farm, the famed MITCHAM LAVENDER. Samples may be had either at the Stillery, Mitcham-road, Surrey, or at the Laboratory, 2, New Bond-street, London.

TOURISTS.—Their skins always suffer. Blotches, roughness, and general coarseness disfigure it. THE ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the whitest and purest of all soaps, and by its wonderful purifying action preserves it soft and free from complexionable blemishes. Recommended by the entire Medical Profession. A boon to sensitive skins. By all Chemists, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. Chief Depôt, 532, Oxford-street, London.

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Paris, Nov. 4, 1878.
"I have attentively examined the beautiful pianos of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons that are exhibited at the Paris International Exhibition of 1878. I consider them to be exceptional in the ease with which gradations of sound can be produced, from the softest to the most powerful tones. These excellent pianos merit the approbation of all artists, as the tone is full as well as sustained, and the touch is of perfect evenness throughout its entire range, answering to every requirement of the pianist.
"CH. GOUNOD."

PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"I have pleasure in expressing my opinion that the Paris Exhibition Model Grand Pianofortes of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons are unsurpassed. The tone is deliciously sweet, sustained, and extraordinarily powerful; the touch responds to the faintest and to the most trying strains on it, and the workmanship is simply perfect. W. KUHE."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Illustrated London News."
"The French papers have been unanimous in their expressions of admiration of these splendid instruments. The grands especially have enchanted the Parisian professors and amateurs of music by their noble sonority, their enormous power, and the sympathetically voice-like quality of tone. The touch is so beautifully light, elastic, and certain, that many pianists of every nation, from the Abbé Liszt downwards, who have tried these instruments, have highly complimented the enterprising manufacturers on their success."

"In tone the instrument is exceedingly rich and sweet, and in touch the very perfection of lightness. Messrs. Brinsmead may certainly be congratulated upon their success."

"Morning Advertiser."
"The Legion of Honour, in addition to the other distinctions awarded to Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, the founder of the firm has been created Chevalier of the Legion of Honour."

JOHN BRINSMEAD and SONS'
PATENT SOSTENENTE PIANOS.
"Daily News."
"A new Pianoforte, recently manufactured by Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons, claims notice, not only on account of its beauty and richness of tone, but specially for some ingenious mechanical novelties, the most important being the addition of a third pedal, by means of which the sound of any note or notes may be almost indefinitely prolonged at the will of the player. Thus bass notes may be sustained after being struck by the left hand, which may then be taken away, and, with the right hand, may execute the most brilliant staccato passages, thus giving almost the effect of four hands. The patent 'check-repeater action,' a speciality of Messrs. Brinsmead, enables the performer to command with ease the most rapid retteration of the same note; the facility of the key movement in general being such that glissando passages can be executed with such perfect ease as to render them practicable with the lightest touch. The volume of tone is intensified by a peculiar construction of the sounding-board, another improvement being the system of bridging, by which the vibrations are increased and rendered sympathetic. The Pianoforte is capable of all degrees of delicacy and power, its massive structure rendering it less liable to get out of tune than usual; and the instrument is altogether calculated to extend the reputation of its makers."

THE AFGHAN WAR.

Our last week's record of the war, being made up on Wednesday evening, stated that no fear was then entertained of the security of the British garrison at Candahar, though it had suffered losses, which were specified, in a sally on Monday, the 16th ult., to seize a village eastward of the city. It was further stated that the relieving force from Cabul, under General Sir F. Roberts, had arrived at Khelat-i-Ghilzai, eighty-eight miles from Candahar, and would probably be near the besieged city about the first or second day of this week.

The approach of General Roberts, who made extraordinary speed in his march from Cabul and from Ghuzni, accomplishing 136 miles in eight days, obliged Ayoub Khan to quit the siege of Candahar, about the middle of last week, and to retire eight miles westward, to Sanjiri, on the right bank of the Argandab river; he afterwards moved a few miles northward, to the Baba Wulu Pass, a View of which appeared in our Journal of the 21st ult.; and this might probably be the scene of the expected battle, if he should venture to fight with General Roberts. The Afghan army, strongly posted and entrenched there, by the latest reports, was estimated at 23,000 men.

The total force commanded by General Sir F. Roberts, after relieving Candahar, would consist of about 16,000 men, comprising the following regiments and details. The division that has marched from Cabul consisted of the 92nd and 72nd Highlanders, 60th Rifles, 2nd, 4th, and 5th Goorkhas, 2nd, 3rd, and 15th Sikhs, 23rd Pioneers, 24th and 25th Native Infantry, the 9th Lancers, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, 3rd Punjaub Cavalry, a regiment of Central India Horse, two batteries of Royal Artillery, and six mountain guns. To these have to be added from the Khelat-i-Ghilzai garrison, taken up on the road, two guns of a mountain battery, one squadron of the 3rd Sind Horse, two companies of her Majesty's 66th, the 4th Regiment Bombay Native Infantry, and a wing of the 2nd Beloochis; and from the Candahar garrison ten guns (including a garrison battery), the 2-7th Regiment, and the 19th and 29th Regiments Native Infantry (Bombay), with two squadrons of the Poona Horse, and at least a regiment and a half, not yet identified in telegrams, but believed to be the 4th Bombay Rifles and 9th B.N.I.; as well as the remains of General Burrows's force, about one company of the 66th, four guns of the Royal Horse Artillery, five squadrons of native cavalry, and about 500 native infantry.

Telegrams from General Sir F. Roberts, dated Khelat-i-Ghilzai, on the 23rd, were published in London on Monday, but it was known on Saturday that he had reached that place. He halted there during the next day, the 24th, and then resumed his march to Candahar, taking with him the British garrison of Khelat-i-Ghilzai above detailed, which numbered about one thousand men, under Lieutenant-Colonel Tanner. The fort was then handed over to an Afghan Chief, Mohammed Sadik Khan, of the Toki tribe, who was formerly in command of it under the late Ameer of Cabul, Shere Ali, and who is to hold it for the new Ameer, Abdurrahman. General Sir F. Roberts says:—"We have met with no opposition during the march, and have been able to make satisfactory arrangements for supplies, especially forage, which at this season is plentiful. The cavalry horses and artillery mules are in excellent order. Our casualties to date are one soldier 72nd Highlanders, one sepoy 23rd Pioneers, one 2nd Sikhs, two sepoys 3rd Sikhs dead; one sepoy 4th Goorkhas, two sepoys 24th Punjaub Native Infantry, duffadar 3rd Punjaub Cavalry missing; six camp followers dead, five missing. The missing men have, I fear, been murdered." He telegraphed from Ghuzni on the 13th, and from Oba Karez on the 18th ult.

A letter received in General Roberts' camp from Candahar, regarding the sortie of 16th inst., says:—"We made a sortie with 300 cavalry and 800 infantry, furnished by 7th Fusiliers, 19th and 28th Native Infantry, hoping to pull down the loopholed walls facing the Cabul and the Durani Gate. The result was not satisfactory. The village was found to be strongly held and honeycombed with loopholes. Our infantry managed to push through, but could not effect a hold, though the supports of the enemy suffered from our cavalry and our infantry and artillery fire. We had to get back to the walls under a heavy fire from their loopholes, and our losses, in officers more especially, were heavy." It appears, however, that the enemy had abandoned this suburban village on the next day, leaving the east face of the city free. One of the wounded, Major Vandeleur, is since dead.

With regard to the progress of the Quetta relieving force, under General Phayre, approaching Candahar from the south, we learn that, on Friday last week, General Phayre was at the Chaman fort, on the west side of the Khojak Pass, while General Wilkinson, with the cavalry brigade, was on the east side, at Killa Abdullah Khan. Their rear communications, in Pishin, were threatened by a large hostile gathering of local tribes on the Toba mountains. This is the locality of which we give an Illustration, in the present number of our Journal, from the Sketch furnished by Major-General Sir Michael Biddulph. It is reported that an advanced detachment of Ayoub Khan's army is still holding the position of Takht-i-Pul, thirty miles from Candahar, and that General Phayre will have to force that position.

The official liquidators of the Old West of England and South Wales District Bank have issued a circular to the shareholders, inclosing the accounts up to June 30, and they state that, taking into account the receipts from calls, they have reasonable hope that there will be sufficient to meet the remaining liabilities without reverting to the collection of the balance of the £4 call. They further state that a considerable saving has been effected by seven eighths of the creditors having waived their claim to interest upon receiving immediate payment of their claims.

Most of the classes of the St. John Ambulance Association are closed for the summer recess, but already active preparations are being made at many places for the ensuing autumn and winter session, and the formation of numerous new centres is being arranged. During the past year 4068 certificates for first aid to the injured have been awarded to pupils at the centres; 1314 certificates to detached male and female classes (held pending the formation of centres); in addition to the bestowal of 327 vellum certificates for the second or higher course. These numbers represent only the successful candidates, and, therefore, only a small number of those actually receiving instruction, about a third; the remainder either failing to pass the required text, or being prevented attending the examination. The Handbook for the pupils by the late Dr. Shepperd (killed at Isandhlwana), 20,000 copies of which have been sold without a single advertisement, is being revised prior to the issue of a second edition. As an instance of the wonderful popularity of this movement, it may be mentioned that though only established by the Order of St. John in 1877, its area of operation has been more than quadrupled every successive year, and that continued applications for its extension are received from not only all parts of the United Kingdom, but even from the Colonies and America.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William on Wednesday issued a proclamation addressed to the soldiers of the German Army. His Majesty recalls the events which happened ten years ago, the great deeds of the German Army and the victory of Sedan. The Emperor expresses once more his most profound thanks and warmest acknowledgments to the Army, and hopes that it may continue to be a model of the fulfilment of all calls of honour and duty, maintaining the strictest discipline, and never relaxing in diligently training for war. "Then," continues his Majesty, "in future times of difficulty and gravity, from which may God long continue to preserve us, the Army will ever be the firm guardian of the Fatherland."

The Crown Prince, it is stated, has met with an enthusiastic reception in South Germany, where he has been making a tour of military inspection.

The Emperor has, by a Cabinet order, appointed Oct. 15 next as the date for the formal consecration and opening of Cologne Cathedral. His Majesty and most of the members of his house, together with other distinguished persons, will be present.

Prince Bismarck returned to Berlin early yesterday week.

A declaration has been published at Berlin, signed by twenty-eight members of the German Parliament or Prussian Diet, announcing their secession from the ranks of the National Liberal Party. They declare their intention to uphold the political liberties already achieved, and to adhere to the principles of freedom of commerce and reform of the Imperial system of taxation, rejecting unnecessary burdens and indirect taxes, especially those which press heavily upon the poorer classes. They also insist upon ecclesiastical and religious freedom being guaranteed by independent State legislation, protecting the inalienable rights of the State.

HOLLAND.

The Queen of the Netherlands was on Tuesday safely delivered of a daughter. According to a bulletin issued in the evening the Queen and infant Princess were doing well. The Princess receives the names of Wilhelmina Helena Paulina Maria. Much enthusiasm was displayed at the Hague, and the town is gaily decorated. The Hotel de Ville and other houses were illuminated.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Emperor Francis Joseph received on Thursday week in private audience the Japanese Envoy, who presented his credentials to his Majesty. In the speech which he addressed to the Emperor, the Envoy conveyed the congratulations of the Emperor and Empress of Japan on the occasion of the betrothal of the Crown Prince Rudolph. At the same time he presented to his Majesty the Japanese Order of Chrysantheme, which is only conferred on Sovereigns. The Emperor, who expressed himself charmed with this mark of esteem on the part of the Mikado, charged the Envoy to convey his best thanks to his Sovereign.

The Emperor, accompanied by his suite, arrived at Olmütz on Sunday afternoon on his way to Galicia, to attend the army manœuvres. His Majesty met with a very enthusiastic reception.

RUSSIA.

The Emperor left Tsarskoe Selo on Sunday evening for Livadia. He passed through Moscow on Monday.

The retirement of the Grand Duke Nicholas from the command of the Guards is officially announced.

A Madrid telegram states that the Copyright Treaty between Great Britain and Spain has been prolonged.

Lady Harriet Scott Bentinck has given £4000 to the International Hospital at Naples, to enable the committee to obtain premises of their own.

The ladies' singing professorship at the Brussels Conservatoire has been offered to and accepted by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington.

We are requested to state that the publication of the Levant Herald has recommenced under the title of the Constantinople Messenger.

Mr. Blanchard Jerrold, chairman of the English executive committee of the International Literary Association, states that the third congress of the association will hold its sittings in Lisbon from the 20th to the 29th of this month.

Thousands of persons have been rendered homeless by a hurricane which occurred at Jamaica on the night of the 18th ult. The crops, fruit-trees, and farm produce have, for the greater part, been destroyed. Famine is stated to be imminent, and help is required for the thousands who are starving.

The conference on International Law at Berne was closed yesterday week, after papers had been read on Limited Partnership by Mr. Jenkins, on the Marriage Laws by Mr. Alexander, and on the Testamentary Laws and Matrimonial Rights by Mr. Tristram, all of London.

The trial of Cordigliani for the recent outrage in the Italian Parliament was concluded last week. He was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for contempt of the State institutions, and to five years' imprisonment for attempting to wound. He has, moreover, to pay a fine of 2000 lire.

The Admiralty having directed Amsterdam Island to be searched, in consequence of the belief that the crew and passengers of a missing vessel might be found there, her Majesty's ship Raleigh arrived there on May 27. A boat, hut, and signs of recent habitation were discovered, with French and English names carved on rocks, and a flagstaff. These indications are, however, conjectured to be merely the traces of fishermen, who are supposed periodically to visit the island.

The ship Scottish Prince, 895 tons, Captain G. Scale, owned by Messrs. M'Ilwraith, M'Eacharn, and Co., of London, was dispatched from Plymouth on Thursday, the 26th ult., by the company's agents, Messrs. W. T. Weekes and Co., for Rockhampton, Queensland, with emigrants. She takes 30 married couples, 87 single men, 94 single women, 18 boys, 15 girls, and 10 infants—in all, 248 souls. Of these, 156 are Irish, 125 English, and 3 Scotch.—The Agent-General for New South Wales has been informed by telegram of the arrival in Sydney of the ship Peterborough, which sailed from Plymouth with emigrants in June last.

The conference of members of the Iron and Steel Institute was held last week at Düsseldorf, and the reception given them by the local authorities was very cordial. The President of the Institute, in his opening address, pointed out the immense advantages which had been gained both in labour and cost by the improvements lately introduced in the methods of dealing with iron, and expressed an opinion that still further advances would certainly be made, which would extend the usefulness of the metal. The programme of the Conference included the inspection of the processes adopted at the principal works in the neighbourhood of Düsseldorf. Last Saturday the members of the institute took their excursion up the Rhine to Coblenz. At Coblenz the Royal Palace was visited, the Empress having given special orders that the members should be shown over the rooms and grounds.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The "coming of age" of the Volunteer force of the United Kingdom was celebrated on Knavesmire-common, York, on Saturday, by a review, in which 10,000 volunteers participated. At the close of the review, which was a great success, Major-General Willis, C.B., who was in command, spoke highly of the conduct of the force, and pointed out certain respects in which he thought its efficiency might be improved. In consequence of the heat numbers of men had to fall out of the ranks.

Numerous competitors attended the annual prize meeting of the 1st Sussex, which was held last week in Shepcote Valley. There was good shooting on the whole, notwithstanding a treacherous wind prevailed. The Battalion Cup was won by Private Sparshott, with 80 points at the Queen's ranges, first stage, Lieutenant Livesey being beaten by one point, as he made an outer only with his last shot.

Last Saturday the silver challenge trophy, value fifty guineas, presented by Mr. J. Holms, M.P., to the Volunteers of the Tower Hamlets and the Essex Corps in the vicinity, was contested at the Woodford ranges. The three regiments entitled to compete were the 1st and 2nd Tower Hamlets and the 4th Essex, each of which was represented by ten men, the ranges, &c., being, as in previous years, 200, 500, and 600 yards, seven shots at each, Wimbledon targets and scoring. The cup was won again by the 1st Tower Hamlets with 695 points, the 4th Essex were second with 661, and the 2nd Tower Hamlets third with 608.

The annual competitions for the prizes presented by the Worshipful Companies of Merchant Taylors, Joiners, Salters, Grocers, Sadlers, Fishmongers, the Ward of Farringdon Without, and others, to the 2nd London Volunteer Rifle Regiment, were brought to a close last week at the Rainham Ranges. The weather was fine, and the arrangements, carried out by Captain Thimm, executive officer, excellent. In the first competition, at 200 and 400 yards, seven shots at each, points for drill being added to the shooting score, the principal prizes were awarded to Sergeant Cuttriss, Captain Prichard, Private E. Houghton, Colour-Sergeant Cooper, and Private Richardson. The Battalion Challenge Clock was finally won by B (Captain Greene's) Company, and the Challenge Cups were won as follows:—Mrs. Rimington's Cup, cup, jewel, and money prize, by Sergeant Cuttriss; Company of Salters' Challenge Cup, cup, jewel, and money prize, by Private Richardson; Merchant Taylors' Cup, cup, jewel, and money prize, by Sergeant W. White; Company of Joiners' Cup, cup, jewel, and money prize, by Sergeant Cuttriss.

A rifle contest, for prizes of the total value of several hundred pounds, presented by the Prince of Wales, Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay, V.C., M.P., the Hon. Mrs. Loyd-Lindsay, Lord Colville of Culross, and others, was begun on Monday at the Park ranges, Tottenham, among the members of the Hon. Artillery Company of London, of which the Prince of Wales is Captain-General and Colonel, and was resumed and concluded on Tuesday. A better day for firing with the Snider could hardly have been desired. There was just sufficient wind to carry off the smoke at the firing-point, and the almost total absence of sun gave competitors a chance which is seldom experienced. As a result, the practice was exceedingly good, and fully sustained the reputation of the ancient regiment. Upwards of one hundred members competed, under the command of Captain Jones, and the general arrangements were well carried out by Sergeant J. A. M'Kenzie, hon. sec. of the Shooting Committee. Lieutenant-Colonel Loyd-Lindsay's prize, to which were added two others presented by the Court of Assistants of the Company, was shot for at 500 and 600 yards, ten rounds at each range, "class," not Wimbledon, targets and scoring. The highest possible was, therefore, 80 points. Taking the first eight, at the first distance, three made 36 out of a possible 40 (Private Chantler, Drill-Sergeant Pash, and Private Munn), one (Private T. Quarm) 37, and one (Sergeant J. A. M'Kenzie) 35. At 600 yards, Private Chantler added a 33, bringing his total to 69, which won him the first prize of £15. Private Quarm got on altogether 67, and took second prize; and Drill-Instructor Pash finished with 29 (total 65), winning third prize. The Hon. Mrs. Loyd-Lindsay's prize of ten guineas, and two others, presented by the Fitzroy Lodge and the Veteran Company, were also contested. The prizes were awarded to Sergeant-Instructor of Musketry Wace, Private C. E. Lewis, and Corporal E. S. Roberts. The Non-commissioned Officers' Prizes, open only to those who had never won a prize in the regiment, were won as follows:—Private Groundwater, Private Marshall, Private J. H. Ellis, Sergeant Raftery, Private Sandell, Private Santer, Private J. S. M'Kenzie, Captain Durrant, and Corporal Port. The prize presented by the vice-president (Lord Colville of Culross) to the marksmen of the past and current year, was gained by Sergeant J. M. Wace; but, having won a prize of greater value on the previous day, he relinquished it to Corporal Roberts. For the Prince of Wales's Prize upwards of ninety competitors entered, each firing seven rounds at 200, 500, and 600 yards, as in the first stage of the Queen's Prize at Wimbledon. After some shooting of great merit the highest aggregate proved to be that of Sergeant Williams. Having won the prize of last year, he was by the rules of the competition debarred from taking it again, and will receive instead the oil-painting, value twenty guineas. The prize itself goes to the next highest—Corporal Matthews.

The annual competition between teams of twenty Volunteers representing the counties of Devon and Somerset was shot at the Clyst range, Exeter. The competitors fired seven shots each at 200, 500, and 600 yards, with the Snider rifle. The Devonshire men led at each distance, and finished with a total of 1613 points, giving the very fine average with the Snider of over 80 points per man. The Somerset team concluded with a total of 1474, giving an average of 74 points. Devon thus won by 139 points. There were prizes for the highest individual scores in the match irrespective of the teams to which they belonged, and the winners were, £5, Serjeant Bolt, Cullompton; £3, Sergeant Gratwicke, Exeter; £2 10s., Corporal Wakelin, Exeter; £2, Colour-Sergeant Young, Bath; £1 10s. each, Major Pearse, Hatherleigh; Private Goodridge, Totnes, and Sergeant Howell, Williton; £1 each, Captain Fulford, Exeter; Sergeant Tucker, Totnes, and Private Higgins, Glastonbury.

The large scale Map of Afghanistan, of which a second edition has just been issued by Mr. E. Stanford, at Charing-cross, will be of much service at the present military and political crisis. It shows the existing British frontiers, the new railway from the Indus to Sibi, on the route to Quetta and Candahar, and the lines of advance taken by the army of Ayoub Khan, from Herat, and by the forces destined to relieve Candahar, from Cabul and Quetta, respectively commanded by General Sir F. Roberts and General Phayre. The mountain ranges, plains, valleys, and rivers of that rugged country are traced with geographical accuracy, and brought out in almost picturesque relief. Mr. Stanford has also published a smaller and cheaper map of Afghanistan and the adjacent countries.

The Bishop of Oxford has arrived at the Esplanade, West Cliff, Whitby, for the season.

An anonymous donor has contributed £500 towards the St. Alphege, Southwark, Church Building Fund.

It is stated that the Duchess Dowager of Cleveland has given £1000 towards the endowment fund of the Bishopric of Newcastle.

A new church has been erected at Hallam Fields, in the vicinity of Ilkeston, by Messrs. J. and G. Crompton, the bankers and ironmasters. The dedication service was held on Tuesday week. The church is intended for the use of the workmen in the employ of the Stanton Iron Company.

The Rev. J. Rathbone Ellis, Rector of Westerdale, in the county of York, has given to his parish church a stained-glass east window (the work of Messrs. Powell), devoted to an illustration of the Crucifixion, after the Gospel of St. John, as a memorial to his late wife and daughter.

The annual reports of the Diocesan Inspectors for Essex have been presented to the Bishop of St. Albans. These reports show that in the past year 430 schools were inspected in 333 parishes. The number of scholars on the books was 52,195. In the Sunday Schools there were 2610 teachers and 30,050 scholars. All these figures show an increase upon last year. The night schools examined, however, are only 43, with 895 scholars, as against 63, with 1359 scholars in 1879.

Kirkdale church, one of the most ancient ecclesiastical structures in the kingdom—dating as it does from Saxon times—is about to undergo partial restoration, the authorities of the University of Oxford, who are the patrons and rectors of the living, having determined on restoring and repairing the chancel. Mr. S. Crowther, of Manchester, is the architect for the new work, and Mr. Foggett, of the same place, the contractor.

The Archbishop of Canterbury gave his Triennial Charge at Croydon on Tuesday, and referred with considerable satisfaction to the rapidly growing relations between the Established English Church and Christian communities abroad. In alluding to the passing of the Burials Bill, he expressed an opinion that the clergy would soon recover from any soreness of feeling which the late controversy had occasioned, and act in a liberal spirit towards Dissenters. With respect to the Public Worship Regulations Act, he claimed that it had been a decided success, as it had been authoritatively settled that points of difference with respect to the conduct of Church services should be determined by the Bishop.

At a meeting of the Carlisle Diocesan Church Extension Society at Ulverston on Monday the Bishop of Carlisle, who presided, deprecated the despondent view taken by many as to the position of the Church of England. He remarked that it would not benefit her or be making any better preparation for her future to lose heart, at all events at the present stage of proceedings. There were many events now occurring which might have a tendency to make persons downhearted with regard to her future position. He did not wonder at their despondency, and was not surprised that what had taken place with regard to the Burials Bill should have filled many people with gloomy views as to the future of the Church. But there was a brighter side to look at, and he thought it was better to look at that side. It seemed to him that any legislation of the kind he had mentioned would be but as dust in the balance compared with the vast power which the Church of England had if she would only exercise it with unanimity and effect. The true method of defending the Church was in making the parochial system thoroughly efficient; and should the question of the maintenance of the Church ever come to the fore, as probably it would, he doubted whether the people of England would be so exceedingly blind to their own spiritual interests as to accept the proposal to destroy that Church which had been built up with so much pains and so marvellously blessed by Almighty God, and of which he believed an immense majority were exceedingly proud.

A new Jewish synagogue has been opened at Newcastle-on-Tyne by the Rev. Dr. Adler, of London, who preached the inaugural sermon. The building cost upwards of £5000, and will accommodate nearly 700 persons.

A meeting of the congregation of Myrtle-street Baptist chapel, Liverpool, was convened on Monday night to hear a statement from Mr Hugh Stowell Brown as to his resignation, which he requested might take effect in March next. Mr. Brown has been the minister of the Myrtle-street congregation for thirty-three years. He states that he does not intend to leave Liverpool, but to devote himself to Evangelistic work. A resolution regretting the announcement was passed unanimously.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The result of the Oxford local examinations, which took place in June last, has been issued by the secretary to the delegacy, the Rev. S. Edwards. There were 2119 pupils examined at the various centres, and 1321 passed. Of the senior candidates 675 were examined; 292 were boys and 383 were girls. Of these 200 boys and 217 girls passed. Of the juniors 1444 were examined, 1100 of whom were boys and 344 girls. Of these numbers 709 boys and 195 girls passed. Mr. R. S. Long, of the Liverpool Institute, was first in order of merit. In the junior department Liverpool again occupies the first place, the list being headed by A. L. Humphries, of the Liverpool College. Eleven candidates amongst the seniors have shown sufficient merit to be excused from the responsions examination of the University of Oxford, and five ladies have shown sufficient merit to be excused from the first examination of women over eighteen years of age.

The ladies have done well in the First B.A. and B.Sc. examinations of London University. In the French two of them stand alone in the first class, none of their male rivals having got beyond the second. In German there is a lady in the first class; while one has obtained honours in Latin, two in English, and two in Mathematics. A student from Newnham has taken honours in botany and chemistry. Nine students went up from Bedford College for the examinations, and all of them passed, eight in the first division. In the Honours-list of the same University seven women passed—four of these being students at Bedford College.

The Bishop of Lincoln has bought the old County Hospital of Lincoln for the purposes of the Chancellor's Theological Schools, and the premises are being adapted to their new destination. This adaptation, together with the furnishing of the students' rooms, &c., has demanded an outlay of £3000. Half of this, through careful husbanding of the resources of the college, is already in hand, and it is hoped that the remaining moiety may be raised before the opening day, Oct. 1. A correspondent suggests that donations may find a suitable object in the completion of the college of which the Bishop of Lincoln is the virtual founder, and to which he has already contributed no less than between £7000 and £8000. Any such contributions sent to the Rev. Jacob Clements, Sub-Dean of Lincoln, will be gratefully received and acknowledged.

Mr. E. A. Smedley, B.A., late Scholar of Queen's College, Cambridge, has been appointed to the Second Mastership of Bishop Auckland Grammar School, vacant by the preferment of Mr. J. S. Cooper to the Head Mastership of Cartmel Grammar School.

Mr. J. D. Binney, B.A., Scholar of King's College, Cambridge, Fifteenth Wrangler, and Second Class Classical Tripos 1879, has been appointed to a mathematical mastership at the Hereford Cathedral School.

The Rev. Arthur Temperley, M.A., Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, for the last five years mathematical master of Hereford Cathedral Grammar School, and Curate of St. Nicholas, in that city, has been appointed by the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln to the head mastership of the De Aston Grammar School, Market Rasen, Lincolnshire.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.

As was stated in our last issue, the British Association for the Advancement of Science opened its annual meeting at Swansea on Wednesday week, under the presidency of Dr. Ramsay, the Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom. The subject of the president's address was the recurrence of certain geological phenomena, his object being to show that all known geological formations have been produced under physical ciscumstances closely resembling, if not identical with, those with which we are now more or less familiar. Through the various geological epochs he traced this identity of operations in respect to the metamorphism of rocks, the products of volcanoes, the upheaving and denudation of mountain chains, the deposit of great inland areas of salt, the recurrence of fresh-water conditions in lakes and estuaries, and glacial influences. His conclusion was that from the Laurentian epoch down to the present day all the physical events in the history of the earth have varied neither in kind nor in intensity from those of which we now have experience.

All the sections, except the Mechanical, were opened on Thursday. In the Economic Science Section a prolonged discussion took place on a report made by the committee as to inspectors of elementary schools. The committee recommended that inspectors should be subjected to tests of fitness to examine scholars in the scientific subjects embraced in the code, and that qualified elementary teachers should be eligible for inspectorships. The committee was reappointed and enlarged, and was directed further to investigate the subject and report. In the Geological Section, Dr. H. C. Sorby dealt with the comparative structure of artificial slags and erupted or volcanic rocks; Mr. Rudler delivered an address in the department of Anthropology; in the Geographical Section General Defroy dealt with the Geography of North and Central America, British Columbia, and Canada, and explorations in the East and in Africa; and Professor Gryll Adams in the Mathematical and Physical Section an address on the facts in the border-land between chemistry and physics.

Papers were read and discussions took place on various subjects at the sectional meetings on Friday. Sir Richard Temple gave an address on the road from the Indus to Candahar, pointing out the physical advantages of Candahar, and expressing confidence in General Roberts's ability to overcome all obstacles and reduce the tribes to order. Mr. Balfour gave an address on questions connected with the Darwinian theory of development; Professor Rolleston read a paper on the structure of ancient barrows, and Mr. Plunkett read a paper on an ancient settlement found beneath the Bohoe bog, Fermanagh. In the Geological Department papers were read by Mr. De Rance and Professor Boyd Dawkins. In the Economic Science Section there was a discussion on the systems of teaching the deaf to speak. In the evening Professor Dawkins gave a lecture on Primeval Man.

Only two sections—the Mechanical and the Mathematical Sections—met on Saturday. There were numerous excursions, and at Gower a supposed tumulus was opened under the direction of Mr. Hussey Vivian, M.P. The supposed tumulus, however, was a blank draw. It was not a place of sepulture, but simply a gravel and boulder heap, thought to have been accumulated by the action of two small streams which met there. One party of excursionists visited the dockyard of Pembroke, and lunched on board the Great Eastern. At St. David's the Dean met his visitors, and conducted them over the cathedral. Mr. Seebohn gave a lecture in the music-hall on "The North-East Passage."

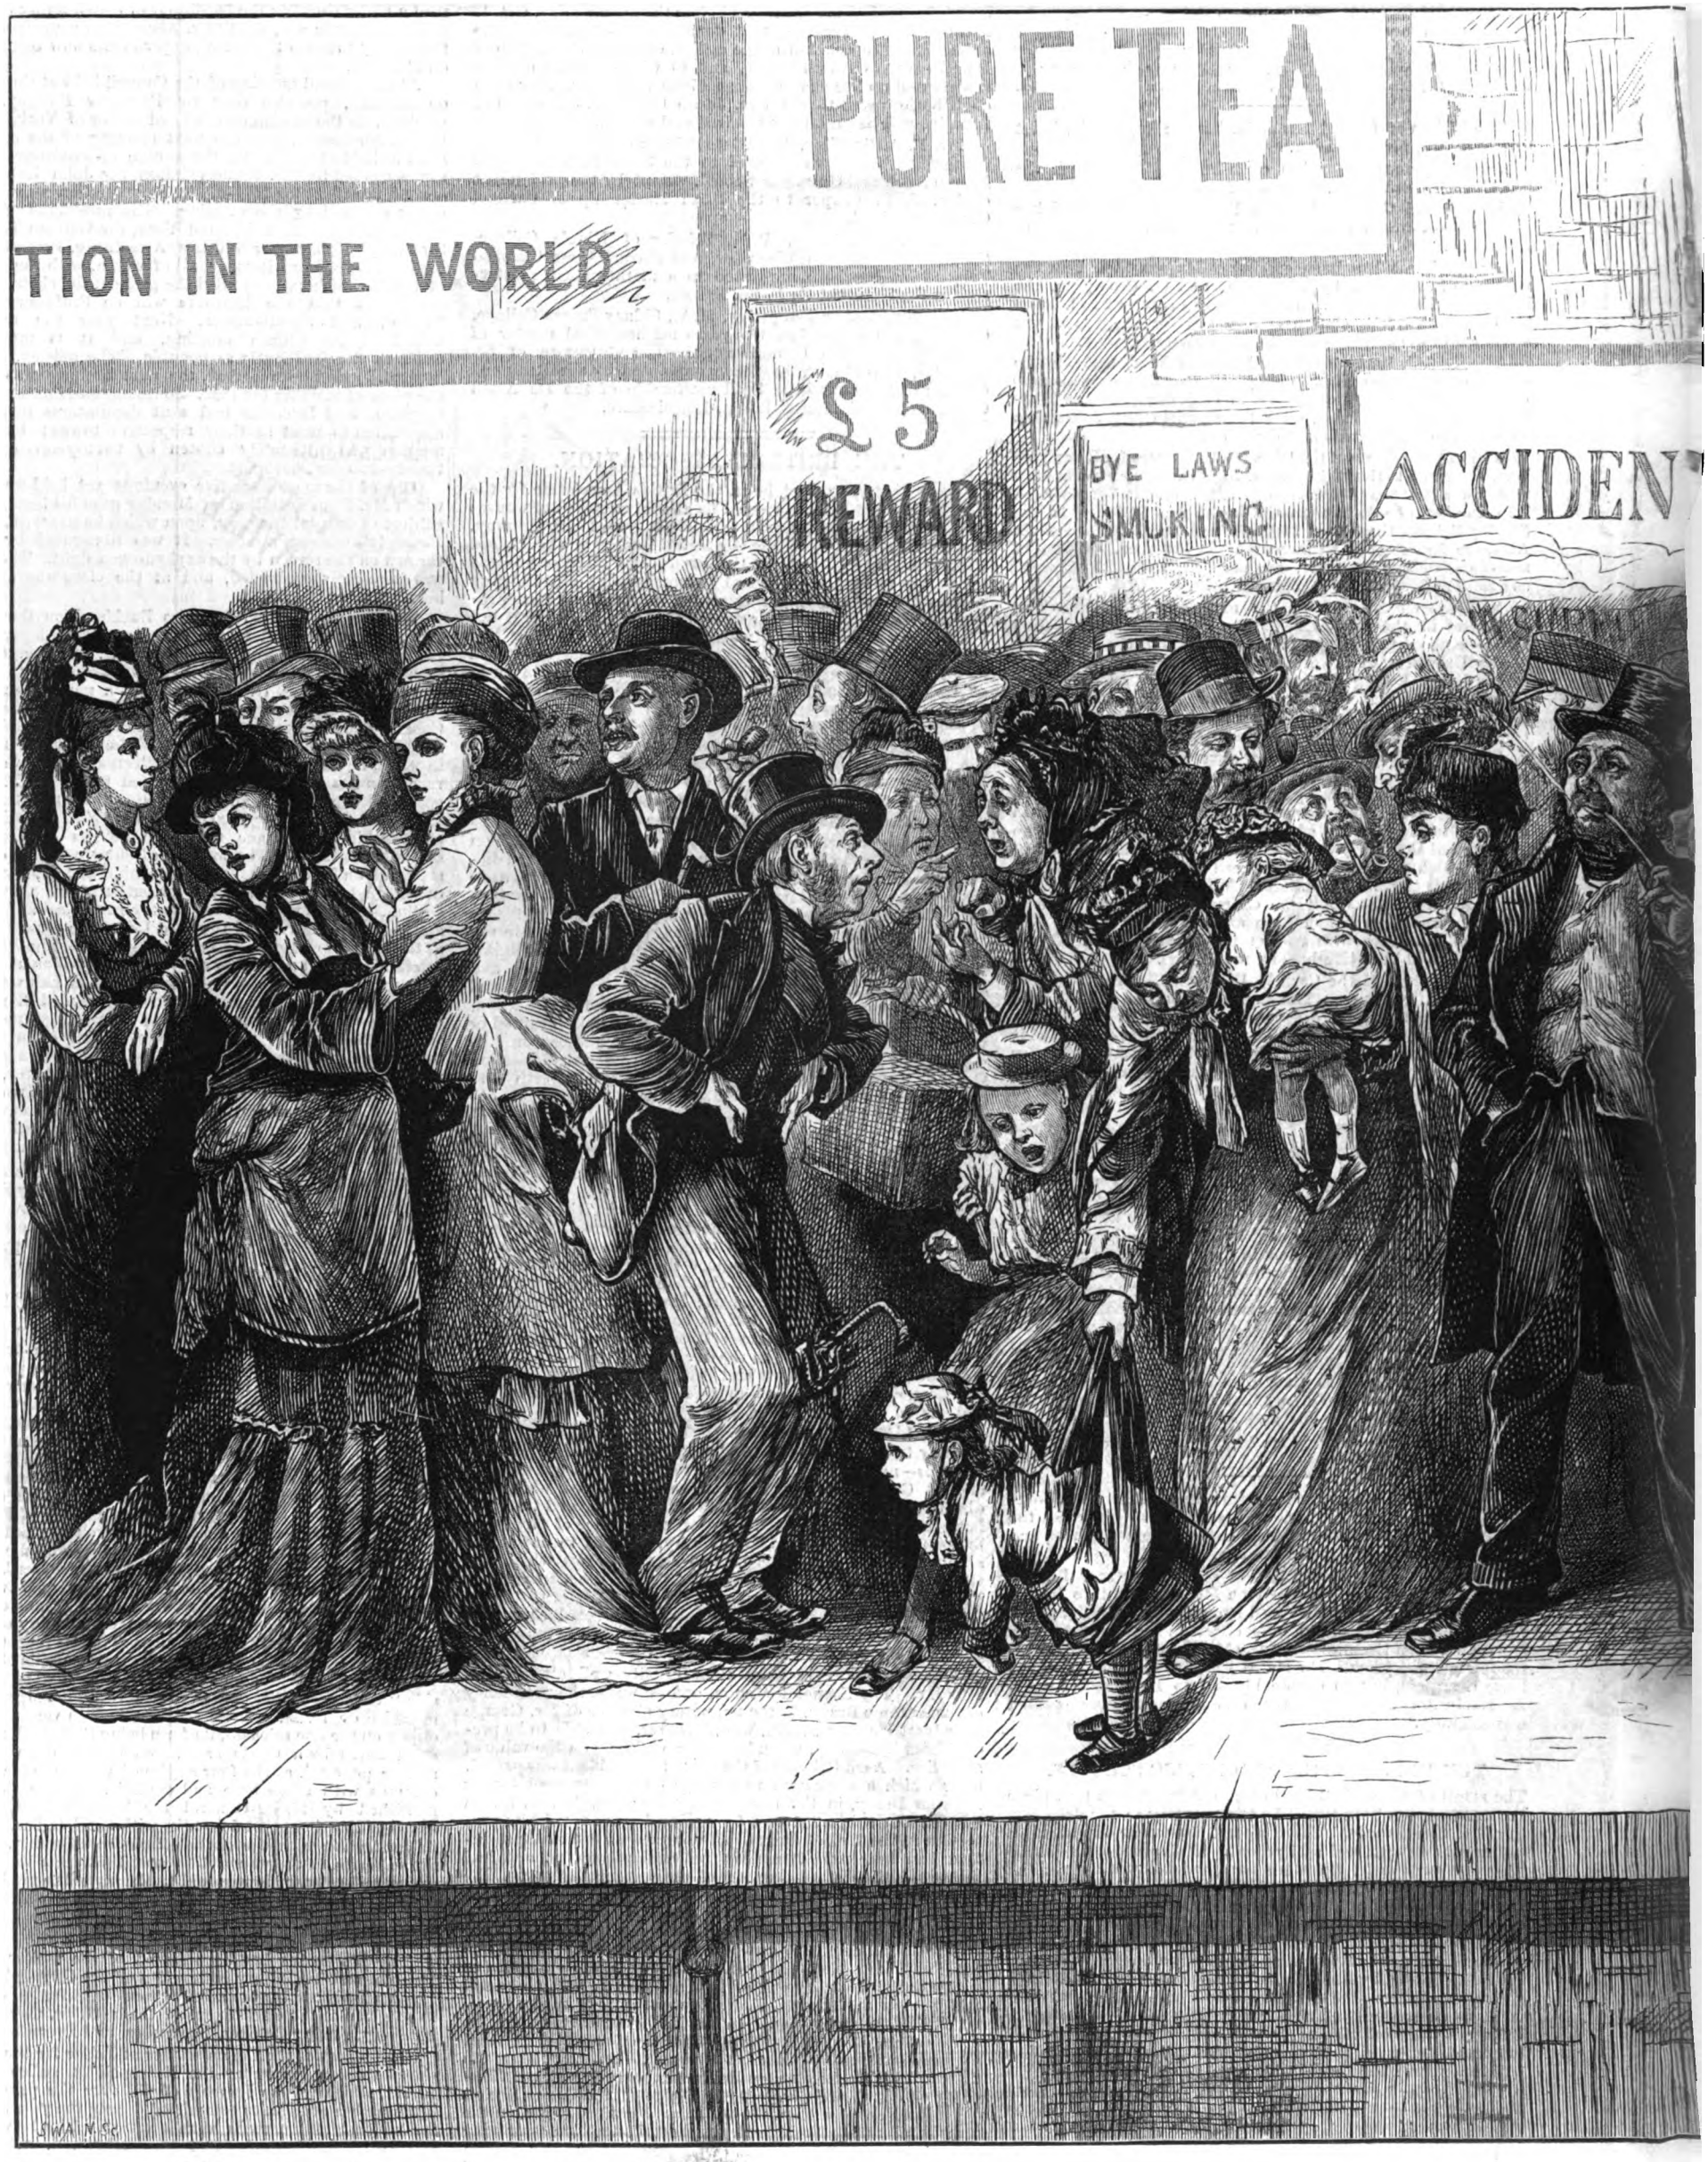
The sections were more than usually well attended on Monday. The Economic Section opened under the presidency of Sir Antonio Brady, in the temporary absence of Mr. George Woodyatt Hastings, M.P., who, however, was able to be present later in the day, when he gave an address on the value of statistics. A cordial vote of thanks to the president was passed, after which a discussion took place on a paper read by Sir Antonio Brady, in the absence of the writer, Mr. G. Baden Powell, the subject matter being the lessons taught by protection in the United States. It was pointed out that protection had hampered American national prosperity, and had prevented the due setting up of native manufactures. The protective system would be doomed when the nation had been driven to a just appreciation of its economic position and a due regard to the recorded experiences of other communities. In the discussion which followed the whole question of free trade and protection was opened; but, with the exception of a vote of thanks being passed to Mr. Baden Powell, no formal motion was made. Mr. F. N. Newcombe then read a paper on diminishing annuities. In the Mathematical Section, Mr. J. Shoolbred brought up the report of the Committee on Tidal Observations in the English Channel, Mr. Bottomley the report of the Committee for Making Experiments on the Elasticity of Wires, and Mr. Gill the report of the Committee on Pendulums. The Hon. F. A. Russell read a paper on the "Absorption of Radiant Heat by Films of Water," Mr. Courtenay Fox a paper on "Some Laws which Regulate the Succession of Temperature and Rainfall in the Climate of London." In the Geographical Section, presided over by General Thullier, Lieutenant R. Ivens, a member of the Portuguese expedition party to West Central Africa, gave the results of the expedition, which was carried out at the expense of the Portuguese Government; and Mr. Laurence Oliphant read a paper describing his travels east of the Jordan, where he went for the purpose of surveying a road for a proposed line of railway to the valley of that river. Professor J. Prestwich read a paper on the geological evidence of the submergence of the south-west of Europe during the early human period. A long discussion took place on the theory he suggested, but the opinion of the section was against any sudden wide sweeping submergence. Mr. Ernest Benedict, in the Mechanical Section, read a paper showing the feasibility of constructing a Channel tunnel, and the president (Mr. Abernethy) expressed himself favourably towards the boring experiments now being carried on at Dover.

At the general meeting of the Council held at three o'clock on Monday, presided over by Professor Ramsay, it was resolved, on the motion of the Lord Mayor of York, seconded by Mr. Abernethy, that the next meeting of the association shall be held at York. On the motion of Professor Williamson, seconded by Mr. Francis Galton, Sir John Lubbock was elected president for 1881-2. The nomination was most cordially received by the meeting. The presidents of sections elected were the Archbishop of York, Sir William Thompson, Sir Joseph Hooker, Sir William Armstrong, Professors Williamson, Owen, and Ramsay, all of whom, with the exception of the Archbishop, have filled the presidential chair. It was announced that the lecturers will be Professors Huxley, Tyndal, and Spottiswoode. Next year the association will hold its fiftieth meeting, and it is intended to celebrate it as brilliantly as possible. The officers, local and general, having been elected, the next business was to select the place of meeting for 1882. Southampton, Southport, Nottingham, and Leicester had sent deputations inviting the association to meet in their respective towns; but Southampton was ultimately chosen by twenty-seven votes to twenty-two for Southport.

One of the most attractive evenings yet held was that at which Mr. Francis Galton on Monday gave his lecture on the subject of Mental Imagery, upon which he has written in the Fortnightly current number. It was illustrated by pictures thrown on the screen by the oxyhydrogen light. The lecturer was frequently applauded, and at the close was awarded a hearty vote of thanks.

On Tuesday a paper by Miss Buckland on Surgery and Superstition was read in the anthropological department of Biology. In the Geographical Section, Lieutenant Temple read a paper on the North-East Passage by Professor Nordenskjöld. Mr. H. W. Bates read a paper consisting of passages from correspondence sent home by Lieutenant-Colonel Tanner, now engaged in military duty in Afghanistan. Professor Rolleston read a paper on The Crania of Bushmen, in which he claimed a higher intellectual condition for this race than has usually been attributed to them. Mr. Westgarth discoursed on the question, "What is capital?" Professor Sclater opened the biological section with an exhibition of some zoological results of the voyage of the Challenger. The loading of ships, steering of screw-steamers, an improved sounding-machine, and the incrustation of steam-boilers occupy the attention of the mechanical section. Papers were also read in the geological and chemical sections. In the evening the Red Lion Club dinner was held at the Reception-Room Refreshment-rooms. The Association soirée was held at a later hour in the large pavilion at the Burrows recently erected for an Eisteddfod. The hall was lit with the electric light. The entertainment included the lighting of a huge bonfire in an adjoining piece of ground and its speedy extinction by a chemical fire-engine extincteur, and the exhibition of the Shakespeare light, specimens of the tin-plate, copper, and spelter manufacture of Swansea, and the ordinary attractions of scientific meetings. Two popular local artistes, Miss Woolley and Miss Williams, and the Swansea Choral Society, provided excellent musical fare, and the proceedings were brought to a close with a dance.

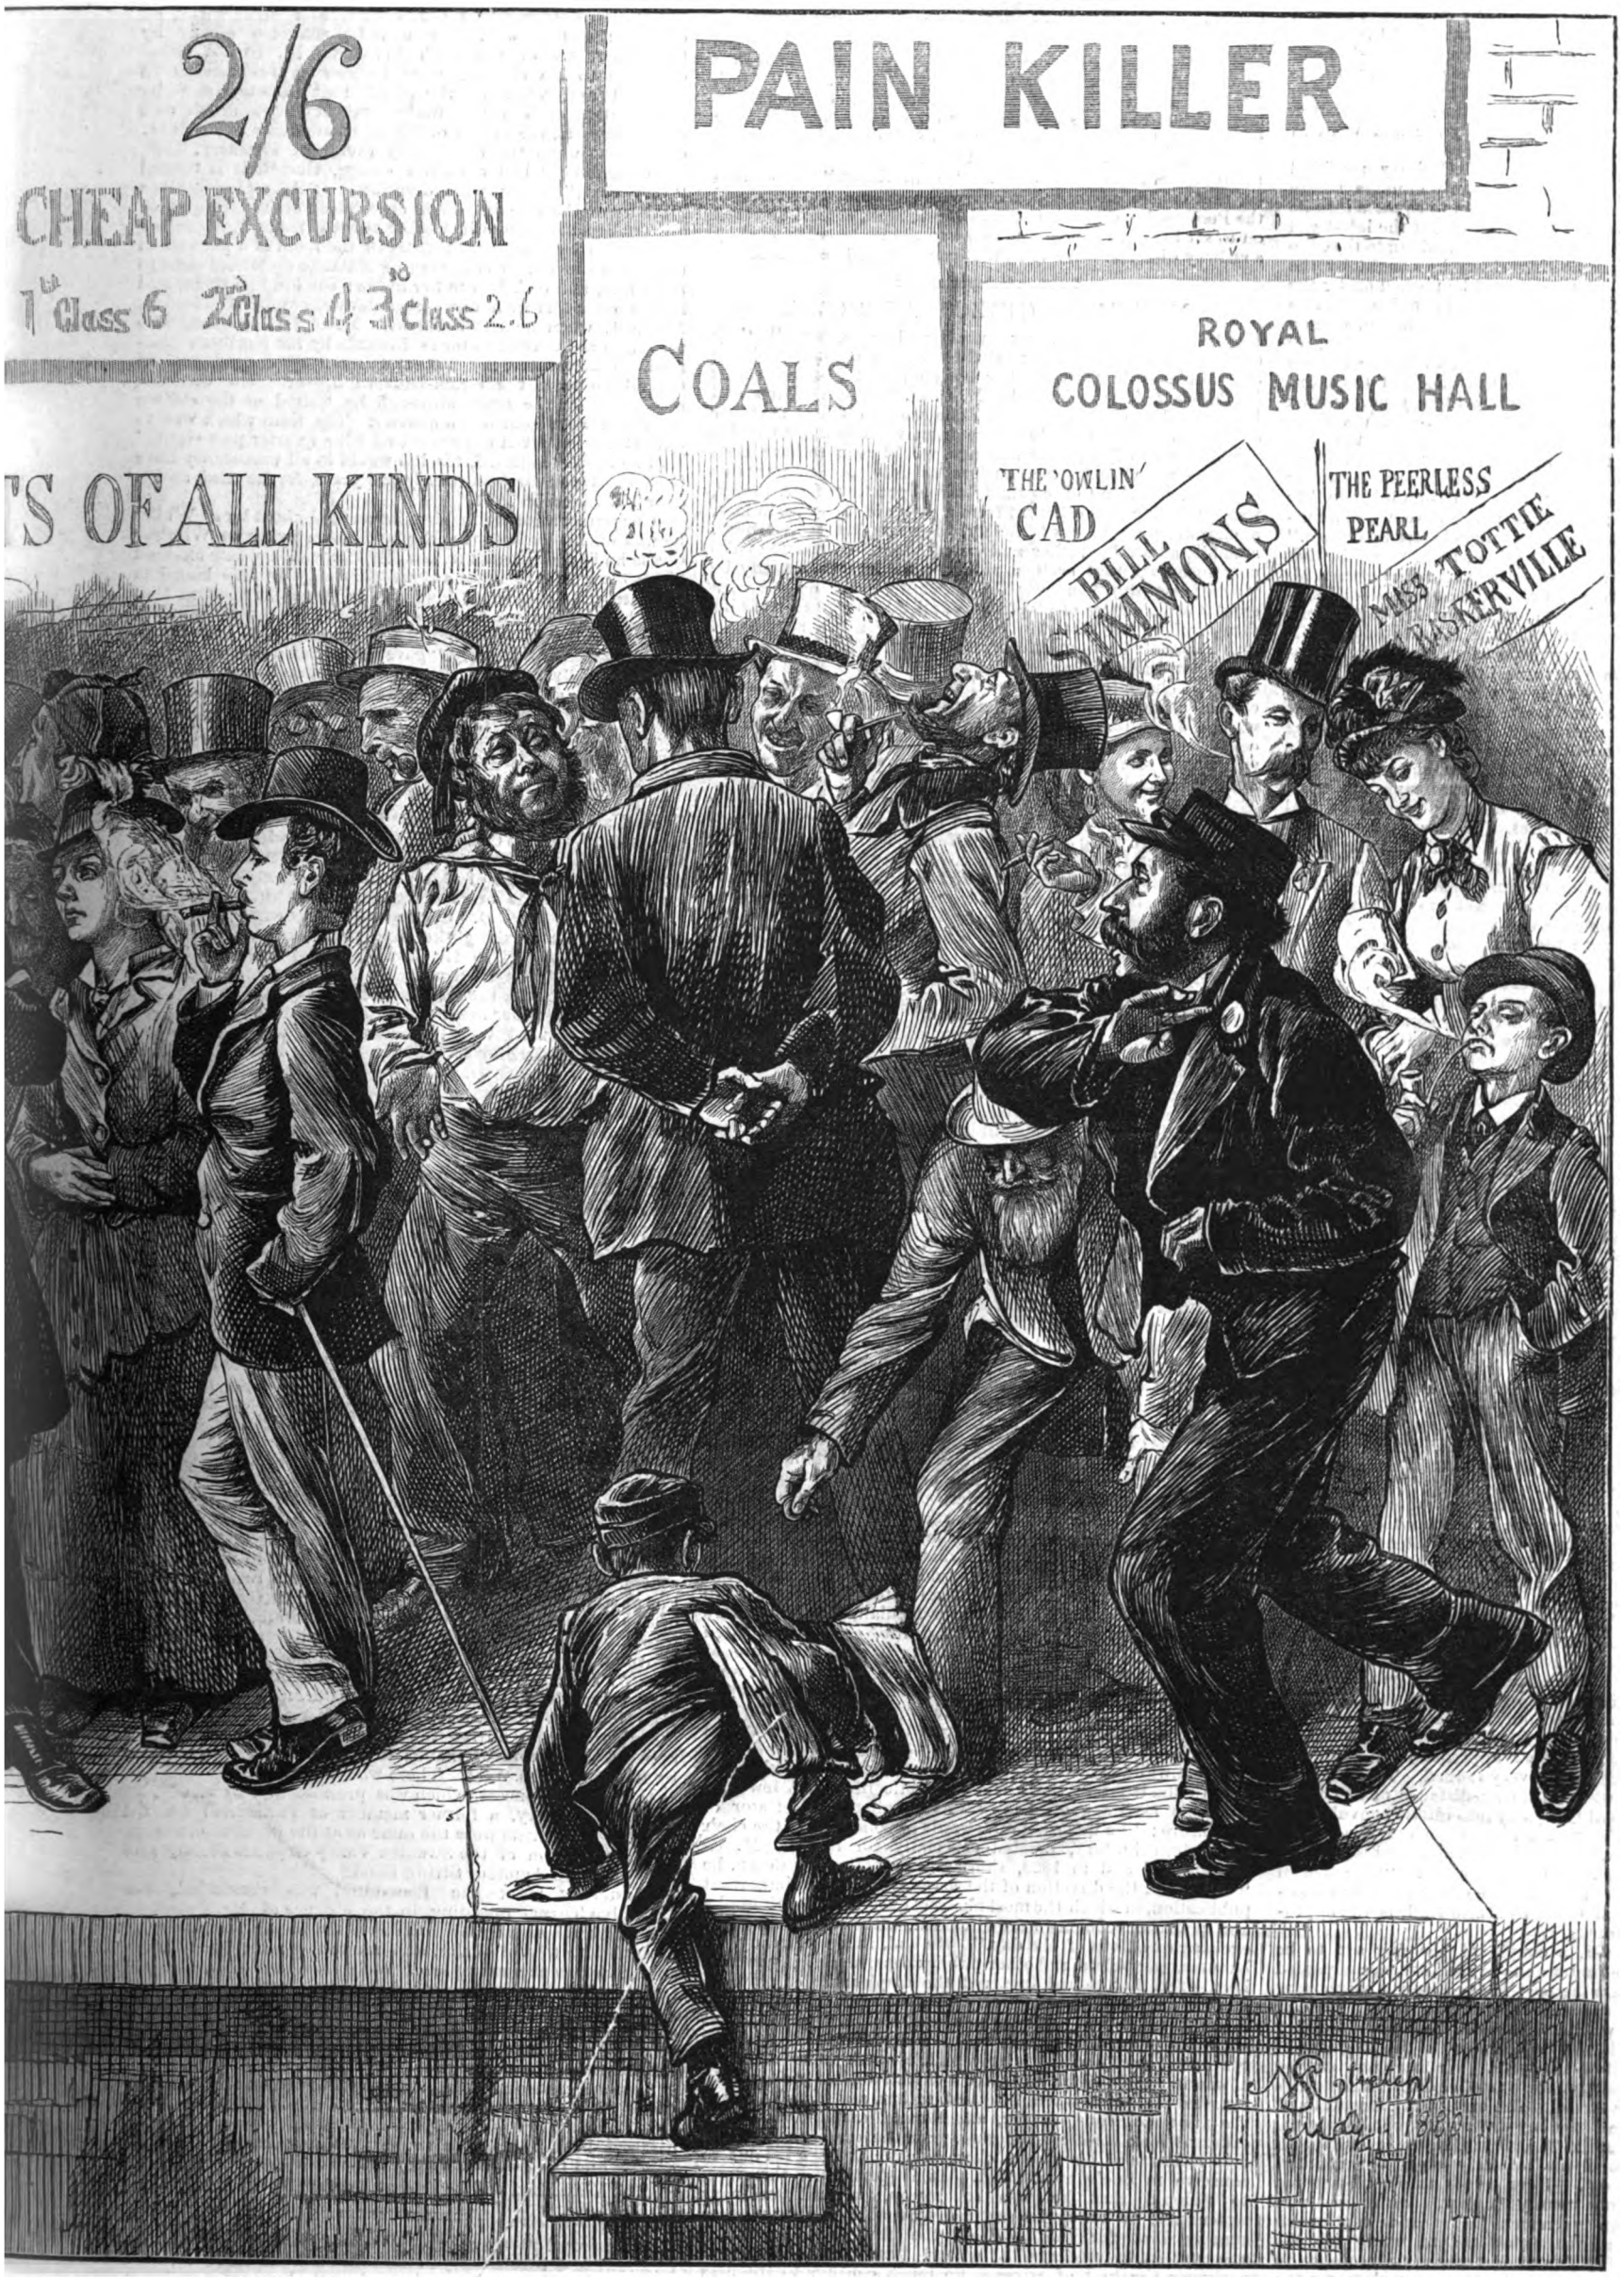
Excursions were arranged to various places, and all the industrial establishments of importance (and they abound in the district) were thrown open to the visitors. Conversaziones, luncheons, dinners, receptions, and all the other usual palliatives to the hard work of the sections, were provided.



AN ENGLISH BENEFACTOR OF BOULOGNE.

The late Mr. H. M. Merridew, an English bookseller and owner of a popular reading-room and library in the Rue de l'Ecu, at Boulogne-sur-Mer, during a quarter of a century past, earned the gratitude of his French neighbours by many works of social beneficence among them. Especially, during the German war, his incessant devotion to the care of sick and wounded French soldiers, at the sacrifice of his private interests, and to the risk of his health and personal safety, won high public admiration. His death, on April 16, last year, was greatly lamented by his fellow-townsmen. Many hundreds of them, rich and poor, followed his body to the grave, where a Senator of France, M. Huguet, pronounced an eloquent and well-merited eulogy of the deceased. A monument in the Boulogne public Cemetery was provided by the contributions of French subscribers alone. It is believed that, until the present year, only two public monuments existed in France, erected by French citizens to an Englishman, one at Boulogne to the memory of Jenner, and one at Cannes to Lord Brougham. The one recently erected bears the following inscriptions: "Henry Melville Merridew" "Les habitants de Boulogne reconnaissants," and on the reverse side, "Terrain concédé par la Ville à titre d'hommage public à la mémoire de H. M. Merridew." It looks a very conspicuous object on the site selected, its form being that of a large obelisk surmounted by a Celtic cross, and resting on a handsome marble pedestal, at the four angles of which are black marble columns with white base and capitals. This notice of it is furnished by Major-General Sir Vincent Eyre, who was associated during several months with the late Mr. Merridew, in connection with the British Red Cross Society, to relieve the sufferers in the war of 1870 and 1871. Sir Vincent Eyre can therefore bear his personal testimony to the noble example of Mr. Merridew, and to the good deeds which he then performed.

The prospectus has been issued of the winter courses of lectures and laboratory instruction of the City and Guilds of London Institute for the advancement of technical education, to be given at the class-rooms of the institute, Cowper-street, Finsbury, during October, November, and December.



The report of the Commissioner of Police for the year 1879 shows that in December the Metropolitan police numbered 10,711, which was an increase of 234 over the previous year. The number of felonies committed during the year was 21,891, for which 11,431 persons were arrested. The loss by thefts was £101,798, of which £22,460 was recovered. The Director of Criminal Investigations reports that photography and engraving have been extensively used in the tracing of criminals, with most satisfactory results. Amongst the more painfully suggestive items of information contained in Sir E. Y. W. Henderson's valuable report is a statement to the effect that "forty-three bodies of persons unknown, found dead or drowned, were photographed, but had not been identified."

WAITING FOR THE EXCURSION-TRAIN.

On the departure platform of a suburban branch of the Great West-Eastern Railway—that name will serve to prevent our readers knowing which way it runs—five hundred Londoners, men, women, and children, are crowding for a scramble into the second and third class carriages. They all want to make a holiday of it—Bank Holiday it is, to be sure—at the seaside Paradise of sand and pebbles, of salt breezes and slow-lapping waves, of cockles, prawns, and other marine delights, with the contemplation of the mighty shallow, if it affords no bathing or boating. All this, or even less than this, will be felt a refreshing change from the routine of daily life and work in the neighbourhood of Goswell-street.

Various characters and conditions of Cockney mankind here jostle one another during ten or twenty minutes before the enormously long train is ready for them to squeeze into its series of boxes-upon-wheels. There, standing at the left-hand corner, are the timid young ladies anxiously looking to the edge of the platform, lest their flowing skirts be caught by the approaching vehicles, or lest they should be pushed off by the rude and hasty throng of people behind. There is sometimes actual danger to the weaker persons in this situation, when a sudden rush is made to the carriage doors. Last Monday, we observe, at the Elephant and Castle Station, a man was thrown down and crushed to death beneath the wheels of the train. In the group here delineated, we see how these young women are perilously thrust forward by a tall ruffian with a short pipe and a stick, who ought instantly to be called to order. Everybody coming alone to the railway seems to think only of himself, and means to get in first, utterly heedless of the safety or comfort of other travellers. "This also is an iniquity" to be checked by the police; but what police have we at a railway station? "They manage these things better in France."

Not less helpless, in case of a sudden rush, would be that bewildered gentleman who has stuck his umbrella between his legs—the very thing to trip him up and cast him down headlong—while he gropes with both hands for his lost railway ticket in his waistcoat-pockets. Taking the next occupants of front standing-room, our apprehensions cannot fail to be excited for the possible fate of three little children—a rather big baby in arms (but out of long clothes), a boy of three years, who stares at the distant train, and wants to go himself and fetch it, and his elder sister, who screams with terror at his attempt to break loose and meet his destruction. We sympathise with their troubled mother; but she has not been prudent in bringing them without another female guardian. Where is her husband? Surely not the perplexed individual who has mislaid the railway ticket. Yet it may be so; and then we are very sorry indeed to think of all that may befall the party this day, before they can return home.

An angry dispute is going on just behind; the middle-aged woman in the demonstrative bonnet has a difference of opinion, which requires some manual gesticulation in aid of a scolding or crying voice, with the grim possessor of a square basket. They are probably sisters-in-law, and are going to spend a happy day together. Next these appear, in snug indifference to the alarms and quarrels of their neighbours, two or three unencumbered single men, consuming their portion of tobacco, the fumes of which seem to annoy the young lady in the sealskin hat. One of them is a fat-faced German; his companion is assuredly a Jew, though only his nose be visible at this moment. Soldiers, who always behave well on these occasions, show their firmly-set faces, effective moustaches, and jaunty little caps tilted over the right eyebrow, in rear line of the centre. On the wall at their back, along with huge placards of the sale of "Pure Tea," and those which announce the fares for this cheap trip by rail, are the by-laws that forbid smoking at the station. Le leggi son; ma chi pon man ad esse? Nobody is minded even to earn the £5 reward by turning public prosecutor, on a general holiday, for such a matter as that. Almost sublime is the secure attitude of the free-born Briton, the middle figure of the whole front row, standing with his legs wide apart, and his right hand rattling twelve shillings in his trousers' pocket, whilst in triumphant self-complacency puffing a long clay pipe. But how could he manage to carry it unbroken through the crowd? Here, indeed, he stands at ease, none daring to make him afraid. The youthful gent pretending to relish a twopenny cigar, and paying slight attention to the girl beside him, whom we infer to be no other than his sister, is not nearly so well au fait of the accomplishment that he is proud to display.

A few patient, quiet, thoughtful faces are discerned in the mixed throng of waiting passengers, as that of the placid old woman, nearly eighty years of age, who should have her son and daughter with her; and that of an American traveller, we guess, with bearded chin and clean-shaven upper lip, shrewdly observing the ways of us Britishers, and our manners to each other, of which he will form his own judgment. Not so considerate or dignified are the characters of what he might call a "rowdy lot;" the biggest man of whom, having his back towards us, engaged in a regular chaffing-match with a sturdy sailor, does not, indeed, show us his countenance. His present exercise of wit and humour, at the sailor's expense, may be, in the estimation of his laughing comrades, uncommonly droll and clever; but, if we apprehend the quality of their taste, it is not likely to be very refined. The ladies, it is to be hoped, are not within hearing-distance of the jokes that have almost put one of this party into idiotic convulsions; while it would be hard to find a more depraved visage than that of the other, the man in the white hat with black band, regaling himself with the same detestable fun. "The 'Owlin Cad," which must be the title of some comic song, or an impersonation at the Royal Colossus Music Hall, is the appropriate mural legend overhead.

There remain, however, a couple of the fair sex to be noticed, who make some pretensions to gentility, accompanied by a "swell" of a certain degree; not precisely a gentleman, but one with money to spend. They cherish a high sense of their social superiority, which ought to offend no one, for they intend to "keep theirselves to theirselves," in the language of one of their humbler fellow-creatures. We have now arrived at the right-hand extremity of the line of characteristic figures drawn by our observant Artist. The exquisitely scornful and contemptuous air of the little boy—who must be the original Bailey, junior, of "Martin Chuzzlewit," just emancipated from Mrs. Todgers—and his masterly style of smoking, cannot fail to be admired. Here comes the good-natured railway porter, a fine manly fellow, with first-rate whiskers, in the green velveteen jacket and cap of his service, hastening along the platform to warn all the people to stand back—for now at last the train is about to draw up alongside. A brave little newspaper boy, in the employ of the right hon. gentleman the late First Lord of the Admiralty, has darted across the rails and climbed up to the platform, at some apparent risk, to sell a Telegraph or Standard, in response to the beckoning summons of an eager customer. This venturesome feat is, perhaps, too freely tolerated at some of our railway-stations. How would it be in case of a fatal slip at the instant of the train passing in? and what of the provisions of the Employers' Liability Bill? That measure has found no favour among railway directors. It is rather our concern, however, for the present, to think of the safety of passengers. Excursion-trains, with all their pleasant and salutary effects, are too often the cause of special dangers on the road, as well as at the station. "Accidents of All Kinds," which we read in large letters here on the wall, become more frequent at this holiday season. Life and limbs are precious to everyone of the persons assembled for the starting train. Let us hope the best for the journey there and back, wherever bound on the rails of the Great West-Eastern Company. If a body, with enough life in it still to feel pain, with smashed ribs, contused skull, and fractured arms or legs, were to be lying, at this hour to-morrow, in a strange hospital fifty miles from home—why, it would be small comfort, in that case, to have cut a figure on the platform like one of these. "Pain Killer," whatever it be, that is here advertised, along with coals and pure tea, and the Peerless Pearl of the Colossus Music Hall, cannot be relied on to set broken bones, or take away the hurts occasioned by a railway disaster. We trust that occasion will be spared.

MONSIEUR GUIZOT AT HOME.

Illustrious statesmen are very often human, for all their outward austerity and for all their apparent impassibility; and Madame de Witt, in her book entitled Monsieur Guizot in Private Life, translated by M. C. M. Simpson (Hurst and Blackett), has shown, and has done well to show, that her celebrated father, who, to judge from what is known of his public life and his public writings, would seem to have been a sort of moral hedgehog, austere as Calvin, sententious as Solomon, addicted to the principles and practice of Dr. Busby, was something very different from a living icicle—was, in fact, a charming member of society, a warm-hearted, tender, amiable, admirable father and grandfather. Of course cynics may insinuate that even a rhinoceros may occasionally be "good company" among his fellows, and occasionally exhibit some degree of playfulness and gentleness towards his own family; but M. Guizot was certainly not a rhinoceros. It is impossible almost, at the present day, to realise the effect which was likely to be produced upon certain natures and the external character which was likely to be impressed upon certain individuals by circumstances such as those under which M. Guizot was born and educated, circumstances calculated to keep down, though at the same time to intensify, whatever is soft and genial in man, and to promote the formation of a cold, hard, dogged, unsympathetic exterior.

M. Guizot was born in 1787. He belonged, both on his father's and his mother's side, to a line of persecuted Protestants, and, during the Reign of Terror, his father was among the victims of the scaffold. Moreover, though "in the month of December, 1787, a Royal edict secured to the French Protestants their elementary rights," yet "the measure was not retrospective, and the birth of M. Guizot was never legally registered." To begin life under such auspices, and to continue it under the influence of such reminiscences, leads, not unreasonably, with certain dispositions, to the adoption of a generally grave demeanour and of more than usual solemnity and earnestness in speech and action. Of M. Guizot and his manner it might, in fact, have been said, as was said of the fighting bull-terrier, whose stern, impassive behaviour offended a spectator at a dog show: "Ah, Sir, life is full of seriousness to him." From the very outset "life was full of seriousness" to M. Guizot; the memory of a father guillotined, and the constant sight of a widowed mother oppressed by her irreparable loss, might well impress upon him a precocious but life-long austerity of manner. In 1799 Madame Guizot, the mother, removed with her two children to Geneva from Nimes, for the sake of the facilities afforded in respect of schooling; and there, in 1805, François Pierre Guillaume, the future political star, completed his education "as far as an education can be finished at the age of eighteen." He then went to Paris to study law, for he was to be an advocate or barrister, as his father had been. "On Nov. 20, 1806," we are told, "he attained the age of nineteen," which seems to be a statement somewhat difficult to reconcile with the assertion with which the memoir opens—namely, that he "was born at Nimes on Oct. 4, 1787." However, in any case, he was quite nineteen at the time stated, and it is more to the point to know that, at that age and in the midst of the dissipations of Paris, "his temperament was melancholy and his will determined: he was as austere in his opinions as in his conduct." About this time he became busily engaged in literature as well as in social intercourse, which gave him the opportunity of offering "the assistance of his pen to Mdlle. de Meulan at a moment when she was overpowered with cares and sorrows." The somewhat romantic story of this chivalrous service has often been told in various forms: what is quite certain about it is that an attachment sprang up between M. Guizot and Mdlle. de Meulan, that they were married in 1812, that their wedded life, as it is presented in the memoir under consideration, is a perfect picture of conjugal affection and happiness, and that they were parted in 1827 by the hand of death, which snatched away the wife in the very act of "listening to Bossuet's sermon on the immortality of the soul" from the lips of her devoted husband.

Meanwhile M. Guizot had been steadily making his way to the front in the arena of public life. "A few days after his marriage M. Guizot was nominated Professor of Literature;" he was soon afterwards appointed "to the chair of Modern History, created especially for him by M. de Fontanes;" and in 1828, shortly after his wife's death, he "undertook the direction of the Revue Française, an important publication, in which the most abstract questions of philosophy and political economy were discussed, without excluding the exciting questions of the day." He had, indeed, already, by lectures, pamphlets, and other publications, made his power so keenly felt that he had incurred the displeasure of Government. He was, in fact, firmly planted upon the ladder of fame, which he was destined to ascend to the very top. But with that phase of his career we have now little to do; we are concerned chiefly with his private life—with those domestic affairs in which, as his daughter's narrative plainly shows, he revealed himself as a son, husband, father, and grandfather of the most solicitous, tender, affectionate, amiable sort, very different from the almost morose, pedantic creature the common estimate of his public character might have led one to conceive in one's own mind. It is pertinent, therefore, to remark that he was so happy, beyond ordinary experience, as to find a second wife able and worthy to console him for the loss of the first; and that he was fated to undergo a second time the anguish of outliving the best of wives. So much conjugal happiness and so much conjugal misfortune seldom falls to any man's lot. It is in the specimens which are given of M. Guizot's correspondence with those two women and with his children, from their earliest to their later years, that the largeness and the depth and the warmth of his heart are unmistakably manifested.

In 1833 M. Guizot was left a widower for the second time; and thenceforth he devoted the whole of the hours he could spare from the public service to his venerable mother, who died, during his exile, at his little house in Brompton, London, at the age of eighty-four, to his children, and to his grandchildren. And very touching it is to read the letters in which the great statesman, with the cares of an empire to occupy his mind, can condescend to take an interest in the games of a little boy and to give hints concerning defective or superfluous punctuation to a little girl. Of course, the English reader will be attracted chiefly by those portions of the book in which M. Guizot either describes to his children what he saw as Ambassador in England and what he thinks of that country and its inhabitants, or is made the subject of his children's own descriptions at the period of his flight and exile in England, consequent upon the melancholy events of February, 1848. He undoubtedly had a narrow escape, though it is termed "very easy," being thus described:—"After leaving the Ministry of the Interior, about one o'clock on Thursday, 24th (M. Odillon Barrot was just being brought thither), my father was hidden by Madame Duchâtel in the room of a portress in the Rue Vanneau. In the evening Madame de Mirbel came to fetch him, and took him to her house; she hid him there, and looked after him with unwearied devotion until Wednesday, March 1, when he left Paris with M. de Fleischmann, who took him as his valet as far as Brussels by the Northern Railroad. When there, my father was out of danger, and at Ostend he took the steam-boat to Dover. He was not recognised on the road, although he waited at the station in Paris for an hour and a quarter. The train which was to have started at seven did not set off till a quarter past eight." Had he been recognised, his life would in all probability have been shortened by just twenty-six years, for he died at his dear Val Richer in 1874.

One purely amusing incident is recorded about him. Whilst he was on his embassy in England and staying at Windsor Castle he had an adventure, like Mr. Pickwick's, which induced him to ask of the most august personage in this kingdom whether, if he ever wrote his memoirs, he might mention that he "had opened the Queen of England's door in Windsor Castle at midnight while she was going to bed;" and we are informed that her Majesty "gave me permission and laughed heartily." By-the-way, the translator seems to use the word "memoirs" as if it were always the proper equivalent for "mémoires," though it surely is not: else, a "collection of notes" is a "memoir." And that is surely not so.

THE EISTEDDFOD AT CARNARVON.

The National Eisteddfod of Wales was continued on Wednesday week at Carnarvon, under the presidency of Major Cornwallis West. There was again a large attendance. The chief honour, a prize of thirty guineas, for an English essay on the lead-mines of Denbighshire and Flintshire, was awarded to Mr. D. C. Davies, Oswestry; the Rev. Richard Roberts taking the chief prize for poetry. Other literary honours fell to Mr. Lewis Buckley and Mr. Hughes Portdinorwic. The Llanrug brass band won twenty guineas and a gold medal in their class. Miss Evans, Llanberis, was placed by Dr. Stainer first among the soprani soloists, and Mr. Sullivan, late 23rd Welsh Fusiliers, won the silver cornet offered for proficiency in playing that instrument. To Mr. Shrubsole, a Bangor amateur, were awarded eleven guineas and a medal for water-colour drawing, and Messrs. Nicholls and Owen, Castle Enamelled Slateworks, took the prize for the best workmanship in their class. The choral competition was declared void, the two choirs entered possessing insufficient merit. Captain Griffith presided at the evening concert, Madame Patey, Miss Mary Davies, Signor Foli, Messrs. James Sauvage, Eos Mollias, Ben Davies, and Lucas Williams being the principal artistes.

An audience computed at 8000 persons on Thursday occupied the pavilion of the National Eisteddfod, Mr. Watkin Williams, M.P., who occupied the chair, being supported by the Lord Lieutenant of Denbighshire, Major West, and the Mayors of Carnarvon and Denbigh. The president, in his opening address, dwelt upon the promotion of higher education in Wales, and expressed a hope that the Royal Commission—composed of men in whom Welshmen had every confidence—would result in Wales being put on an equal footing with England, Ireland, and Scotland. After a number of competitions had been disposed of, the Chair Prize, the great event of the week, was gained by the Rev. Watkin B. Josephs, Congregational minister, Colwyn Bay. The subject was an Ode (Adwl) to Athrylith (Genius); and, beside the chair, there was a further prize of £20. The adjudicators were unanimous in the award, each having sealed his one before meeting the others. The rev. gentleman (who took the bardic chair at Conway last year) was installed according to the ceremonies of the ancient bards of the Island of Britain. Clwydfardd (the oldest bard in Wales) conducted the ceremony, and delivered the first englyn. The chaired bard was invested by Mrs. A. Jones Williams. Gelli Wig and Miss Mary Davies sang "From Mighty Kings" (Handel) during the proceedings. Miss Jennie Williams, Mr. Lucas Williams, Eos Morlais, and other artists sang during the meeting, being all vociferously applauded. A vote of thanks to the president was proposed by Mr. Cornwallis West. There was a very good attendance at the evening concert, which was presided over by Mr. T. D. Love Jones-Parry, a former member of Parliament for the county. The artists were the same as at the previous concerts, with the addition of the Swansea Valley Orpheus Society and the Carnarvon Amateur String Band.

Yesterday week the Eisteddfod was concluded, Sir Llewellyn Turner presiding, in the absence of Mr. Puleston, M.P. In his address he contrasted the present condition of Ireland with that of Wales, and recommended that Irishmen should follow the example of Welshmen, and depend upon themselves instead of being led away by pernicious agitators, who caused misery and trouble to those who followed their advice. Mr. E. Edwards, of Birkenhead, won £50 for an essay on the Welsh nation; Miss Doyle was awarded the prize of £10 for the best crayon drawing; Mr. Morgan, Aberystwith, £10 for a handbook on the chemistry of common things; Miss Parry, of Birkenhead, won the prize for pianoforte playing; and Mr. Smith, of Limerick, for musical composition. A concert was held in the evening, as usual, sustained by several artistes and the Swansea Valley Choral Society.

The Eisteddfod will be held at Merthyr Tydfil next year.

The second 80-ton gun, or "Woolwich Infant," was on Saturday last successfully hoisted into the starboard turret of the Inflexible, in Portsmouth Dockyard, by means of huge shears, which had been tested up to 120 tons.

An addition to the many attractions now included in the programme of the Royal Westminster Aquarium has been furnished through the enterprise of the managing director, Captain Hobson; he having secured for this establishment the remarkably fine specimen of the ourang-outang, or "Old Man of the Woods," recently brought over to this country from Malacca.

OBITUARY.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL BROOKE.

Brigadier-General Henry Francis Brooke, whose heroic death in the endeavour to save a brother officer occurred in the sortie from Candahar, was eldest son of the late George Augustus Frederick Brooke, Esq., of Ashbrooke, in the county of Fermanagh, by Lady Arabella Hastings, his wife, daughter of the eleventh Earl of Huntingdon, and was grandson of Sir Henry Brooke, Bart., of Colebrooke, by Harriet, his wife, daughter of the Hon. John Butler. He entered the Army June 6, 1854, and attained the rank of Colonel Feb. 3, 1877. In 1855 he landed with the 48th Regiment in the Crimea, and took part in the siege and fall of Sebastopol, receiving a medal with clasp and the Turkish medal. Subsequently he served throughout the campaign in China of 1860 as A.D.C. to Sir Robert Napier, and was in the actions of Sinho and Tangku, was severely wounded at the assault of the Taku Forts, and was present at the surrender of Pekin. For these services he was given the brevet of Major, and a medal with two clasps. Eventually he was appointed Adjutant-General at Bombay with the local rank of Brigadier-General. He married, 1865, Annie Isabella, daughter of Colonel Leonard Raisbeck Christopher, and leaves a son, George Cecil.

MR. SERJEANT ARMSTRONG.

Richard Armstrong, her Majesty's first Serjeant-at-Law in Ireland, one of the foremost members of the Irish Bar, and one of the ablest and most skilful of its advocates, died at his residence, 32, Stephen's-green North, Dublin, on the 26th ult., after a long illness. He was son of William Armstrong, of Roxborough, in the county of Armagh, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of Edward Stacey Atkin, of the same place, received his education at Trinity College, Dublin, where he graduated B.A. in 1839, and was called to the Irish Bar the same year. In 1854 he attained the rank of Queen's Counsel, and was made Queen's Serjeant-at-Law in 1861. In 1865 he became M.P. for Sligo, in the Liberal interest, defeating Mr. Macdonogh, Q.C., and sat in the House of Commons until 1868. During his practice at the Bar Serjeant Armstrong was engaged in the leading cases of his time. As a cross-examiner he was unrivalled. He married, in 1847, Miss Elizabeth Meurant, and leaves several children.

MR. RICHARDS, OF BROOKLANDS.

Evan Matthew Richards, Esq., J.P. and D.L. for Glamorganshire, formerly M.P. for the county of Cardigan, died on the 21st ult., at his seat, Bricklands, Swansea, in his fifty-ninth year. Mr. Richards was twice Mayor of Swansea, and represented Cardiganshire in Parliament from 1868 to 1874. He was youngest son of the late Richard Richards, Esq., of Swansea, and was married, in 1844, to Maria, daughter of James Sloane, Esq., by whom he leaves issue.

The deaths are also announced of—

Colonel Willoughby Crewe, of the Madras Staff Corps, on the 16th ult., in Paris. He was of a younger branch of the family now represented by Lord Crewe.

Mr. James Allan, senior partner of the firm of the Allan line of steamers from Glasgow to Liverpool, one of the four brothers who established that line.

William Ballantyne Hodgson, LL.D., of Bonaly Tower, Colinton, near Edinburgh, Professor of Political Economy and Commercial Law in the University of Edinburgh, on the 24th ult., at Brussels.

Mr. Mungo Ponton, F.R.S., Edinburgh, Writer to the Signet, formerly secretary of the National Bank of Scotland. He contributed articles on photography and electric telegraphy to scientific journals.

The Rev. Dr. Wenger, an accomplished Sanscrit scholar, on the 20th ult. He was a Swiss by birth, and was for a long period a prominent missionary in Calcutta. Dr. Wenger translated portions of the Bible into the Sanscrit and Bengali languages.

The Rev. George Gill, for sixteen years Missionary to the South Sea Islands, and for nineteen years Pastor of the Westgate Congregational Church, Burnley, Lancashire, on the 19th ult., suddenly, at his residence, The Chestnuts, Hithergreen, Lewisham, aged sixty.

Captain Charles Wills Walrond, late Royal Artillery, on the 26th ult., aged forty-two. He was fourth son of the late Theodore Walrond, Esq., of Calder Park, in the county of Lanark, J.P. and D.L., by Jane, his wife, daughter of Lieutenant-Colonel Sir Charles Holland Hastings, K.C.H.

Mr. Joshua Appleyard, J.P., at his residence, Clare Hall, Halifax, aged seventy. He was one of the directors of the London and Yorkshire Railway Company, and chairman of the board of directors of the Halifax Joint-Stock Bank. For three years, 1853 to 1856, he was Mayor of the borough.

Mr. Elijah Walton, the well-known painter of landscape and mountain scenery, on the 25th ult., at his residence in Bromsgrove Lickey, near Birmingham, aged forty-seven. Mr. Walton was an art-student at eight years of age, won a prize medal for a work in oil at ten, and exhibited his first work at the Royal Academy at the age of fourteen.

Lieutenant-Colonel Gershom Herrick, of Coolkirky, in the county of Cork, J.P., suddenly, on the 24th ult., at Hilton, Bridgnorth, Cheshire, aged forty-five. He was eldest son of Thomas Herrick, Esq., of Coolkirky, by Katherine, his wife, daughter of Thomas Wade Foot, Esq., of Springfort, and was the representative of a younger branch of the ancient family of Herrick, of Shippool, in the county of Cork, a branch of Herrick of Beaumanor, in the county of Leicester, of which was the poet Herrick.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., has been officially informed that the Treasury will grant a loan of £28,000, at 4 per cent, for the improvement of Galway Harbour.

Mr. Fawcett announced his intention last week in the House of Commons of carrying out an experiment of considerable interest in connection with the Post-Office Savings' Banks. In five counties in England and Wales, two counties in Scotland, and two in Ireland, forms are to be issued gratuitously divided into twelve parts. Each compartment may be filled in with a penny stamp, and when all the compartments are thus filled the form will be received as a deposit of one shilling.

Miss Fanny Butler, a distinguished student of the Henrietta-street School of Medicine for Ladies, passed her final examination at the last meeting of the King's and Queen's College of Physicians, Ireland, and was duly licensed to practise medicine. She is now the twentieth legally-qualified lady practitioner, and is about to proceed to India as a medical missionary. At the last examination for the first M.B. degree of London University Miss Edith Shove passed in the first division. She is the enterprising young lady who applied in 1877 to the University for a degree, and so originated the movement which led to all degrees at London University being opened to women. Miss Shove is also Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Henrietta-street School.

10. Kt takes Kt	B takes Kt
11. Q to K 2nd	B to Q B 4th
12. R to Q sq

Rather a weak line of play. The right continuation is 12. Kt to B 3rd.

12.	Q to R 5th

Winning a Pawn, but subjecting his Queen to great embarrassment and retarding the development of his game.

13. B to K 3rd	Q to K 5th

White to play 41. K to Kt 6th, to which move he has a good reply in 41. P to R 5th.
41. P to Q R 4th
Correctly played. Seeing that he can win the Pawns on the King's side, he wisely makes all safe on this wing.
41.	P to Kt 5th
42. K to Kt 6th	K to K 3rd
43. K takes P	K to K 4th

We should have preferred 51. Q to Q R square.
51.	P to R 6th
52. P to Kt 6th
Again 52. Q to Q R square seems stronger.
52.	P to Kt 7th
Black carries out these manœuvres of King and Pawns very skilfully.
53. P to Kt 7th	P to R 7th
54. Q to Kt 8th (ch)	K to B 6th
55. P Queens	Kt P Queens
It is not often one sees so many Queens engaged in one battle.
56. Q (from Q Kt 8th) to Kt 3rd (ch)	K to B 7th
57. Q (from K Kt 8th) to Kt 6th (ch)	K to B 8th
58. Q to B 4th (ch)	K to Kt 7th
59. Q to B 2nd (ch)	K to Kt 6th
60. Q (from Kt 6th) to Kt 3rd (ch)	K to R 5th
61. Q takes B P	Q to R 2nd (ch)
62. K to Kt 4th	Q to Q 2nd (ch)
63. K to Kt 5th	P Queens.
Black's play at this point is very interesting and instructive.
64. Q to K 6th	Q to Kt 2nd (ch)

The game was continued for many more moves, the Queens being exchanged, and the White King driven so far from the scene of action that Black was able to capture the Pawn, promote his own, and win.

The Hartford Times has a problem the solution of which is to be effected under rather remarkable conditions. White is to play, and compel Black to mate in 480 moves with a Knight, which is to be forced to make a tour of the chess-board in such a manner that if the squares are numbered progressively, according to the moves of the Knight—the square of departure being numbered 1—the sum of each perpendicular and horizontal line of eight squares will be 260, and that of the two long diagonals combined, 520. The arithmetical result of the Knight's tour here required to be accomplished was fully explained in an article contributed by the late Major Jaenisch to the American Chess Monthly (1859, vol. iii., p. 176), but its application to a mating position is a novelty in problem composition.

The Match between Messrs. Neill and Davidson was begun at the Philadelphia Chess Club on the 2nd ult. The Turf, Field, and Farm gives the score of two games, one to the credit of each player.

The problem solution tourney of the Congress lately held at Brunswick was won by Dr. Schwede, the editor of the Leipsic Schachzeitung after three hours' contemplation of the diagram. There were no pieces to move. We quote it here that our solvers may time themselves against a recognised expert.

WHITE: K at K R square; Q at Q Kt 2nd; R's at K B 6th and Q 4th; Pawns at K R 5th, K Kt 6th, K 2nd and 3rd.

BLACK: K at K 4th; R at Q B square; Kt's at K Kt 2nd and Q B 6th; B at K 8th; Pawns at K Kt 5th and Q B 2nd.

White to play and mate in four moves.

It is announced that there will be a congress of chess-players in connection with an art exhibition to be held at Graz. Four tourneys for players of various degrees of force will be arranged, and the prizes, consisting of objects of art in silver, will be given by the local chess club.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

Colonel Sir Robert Burdett, Bart., of Foremark, Derbyshire; of Ramsbury, Wilts; and of No. 6, York-street, St. James's, whose death took place on June 7 last, at the Albany, Piccadilly, having died without leaving any will, and without having been married, letters of administration of his personal estate and effects were granted on the 14th ult. to the Right Hon. Angela Georgina, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, the sister of the deceased, and one of his next of kin. The personalty, including leaseholds, was sworn under £300,000.

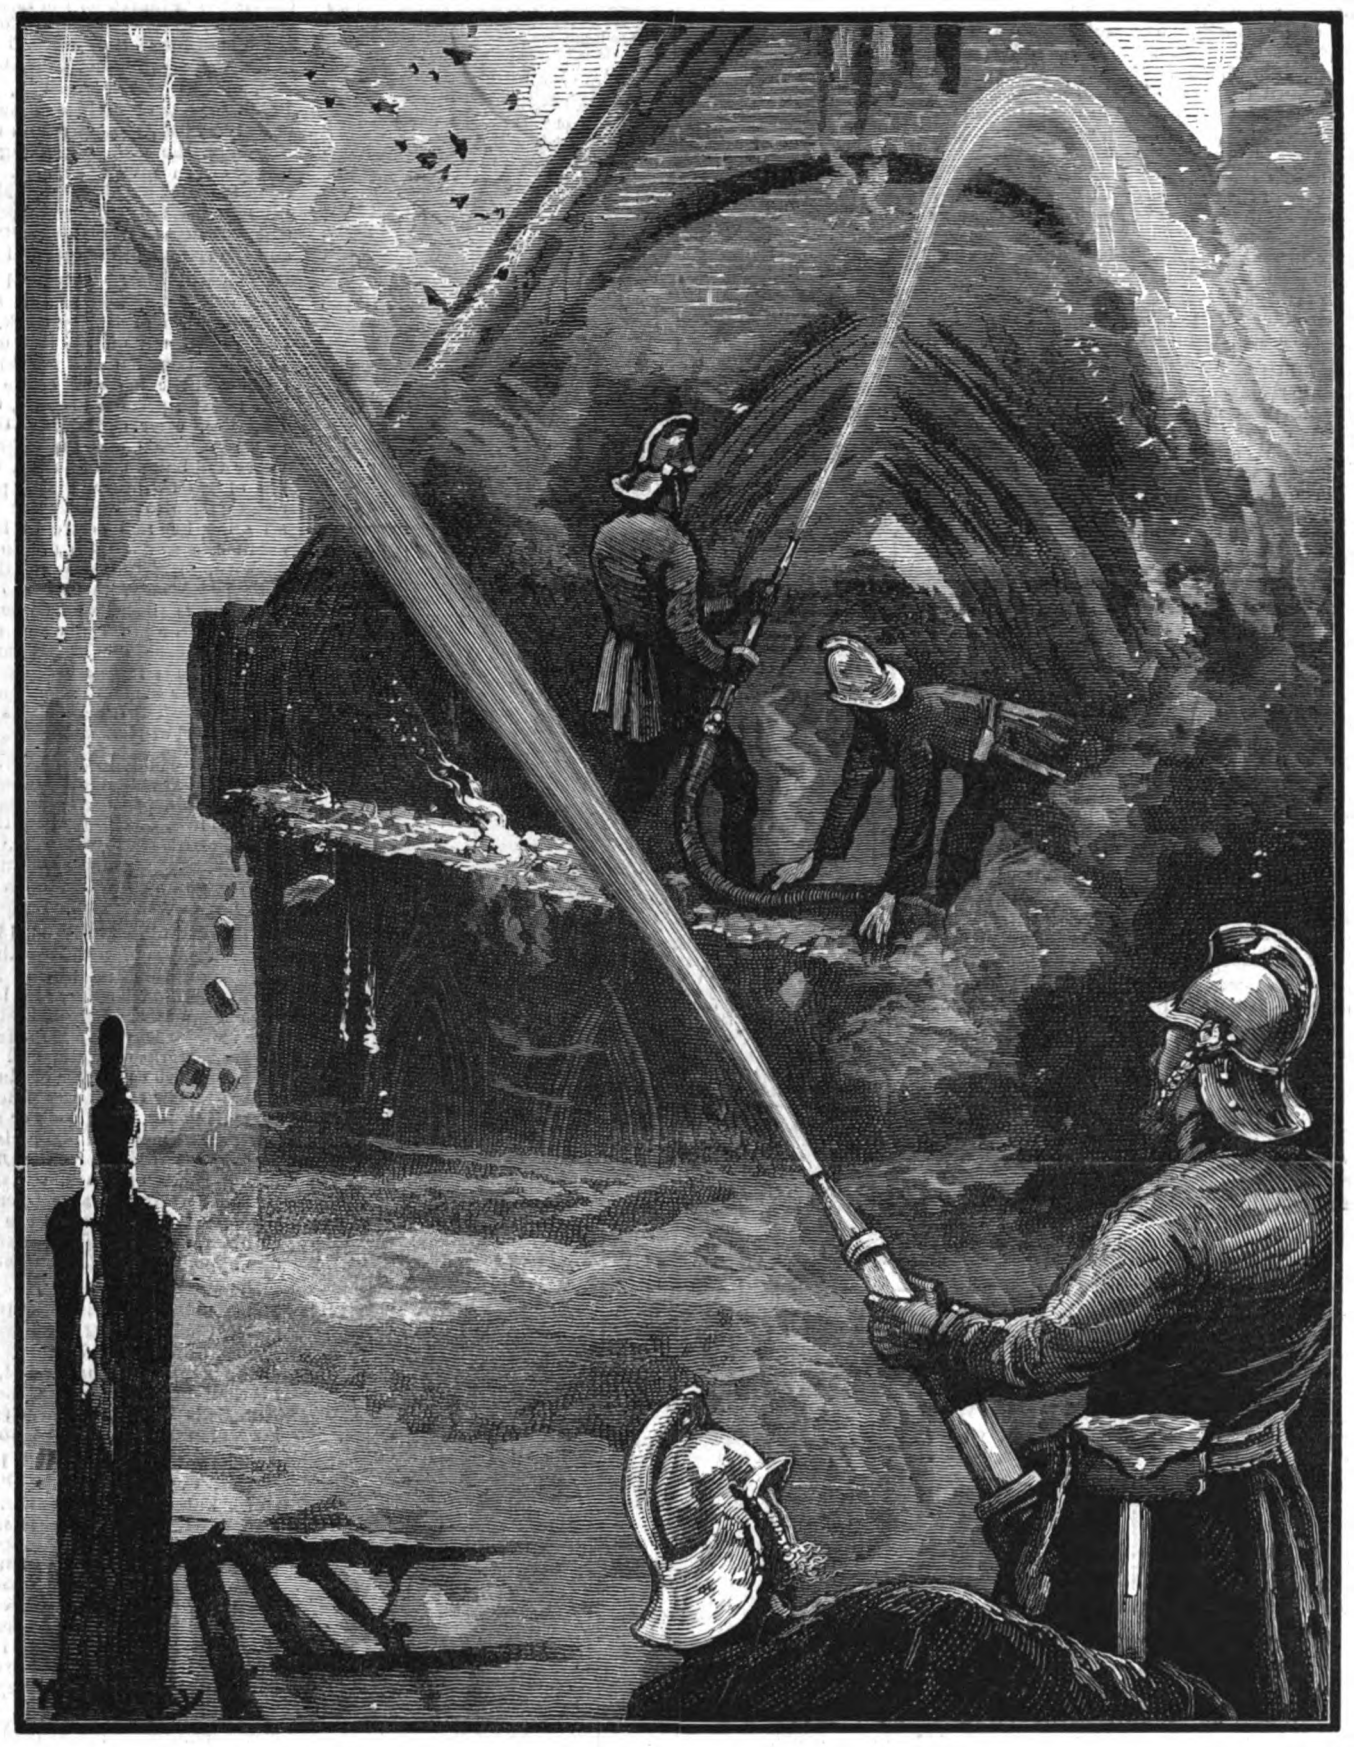
The will (dated April 7, 1858) of Mr. John Edward Fordham, late of Melbourn Bury, Cambridgeshire, who died on July 20 last, was proved on the 20th ult. by John Hampden Fordham, the son, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £250,000. The testator leaves £15,000 upon trust for his daughter, Miss Harriet Gurney Fordham; £100 to his faithful servant, William Whitby; his pictures and drawings to be divided between his said son and daughter; and the residue of his real and personal estate to his said son.

The will (dated July 9, 1877) with two codicils (dated March 1, 1878, and March 8, 1880) of the Hon. Arthur Lascelles, late of Norley Bank, Cheshire, who died on July 19 last, was proved on the 19th ult. by the Hon. William Henry Berkeley Portman and Sir Charles Henry Mills, Bart., the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £160,000. The testator gives to his wife, the Hon. Mrs. Caroline Frances Lascelles, after confirming the settlement made on their marriage, £2000, and his dogs, horses, carriages, provisions, wines and liquors, absolutely, with the use and enjoyment for life of his furniture, plate, pictures, books, and household effects; he also gives her for life the Norley Bank estate and all other his real estate in England and Wales, and at her death the said estates are to go to his eldest son, Walter Richard. His property at Glasgow, in addition to a large pecuniary legacy, he leaves to his said eldest son; and ample provision is made for his younger sons, Arthur George and Brian Piers, and for his seven daughters; to his executors he gives £50 each, and to his gardener Vert an annuity of £30. The residue is left upon trust for his wife for life, and at her death, after some further bequests to his children, for his eldest son. The deceased was the fourth son of Henry, the second Earl of Harewood.

The will (dated Aug. 5, 1871) with a codicil (dated Dec. 16, 1878) of General Lord George Augustus Frederick Paget, K.C.B., late of No. 1, Farm-street, Mayfair, who died on June 30 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by the Right Hon. John Robert, Earl Sydney, G.C.B., the surviving executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator gives, devises, and bequeaths all his real and personal estate to his son, Cecil Stratford Paget.

The will (dated July 30, 1872) of Mr. Tom Taylor, late of Lavender Sweep, Wandsworth, who died on July 12 last, was proved on the 21st ult. by Mrs. Laura Wilson Taylor, the widow, Arnold Taylor, the brother, and Matthew Whiting, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £16,000. The testator leaves to his wife £400 and his furniture, books, pictures, works of virtù, and other household effects; to his executors £20 each, free of duty; and to his said brother, his sisters-in-law the Misses Lucetta and Leila Barker, and to Mrs. Kingsley, some book or sets of books, picture, &c., as a personal memorial of him; his house and grounds at Lavender Sweep, his interest in the Olympic Theatre, his copyrights, acting rights of plays, and all the residue of his real and personal estate he leaves upon trust, as to the income, to his wife for life, and as to the principal at her death for his children, as she shall by deed or will appoint. The testator also appoints his wife guardian of his infant children.

The will (dated Dec. 16, 1874) of Lieutenant-General Henry Sebastian Rowan, C.B., who died at No. 57, Oakley-street, Chelsea, on May 26 last, has been proved by Frederic James Rowan, the brother, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £14,000. The testator bequeaths to his half-brother, Charles Rowan, and to his half-sister, Annabella Rowan, £500 each; and, subject thereto, gives all his real and personal estate to his brother, Frederic James.



The will (dated March 3, 1880) of Major-General Thomas Raikes, C.B., formerly of Pennyarth Crickhowells, Breconshire, but late of Worthing, who died on July 10 last at Stow-on-the-Wold, Gloucestershire, was proved on the 17th ult. by Harry Hargood, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Caroline Raikes, £500, and his furniture, plate, pictures, books, and effects; the residue of his property is to be held upon trust for her life, and then for his children, Thomas Digby Raikes, Ethel La Touche Raikes, and Mrs. Edith Mary Leonora Morrice, the share of the latter at her death to go to her daughter, Ethel Mary Leonora.

The will (dated March 10, 1880) of Mr. Pierce Egan, late of Ravensbourne, Burnt Ash-hill, Lee, Kent, who died on July 6 last, was proved on the 9th ult. by Pierce Egan, the son, and George Watson, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £2000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Charlotte Martha Egan, £1000, secured on his life policy, all his literary works, copyrights, furniture, and effects, except several articles presented to his late father and himself, and portraits, which he bequeaths to his said son, and to his daughter, Mrs. Kate Watson; to his said daughter he also bequeaths his bound volumes of the London Journal containing his works, commencing with the "Flowers of the Forest," and nine volumes of books, including "Robin Hood," "Paul Jones," and others; and to his son-in-law, Mr. Watson, his Masonic cup and jewels.

A NEW TURKISH GRAMMAR.

"A Practical Grammar of the Turkish Language, as Spoken and Written," by Dr. Charles Wells, late Professor at the Imperial Naval College at Constantinople, is published by Mr. Bernard Quaritch. The author has long been recognised as one of the most accomplished English masters of that branch of learning. He produced, before ever he went to Turkey, a treatise of political economy in Turkish, the style of which obtained high commendation among literary Turks, though we fear its principles and arguments, however sound from our point of view, have failed to influence the councils of Turkish statesmen. Within the last few years he accompanied General Sir Arthur Kemball on the Turco-Persian frontier commission; he has since been engaged in preparing a new edition of Redhouse's Turkish dictionary, greatly enlarged, which is also published by Mr. Quaritch. This grammar, so far as we can judge of its accuracy and completeness, appears to be one of the best works of its kind ever furnished to help the student of an Oriental language. It fills an octavo volume of 270 pages, which seem to have been most carefully printed. The Turkish words are given both in Arabic letters and in those of our own alphabet, distinguished, of course, by italics. We observe that there is no punctuation in the writing and printing of this language, and that capital letters are never used. Some Persian letters have been added to those of the Arabic alphabet, but many of the vowel sounds are not denoted in writing. The Turkish language is of distinct Tartar origin, though it has borrowed many words from the Arabic and the Persian. It appears to be an expressive and convenient instrument of speech, and with correct pronunciation must be decidedly agreeable to the ear. The gender of nouns is simple and natural, as in English, the names of inanimate objects being mostly neuter, except those nouns which are taken from the Arabic, in which, as in French, every noun is masculine or feminine. In other instances, we find, Dr. Wells is obliged to introduce some of the grammar of the Arabic and Persian languages into his Turkish grammar, but it becomes all the more interesting in the way of philological comparison. His analysis of the verb is well worthy of attention from this point of view. It seems that there are two classes of verbs in use; the first being simple, of purely Turkish origin; and the second compound, which are made up of some Arabic or Persian word and the auxiliary verbs "etmek," "kilmak," or "olmak," signifying to do, to make, to be or become. The formation of reflective, passive, and reciprocal verbs, and of causal, potential, and negative-potential variations, as "to cause to go," "to be able to go," and "not to be able to go," is particularly explained. There is also a "dubitative" mood of the verb, which must be extremely useful to Turkish Ministers of State. We feel sure that the study of this language, especially of the conjugation of its verbs, and the uses of its participles, is one of great intellectual interest; and Dr. Wells may have supplied, by his methodical exposition of all its forms, a great source of serious entertainment to many readers who have no intention of visiting Turkey. The rules of syntax and composition are illustrated by numerous and various quotations from Turkish authors, and there are exercises for translation from English into Turkish at every stage of learning the declensions and conjugations; these exercises being forty in number, from first to last, and completing a systematic course of practical instruction. A collection of Turkish proverbs is appended to this grammar, which we can safely recommend both to literary and philological scholars, and to officers or men of business concerned with the affairs of the East. It was stated not long since in the House of Commons, that very few Englishmen in the service of our Foreign Office can read or write Turkish, or even speak it correctly; and if this be the case, even at our Embassy in Constantinople, such labours as those of Dr. Wells ought to be appreciated by her Majesty's Government.

BURNING OF ST. MARY'S CHURCH, WHITECHAPEL.

The parish church of St. Mary Matfelon, Whitechapel, which was restored, four or five years ago, at a cost of £30,000, chiefly by the munificence of Mr. Octavius Coope, M.P., was unfortunately destroyed by fire on Thursday last week. This disaster is believed to have been occasioned by the carelessness of some persons employed about the organ. They had gone away; and presently, some part of the organ catching fire, the flames were communicated to the woodwork above, and thus gained hold of the roof, which appears to have been composed of beams bare and polished. The alarm was given at half-past one in the afternoon, when some workmen entered. A few minutes afterwards, one half of the roof burst into flames. Although a principal station of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade is in an adjacent street, and engines were quickly on the spot, little could be done to stay the destruction except with respect to the tower and belfry. As soon as the engines had arrived and water could be obtained, a hose was taken into the tower and carried by the men to a window in the belfry, from which a stream of water was thrown on the parts of the main building that adjoined the tower. By half-past two, however, the work destruction was complete. The roof had fallen in all alo the windows were out, and the doors swung wide, while the gable ends the higher walls threatened to fall ev moment. Fortunately, the firemen had ample space for wo ing, as the open churchyard is at the rear of the buildi The police of the H Division stopped all traffic, which h includes the tramways; and the firemen, under Mr. Gateho and Mr. Holmes, superintendents, were enabled to do th work. Our Illustration of the scene during the fire shows eastern gable of the church, with the tower, and the engi playing on it, while the molten lead was pouring down f the roof. At that time it was feared that the tower must with the rest of the edifice, but it has been saved. destruction would have involved the total loss of all registers of the parish, and of much valuable ma besides. St. Mary Matfelon has been a parish chu for over 200 years. It was originally a chapel of eas the parish of Stepney, before Whitechapel became a sepa parish. The origin and meaning of the name "Matfelo cannot be certainly known, but it seems to have been use the twenty-first year of Richard II. Stow mentions anecdote of a Frenchman or Breton, who had murdere widow, his benefactress, in this parish, about the year 1 and who sought refuge of sanctuary in the Church of George, in Southwark; but having been overtaken captured, was brought back to Stepney, and was there ki by the women of the place attacking him with stones mire in the street. It has been imagined that matar, Spanish word for "killing," or ammazare, the Italian, mi serve, together with "felon," to explain the name give the parish church. But this is clearly an erroneous supposit

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1880.

The first Session of the tenth Parliament of her Majesty's reign was brought to a close on Tuesday last. A review of its proceedings will be found to present a wide difference between what was commonly expected of it and what it actually accomplished. The field of legislation it traversed was hardly contemplated by the Constituent Bodies which, at the General Election in Spring, returned their respective members to the House of Commons. No one, we venture to say, even of the largest political experience or the clearest and most penetrating foresight, in sketching a programme of the Session, would have drawn up an outline anything resembling the general picture which, during between three and four months, senatorial industry and ingenuity have succeeded in producing. It was generally acknowledged that the legislation of the Session would be of a preliminary character merely, and it was not unreasonably taken for granted that the Liberal majority, vastly outnumbering all its opponents of all parties put together, would summarily dispose of such questions as Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet might, after due consideration, select for treatment this year. The Budget had been voted previously to the Prorogation of the late Parliament. The Estimates had been submitted to the House and, in part, adopted. Certain measures relating to Legal Reform and to the Water Supply of the Metropolis had been introduced. A measure for the Relief of Irish Distress had been passed, and the course seemed clear for the legislative solution of one or more of those secondary problems which for the last six years have pressed upon the notice of the Liberal Party.

But, in point of fact, the new Parliament had scarcely met before events quite unforeseen marked out a wholly unanticipated line of legislatorial effort. Mr. Bradlaugh's claim to take his Seat in the Commons, upon affirmation, in lieu of the oath of allegiance, raised a dispute which altogether occupied some five sittings, and which provoked unusually stormy debates before it was settled. Then came a second Irish Relief Bill, brought in by Mr. Forster, the Chief Secretary to the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland—a measure designed to provide additional funds, out of the Church Surplus, for outdoor relief and improvement works. The contest which this ameliorative and somewhat indulgent Measure provoked gave birth to another bill in relation to Ireland—namely, the Compensation for Disturbance Bill. This remarkable attempt to restrain the power of Landlordism to evict, in case of nonpayment of rent, limited as it was, in passing through Committee, by precautionary restrictions, and applicable only to certain scheduled districts in which severe distress was known to be prevalent, occasioned a flutter of alarm among proprietors of the soil, while it failed to conciliate a majority of Home Rulers. Everybody knows that after having been pushed through the Commons, with varying majorities, it was ultimately rejected by the Lords. But that Bill and the Employers' Liability Bill, introduced with a view to secure workmen against the negligence of masters, by modifying the legal doctrine of "common employment," consumed, we may say, the heart of the Session. A good Burials Bill, mutilated, in the first instance, by the Lords, but subsequently restored and improved by the Commons, has been placed upon the Statute Book. The Postmaster-General's Savings Banks Bill and Money Orders Bill, both of them popular, sound, and useful measures, became Law without serious opposition. The Grain Cargoes Bill, the Expiring Laws Continuance Bill, including the renewal of the Ballot Act for another year, and three Census Bills, were also got through their several stages with tolerable facility. The Ground Game Bill, entitled, in the first instance, the Hares and Rabbits Bill, was not so fortunate. It was considerably modified in Committee by its author, the Home Secretary; it was reduced almost to a nullity in the House of Lords; but afterwards retrieved from failure by the persistence of the Commons. Taken altogether, these legislative achievements, falling short though some of them have done of public expectation, reflect credit, not only on the industry, but on the courage, perseverance, and self-denial of the new House of Commons.

But we have not yet even alluded to the Financial legislation of the Session. Mr. Gladstone's genius, even before his illness, achieved a revolution in that department of statesmanship. In the face of an inherited deficit, he proposed a reduction of the Wine Duties, with a view to the renewal and improvement of the Commercial Treaty with France—a project which has necessarily been deferred, for the present, on account of the exigencies of French politics. But he has not only traced out a bold scheme of Taxational Reform, as between France and England, but has got rid of the Malt Tax by transmuting it into a Beer Duty, and, with the aid of an additional penny to the rate of this year's Income Tax, has converted a deficit into a surplus, and has paved the way to a progressively increasing Financial Return. The magic of the Chancellor of the Exchequer's wand has done wonders. Viewed in conjunction with the Ground Game Act, it has given high satisfaction to the agricultural class, while it has been quietly, if not approvingly, acquiesced in by the general public.

Of course, there have been discussions, from time to time, of the Foreign Policy of her Majesty's Government. Turkey, Afghanistan, and South Africa have furnished, each in its turn, incidents calling for debate. These topics, however, have not given predominance to what is going on abroad, either in the proceedings of Parliament or in the thoughts of men out of doors. They have not, of late, unduly absorbed public attention. Happily, things have tended towards a satisfactory solution, and, there is reason to hope, will ultimately mature into permanently desirable and peaceful results. The Premier was able to resume his responsible post, after his sea trip, in renewed health and strength and spirits, a day or two before the close of the Session, and was welcomed back by all parties to the House of Commons on Saturday last.

Brighter days seem to be dawning. A splendid harvest has been secured in Ireland. Here, in Great Britain, as well as in the Sister Isle, the weather has now pretty nearly done its part towards the gathering in of the fruits of the earth. The burden of our anxieties is lighter than it has been for some time past. Our legislators will, we trust, enjoy the holidays at length vouchsafed to them with "a light heart." Even Members of the Administration, including Cabinet Ministers, may take a spell of rest without gloomy forebodings. The stormy times through which they have passed will season them for future labours. Both Houses of the Imperial Legislature have learned some lessons which will, doubtless, be serviceable to them in regard to their future relations one to the other—lessons which will not be lost upon the reflective. When they are again summoned by their Sovereign to assist the Crown with their joint counsels they will know more accurately than they have done, of late, the measure of each other's moral, as well as constitutional, power, and will sacrifice to impatience or fits of irritation none of that influence which each possesses, not for its own sake, but for the benefit of the nation.

MR. GLADSTONE'S CRUISE.

The Grantully Castle, with Mr. Gladstone on board, arrived in the Firth of Forth on Thursday week, and deputations from the Leith and Edinburgh Town Councils and the Leith and Edinburgh Liberal Associations waited upon him. In reply to addresses, Mr. Gladstone referred to the great interest taken in his welfare by all political parties during his illness, and went on to say that he regretted having been unable to assist his colleagues of late, but he knew they were worthy of the confidence of the party to which they belonged and of the country generally. He could assure his hearers that the present Government would fulfil what they had promised to do at the general election. The right hon. gentleman and Mrs. Gladstone landed, and drove through the streets of Leith and Edinburgh, receiving everywhere enthusiastic welcomes.

On the following evening the Grantully Castle arrived off Yarmouth. The pilot's tug, which was signalled for, brought off a large number of visitors representative of the Liberal party of the town. They presented an address to Mr. Gladstone, who expressed regret that the necessity of his arriving in London early on the following day prevented his landing.

Mr. Gladstone concluded his coasting trip by landing at Gravesend last Saturday morning. Before leaving the vessel the right hon. gentleman spoke a few words of thanks to the captain, officers, and crew, and expressed his obligation to Mr. Donald Currie. On landing he was welcomed on shore by Mr. Elkin, the chairman of the Liberal Association. He then left for Charing-cross, where he arrived about half-past ten, being warmly cheered by those who were present. As the Premier drove to Downing-street he was generally recognised and saluted. After walking in St. James's Park with Earl Spencer, he attended a Cabinet Council; and subsequently he walked to the House, followed by a large number of persons.

Mr. H. B. Loch, Governor of the Isle of Man, has been made Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath.

Mr. F. N. Broome, C.M.G., Colonial Secretary of Mauritius, has been appointed Lieutenant-Governor of that colony.

Mr. Roger Tuckfield Goldsworthy, C.M.G., late Colonial Secretary of Western Australia, has been appointed Administrator and Colonial Secretary of the Island of St. Lucia.

Mr. William Lindsay, of the India Office, has been appointed private secretary to Viscount Enfield, the recently appointed Under-Secretary of State for India.

It is notified by the War Office that, as a special arrangement, candidates will be admitted to the examinations in December next for admission to the Royal Military College or Royal Military Academy who are within the required limits of age on Dec. 1, 1880, or Jan. 1, 1881.

The Canadian Exhibition was opened at Toronto on Tuesday by the Lieutenant-Governor.

Yesterday week an exhibition of fruit was successfully opened at the Alexandra Palace, about £200 being awarded as prizes. This exhibition remained open till Tuesday; and on Saturday last an Industrial Exhibition, to extend over a month, was opened at the Palace. There are as many as 4000 entries, which are divided into seven sections, including mechanical, artistic, general fabrics and fancy work, miscellaneous work by persons under eighteen years of age, and work by school children. The members of the Working Men's Club Union attended the opening ceremony. Medals to the value of £200 are to be awarded.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

I read in the Citizen that, owing to "the unconcerned way" in which the erection was allowed of the monument or memorial or votive temple or expiatory tumulus, or whatever it is, which is partially to take the place of old Temple Bar on the boundary-line between the cities of London and Westminster, the cost of the structure will be at least ten thousand pounds. That, to my mind, is not a matter of any very great moment. An expenditure of twenty or even thirty thousand pounds on an architectural embellishment would not hurt the City of London, which, in the majority of instances, makes an admirable use of the vast financial resources at its command. The question to be determined by the citizens, not only of London, but of Westminster—I mean the metropolis at large—is whether the commemorative tribute to that vile old nuisance Temple Bar (I am glad to remember long years of persistent endeavour, by means of my pen, to force a reluctant Common Council to pull the ruinous old abomination down) is likely to be an architectural embellishment, or an architectural eyesore.

As to its being an obstruction, judgments may differ. Some people are of opinion that the vehicular traffic may be eased and not congested by its being slowly filtered through two narrow "up" and "down" channels, on the principle of the "in" and "out" system of the railway termini, instead of being allowed to flounder promiscuously about one not very broad thoroughfare. And, looking at the number of old ladies who may have come from Westminster by the north side of the Strand, and have to fumble in their reticules for their cheque-books before crossing the road to Child's bank, and the number of potentially short-sighted barristers who would like to take a final peep at their briefs midway between the Temple and the New Law Courts, the narrow strip of pavement or "refuge" which is to encircle the memorial or monument to the manes of Temple Bar may prove a convenience rather than an encumbrance.

Still, three questions may be asked. Has the design for the votive temple or the expiatory tumulus been submitted to Mr. Street, the architect of the New Palace of Justice, universally admitted, as that edifice is, to be one of the most superb examples of secular Gothic in the world? and does that eminent esthetic authority approve of the structure which the City Lands Committee, with the concurrence of the First Commissioner of Works (not the Metropolitan Board of Works, bien entendu), are setting up on the site of Temple Bar? next, does the design meet with the approval of Messrs. Child's, who have adorned the south side of Fleet-street with a stately Italian Palace for their new banking-house? and finally, one would like to inquire whether the right and proper thing to have done would not have been to have set up a wooden model of the proposed monument or memorial (as was done in the case of the equestrian statue of the Duke of Wellington on the summit of Decimus Burton's arch at Hyde Park Corner), so that the citizens of London in general might have been enabled to pronounce an opinion as to the beauty or otherwise of a structure which concerns, not only the City proper, but the entire capital of the British Empire?

Mem.: The Civic Fathers seem to have been in periodical trouble about their gates and barriers. I read in Mr. Pepys's "Diary," under date of Feb. 9, 1659-60:—"I called at Mr. Harper's, who told me how Monk had this day clapt up many of the Common Council, and that the Parliament had voted he should pull down their gates and portcullises, their posts and their chains, which he do intend to do, and to lie in the City all night." Temple Bar was then only a wooden structure. It would have given General Monk some trouble to pull down Sir Christopher Wren's bar.

The way in which we manage art-matters in England is amusingly illustrated by the circumstance that the body to whom the Lord Mayor, as chairman of the Rowland Hill Memorial Committee, has had to apply for permission to erect a statue of the great Postal Reformer at the south-east corner of the Royal Exchange, is the City Commission of Sewers. The Streets Committee have viewed the site, and recommend that, "subject to the approval of the plans and models of the statue" by the Commissioners of Sewers, the required sanction should be granted. A la bonne heure! But surely it is one thing to be a judge of sewers and another to be a judge of statues.

I learn from the Athenæum that a work is in preparation wherein it will exhaustively be proved that the name of the garrulous Clerk of the Acts and Secretary to the Admiralty mentioned above was pronounced neither as "Peps" nor "Pips," nor "Peeps." Does it matter? It is of more concernment, I take it, that there should be an illustrated edition of Pepys. Is there one? What an édition de luxe it would make, with drawings made by such artists as Sir John Gilbert, Mr. Orchardson, Mr. Pettie, Mr. F. Barnard, Mr. Gow, Mr. Du Maurier, and Mr. Linley Sambourne. The last-named pictorial humourist and realist would shine to admiration in the illustrations of Pepys's trip to Holland, with Sir Edward Montagu, to fetch King Charles the Second home. There are many dockyard scenes, too, scattered up and down the Diary which would furnish tempting themes for Mr. Sambourne's inimitably technical pencil.

An "Illustrated Pepys" is, unfortunately, only a work in posse. Perhaps some spirited bibliophile will come over from Chicago or San Francisco (which cities are both rapidly becoming American art-centres) and spend a few thousands in getting up such a work, "regardless of expense." It would pay. So would an Illustrated "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" (look at the ground and the centuries which it covers) omitting Gibbon's objectionable chapters. But the édition de luxe that I most long for is a complete Horace, in Latin, English, and French, profusely illustrated by Sir Frederick Leighton, Mr. Millais, Mr. Alma-Tadema, Mr. E. J. Poynter, and Mr. E. Burne Jones. What a book! It would beat the Vatican Virgil to "S. P."—small potatoes, as the Hon. Bardwell Slote would say.

Meanwhile Messrs. Dalziel Brothers promise a most luxurious art-volume on which during many years their engravers have been engaged, and which, early next November, will become a thing in esse. Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A., Mr. E. J. Poynter, R.A., and Mr. E. Burne Jones, Mr. Holman Hunt as aforesaid, Mr. Ford Madox Brown, Mr. Frederick Sandys, Mr. G. H. Watts, R.A., Mr. Armitage, R.A., and other distinguished artists too numerous to enumerate (I find among them the name of the lamented A. B. Houghton), have co-operated in making the drawings for Dalziel's "Bible Gallery," which is to comprise seventy-nine illustrations from the Old Testament. Only one thousand copies of the work (together with a hundred mounted on hand-made paper) are to be printed.

Names! names! still names! Obviously, I am not responsible for the statement that the admirable Irish comedian Tyrone Power was a Welshman out of Glamorganshire. I always thought that he was an Irishman. I have the keenest remembrance of his rich brogue now, albeit it was in 1840, at my mother's benefit at the Haymarket Theatre that I saw him as Dr. O'Toole, in the "Irish Tutor." I asked for information on the subject; and an esteemed correspondent referred me to the volume of the Metropolitan Magazine which I quoted the week before last. And now, lo! "A. P." writes from Fingas, County Dublin, to tell me that he is in a position to state that the admirable actor's real and proper name was William Grattan Tyrone Power; that he was born in County Waterford; that his father was a Captain in the army, who retired, and died in Canada; and that his wife was the eldest daughter of an English gentleman, of Newport, Isle of Wight. But how did that seemingly baseless myth get into the Metropolitan Magazine for 1836?

Mem.: I note the title of "The Herald's College as a Source of Revenue" as an article in the September number of one of the magazines. If all persons having or using arms paid their proper fees at Heralds' College, as well as the Crown duty on armorial bearings (which in nine cases out of ten is evaded), how rich Garter, Norroy, Clarencieux, and all their merry men in tabards would be, to be sure! In the Middle Ages heralds' fees were very high. At the coronation of Richard II. the Kings of Arms received a hundred pounds, and as many marks at the coronation of Queen Anne of Bohemia. On Royal birthdays and other festive occasions they claimed huge largesse. In fact, the heralds must have made, altogether, a very good thing of it; since, in the reign of Henry V., William Burgess, Garter, was able to entertain the Emperor Sigismund, in sumptuous state, at his mansion at Kentish Town.

I was asked (you may remember) not along ago to suggest a list of books for "general reading" for the use of a country reading-room, and through a kind of mauvaise honte I shrank from acceding to the request. You will understand my reluctance. I read literally everything that I can get hold of and that I can find a little time to delve into; and the consequence is that my own library is simply a rag-shop and a marine-store dealer's, plus a bric-à-brac shop. Still (now that I have turned the matter over in my mind) it might not do any harm if I mentioned a few volumes which I keep on my shelves, close at hand, when I have any time for "general" reading. I will not name such obvious desiderata as Shakspeare, Milton, the Waverley Novels, Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, Macaulay, Gibbon, Carlyle, Froude, Tennyson, Browning, and Mrs. Hemans. But what do you say to Milton's prose (as well as his poetic works)? Cassell's "Old and New London," Foxe's Martyrs, Thiers's French Revolution, and the same author's History of the Consulate and the Empire, Cook's Voyages, Washington Irving's works (every line of them), Bancroft's History of the United States, Napier's Peninsular War, the works of Jeremy Taylor (also every line of him), Addison's Spectator, the Arabian Nights' Entertainments, Goldsmith, Fuller's Worthies of England, Johnson (neither Dryden nor Swift in their entirety for "general" reading), the sermons of Barrow, South, and Stillingfleet, Agnes Strickland's Queens of England, Mrs. Delany's Letters and Autobiography (if these precious volumes can be procured), Southey's Lives of Nelson and Wesley, the British Essayists (the fifty or sixty volumes can be picked up very cheap), and more or less complete sets of Blackwood, Fraser, the Old Monthly, the Gentleman's, and the European Magazine, the Quarterly, the Edinburgh, and the Westminster Reviews? And don't forget the "Ingoldsby Legends," and the complete works of Thomas Hood.

I read in a leading article in a daily contemporary that Edmond About once remarked that Africa began at the Pyrenees. But I also read in the preface to a certain "Handbook for Travellers in Spain" (John Murray, Albemarle-street), by Richard Ford, F.S.A., the third edition of which was published before M. Edmond About's début in letters in "La Grèce Contemporaine," these words: "This singular people is scarcely yet European; this Berberia Cristiana is at least a neutral ground between the hat and the turban; and many still contend that Africa begins at the Pyrenees." Ford, it will be observed, does not claim the expression as an original one. It may be perchance in the "Espagne" of Théophile Gautier, which I have not seen for many years, and which Mr. Thackeray used to say was the "sultriest" book he had ever read. Many of Theophile's word-pictures are indeed so suggestive of torrid tawny Spain that they make you pant and long for iced soda, and something. Well; say limejuice.

Or is the Africo-Pyrenæan expression the property of Alexander Dumas, who wrote a most entertaining and untrustworthy book about Spain. Quien sabe? Who was it that called Africa itself "a huge yellow pancake burnt at the edges?" Who first called a pulpit a "parson cooler," and "business" "other people's money?" I am beginning to think that there are no original sayings at all in the world. Take the expression so dear to modern newspaper correspondents, "Conspicuous by their absence." Its equivalent is to be found in Tacitus, who, referring to the non-appearance of the images of Brutus and Cassius, at the funeral of Junia, writes "Eo ipso præfulgebant quod non visebantur."

In "another place" (the "Playhouses" column) last week I mentioned an excellent drama called "The Templar," produced at the Princess's Theatre, under the management of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles Kean, about thirty years ago, I should have said that the author of "The Templar" (Mr. John Ryder played in it, I think) was Mr. Angiolo R. Selous, who (unless I am misinformed) likewise wrote the "prize" comedy, under the T. P. Cooke bequest, of "True to the Core," played some years ago at the Surrey. And I have to thank Mr. A. C. Selous for his courtesy in reminding me of old times, and his kindness in forwarding me a copy of another original drama of his (unacted, I believe), entitled "Æsop; or, The Golden Calf."

During the Maddox management at the Princess's there was played with great success another altogether original drama of great power and interest, called "The King of the Commons," in which Macready played the leading character—a Scottish King Jamie, he of the "Gaberlunzie," I fancy. Modern managers grumble piteously about the difficulty of getting good pieces, new or old. Here is a list of half a dozen, produced in "the days before Boucicault:"—"Love's Telegraph" (it is Scribe's Le Gant et l'Eventail: Madame Vestris and Charles Mathews were great in it), "Monseigneur" (a grand part of James Wallack's), Shirley Brooks's "Creole" (a most actable play), the "Templar" and "King of the Commons" (already cited), and "The Devil's In It," a wonderfully picturesque drama, in which, I think, Miss Emma Stanley played.

Or, if some aspiring playwrights are in quest of novels to dramatise, here are half a dozen that, so far as I know, have never been "done," and which appear to me to be replete with dramatic interest. Fielding's "Amelia"—(what an Amelia Miss Ellen Terry or Miss Litton would make, and what a grand scene the Vauxhall one would be!) "Paul Ferroll," Thomas Miller's "Gideon Giles the Roper" (a rural domestic romance of the first class, with any quantity of cruel squires, gamekeepers, poachers, and "merry brown hares" that come leaping in it), Thackeray's "Bedford Row Conspiracy," Charles Rowcroft's "Richard Savage," and Charles Lever's "Tom Burke."

The wonders of stenography plus photography will never cease, and they are growing "uncanny" and are beginning to frighten me. Here is a gentleman who, from Drummond-road, S.E., sends me the photographed copy of a post-card within the exiguous compass of which the chief shorthand and correspondence clerk of Messrs. Peck, Frean, and Co. has had the skill and the patience to arrange no less than fourteen thousand two] hundred and fifty words in shorthand. The name of this phenomenal stenographer is Mr. G. H. Davidson, and his remarkable performance gained, I am told, the first prize in a competition open to all shorthand-writers in the United Kingdom or elsewhere, the object of which was to ascertain who could write in shorthand, by Pitman's system, the largest number words on a post-card, such words to be readable by the naked eye. At the distance, say, of a foot, the card looks like some minute pattern for summer "trousering" that advertising tailors are so fond of sending you; but, brought within reasonable reach, the 14,250 symbols are quite legible.

A slight verification is necessary as respects the street in which John Flaxman, "Sculptor of Eternity," as William Blake used to call him, died. Half a dozen correspondents have informed me that Flaxman (born 1755, died 1826) died in Buckingham-street. Cleveland-street, Portland-road, or, as another correspondent puts it, Buck ngham-street, Fitzroy-square, and not in Buckingham-street, Strand, as I (with my head probably running on William Etty's long residence in Buckingham-street, Strand) set it down. The meagre biography of the illustrious sculptor prefixed to his lectures published in 1838) makes no mention of his last place of earthly abode; and in the fuller biography of Allan Cunningham, Flaxman's house in "Buckingham-street" is cited without the exact locality being specified. I was beginning to be fairly astonished at the minute topographical knowledge displayed by my correspondents (it would have astonished even the author of the "Handbook of London," Peter, the son of Allan Cunningham) when I learned that a memorial tablet, with the date of the artist's birth and death, had been affixed by the pious care of the Society of Arts to the front of the house where he really did die.

An aggravated case of organ-grinding at Notting-hill (see daily papers), which ended by two Italians, who refused to go away when requested to do so, being fined ten shillings each, suggests that the time is approaching for Mr. Bass's Street Music Act to be largely and stringently amended; and, at the same time, it emboldens me to make a little suggestion which may or may not be thought feasible. It is in quiet, well-to-do streets, and in the "genteel" suburbs that the organ-grinding nuisance is most severely felt. In poor and populous neighbourhoods, the inhabitants do not mind street music, and, indeed, I suspect, rather like it than otherwise. In the case of a quiet street, where a difference of opinion touching itinerant minstrelsy exists, why should not the residents be polled, and, if there be a two-thirds majority against the brown aliens from Leather-lane and the German "green-baize" bands, and so forth, why should not the parish authorities (under an amended Act of Parliament, of course) be empowered to affix in a conspicuous position at the corners of such street enamelled iron tablets bearing the inscription, in Italian, German, and English, "No Street Music Allowed Here," and specifying beneath the amount of fine or imprisonment, or both, to which a street musician found playing in that street would be liable if he persisted in playing after a first warning? The expense of the enamelled iron tablets would be very small, and might be borne by the inhabitants of the protected streets.

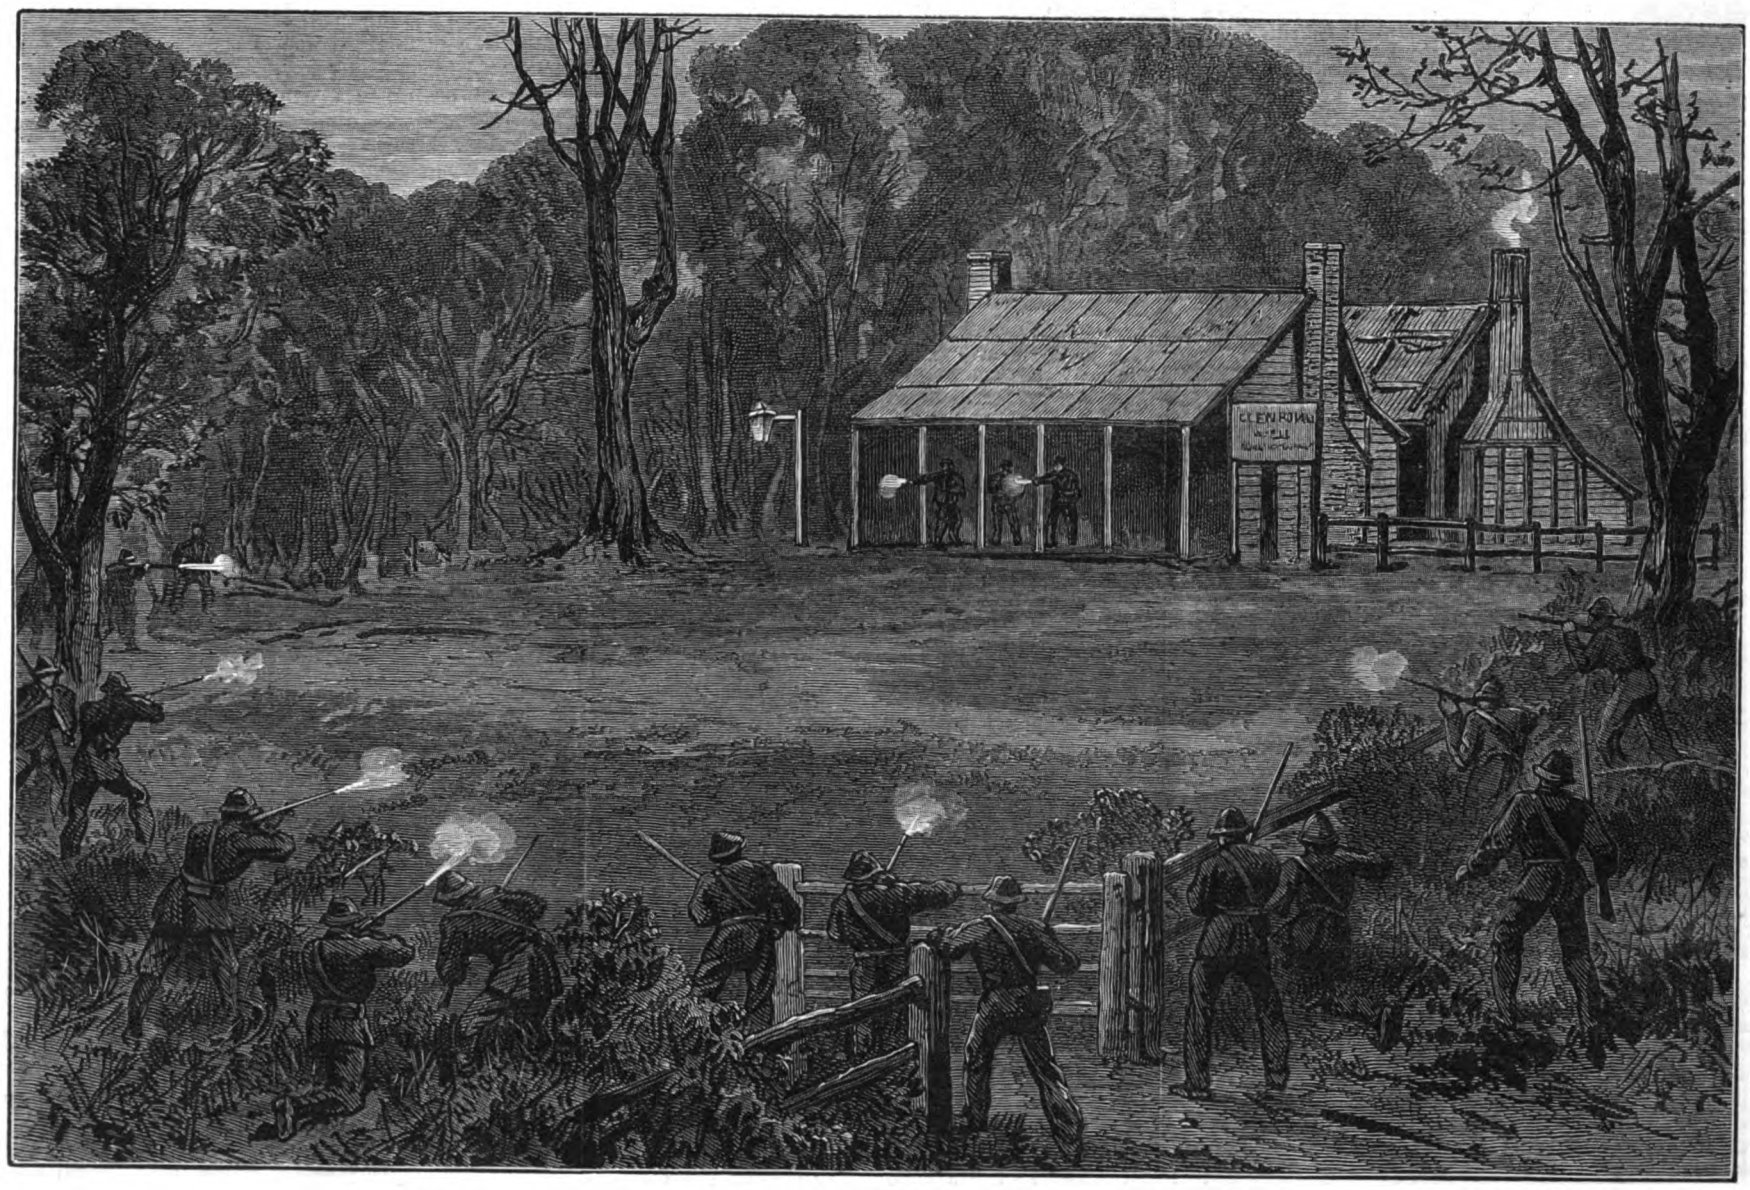
THE KELLY GANG IN AUSTRALIA.



The colonists of Victoria and New South Wales, on both sides of the River Murray, have repeatedly, in the past two years, been thrown into excitement by the unpunished outrages of a large party of robbers and murderers, headed by the brothers Edward and Daniel Kelly. They first began as horse-stealers, about three years ago, in the hill ranges at the head of King river, Delatite county, not much above one hundred miles north-east of Melbourne. Being aided and abetted by numerous family connections and other accomplices residing in the district, just like the Neapolitan, Sicilian, and Greek brigands of Europe, they evaded all police attempts to effect their capture. In October, 1878, they waylaid and killed three police constables near Mansfield. In December, they made a descent from the Strathbogie ranges upon the small town of Euroa, where they openly robbed the bank of £5000, besides terrorising and plundering the townsfolk. The Victorian Government then sent a detachment of colonial militia, with artillery; but it could never meet the bushrangers, who next turned up, in February last year, at Jerilderie, in New South Wales, between the Murray and the Murrumbidgee rivers. Here they made prisoners of the police, and locked them up, while the robbers put on the policemen's clothes, took up their lodgings at the best hotels, and seized all the money in the bank. The two Colonial Governments offered rewards amounting to £8000 for their capture, but in vain; it was, however, latterly supposed that they had removed to Queensland, as some months passed without hearing of fresh depredations.

On June 26, at a place called Sebastopol, eight miles from Beechworth, in the Ovens Gold-Fields district, this band of outlaws surrounded the hut of a young man, Aaron Sheritt, who had formerly been their accomplice. He had since given information against them; and there was a party of four police with him in the hut that very night. They forced a German neighbour to call on Sherritt to come to the door, which he unsuspectingly did, as he knew the German's voice; and then a man named Joe Byrne shot him dead. The police within the hut did not venture to come forth, or even to fire a shot at the murderers, who sent a volley into the hut, and made an attempt to burn it down. But after staying outside all night they rode away triumphant, and visited the town of Beechworth. The news was telegraphed to Melbourne, from which Beechworth is about 185 miles distant by railway, and a special train was immediately dispatched with a force of armed police, assisted by five black men, natives of Queensland, employed as trackers, under Sub-Inspector O'Connor. They were joined at Benalla, 122 miles from Melbourne, by Superintendent Hare, with eight mounted troopers and horses. The train proceeded through the night, with a pilot-engine running before it, from Benalla on the line to Beechworth. Two ladies, the wife of Sub-Inspector O'Connor and her sister, who wanted to go to their friends at Beechworth, were in the train; also the reporters of the Melbourne press, Mr. T. Carrington, special artist of the Australasian Sketcher, and one or two local volunteers. The pilot-engine was stopped by a warning that the rails had been torn up near the Glenrowan station, half-way from Benalla to Wangaratta. This had been done by the Kelly gang, who were then occupying a wooden one-storeyed building called the Glenrowan Hotel, kept by a Mrs. Jones. Superintendent Hare immediately determined to attack them in this house, which was only a hundred yards distant from the railway station. The besieging force, augmented by a few more police, under Superintendent Sadler, from Benalla, and from Wangaratta, under Sergeant Steele, numbered about thirty men. The number of the Kelly gang at Glenrowan was about the same, but few of them kept inside the house. The two conflicting parties, in the darkness of the night, long before daybreak, began firing at each other. The shrieks of women and children, with shouts, oaths, and curses from the men, were heard at intervals; there was Mrs. Jones, with her two children, one of whom was killed and the other wounded; a Mrs. Reardon, also with a boy; and two or three sisters of the Kellys, Mrs. Skillian and Kate Kelly, with another girl. It seems that Ned Kelly had made prisoners of many of the people of Glenrowan, and had shut them up in the station-master's house and in the hotel. There were forty-seven persons so confined by the outlaws. One was a platelayer on the railway, whom Kelly had forced to take up the rails, and who was accidentally shot. The fight went on some hours, but intermittently; Superintendent Hare was wounded in the wrist, but none of the police were killed. At daybreak, to the amazement of the attacking party, a man dressed in a long grey overcoat, wearing a huge iron helmet that completely covered his face and neck, stalked slowly forth, with a revolver firing deliberately at them here and there, between the trees that stood around the house. This was Ned Kelly. Some of the police fired at him, and were still more astonished to find that the bullets which struck his body did not hurt him. They felt a superstitious terror, and began to think he was a diabolical fiend. The fact was, that he had put on a suit of armour, consisting of breast-plate, shoulder-plates, back-plate, and helmet, a quarter of an inch thick, made to his order by two country blacksmiths. Some other members of the gang were attired in the same manner. Sergeant Steele, perceiving that Kelly's body was thus made bullet-proof, aimed at his legs, and soon brought him to the ground, when the police ran in and secured him. He had several wounds about the legs, feet, arms, and hands, and there were eighteen bullet-marks on his armour, which was massive, weighing 97 lb. altogether, but rudely fashioned. After his capture the fight outside became very slack, and at ten o'clock in the forenoon about twenty of the gang surrendered, by casting themselves prone on the ground and holding up their hands. At three in the afternoon, the women and other non-combatants having left the house, and the shooting stopped, the police set fire to the house, not knowing whether the men remaining inside were alive or dead. Mrs. Skillian wanted to go in, and call her brother Dan and his companions out to surrender, but she was not permitted to approach the house. The Rev. Mr. Gibney, the Roman Catholic priest, then made a similar attempt. He was the first to enter, and then found the dead bodies of Dan Kelly and Stephen Hart, much burnt, lying close to each other. It is believed that they agreed to kill one another, instead of allowing themselves to be taken. The body of Joe Byrne, who had been killed by a shot, and that of the platelayer Cherry, were also found in the house. Ned Kelly was carried a prisoner to Melbourne, and will be tried on a capital charge when his wounds are healed. The destruction of this gang has, of course, given much satisfaction to all honest and peaceable inhabitants of the Australian colonies.

ROYAL ENGINEERS PONTOONING ON THE THAMES.

The pontoon troop of the Royal Engineers has been encamped on the plain of Runnymede for about three weeks, with the object of practising the men in rapidly constructing and throwing bridges over the river. The troop is under the command of Major R. J. Bond, while the officers serving under him are Captain Waller and Lieutenants Rochfort Boyd, Godsal, Pemberton, and Irvine. It consists of about 200 men, with a hundred horses, and thirty-two pontoon and baggage waggons.

The camp was formed at the western extremity of Runnymede, opposite Magna Charta Island, on which the Great Charta was obtained from King John by the assembled Barons. The building on this island was originally a ferryman's cottage, of Norman Gothic architecture, designed by Savin, and constructed of the stone of Old Marlow Church, for the purpose of containing the celebrated traditional stone on which the Charter was signed. The pungent description of that historic event by the cabman or flyman who once brought a party to see the stone is accepted as the most graphic account of King John's submission to the Barons. It runs thus:—"They dragged him across by the 'air of his 'ed, and made him put his fist to it; and there was twenty-seven Barons a layin' in the long grass, in case he turned nasty." The room in which the stone is placed, called the "Painted Chamber," is ornamented with old oak panelling and with stained-glass windows, having the shields of King John and the Barons emblazoned on the walls. From a unique little structure on a rough, sedgy piece of ground, this house has, since its occupation by Mr. Clifford during the last twenty-five years, been enlarged into a comfortable private residence, and the grounds are now ornamentally laid out and planted.

Attached to the island is an ancient private fishery, granted by charter to the monks of Ankerwyke, extending from the Bells of Ouseley to below Egham Lock. Mr. Clifford, who is a devoted angler, has not used it for his private advantage, but has taken great pains to improve and preserve the fishery for the benefit of his brother anglers. The island is bounded on the east by Ankerwyke Park, which contains the picturesque ruins of the nunnery where Anne Boleyn was an inmate, and the gigantic old cedar and yew trees under which she is said to have spent many hours of retirement.

The Royal Engineers' operations were commenced by rapidly, and with close attention to detail, unpacking the pontoons and stores at the water's edge, and then making a bridge, by the method known as "forming up." After that they were engaged in breaking it into ratts and rowing them up stream and forming transport rafts. On these first days the proceedings closed by floating down into single ratts, casting upper and lower anchors, re-forming the bridge, and dismantling. They next proceeded to forming the bridge for swinging, an operation achieved by making up the whole length along shore, and swinging round with the current into any position required. This would be the method employed in face of an enemy. The succeeding operation consisted in making a cut raft, at any required point in the bridge, the object of which is to allow any portion to be separated and drifted out. From this they proceeded to exercise the men in swinging the whole or any part of the bridge in any required position—an operation of no little difficulty on rapid tidal rivers—to allow loaded craft to steer straight to the opening made for them in the cut raft. This practice has greatly improved the men in skilfully manipulating the cables, by which every separate raft is hauled into position, up and down stream. The whole practice has been attended with such satisfactory results that they can construct a bridge across the Thames in less than twenty minutes.

After this practice a night operation was planned long after dark in dead silence. While Major Bond was engaged in bridging the stream a mounted body of the troop was sent down from Old Windsor to scour the banks, during which time two feints were made by rafts detached by Lieutenants Pemberton and Irvine; and the completion of the bridge would have been a great success if the crowd which lined the banks had not divulged the secret of his whereabouts. The whole series of operations, however, excited the enthusiastic admiration of a large concourse of spectators. The operation of the engineers, however, which has most interested the public remains to be noticed. At the invitation of Mr. Clifford two bridges were formed over the river by different methods, across which a mounted portion of the troop passed in succession, first in single file, and then in half sections, followed by eight baggage waggons, each drawn by four horses, and the rear was brought up by three ladies on horseback. While this was going on a loaded barge came down the river, and the operation of "making cut" to let her pass through was as easily and rapidly executed as opening and closing a turnpike gate, to the delight of an admiring crowd, whose interest in the operations seemed to increase every day.

On the Friday of last week Colonel Fitzroy Somerset, commanding the Royal Engineers at Aldershott, visited the camp with his staff, and, after making a minute inspection and witnessing a series of operations, expressed his entire satisfaction with what he had seen. On Monday evening last, the non-commissioned officers of the detachment, with Sergeant-Major Oldham at their head, were entertained at the Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's-hill, by Colonel Chesney, R.E., President of that institution. On Tuesday the whole corps, under command of Major Bond, marched with the pontoon train by way of Egham to Staines, and passed over to the Lammas meadow, on the Middlesex side of the river. Here they speedily constructed a pontoon-bridge of fourteen anchored boats, by which they again crossed the river to the Surrey side, about eleven o'clock in the forenoon. They dismantled and removed the bridge in a very short time, and carried its materials back to the camp at Runnymede. The Royal Engineers are to break up the camp and go to Aldershott this day (Saturday).

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Sept. 7.

A French Ministry is like love: you never know how strong it is or how long it will last. The de Freycinet Cabinet, the members of which are at present scattered all over the country, is divided against itself, as we have already seen. M. de Freycinet declared at Montauban that the religious decrees would only be applied to the Jesuits: other Ministers declared that M. de Freycinet said so on his own responsibility. M. Gambetta refused to say anything about the matter, and is expected every day to start for Crêtes, in Switzerland, the seat of Mdme. Arnaud de l'Ariège, in order to avoid meeting M. de Freycinet when the latter returns to Paris. Yesterday the Journal Officiel gave M. de Freycinet a slap in the face, and announced that the Government had taken no engagement relative to the execution of the religious decrees either towards the Vatican, the Papal Nuncio, or anybody else—that, in short, the Government's liberty of action was complete, and its resolutions depended only upon itself; all assertions to the contrary being without foundation. If M. de Freycinet were mindful of his dignity he would resign after such a note.

The Jesuits have changed their tactics. When a Royal Ordonnance in 1828 ordered the educational establishments which they directed to be subjected henceforward to the authority of the University; and when the same decree prohibited anyone from taking part in the direction or instruction of any educational establishment unless he had previously signed a declaration to the effect that he did not belong to any unauthorised congregation, the Jesuits did not attempt to resist or to elude the law. They shut up their establishments and went abroad, taking with them a few of their pupils, who, however, did not stay with them long. Now the Jesuits pretend to submit to the laws, but their schools and colleges remain open. Henceforward they belong by virtue of real or pretended cessions to civil societies, and when last Wednesday the police authorities visited the Jesuit schools in different parts of France they were everywhere introduced to gentlemen in lay costume or secular priests, who exhibited their title-deeds with the greatest readiness. The whole affair reminds one strongly of Henri Mounier's Roman chez la Portière. It is simply a matter of dress and disguise. The Radicals are naturally but little satisfied with the religious decrees. They demand the separation of the Church and State.

A painful event happened a few days ago which has caused great emotion not only at Paris, but all over France. A journalist, M. Ivan de Woestyne, allowed, let us hope, his loyalty, and good faith to be surprised, and made himself the echo of an atrocious calumny against Colonel Jung, one of the most distinguished and patriotic staff-officers of the Republic. M. de Woestyne accused Colonel Jung of having abstracted documents from the War Office, and of having communicated to the enemy important papers concerning the mobilisation of the army. Colonel Jung is the author of two volumes on "Bonaparte and his Times," in which, with the aid of documentary evidence of the most crushing and incontestable character, he has shown up the odious aspects of the early years of the first Napoleon. His book, which is animated throughout with a profound admiration for the heroes of the armies of the first Republic, has created Colonel Jung many enemies amongst the members of the reactionary parties. The fact that it is dedicated to M. Gambetta, and that its author had access to documents which had been kept secret under former régimes, did not tell in Colonel Jung's favour. How the calumny arose it is almost impossible even to suggest at present; but the matter is coming before the courts, and the three journals who published the calumny—the Gaulois, Gil Blas, and Paris Journal—are to be prosecuted. At first Colonel Jung demanded from M. de Woestyne a retractation or reparation by arms. M. de Woestyne refused, saying that all the statements he had made were true. In presence of this declaration, Colonel Jung had only the remedy of civil justice, and M. de Woestyne's subsequent acceptance of a duel is of no account. The whole affair is to be regretted; and, while admitting M. de Woestyne's sincerity, one cannot help looking upon this calumny as another instance of the systematic bad faith and disloyalty of French political parties. The case will be called before the Juge d'Instruction to-morrow (Wednesday).

The Jung affair ought logically to lead to other matters of equal if not of greater importance. If the Government thinks it to be necessary to prosecute newspapers on account of the Jung incident, can it any longer defer an examination of the case of Lieutenant Marcerou, chief warder of the Prison des Chantiers, against whom the Intransigeant has for weeks and weeks been daily bringing charges of the most outrageous barbarity? Can it continue to allow the Radical press to treat as assassins Generals Gallifet, Gaillard, and Canrobert? The question raised is really that of the honour of the army.

Apropos of the Marcerou affair, I may add that the deputy M. Benjamin Raspail has written to the Minister of Public Works demanding the dismissal of "that monster" from the post of Central Commissioner which he occupies at the Vincennes Railway station, and announcing, in case of the Minister's refusal, to bring the matter before the Chambers. The silence of the Government in this matter is, indeed, inexplicable, and we may look forward to lively times after the opening of Parliament.

The existence of the Parisian—the typical Parisian of literature, I mean—is regulated almost chronometrically. The years se suivent et se ressemblent. You have the theatres and balls, the Salon, the Grand Prix, la Villégiature, the seaside, the shooting season, or la chasse. This year there is a singular scarcity of game in France, and on some of the great estates—as, for instance, on Rothschild's château at Ferrières—there will be no shooting. The severe winter and the summer hail-storms have spread destruction amongst both fur and feathers. Nevertheless, the Prefecture of Police of Paris alone has issued between five and six thousand gun licenses, and on the opening day last Sunday the railway stations were crowded with chasseurs rigged out in those marvellous canvas costumes which can be bought in the bazaars for a few francs. The Parisian chasseur buys his complete outfit, including game-bag, gun, and cartridges, in a bazaar; and the favourite scene of his exploits is the plain of Saint-Denis, where he makes war on the sparrows and on the seat of his neighbour's trousers. Like that of the patient anglers of the Seine, the pleasure of the Parisian chasseur lies in expectation. He also gets some fun out of his costume and gaiters. His game-bag, however, is a secret source of shame, not to say of expense. To save appearances, he is obliged to fill it at the poulterer's shop.

The theatrical season has begun in spite of the oppressive heat which the Parisians have been enduring for more than a fortnight. In a few days all the houses will have opened their doors, most of them with revivals. Parisian managers have adopted the system of not paying their actors during the months of July and August. In order to make both ends meet, the actors go and play in the watering-places and seaside casinos. Consequently the rehearsal of new pieces cannot be begun until the month of September. At present therefore there is nothing important to be mentioned at the theatres.

On Sunday Mdlle. Sarah Bernhardt began her tour in the French provinces at Angers. The theatre was not exactly full to suffocation, owing to the high prices demanded for the seats. At Saumur and Tours the Mayors would not allow the prices of the seats to be raised, and so the great actress did not visit those towns. The success of the provincial tour of this "artistic phenomenon," as Sarah is now called, is likely to be very much compromised, on the one hand, by the refusal of the Mayors to authorise the raising of the prices in the municipal theatres, and, on the other hand, by the unwillingness of the thrifty and parsimonious provincials to pay fifteen francs for an orchestra stall. Rachel, in her time, encountered the same difficulty.

Gounod has just finished a grand oratorio, called "Rédemption," for which, I am told, he asks 100,000f.

In consideration of the increased use of vitriol by jealous lovers and abandoned mistresses, the police have at last issued an order forbidding chemists to sell poisons or corrosive substances except on presentation of a doctor's prescription.

On Sunday last, 20 Gutenberg, an 92, the orthodox Positivists made their annual pilgrimage to the tomb of Auguste Comte, in the Cemetery of Père Lachaise. In the afternoon they held a meeting in the Rue Monsieur le Prince, and in the evening there was a banquet at a restaurant in the Palais Royal. The English Positivists were represented by Professor Beesly and Dr. Bridges.

The countrymen of Chaucer and Gower will be interested to know that Paris has not forgotten the glory of the trouvère. Jean de Meung, surnamed "Clopinel" or the limper, who, being, as a contemporary chronicler states, a doctor in holy theology and philosophe tresparfont, sachant tout ce qui à entendement humain est scible, added eighteen thousand verses to the original four thousand verses of the "Roman de la Rose." The house in which Jean de Meung lived and wrote at Paris still exists: it is the old Hôtel de la Tournelle, which has been rebuilt, and now bears the number 218 in the Rue Saint-Jacques. The learned and active committee of Parisian inscriptions have decided to place on the façade of this hotel a reproduction of a medallion portrait of Jean de Meung, and the following four verses from the "Apparition de Jehan de Meung," written at the beginning of the fifteenth century by Honoré Bonet:—

Je suis mestre Jehan de Meung,
Qui, par maints vers, sans nulle prose,

LOCAL TAXATION RETURNS.

The ninth annual return of local taxation for England for 1878-9, which has been tabulated under the direction of the Local Government Board, has been issued. The total raised during the year 1878-9 by local taxation was £30,898,828. In addition to this sum, Treasury subventions, amounting to £2,153,362, were received in easement of the local rates.

The amounts received respectively for local and imperial services were as follows:—Levied by rates falling on rateable property, local, £25,685,896; imperial, £2,146,274. Levied by tolls, dues, and rents falling on traffic, local, £4,756,349; imperial, £7088. Levied by duties falling on consumable articles, local, £456,583. The Treasury grants in aid of local taxation exceed the sums entered in the accounts of the local authorities forwarded to the board. This difference arises for the most part from the Government taking upon itself several charges in relief of local taxation that do not appear in the annual returns. The sum voted by Parliament for the financial year 1878-9 was for England, £2,873,675. In addition to the receipts from rates and subventions, as mentioned above, a sum of £18,752,462 was received on account of rates from other sources, including loans, making the total receipts £46,584,632. The total expenditure on account of rates was £44,865,789. Under the head of tolls, dues, and fees a further sum of £2,558,017 was received from harbour dues and other sources, making the total receipts £7,321,454, against which the expenditure is £6,847,359. The expenditure under the head of duties was £462,771. The local loans outstanding at the close of the year amounted to £128,486,987.

The grand total of local taxation for the year shows receipts from all sources, £54,363,169, and expenditure, £52,175,907.

The marked approval accorded to the "Railway Time Tables," published by Messrs. Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, by reason of the simplicity of their arrangement and the facility with which the through routes can be consulted, have induced that enterprising firm to issue an enlarged and improved series. A large railway map of Great Britain, which has been specially drawn and engraved for this new series, appears for the first time in the September issue.

The Bedford police discovered last Saturday, in a house in Harder's-road, several thousand pounds' worth of property, believed to be the proceeds of various recent burglaries. The articles consist principally of watches and jewellery. In one chest was a large quantity of diamonds, the settings of which were destroyed beyond identification. Many of the watch-cases were defaced, but one box contained watches bearing the name of Mr. Dyer, of Regent-street. Five persons have been arrested in connection with the matter.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

The recent tropical heat of the weather seems fairly to have terrified Mr. John S. Clarke, who has postponed his reappearance at the Haymarket Theatre, which establishment will consequently remain closed until the 20th inst. Mr. John S. Clarke, you should have cried "Sursum corda!" and opened the "little theatre in the Haymarket" (now no longer "little" and no more in a market for hay). In the matter of English weather, we are always entitled to expect the worst. Since Mr. Clarke was alarmed by the tropical temperature, presaging, as he seemed to think, empty benches, and since (on that terribly hot Saturday night) the leaden-covered dome of St. Paul's, converted by the rays of the Sun into a colossal "heater," gave out, in return, so much nocturnal caloric as half stifled the dwellers in the Churchyard and Paternoster-row (there are still a good many people who are fain, either from choice or compulsion, to live in the City) a complete change has taken place, meteorologically speaking. The dogs have ceased to prowl about panting, and with a hydrophobic expression on their countenances, and we can all breathe. There has been plenty of refreshing rain (it is quite cheering to see the dear old London mud again); and it is nice, cool, cloudy, theatre-going weather.

Not but what I admire the more than Spartan fortitude with which many of the London managers have encountered the playhouse-emptying influences of this fiery tail to the dog-days. In the generality of cases their heroic constancy has been rewarded. In particular is "The World" at Drury Lane, continuing to do excellent business; and at the Gaiety neither Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Florence on the one hand, nor Mr. John Hollingshead on the other, have certainly any reason to complain of the quantity and quality of the enthusiastic audiences who nightly acclaim the two talented transatlantic comedians in "The Mighty Dollar." Please look at the exquisite little sketches by Mr. Charles Keene of the Hon. Bardwell Slote and Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory in this week's Punch.

I have been to the Alhambra Theatre Royal (in days gone by one was supposed to visit the Alhambra disguised as a Californian gold-digger or an Australian stock-raiser, or a Cape ostrich-farmer, or with a false nose and blue spectacles, mais nous avons changé tout cela)—and the Alhambra, as a theatre licensed by the Lord Chamberlain, is now as decorously conducted as any other dramatic establishment in London—to see the grand new Ballet d'Action introduced into the third act of "La Fille du Tambour Major." The ballet, an extremely brilliant and animated divertissement, is entitled "The Alpine Brigands," and has a neat little plot of its own bearing on the mischances of a certain Count Lelio, who is captured by the brigands and their chief, Petruzzio, but who is fortunate enough to be fallen in love with by Zanetta, the brigand chief's lovely and accomplished daughter. Add to these the merrymaking of a gathering of peasants, male and female, who have met not only for the purposes of a festa, but to devise means for furthering the cause of the independence of Italy from the Alps to the Adriatic, and you have the plot of "The Alpine Brigands" in a nutshell. Stay; there is also the Austrian army, which, led by the Archduke Charles, Generals Mack and Wurmser, Count Nugent, Prince Windischgratz, Jellachich, Ban of Croatia, Field Marshal Haynau, and all the Austrian Lloyd grenadiers, is advancing to take anybody into custody, when, in the nick of time, a rustic bridge is broken down by the peasantry, and the brigands, and the hated Tedeschi are left on the wrong side of the ravine, lamenting, like Lord Ullin in the ballad.

Mdlle. Pertoldi danced with much grace and agility as the enamoured Zanetta; and Mdlle. J. de Gilbert looked so handsome and so fascinating in black velvet and grey silk hose as Count Lelio (she reminded one throughout of a kind of etherealised Count Rodolpho in La Sonnambula) that her being fallen in love with by a brigand chief's sister, or anybody else's sister, might be deemed quite a matter of course. Miss Matthews showed considerable mimetic as well as choregraphic talent as Petruzzio; and Mdlle. Rosa was prettily petulant and generally sprightly as Pipeta, an inn-keeper's daughter. The efforts of these fair artistes were efficiently seconded by the splendidly drilled Alhambra Corps de Ballet; and altogether "The Alpine Brigands" forms a very sparkling supplement indeed to Mr. H. B. Farnie's clever version of Offenbach's bustling comic opera, and reflects the highest credit on the Maître du Ballet, M. Bertrand; the Musical Director, Mr. G. Jacobi; and the stage-manager, Mr. Richard Mansell. By-the-way, in the ball-room scene in the second act of "La Fille du Tambour Major" there is introduced a solemnly graceful Minuet and Gavotte danced by the coryphées in slow and stately measure to some quaintly plaintive music composed by Raymond Lully (I think, for one of the interludes in Molière's "Bourgeois Gentilhomme" in the seventeenth century. Do you remember the "Menuet de la Cour" that Taglioni and Cerito (or was it Carlotta Grisi?) used to dance in "Don Giovanni," at Her Majesty's Theatre, ever so many years ago? Ah! the sublimity of that dance. Dis moi, soldat, dis moi, t'en souviens-tu? 'Tis fitting to ask the question, for only the old soldiers can reply. And yet I had the honour to see Taglioni (Madame La Comtesse Gilbert des Voisins) the other night at Sadler's Wells, looking as fresh—well, a great deal fresher than the spectator who was respectfully gazing at her felt.

On Monday afternoon, in a refreshing shower, I betook myself to the Imperial Theatre (late Aquarium) to behold a "morning" performance. The house (the stalls especially) was very well attended; from which fact I was led to infer, first, that there must be a great many more well-to-do people in London just now than is generally imagined; and, next, that there are always vast numbers of people who have nothing to do. Else, why go to a morning performance at three o'clock in the afternoon? I was somewhat perplexed, however, by the remembrance that I was not one of the people with nothing to do; and yet I was sitting in the stalls of the Imperial Theatre (late Aquarium) at four p.m. In one sense, I am sorry that I attended the theatre at present under the lesseeship of Mr. W. Edgcumbe Rendle, who, by arrangement with Mr. Hollingshead, has secured the services of the regular company of the Gaiety Theatre: for I spent all the money I had in my pocket in the purchase of a deliciously illustrated duodecimo copy of the Chevalier de Florian's "Galatée" (Amsterdam, 1785), at a book shop in Parliament-street, and was fain to walk home (never borrow the silver to pay for a cab from your household; they have odd notions of exchange, and expect you to return gold for silver); but, in the next place, I am glad that I went to Westminster, since the visit enabled me to witness the performance of Mr. Reece's Gaiety burlesque of "Young Van Winkle," which I had not the good fortune to see before, and which is an extremely funny performance. Miss Nellie Farren was as arch, agile, mischievous, and captivating as ever as young Rip (although I failed to like her dress, which was dingy and ill-fitting); Miss Ca Gilchrist was very graceful as Hendrick; Mr. J. J. Dallas made an excruciatingly comic Gretchen (Rip's mother), and sang with great verve and drollery; and, I suppose, burlesque fiendishness, grim humour, and grotesque malevolence never had a better representative that Mr. E. W. Royce, with his musical hat, his abnormally long-fingered black gloves, and his astonishing antics, gestures, and gyrations. He is certainly a Prince of the Preposterous, this Mr. E. W. Royce. "Young Rip Van Winkle," which went throughout swimmingly, was preceded by a comedietta in one act, called "Mad," specially written by Mr. Edward Rose for the Misses Amy and Louise Lionel, to illustrate the marvellous likeness existing between those sister artistes.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

We gave last week full details of the arrangements for the 157th meeting of the three choirs of Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester, which took place this week at the last-named city.

The festival was inaugurated on Tuesday morning with the usual special service in the cathedral, the three associated choirs having co-operated in the musical portions thereof. The customary sermon in allusion to the purpose of the occasion was preached by the Dean of Worcester. The musical service was that by Wesley in E, the anthem having been the late Sir John Goss's "Praise the Lord."

After a short interval, the first of the festival performances took place in the Cathedral, "Elijah" having, as frequently before, been chosen for the opening oratorio. A special feature in the performance of Mendelssohn's great work was Madame Albani's fine rendering of the soprano solos of the second part. Those of the first part were well sung by Miss Anna Williams; the duet (with chorus), "Lord, bow Thine ear," having been efficiently rendered by Misses De Fonblanque and H. Wilson. The baritone music assigned to the Prophet, and the tenor solos, were, as often before, effectively given, respectively, by Mr. Santley and Mr. E. Lloyd. Madame Patey made the usual effect in the air "O rest in the Lord," having also sung with fine effect in the other contralto music of the second part. The trio, "Lift Thine eyes," by Madame Albani, Miss A. Williams, and Madame Patey, was one of the specialties of the day. Miss Damian sang the air "Woe unto them" (and other passages), with nice feeling, and Mr. G. Cox, Mr. F. King, and Signor Ghilberti rendered serviceable aid in the concerted music. The chorus singing was throughout of a high order.

Mr. C. H. Lloyd (organist of Gloucester Cathedral) conducted efficiently, and Mr. L. Colborne (of Hereford) presided ably at the organ.

The first of the concerts given in the Shirehall took place on Tuesday evening, when Mr. C. H. H. Parry's setting of scenes from Shelley's "Prometheus Unbound" was produced, preceded and followed by a miscellaneous selection. Mr. Parry had previously made his name known by several elaborate productions, including an orchestral overture, a pianoforte concerto, and other character music. The work now referred to was composed expressly for the festival, and was conducted by the composer. It is written for four solo voices, chorus, and orchestra. The general tone of the music is sombre—not to say heavy—and of its merits and characteristics it will be well to reserve specific opinion until after a second hearing, should any such opportunity be offered by a London performance. The work consists of recitatives and other solo passages, two quartets, and several choruses and semi-choruses. The solo portions were well sung by Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Francis; and the music had the further advantage of a thoroughly efficient performance in its orchestral and choral details, notwithstanding which, the general impression left was that of crude incoherence. It is only fair, however, to say that several portions were applauded by a well-disposed audience. Tuesday evening's programme also included Beethoven's overture to "Fidelio" and Mozart's symphony in E flat, and vocal pieces by the principal singers. Mr. Lloyd conducted, with the exception above specified.

Wednesday morning's performance in the cathedral opened with the two exquisite movements of Schubert's symphony in B minor, of which only these portions were completed. Mozart's "Requiem" followed, and Spohr's "Last Judgment" formed the second part of the day's programme. Wednesday evening was appropriated to Mendelssohn's "St. Paul"; on Thursday Leonardo Leo's "Dixit Dominus" in C, Palestrina's "Stabat Mater," Mr. H. Holmes's new cantata "Christmas Day," and Beethoven's "Missa Solennis" in D, constituted a long and varied programme; and yesterday (Friday) morning, the oratorio performances concluded with "The Messiah" all these being given in the Cathedral, where, in the evening of the same day, a special service was held, including Mr. C. H. Lloyd's new "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis," both composed for the festival. Of the later occasions referred to, and of the second concert in the Shirehall (on Thursday evening) we must speak next week.

The eighth session of the Westminster College of Chemistry and Pharmacy was held last week at Hawkstone Hall, Westminster-bridge-road. Mr. Woollon, the secretary, read the annual report, which stated that the College continued to lead the van in passes. Out of 196 students last year 151 had passed, of whom 129 were minor students and twenty preliminaries. Mr. G. S. V. Wills, the principal of the college, then gave an address to the students, in which he impressed upon them the importance of a systematic arrangement of their studies, to the adoption of which he considered the success of the college was in a great measure due.

At the meeting of the Commissioners of Sewers on Tuesday the Fishmongers' Company made a report stating that during the month of July last 93 tons 10 cwt. of fish had been seized at Billingsgate Market and destroyed as being unfit for human food. Deputy Walter said it was to be very much regretted that so large a quantity of valuable human food should be wasted in this manner, and he inquired whether it was not possible for some steps to be taken to prevent such a wholesale waste. Mr. Rudkin said that during hot weather, such as had been recently experienced, it was impossible to prevent fish from becoming rapidly putrid—and, in fact, a very considerable portion of fish conveyed to Billingsgate was in a putrid condition before it reached the market.

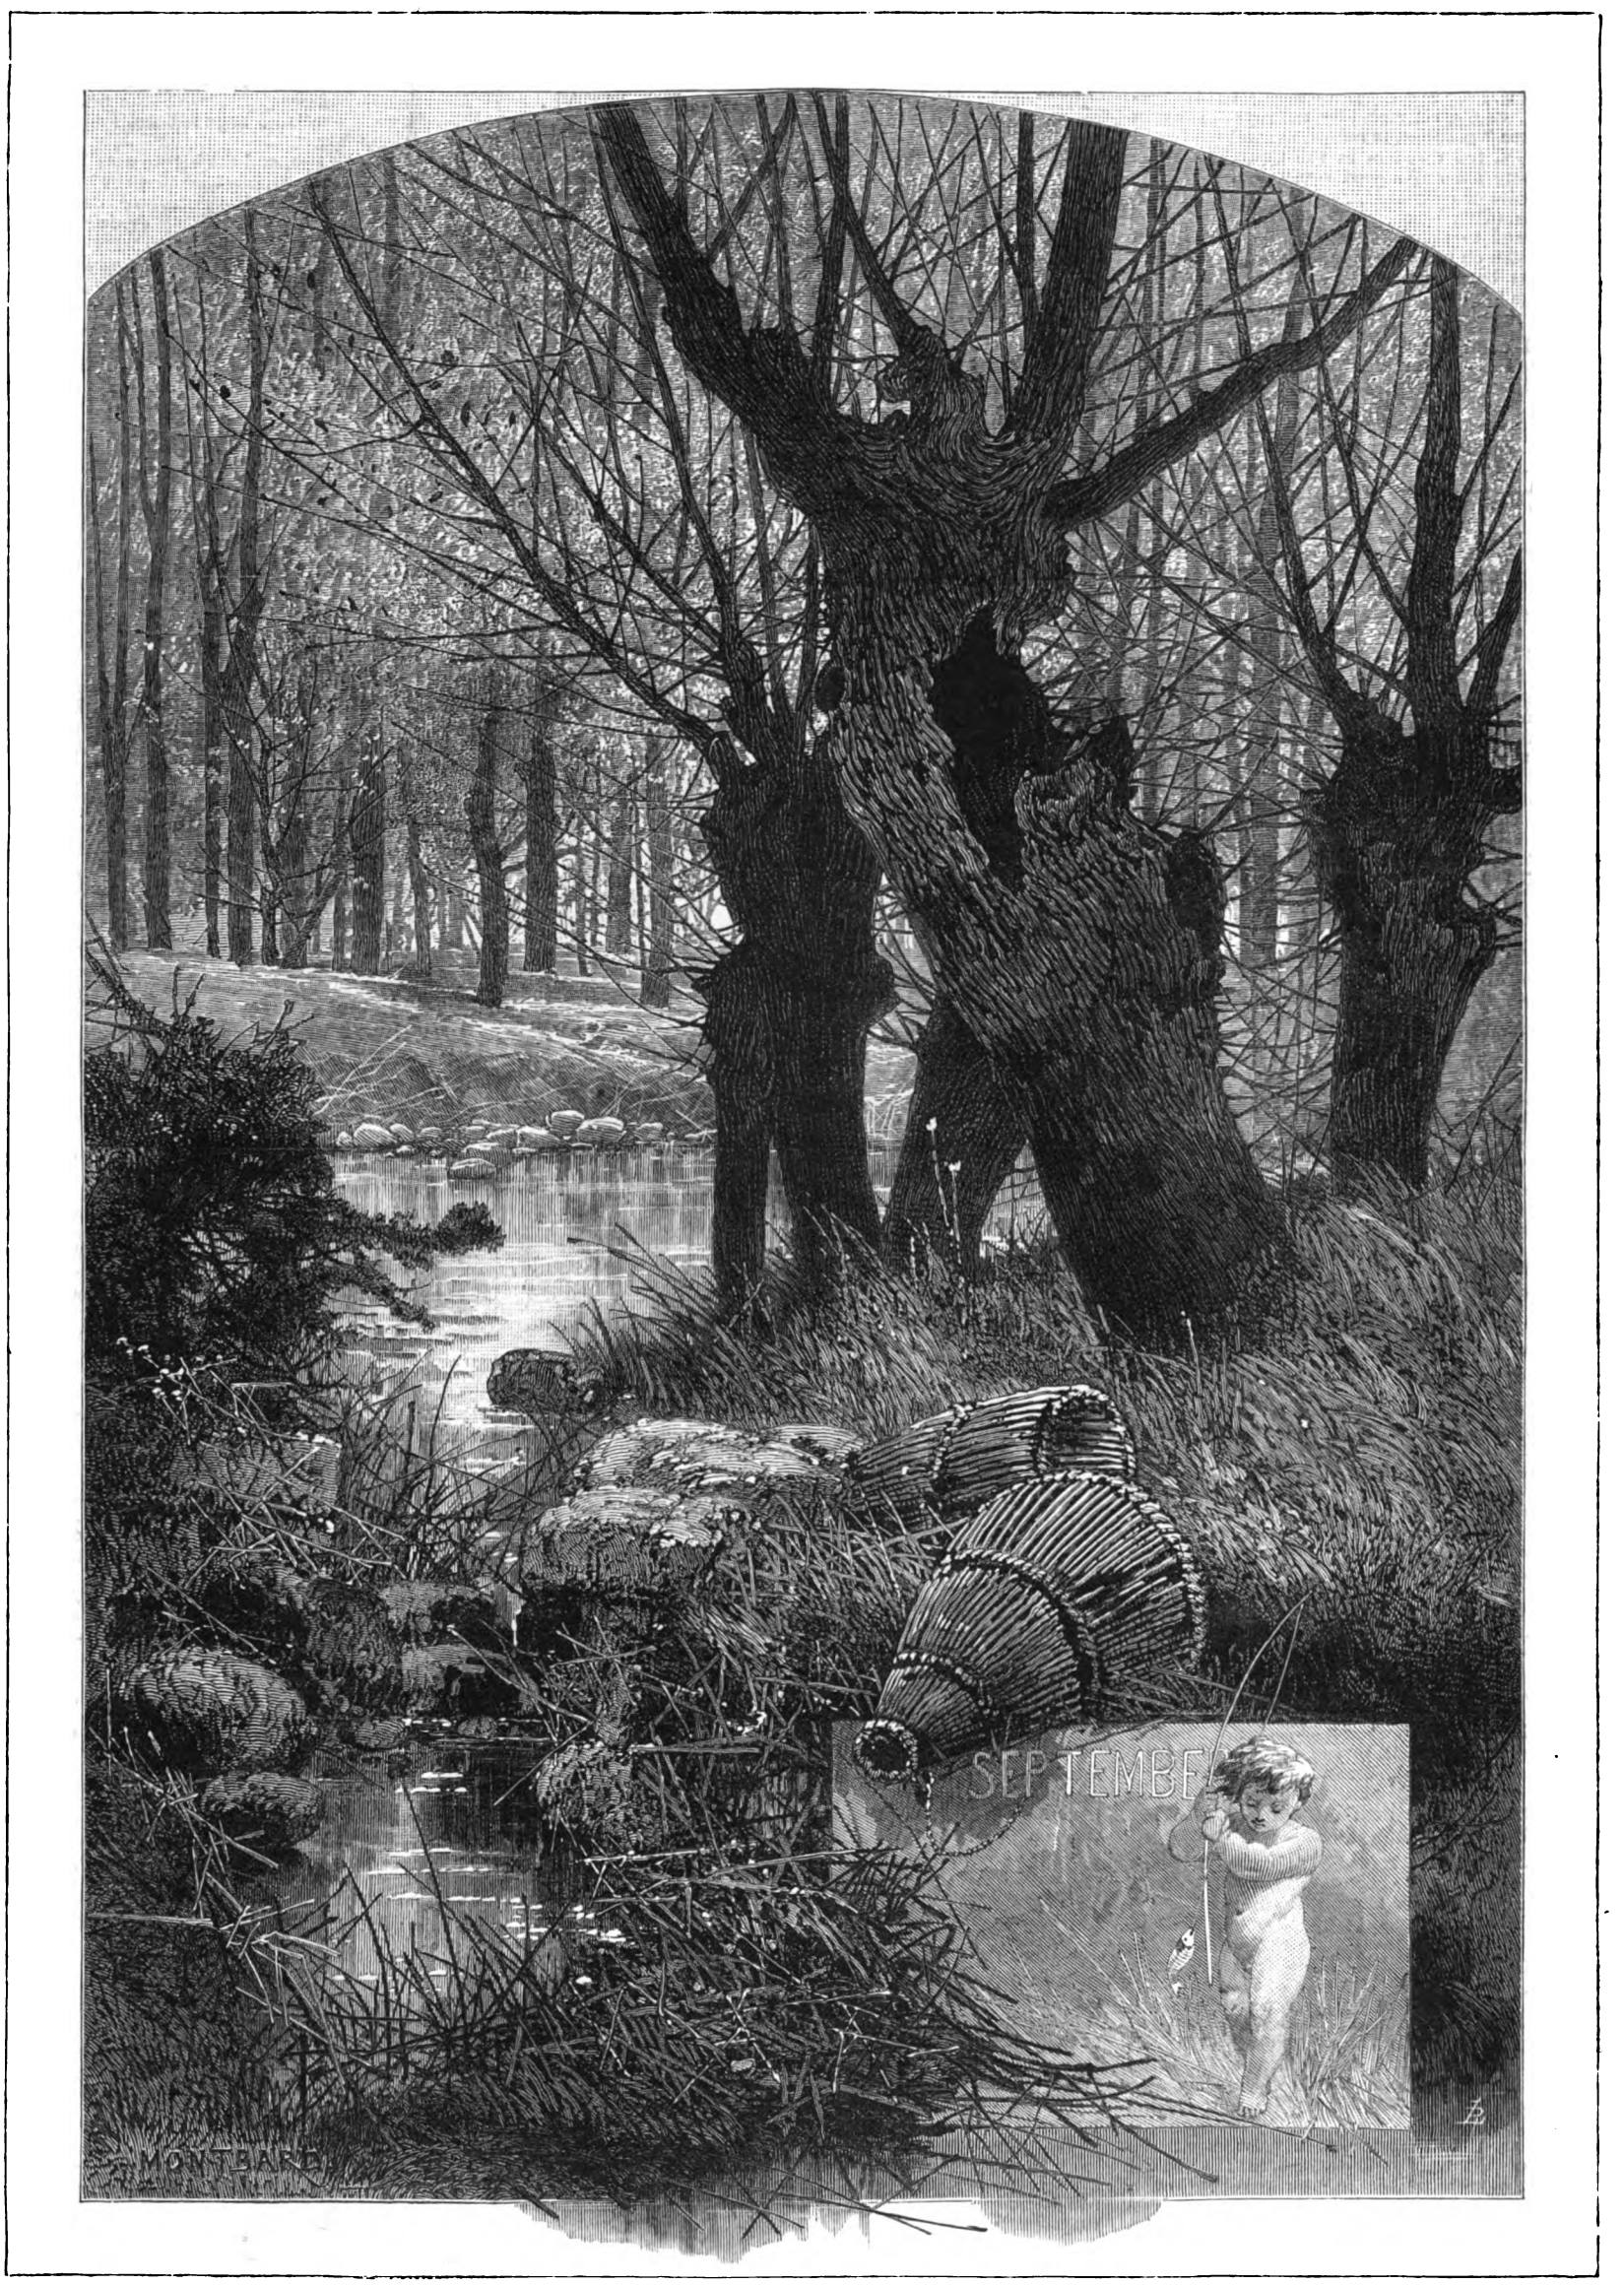
In London last week 2402 births and 1460 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 22 below, while the deaths exceeded by 10 the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 5 from smallpox, 15 from measles, 47 from scarlet fever, 10 from diphtheria, 25 from whooping-cough, 23 from different forms of fever, and 232 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 357 deaths were referred, against 392 and 395 in the two preceding weeks. These 357 deaths were 11 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. In Greater London 3017 births and 1832 deaths were registered. The mean temperature of the air was 67·3 deg., being 7·2 deg. above the average.

THE MONTHS: SEPTEMBER.

Wavering between Summer and Autumn—now radiant as in the days of hay harvest, now smiling through softer airs and serener skies—there is but one month in the year more pleasant than September, and that is leafy June. The fresh voluptuous verdure with which Nature then covers herself, and the knowledge that we have the summer all before us, invests June with an indescribable charm; but September, too, steals away our hearts in her wooing, more meekly, perhaps, but not less sweetly, for the parting glimpses she gives us of the summer are of summer in her fairest and gentlest mood, and what she shows us of autumn is so soft and lovely we are almost beguiled into forgetting the winter that lies behind her.

In woodland, copse, and thicket we note Summer's lingering footsteps; for she cannot bear that the leaves she loves so dearly should be suffered to shrivel or even change their colour, and so she loiters, turning every now and then to arrest the covetous hand of Autumn, who, however, towards the close of the month, has quite commenced her reign by tingeing the woodlands here and there with her mellow tints.

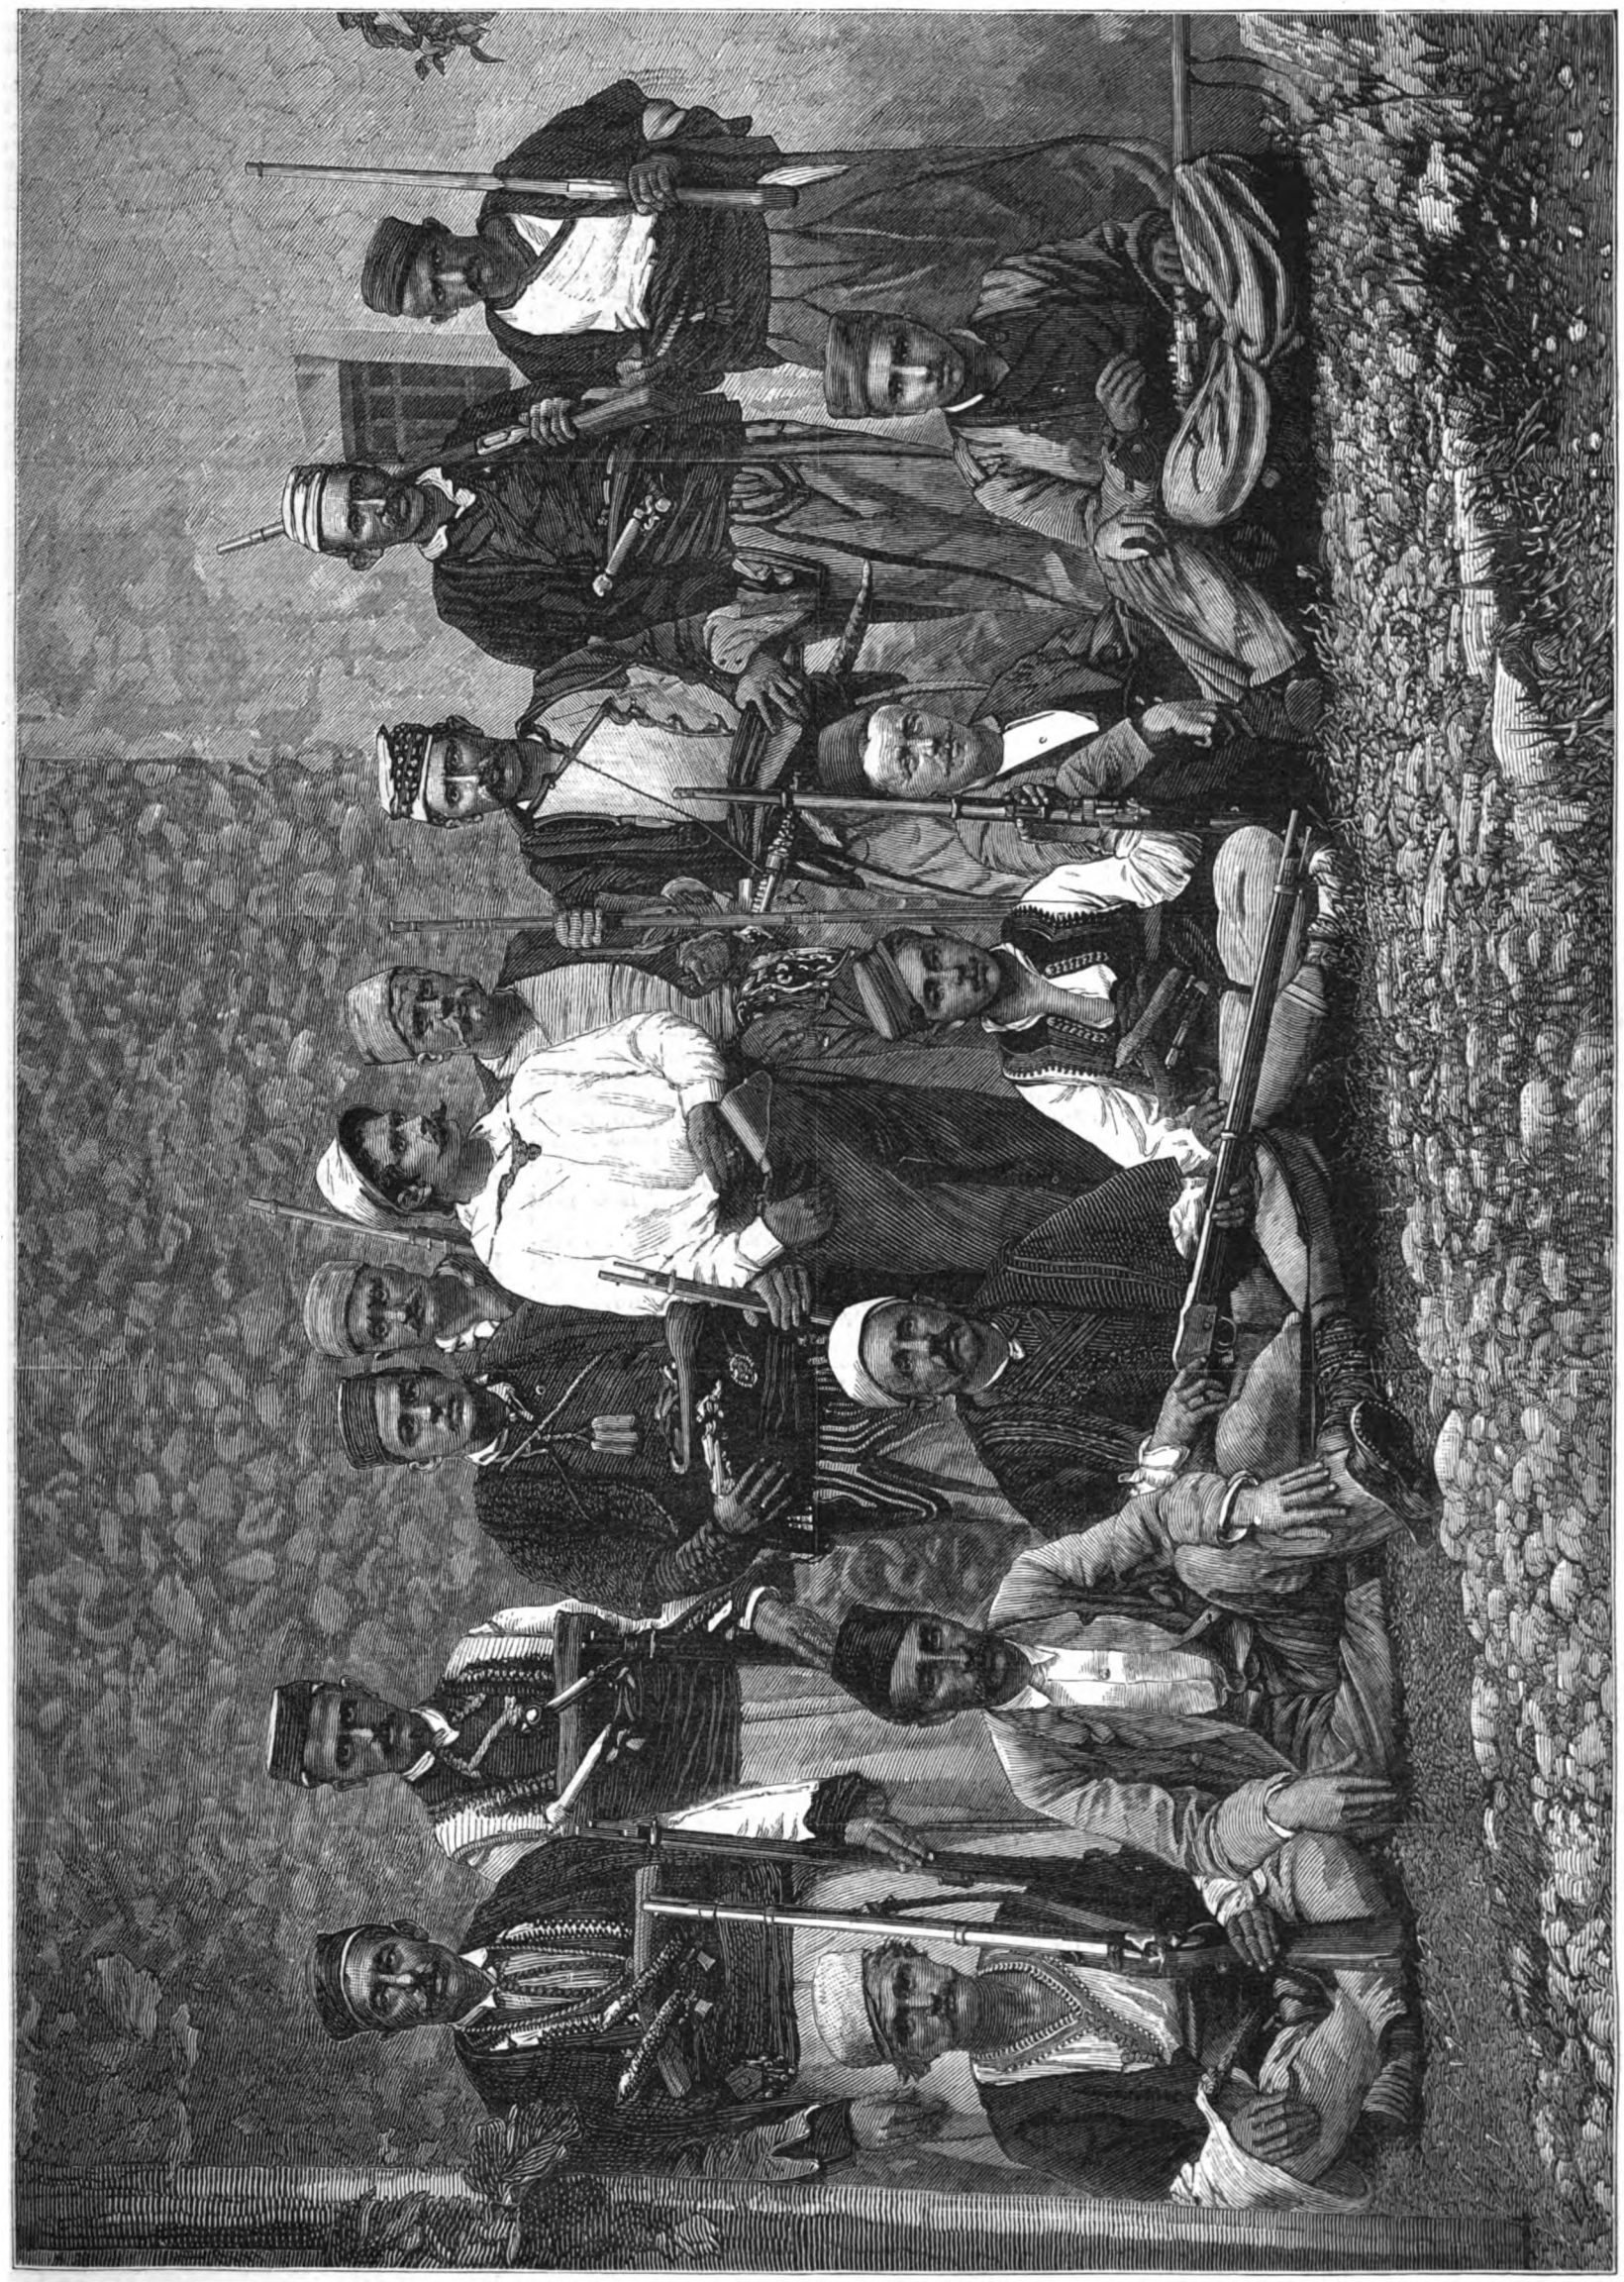
Some of the birds, whose soft little hearts perhaps are chiding them for not having honoured Summer as they should, now that the moulting season is over, again burst forth into song, and with plaintive voice beseech the loiterer still to stay. The thrush runs through his sweetest length of notes, and the blackbird whistles loud and clear, and the linnet pipes his charming little lay, and others of the feathered tribe try their seductive wiles; and lingering Summer for a moment turns with sweet sad smile to listen. But, strain their little throats as they will, they cannot quite recover the fulness of tone that made so rapturous their love-songs of the sweet spring-time; and, because they must sing their best or not at all, they soon become mute again, saving such perennial warblers as the robin and the wren. Almost as pathetic as the failure of the birds to regain the lost chords of their spring melodies is the effort made at this season of the year by the woodbine, and a few other plants, to bloom once more as in the fresh young days of spring: the woodbine's blossoms come again, but the scent, which was the great charm of its hanging festoons in June, is now infinitely fainter, so much fainter that the flowers seem suddenly to droop in despair.



At most of our watering-places there are strong indications that summer is not yet over—or rather that people will not believe it is! "Come unto these yellow sands" is a refrain still eagerly caught up by the holiday-makers, who may be seen, like swarms of bees, on every stretch of beach around our coasts where lies a town or fair-sized village: lounging most of them, some smoking, others flirting, gazing on the wild sea waves and fancying themselves born poets, reading novels more frothy than the foam on the eddying water at their feet, disporting themselves in that water in attitudes not always graceful, and otherwise indulging their periodical lapse of idleness. And yachts and pleasure steamers are plunging and rolling and scudding round our shores in shoals; and everyone forgets that the evenings and mornings will soon become decidedly chilly, and flouts the idea that we islanders commence our holidays too late.

September is a favourite month for fishing, and every shady nook on a thousand river-banks is in possession of the most patient of sportsmen: green mossy banks beneath which lusty trouts entice their pursuers into loveliest scenes of nature; or where deep, still rivers meander through interminable copses, and in whose translucent depths shimmer the silvery sides of the beautiful grayling and the voracious pike; or where rapid curling streams flow over pebbly and sandy bottoms, revealing the handsome, active little gudgeon; or where the waters are limpid and clear, and roach and dace disport themselves. It is a good month for barbel, whose haunts are in the deepest parts of rapid streams; the bold, dashing perch, who is to be found everywhere; the unsavoury chub, who loves to lie in deep quiet holes under shelving banks; and, indeed, for most of our fresh-water fish. And our engraving reminds us that eels should perhaps be included in the category, which wriggling creatures, in the Thames and most large rivers, are taken principally with night-lines and in eel-baskets, or pottles, as they are commonly called. These slippery customers, however, are no favourites with the anglers, since they have a trick of tying the line full of knots and twisting it inextricably round their bodies. But while nearly all the other river-fish may now be caught, the noblest denizen of our northern streams, the lordly salmon, is protected by law, that is, after the earlier part of the month; for during September and October, as a rule, the salmon pass up the rivers and torrents to the shallows and fords where they spawn, on their way thither leaping over every obstacle that lies in their path—springing over cataracts eight and ten feet high, and forcing their way against rapids and powerful volumes of descending water in a manner that has won the admiration and surprise of all who have witnessed their feats of power and agility—feats, by-the-way, that are performed in less imposing fashion and in less boisterous waters, by the trout.

But while river-banks and yellow sands suggest the idea that the warm weather cannot yet be over, and while the still verdant appearance of the trees, and the singing once more of the birds, whisper in our ears that the Summer is surely lingering—there are symptoms of the advent of Autumn—aye, that she is in our very midst. The corn-fields are swept and bare, ploughing has commenced, apples are ripening fast, hop-picking is in full swing, and, surest sign of all that the year is waning, the swallows are beginning to assemble for their long and perilous flight to Africa. With quivering wings and sharp twittering notes, these summer-loving birds are hovering over their various meeting-places, waiting for others to swell their ranks, skimming the air in graceful evolutions, crossing and re-crossing each other's path, without ever striking one against another; and the very young ones, their little wings weary with unwonted exertion, are persuading their parents to bear them on their stronger, well-tried pinions. Very pleasant it is to watch them, yet all too surely do they tell us, pretty things! that Autumn has really come; just as surely as the corn-fields that are now so painfully trim in their stubbly nakedness. The corn is all, or nearly all, cut and stacked; and the partridges, that erst felt so secure and safe, have fled for refuge to the nearest groves and covers; and the little bindweed, weeping, hangs its pale pinky face, for in vain it raises its tender tendrils for aught to cling to; and that other little gem of the corn-fields, the pheasant's eye (Adonis autumnalis), shrinking from the full glance of heaven, tries to hide itself in its feathery foliage, blushing the while as deeply as when Aphrodite's tears fell on the petals that herself had caused to spring from the life-blood of her wounded love.



But though some of us may gaze with sadness on the denuded corn-fields, others there are who view the stubble with very different eyes. The heart of the sportsman leaps for joy. Little he recks that the blood-stained flower of Adonis is being scorched by the sun, or that the bindweed sends forth its tendrils into unsympathising air, or that the nut-brown partridges can no longer hide themselves under shelter of the corn; nay, this is just what he has been waiting for, the revealing of their haunts.

THE COURT.

The most stirring incident of the week at Court has been the gratifying intelligence of Sir F. Roberts's brilliant victory in Afghanistan after his successful march to Candahar. Her Majesty at once telegraphed her congratulations, through the Viceroy, to Sir F. Roberts and his gallant troops.

The Queen had already conveyed her sympathy to Mrs. Brooke on the death of her husband, the late Brigadier-General Brooke, who fell in the sortie when endeavouring to carry off Captain Cruikshank, R.E., when wounded, out of action, at the recent sortie from Candahar.

The Dean of Westminster and the Rev. Dr. Donald Macleod dined with her Majesty last Saturday.

Divine service was performed at Balmoral on Sunday by Dr. Macleod, the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold attending.

Earl Spencer arrived as Minister in attendance upon her Majesty; and Mr. Charles Lennox Peel, Clerk of the Council, arrived at the castle.

A Council was held by the Queen on Monday, Prince Leopold, the Lord President, and Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. Sir Henry Ponsonby being present. By her Majesty's order Parliament was prorogued from last Tuesday to Nov. 24, and the Convocations of Canterbury and York until Nov. 25. Earl Spencer, after dining with her Majesty, left Balmoral for town with the Queen's reply to the Address of both Houses of Parliament. Her Majesty's visitors also left the castle.

The enjoyable weather of the past week has made the Queen's excursions in this picturesque neighbourhood frequent and pleasant. Princess Beatrice rides and walks daily; and Prince Leopold is out every day.

Mr. Walter D. Campbell, of Blythswood, who has been at Balmoral since Mr. Boyle left last week, has dined with her Majesty.

The Queen was much distressed by the accounts of the recent railway accidents, and her Majesty has been in frequent communication with the Government as to the means to be adopted to provide as far as possible for the safety of those who travel upon or are connected with the working of railways.

The Prince and Princess of Wales shot through the covers at Cranbury Park, near Winchester, the seat of Mr. Tankerville Chamberlayne, on Tuesday.

His Royal Highness has been compelled by his numerous engagements to abandon, with much regret, the project of visiting the Australasian Colonies on the occasion of the Melbourne Exhibition. The Prince had greatly desired to carry out this arrangement if circumstances had permitted.

Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar and Countess Dornberg have left Portsmouth for Scotland, on a visit to the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the brother of the Countess, at Gordon Castle, Fochabers, N.B.

The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia arrived at Claridge's Hotel last Saturday from St. Petersburg. On Sunday his Imperial Highness attended Divine service at the Russian Chapel in Welbeck-street; and in the afternoon the Grand Duke inspected the Zoological Gardens and afterwards dined at Richmond. His Imperial Highness dined with his Excellency Prince Lobanoff at the Russian Embassy on Monday, and lunched with him the next day. The Grand Duke has paid various private visits, and numerous visitors have called at his hotel, Mr. Gladstone's being among the names inscribed in the visitors' books.

FASHIONABLE MARRIAGES.

At All Saints' Church, Ennismore-gardens, on Tuesday, the Hon. North de Coigny Dalrymple, Scots Guards, second son of the Earl of Stair, was married to Marcia Kathleen Anne, youngest daughter of the Hon. Sir Adolphus F. O. Liddell, Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department. A detachment of non-commissioned officers and men of the 1st Battalion Scots Guards—namely, fifteen sergeants, sixteen corporals, and sixty men—lined the aisle and the pathway from the road to the church door. Mr. H. Wickham, Scots Guards, was best man, and the bridesmaids were the Ladies Mary, Anne, and Emily Dalrymple, sisters of the bridegroom, Miss Mary Liddell, sister of the bride, Miss Geraldine Liddell, Lady Linan Paulet, Lady Jane Seymour Conyngham, and Miss Wickham. The Hon. and Rev. R. Liddell, Vicar of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, and uncle of the bride, performed the ceremony, assisted by the Rev. Maynard Wodehouse Currie, Rector of Hingham, Norfolk. The bride wore a white satin dress, bodice high to the throat, trimmed with ruches and kiltings of the same, and draped with old point de gaze lace, and over a wreath of orange-flowers a tulle veil. Her jewels were a diamond pendant, the gift of the Earl of Stair; a diamond and ruby bracelet, the Countess of Stair's gift; a necklace, the present of the bridegroom; and diamond star, the Earl of Cawdor's present. The bridesmaids were dressed alike in costumes of white Sicilienne trimmed with white lace, and bonnets of deep carnation-coloured velvet. Each carried a bouquet of dark red roses, and wore a monogram brooch, set with black and white pearls, the gift of the bridegroom. On leaving the church the Hon. North Dalrymple received a telegram from the magistrates and town council of Girvan congratulating him on his marriage. The wedding party breakfasted at the Hon. Sir Adolphus Liddell's residence, Rutland-gate. At half-past one the Hon. N. and Mrs. Dalrymple started for Ditton Park, the Duke of Buccleuch's seat near Slough, for their honeymoon. The bride's travelling dress was of dark red Surat silk, and bonnet to match. The wedding presents were of great value, and included from Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein a gold locket, with coral and pearl centre, and a fan; from the tenants and feuars on the Bargany estate, and the inhabitants of Girvan and Daily, a large old silver bowl on an ebony plinth, mounted in silver, with a suitable inscription; also four silver candelabra, and a case of six silver-gilt apostle fruit spoons. Mr. Dalrymple's brother officers in the 1st Battalion Scots Guards sent a handsome clock, having on the top a mounted huntsman in silver; and the Hon. Sir Adolphus Liddell's servants' present consisted of a chased silver salver.

Lady Beatrice Pelham-Clinton and Mr. Cecil Lister-Kaye will be married at Castle Blayney, Ireland, on the 16th inst.; and the marriage of Mr. P. Egerton Warburton, M.P. for Mid-Chester, and the Hon. Antoinette Saumarez will take place at St. Peter's Church, Onslow-gardens, at the close of this month.

Mr. Cumberland, the gentleman who recently exposed the trickery of a "spiritualistic medium" in Bloomsbury, afforded considerable amusement yesterday week to a party of ladies and gentlemen invited to the Charing-Cross Hotel to witness a number of "manifestations," and learn how they were done. If one or more inflexible "spiritualists" present, being convinced against their will, were "of the same opinion still," the majority of the company were clearly much entertained by Mr. Cumberland's lucid explanations of the means by which the "medium" deludes the senses.

PARLIAMENT.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

Parliament broke up for the holidays on Tuesday, the 7th inst. The Session has been generally regarded as a vexatiously prolonged one; but, seeing that, albeit the present Parliament assembled after the General Election on April 29, the Queen's Speech was not read, and actual business was not begun until May 20, it may be argued that during the four months or so Mr. Gladstone's Ministry has had for legislation the total of important measures passed will compare favourably with the record of any six months' Session of the last Parliament.

Mr. Gladstone's reappearance in the House of Commons last Saturday, evidently completely restored to health by his voyage round the coast in the Grantully Castle, elicited a warm chorus of congratulatory cheers from both sides of the House. There was some of the freshness of a sea breeze in his clear and vigorous speech. This welcome sign of renovation was noticeable at the outset, when the Prime Minister made his guarded reply to Sir Wilfrid Lawson's question as to any contemplated "armed coercion" on the part of the Government. It was more noticeable still when (the Marquis of Hartington having satisfactorily answered Lord Randolph Churchill's ingenious indictment of the Indian Executive for the disaster which overtook General Burrows) Mr. Gladstone rose to end the debate on Eastern Affairs initiated by Mr. Cowen. The senior member for Newcastle-on-Tyne had eloquently spoken very much as any member of the Earl of Beaconsfield's Administration might have spoken on behalf of Turkey; and Sir Charles Dilke's able reply had not prevented Sir Wilfrid Lawson from entering a fresh protest against "armed coercion," nor kept Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett from airing afresh his Ottoman notions. Cheered with marked cordiality as he approached the table, Mr. Gladstone rebutted with rare vigour the attacks of Mr. Cowen and Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett, provoking the House to laughter by remarking of the latter hon. member:—

> Even the laws of geography on this occasion have not been respected by him, when he recommends us to send our fleet in two particular directions, one to the coast of Poland and the other to the borders of the Caucasus.

But was not Shakspeare a little loose in his geography? Be that as it may, Mr. Gladstone defended with gusto the action of the Government with regard to the extension of the Greek and Montenegrin frontiers; and gave the Sultan and his advisers this emphatic warning:—

> The change that has been made is this—that the Ottoman Government begins to understand that while we are bonâ fide desirous of avoiding the difficulties and complications that might arise from the breaking up of the Turkish Empire, yet the tolerable discharge of the duties of the Government towards the subjects of Turkey is no longer a secondary but is a primary object, and that unless Turkey is prepared to discharge those duties in at least a tolerable manner, of which I am sorry to say we have not as yet had sufficient evidence, the integrity and independence of the Turkish Empire must learn to shift for themselves (Loud cheers).

Answering the hon. member for Carlisle, the Prime Minister in conclusion said the Administration would be the last in the world to resort to force unless as a final resource to uphold our treaty obligations, and that every case would be considered "with a due sense of our responsibility to Parliament and the people of this country."

The legislative machine, including the cog-wheel of the Lords, worked with habitual rapidity as the end of the Session drew near. Some friction was observable when Mr. Parnell vainly proposed, on the 3rd inst., to tack on to the Appropriation Bill the second measure which the Lords had rejected—the bill for the Registration of Irish Voters. Mr. Forster was even moved to say that the House of Lords must not be surprised if the frequent repetition of such action were to lead people to consider whether some change in the constitution of that House were not necessary. Sir Stafford Northcote protested against this remark. But later on Mr. T. P. O'Connor took up the theme and moved the reduction of the vote for the Upper House by the amount of Lord Redesdale's salary. This gave Sir William Harcourt an opportunity for making a stinging attack on their Lordships' Chairman of Committees, while objecting to his financial punishment. Mr. Bright, however, suggested that Lord Beaconsfield was as great an offender as Lord Redesdale. The motion was negatived by 81 to 18 votes. And the sitting closed with an exciting episode—the suspension for disorderly behaviour of Mr. Callan, whose profuse apology was accepted the following day.

The Commons having re-amended the Employers' Liability Bill by the restoration of the clause rendering employers liable for accidents happening to their workmen when under the control of a foreman; and by extending the period for the operation of the bill to seven instead of two years; their Lordships sanctioned the measure as amended yesterday week. The Ground Game Bill was also so far changed by the Commons that the close time for hares and rabbits was abandoned, and, on the Home Secretary's motion, the right to shoot ground game was extended to one other person besides the occupier, in lieu of being restricted to the occupier or one other person. These amendments were agreed to on Saturday by the Lords. Thereafter, Earl Granville said the Bill for the Registration of Irish Voters would be reintroduced early next Session; and the noble Earl mollified Lord Redesdale with the explanation that Mr. Forster's language in reference to the House of Lords had been misconstrued, and that the Secretary for Ireland had but expressed his own individual ideas in what he had said. Their Lordships had on Monday a brief sitting to pass the Appropriation Bill.

On Tuesday last the Speaker was accompanied to the bar of the House of Lords by Mr. Gladstone, Mr. Bright, Lord Hartington, Mr. Childers, Sir Charles Dilke, and several other members. The Royal Commissioners (the Lord Chancellor, Earl Sydney, the Earl of Kenmare, the Earl of Cork, and the Earl of Kimberley) signified in the usual way her Majesty's assent to a final series of measures. Upon Lord Selborne it then devolved to read, in the Queen's "own words,"

HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

My Lords and Gentlemen,—

It is with satisfaction that I find myself at length enabled to release you from your arduous labours.

I continue to receive assurances of the most friendly character from all foreign Powers.

The failure of the Sublime Porte to execute, according to its engagement, a plan which was agreed upon in April last for the determination of the Ottoman frontier lying towards Montenegro has caused unfortunate delays in the settlement of that question, and the Treaty of Berlin has not yet taken effect in other points of importance which remained open at the commencement of the Session.

The Governments which were parties to that Treaty have communicated to the Sultan their judgment on the means of bringing to a satisfactory settlement the Greek and Montenegrin Frontier questions, on the administrative organisation of the European provinces of Turkey, and on the principal reforms required in the Asiatic provinces inhabited by Armenians.

For the attainment of the objects in view I continue to place reliance on the fact that the concert of Europe has been steadily maintained in regard to the Eastern Question, and that the Powers which signed the Treaty of Berlin are pressing upon the Sublime Porte, with all the authority which belongs to their united action, the measures which, in their belief, are best calculated to ensure tranquillity in the east.

I have not been unmindful during the few months which have elapsed since I last addressed you of the considerations which I have stated would guide my policy on the north-western frontier of my Indian Empire. Measures have already been taken for the complete military evacuation of Northern Afghanistan, and some progress has been made towards the pacification and settlement of the country.

A renewal of hostilities by the Afghans, under Ayoub Khan, has rendered necessary further military operations in Southern Afghanistan. The prompt measures taken by the Government of India for the relief of the garrison of Candahar, and the conspicuous ability and energy displayed by my officers and troops in the execution of those measures, resulting in the brilliant victory recently gained by the gallant force under the command of Sir Frederick Roberts, will, I trust, speedily bring to an honourable termination the war in that division of the country.

I regret that it has not hitherto been possible to give you such information on the general state of Indian Finance, and the recent miscarriages in presenting the accounts of military expenditure, as you would justly require before entering on a practical consideration of the subject. You may, however, rest assured that I shall redeem my pledge to supply you with this information at the earliest period in my power.

No advance has recently been made in the project of the South African Confederation, nor could advantage arise from endeavours to press it forward, except in proportion to the favourable movement of public opinion in that portion of the Empire. The general state of affairs in South Africa is, however, on the whole, satisfactory, except in Basutoland, where I trust that a moderate and conciliatory policy may allay the agitation caused by the enforcement of the Disarmament Act.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,—

I tender you my thanks for the liberal provision which you have made to meet the charges of the public service.

My Lords and Gentlemen,—

I acknowledge, with thankfulness to the Almighty, the happy continuance, during several weeks, of fine weather for securing a harvest which gives in many places a reasonable promise of abundance. I am thus enabled to anticipate both a further revival of trade and some addition to the revenue of the country for the year; and I dwell with especial pleasure upon the probable improvement in the condition of the people of Ireland, who have so seriously suffered from previous failure of the crops.

I rejoice also to observe that, notwithstanding the lateness of the period at which you began your labours, your indefatigable zeal and patience have enabled you to add to the Statute Book some valuable laws.

I refer particularly to your settlement of the long-contested questions relating to the subject of burials, to the Education Act, and the Act for the better determining the Liability of Employers; and to these I would add the Act relating to Ground Game, the repeal of the Malt Duty, the Savings Banks Act, and the Post-Office Money Orders Act, and the measures for bettering the condition of merchant seamen, and providing for the safer carriage of grain cargoes.

I trust that these measures may, under Divine providence, contribute to the welfare and prosperity of my people.

The Speaker, on his return to the Lower House, read the Queen's Speech in his turn; and, with a faint replica on his face of the bright smile with which the right hon. gentleman reassumed at the opening of the Session the ungrateful task of presiding over the deliberations of the Commons, Mr. Brand cordially shook hands with the Prime Minister and his colleagues, and the remaining members; and Parliament separated—nominally till the 24th of November next.

THE MIRIDITES OF ALBANIA.

It has been announced this week, from Constantinople, that the Porte has intimated to the foreign Ambassadors there its success in pursuading the Albanians to consent to give up the town and seaport of Dulcigno to Montenegro. The allied squadrons have assembled at Ragusa for the porposed naval demonstration to enforce this resolution of the Berlin Conference. We may soon expect news of some interest concerning the matter in question.

The Roman Catholics who inhabit Northern and, in even greater number, Central Albania, belong to the clans of Tribitshi, Hoti, Castrati, Posripa, Scialla, Skoki, Proili, Busa Huit, and to the great tribe of the Miridites, settled in the Orosh mountains, numbering in all over 150,000 souls. It will be remembered how, last year, the Porte, under Italy's auspices, proposed to Montenegro the exchange of Gussinje and Plava for other districts, chiefly populated by Albanians of the Christian variety. The tribes concerned in this proposed transaction are the Gruda, settled to the south-eastwards of Podgoritza—the Hoti, consisting of three clans or Bayraks (standards), living in the Bay of Hoti upon Lake Scutari; and the Clementi, two thirds of whom are Roman Catholics. It was obvious to anyone acquainted with the country and its people that so haughty and warlike a clan as the Hoti would not yield up any part of its territory to Montenegro, which it utterly abhors, without vehement resistance. It was no less manifest that the Hoti, Gruda, and Clementi, in such a struggle with the Montenegrins, which could not fail to be popular throughout all the tribes of Northern Albania, would not only be able to reckon upon the support of all the other Catholic clans, small and large, but upon that of the Mussulman Geghes as well. As we have seen, the matter has developed itself in strict accordance with these previsions. During last summer Prenk Bib Doda, the Miridite Prince, was observed occupying a position, side by side with the troops of the League, in the action of Albania against Montenegro. The understanding between the Albanian Mussulmans and their Roman Catholic countrymen is practically achieved, and with it a mighty step has been taken towards the establishment of an Albanian nationality.

Our Illustration, which is copied from a photograph by Alia, of Semlin, represents a few of the Miridite Chiefs and Captains, but not their Prince above-named. Colonel Nicoli Bairaktar, of Fosedi, is standing beside an Austrian visitor, Lieutenant von Zubovitz, of the Honved Cavalry, who has won a European reputation by his famous riding feat on the road from Vienna to Paris, and still better, his performance of saving 150 lives in the inundation of the Danube at Szegedin. He is here shown dressed simply in shirt and trousers of European fashion, having thrown off his coat on account of the heat; while the other persons are in their national military costume. Their names are Mustafa Ajasi, Plak or Chief of Luria, Per Deda, of Spacs, Capitan Marcodnzzi, Marco Dieta, Plak of Little Ochrida, Marco Topali and Pieter Djozzi, Plaks of Orosh, Colonel Prenga and Djok Prenga, the Stra-plaks of Orosh, Capitan Ded Tuzzi, Marco Noz, Plak of Spacs, and the Secretaries, Lorenzo Parococchi and Sterr. It would seem likely that some of these people are of Italian descent; but the Mustafa, who is the man standing at the left hand side in our engraving, should be a converted Mussulman. They are quite equal to the Mohammedans of Albania in spirit and prowess, as well as in capacity for managing their own affairs.

TERRIBLE COLLIERY DISASTER.

Early on Wednesday morning a terrible colliery explosion occurred at the Seaham Pit, near Sunderland. More than 200 men were down in the pit at the time. Every effort was at once made to reach the imprisoned men. The Central News correspondent telegraphs:—"The Seaham Colliery, at which the explosion occurred, belongs to Lord Londonderry, who is now staying at Seaham. According to one of the officials at the pit's mouth, 182 men and boys descended the pit last night, and the gravest anxiety is felt on account of 165 who have not yet been reached. The explosion originated in No. 2 pit, and from thence travelled to No. 3 and No. 1 pits, blocking up all three shafts. An exploring party descended the pit and found that 17 men were safe; but it was found impossible to get to the other men in the pit. Mr. Bell, the Mines Inspector, was speedily on the spot and in conference with the mining authorities."

A later telegram states:—"Every attempt is being made to get the shafts into working order and to penetrate into the pits. The gravest apprehensions, however, are entertained as to the ultimate success of these relief operations."

The shafts are completely wrecked. Exploring parties cannot proceed far into the pit. There is no fire whatever in the pit, but a second explosion is feared.

Three men were brought up out of the main seam at a quarter to one on Wednesday afternoon. Their names are George Thompson, George Wilson, and Ralph Warlow. One of them was much exhausted. Thompson says they heard the explosion at 2.20. There were nineteen men in that seam. After the explosion they made their way with difficulty to the shaft.

Consent was given at a meeting of the City Commission of Sewers on Tuesday to the erection at the Royal Exchange of a bronze statue of the late Sir Rowland Hill. A communication had been received from the Lord Mayor, as chairman of the Rowland Hill Memorial Committee, asking the sanction of the commission to the proposed erection. The statue is to be placed in the open space at the south-east corner of the Royal Exchange, facing Cornhill.

AGRICULTURE.

The show of the Royal Manchester, Liverpool, and North Lancashire Agricultural Society, which was opened on Thursday, the 2nd inst., at Crewe, was a great success, regarded from every point of view. The total amount given in prizes this year was £2200, about £1000 less than was offered at Manchester last year, but the same as was given the year before at Lancaster. The entries were not quite so numerous as were those of last year, this being discernible chiefly in machinery, slightly in stock, and also in dogs; but in the cheese classes the competition was very keen, as Crewe is in the heart of a great cheese-producing county. The prize for four Cheshire cheeses above 60 lb. in weight was taken by Mr. Jabez Hart, of Bickley, who also won the first prize for four cheeses above 40 lb. weight, made in 1879, and also took the society's gold medal for the best lot of cheese exhibited. For the first time in the history of this society, prizes were offered for essays written on the subject of the best means of making cheese. The Earl of Ellesmere won the first prize in the class for bulls above three years old with Attractive Lord, a magnificent roan and white animal; and Mr. William Handley, of Greenhead, Milnthorpe, won the first prize in the class for bulls above two years with Master Harbinger. There was a capital show of dairy cows, honours being carried off, among others, by Mr. Henry Fawcett, of Otley; Mr. T. H. Hutchinson, of Manor House, Catterick; Mr. Jonathan Peel, of Clitheroe, and Mr. Brierley, of Prestwich. The Jersey cows were greatly admired, the judges commending the entire class above three years old. In the sheep and pig classes there were some useful animals. Mr. Joseph Sedgwick, of Lambrigg Kendall, took all the honours in the classes for Leicesters, Lincolns, and Cotswolds. The Earl of Ellesmere carried all before him in the classes for pigs, taking six first prizes. Yesterday week the judging of the light and heavy horses was completed. Not much could be said for the latter. There was a good show of light horses. Mr. Webster, of Northallerton, took first prize with a black horse between seven and eight years old. If Meteor, belonging to the Stand Stud Company, Manchester, a firm which took several honours, had been a little more perfect in his hocks the awards might have been transposed. The first-prize cob, Sir Edward, is a handsome brown two-year-old. The quality of hunters up to 12st. was excellent, Mr. Watkinson's Hard Lines, the prize-winner, being a fine old-fashioned hunter of handsome colour and appearance.

A luncheon was held during Thursday afternoon in the show-yard, at which were present the president, the Hon. Wilbraham Egerton, M.P., the Earl of Ellesmere, Lord Crewe, Lord Tollemache, Baron von Schroeder, the Hon. W. F. Tollemache, M.P., Sir Phillip Egerton, M.P., the Mayors of Chester and Crewe, and a large number of agriculturists. The president, in giving "Prosperity to the Royal Manchester, Liverpool, and North Lancashire Agricultural Society," referred at some length to the agricultural depression of late years, and then, turning to the present time, said it was a period of hopeful anticipations, of which agriculturists should make the best by abandoning old and antiquated systems of agriculture for those more in accordance with the age. Referring to Messrs. Read and Pell's report on agriculture in America and Canada, he said the one thing which appeared to strike the Commission was the intense energy of American farmers, and the facility which they showed in adopting the newest inventions. These things, he said, were worthy of our admiration and imitation. He congratulated Cheshire farmers on the splendid show of cheese, and said that the future of the dairy was evidently a hopeful one for farmers.

The two days' annual exhibition of the Derbyshire Agricultural and Horticultural Society was concluded at Derby on the 2nd inst., having been a success both as regards entries of competitors and attendance of the public. Upwards of £800 was given in prizes, and among the winners were the Master of Blantyre, the Earl of Harrington, the Hon. E. K. W. Coke, and Lord Vernon. The poultry show was the largest the society has ever had, while of the hunters and two-year-old geldings, the judges, two "Royal" men, say they were the best they have ever seen at any provincial show.

In conjunction with a grand flower display, the annual show of the Warwickshire Agricultural Society took place at Leamington on Tuesday. The dinner was presided over by Lord Leigh, Lord Lieutenant of the county; and amongst those present were Lord Norton, the members for the northern division of the county, Messrs. C. N. Newdegate and Mr. Davenport Bromley, and Sir John Eardley Wilmot, Bart., and the Hon. Gilbert Leigh, the representatives of the southern division. One of the judges referred to the reluctance with which the prizes in the shorthorn classes had been awarded to the Marquis of Exeter, and expressed an opinion that his Lordship should restrict himself to the national shows, and not compete with tenant farmers. The sentiment was warmly endorsed.

Colonel Henning, C.B., presided on Tuesday afternoon in the Dorchester Townhall at the thirty-fourth annual meeting of the Weymouth and Dorchester Labouring Classes Association. There was an excellent show of garden produce in the Corn Exchange, the onions and potatoes being especially good. Colonel Henning distributed the prizes.

A committee of Kentish tenant farmers has drawn up a report to be presented to Mr. Little. The report deals with the burden of rates on the agricultural interest, the working of the Education Act, tenant-right, restrictive covenants, corn averages, the Tithe Commutation Act, and distraint for rent.

BALLOONING.

A simultaneous ascent of balloons, under the auspices of the recently-formed Balloon Society of Great Britain, took place last Saturday. According to the programme, eight balloons were to go up at five o'clock from an equal number of points within a radius of about ten miles from St. Paul's Cathedral, a medal being promised to the aeronaut who, descending in an hour and half, should have travelled the greatest distance. The weather could hardly have been more favourable for the novel experiment.

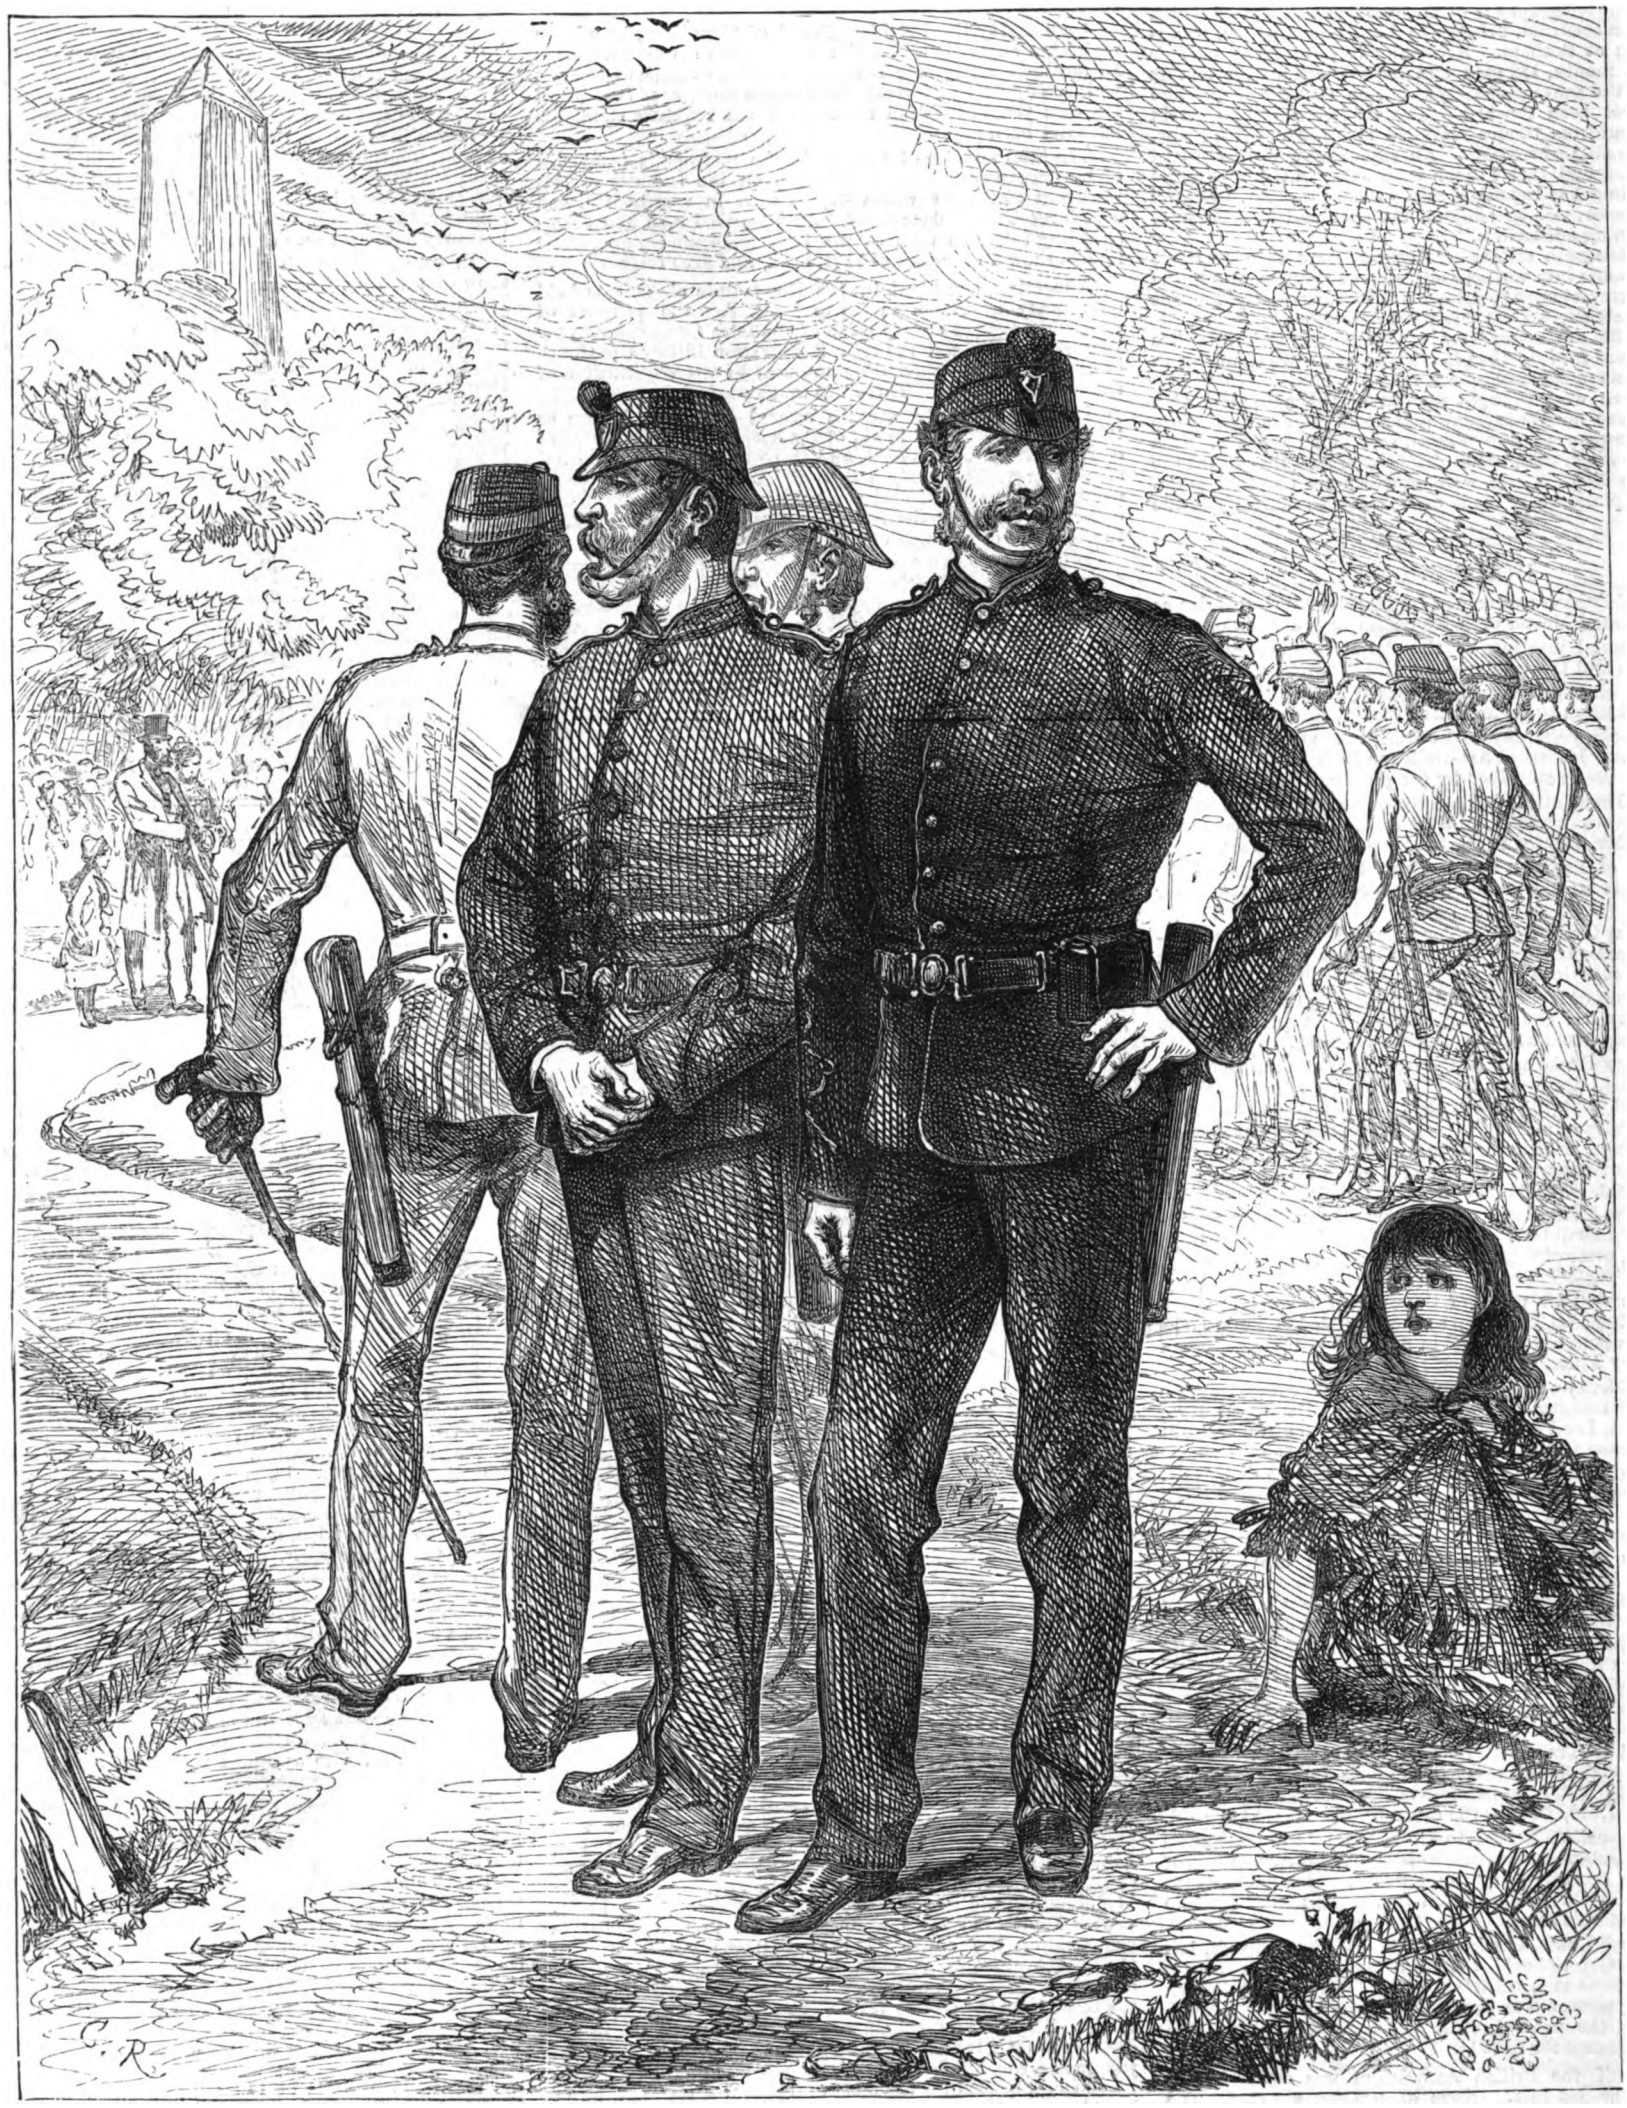
It was found impossible to carry out the original arrangements in their entirety. The War Office balloon, which was to have been sent up from Woolwich, was, unfortunately, detained at Dungeness; and, owing to failure in the gas supply, no ascent was found possible from the Welsh Harp at Hendon or from Lillie-bridge. From the remaining five stations—viz., the Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace, Clapham Rink, Epping Forest, and North Woolwich Gardens—successful ascents were made. The result, broadly stated, seems to have been that the balloons, starting from different points and attaining various altitudes, were irresistibly carried in the same north-north-easterly direction.

The first balloon to ascend was that in charge of Mr. Orton, from the Forest Hotel, Chingford. He left the earth at three minutes to five o'clock, carrying one passenger, and after a pleasant voyage reached terra-firma at Ashton, three miles from Matlock Station, on the Great Eastern Railway. The balloon was in the air one hour and twenty-five minutes, the maximum altitude attained being about 3000 ft.

Mr. Wright's Owl, which requires over 30,000 cubic feet for the purpose of inflation, went up from the Crystal Palace at a quarter past five. There were four occupants of the car, one of them being Commander Cheyne, R.N., and another an American tourist. This balloon passed over the Thames and the east end of London, and proceeded, by way of Barking, Ilford, Chipping Ongar, and Dunmow, to Little Bardfield, two miles from Halstead, Essex, where it came down. After lowering his grapnel, Mr. Wright observed that he was about to catch some telegraph-wires; and he cut away the cable without a moment's hesitation—an exhibition of courage and presence of mind which procured for himself and his passengers a severer shaking than even visitors to cloudland always expect when returning to mother earth.

Mr. Barber went up from the Alexandra Palace, and landed at Berdon, in Essex, a distance of about thirty-four miles. Mr. Bucknall Smith, who ascended with him, took observations with standard instruments. The balloon was only in the air one hour and five minutes, owing to the approach of darkness, combined with condensation of the gas and an insufficiency of ballast for much manœuvring; and the descent from an elevation of 2500 feet was accomplished in less than two minutes.

Mr. Simmons left the Clapham Rink with a balloon containing 26,000 ft. of gas, and lifting 990 lb. He had a particularly interesting trip, passing over the Thames at Westminster, where he heard Big Ben strike five, and being at a sufficiently low altitude when crossing Moorgate-street to speak to persons below. From this point he was carried by the same current, which appears to have been equally potent with his competitors, northward, along the course of the River Lea. Mr. Simmons descended at Widdington, Essex, a distance somewhat under fifty miles. He claims to have attained the maximum altitude of 14,300 ft., at which he found the temperature to be as low as 39 deg.



Mr. Jackson, a veteran, ascended, with one passenger, in a balloon of 30,000 cubic feet, from North Woolwich Gardens, at seven minutes after five, descending in safety at 6.40 p.m. at Three Chimnies Farm, Ridgwell, Halstead, Essex, a distance of more than fifty miles from the starting point, the maximum altitude attained having been 6250 ft.

The aeronauts and their passengers and the friends of both met on Sunday afternoon at the Grand Hotel, Charing-cross, to exchange congratulations and compare notes. Mr. W. H. Lefevre, president of the Balloon Society of Great Britain, occupied the chair. Votes of thanks were passed to Colonel Noble, R.A., Major Duncan, R.A., Mr. Gordon, and other gentlemen, whose co-operation had helped to secure a successful result.

At three points observations were taken by non-commissioned officers of the Royal Artillery, those recorded at Shooter's-hill being the most complete and useful.

The War Office, in consideration of the importance of ballooning in connection with military affairs, had decided to detail a company of the Royal Engineers for instruction in the art. The winter, being unfavourable to ascents, is to be devoted to experiments in the manufacture of gas.

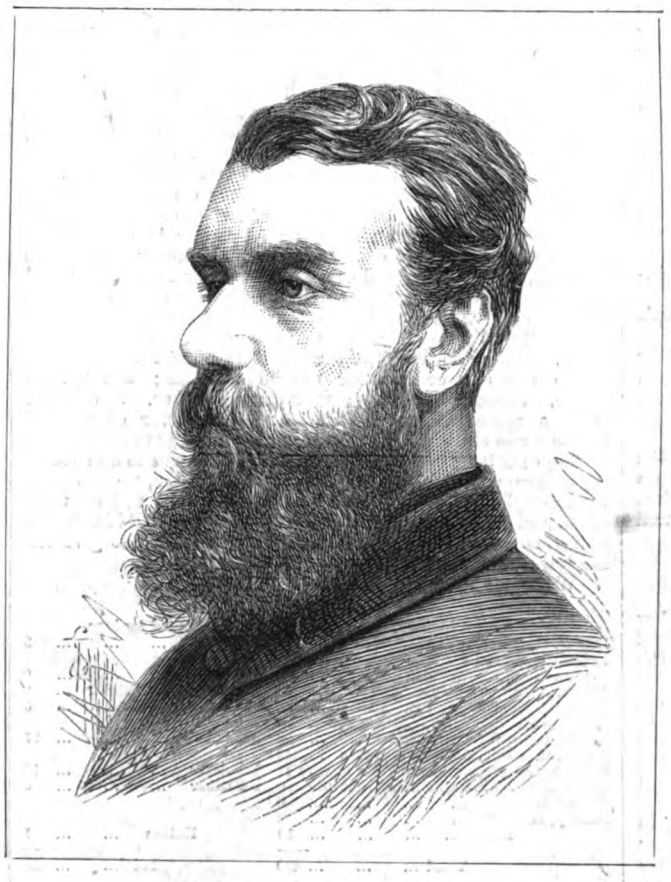
IRISH CONSTABULARY.



The Royal Irish Constabulary, established by Act of Parliament in 1814, has been, since 1846, maintained wholly at the expense of the central Government, except a moiety of the cost of additional police force applied for by the magistrates of any county or district, or stationed there by order of the Lord Lieutenant. Its ordinary strength, officers and men, somewhat exceeds 11,000, not including the Dublin metropolitan police. The vote proposed in the House of Commons on Thursday, the 26th ult., of the sum of £1,134,000 to provide for this Irish Constabulary force was resisted by some of the Home-Rule party. It was made the occasion for absurdly and offensively detaining the House all through the night and till the afternoon of the next day. But no one will deny the right of any Irish member to criticise the organisation of that force; and the objections that were taken, not for the first time, to its semi-military character might be allowed some weight in times of less danger to the public peace. It appeared, however, from the statements of the Chief Secretary for Ireland, that the constables, though trained in the use of arms and furnished with them to be used in case of need, are not accustomed to bear them in ordinary police service or to display them for the purpose of intimidation. Their usual appearance and action is that of a civil force, resembling the police of England, as is shown in our Illustration this week; they are not generally seen carrying rifles and bayonets, or swords, but with the simple truncheon familiarly known in our London streets. The few occasions that have called for their employment in more formidable guise were notoriously for the dispersion of furious party mobs, whether of Orangemen or Catholics, who were fighting against each other about some obnoxious politico-religious processions. The police, in these instances, fired charges of buck-shot, each cartridge holding thirteen shot, instead of bullets. Mr. W. E. Forster cited a return of the people killed and wounded by the police during the year. "The police had fired on four occasions—once in Galway, when no one was hurt; once in Meath, when the result was the same. These were on agrarian occasions. The two other cases were at Coal Island, in Tyrone, where two men were wounded, and at Dungannon, where one man was killed and others wounded. These were party riots in the North. There had been, he was glad to say, no life lost through agrarian rioting. As to the Lurgan case, the magistrate who gave the order to fire was a resident magistrate, who was a Roman Catholic. Thirty-four rounds were fired; nine were bullets. It appeared that the reason of there being bullets was that the buck-shot cartridges would not fit some of the rifles. The number of persons wounded was sixteen. He could not conceive any officer of the police not feeling that there should be every precaution adopted against taking life."

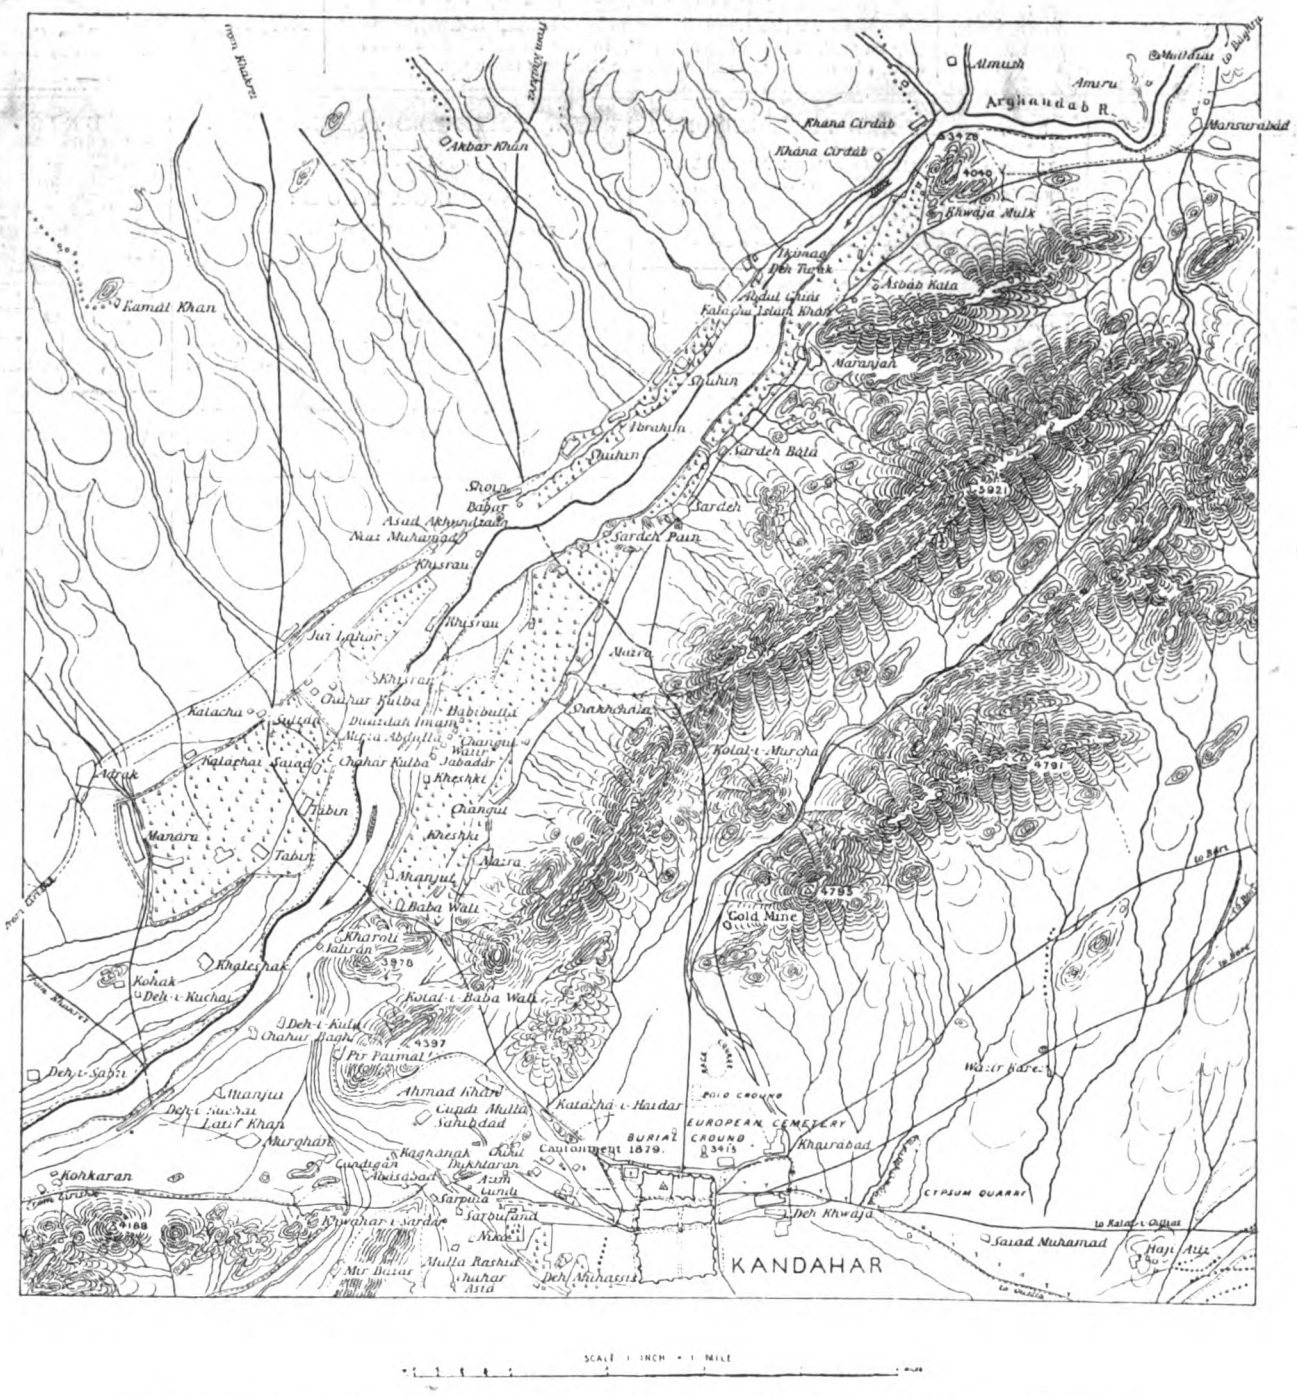
THE LATE REV. G. M. GORDON.

In noticing the late Rev. G. M. Gordon, who was killed in the recent sortie from Candahar, the Record says that he wrote several interesting missionary letters, especially two from Candahar, which appeared in that paper a few weeks ago. It adds:—"We have not heard from him since the disaster which befel the brigade of General Burrows, but his reference to the disaffection of the Wali's Candahar troops and the Ghazis, as well as to their fanatical hatred to the English, prepared us for the mutinous spirit they evinced as soon as they approached Ayoub Khan's army. The Rev. George Maxwell Gordon was the younger of the two sons of the late Captain Gordon, R.N. (some time M.P. for Dundalk), by Barbara, the sister of the late Abel Smith, of Woodhall Park, M.P. for Hertfordshire, and also of the late Hon. Mrs. Leslie Melville, mother of the bereaved Mrs. Henry Wright, of Hampstead. The occasion of his determining to offer himself to the Church Missionary Society was a visit which he made to the Holy Land, and in 1866 he became a missionary at his own charges, first as chaplain at Madras till 1871 under Bishop Gell. He then came home for a short time to recruit his health, but soon returned to the north of India, when the present Bishop French was principal of the C.M.S. School at Lahore. During the Persian famine Mr. Gordon was very energetically and usefully employed, but his head-quarters were at Pind Dadur Khan. Last year he accompanied the army in its advance towards Candahar."

The portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

THE LATE REV. G. M. GORDON, KILLED AT CANDAHAR.



THE AFGHAN WAR.

The expected battle in the neighbourhood of Candahar, with the not less certain defeat of Ayoub Khan by General Sir F. Roberts, took place on Wednesday last week, the 1st inst., and will prove, as we hope, the final conflict of our unprofitable and unjustifiable war in Afghanistan. The Afghan army led to Candahar by Ayoub Khan seems to have been composed, in fair proportion, of the native soldiery of the three provinces—namely, Cabul, Candahar, and Herat, of which the dominions of the late Ameer hitherto consisted. They had spontaneously gathered, under the command of some of their local and tribal chieftains, to rally round the standard of national independence, which was represented by those who still remained of the Barukzai family of princes, so recently deposed by British conquest. It cannot, therefore, be denied that the cause for which our enemies made a last desperate fight on Wednesday week had sufficient legitimate warrant of patriotism, and of natural equity, to forbid our now indulging any sentiment of vindictiveness against them. The Afghans are a brave, proud, and warlike nation, to whom the liberty of their country, which has never been permanently subdued by any foreign power, is as dear as that of Switzerland ever was to the peasant warriors of the Alpine Forest Cantons. They were further animated by a very excusable zeal for the Moslem religion to which they belong. It has nevertheless been their fortune to suffer complete defeat; and we only trust that this event will henceforth be overruled for the more secure and pacific settlement of affairs in all the countries bordering on our Indian Empire.

The full story of Ayoub Khan's defeat is as follows:—The army reached Robat, seventeen miles from Candahar, on the 28th ult. General Roberts, justly considering that his men required repose after their great exertions of the last twenty days, halted on the 29th. He then made Candahar by two easy marches, arriving there on the 31st ult. On the afternoon of the 31st a bold reconnaissance of the enemy's position was made by the whole of the Cavalry Brigade, accompanied by Colonel Chapman, Chief of the Staff. The fire of the enemy was drawn in all directions, and their positions accurately discovered. The Cavalry retired late in the evening, covered by the 15th Sikhs, under a heavy fire. The 3rd, or Macgregor's Brigade, held an advanced position for the night. The enemy's position was found to be as follows:—Their camp was pitched behind the screen of a high-banked ridge of hills, extending from near the Argandab in a north-easterly direction. The western extremity of this ridge is called Pir-Paimal. There are two passes through this ridge from Candahar—the Baba Wali and the Murcha. The first is easy, but it was strongly held by the enemy, with several guns on its crest. The second, which was more difficult, was on the right of the position, and was covered by several parallel canals, derived from the Argandab, which, though very dry at present, formed a most formidable obstacle. A detached hill, in the rear of the position, and separated from the outer ridge by gardens and orchards, further strengthened the enemy's flank. Nevertheless, General Roberts decided to make this his point of attack, perceiving that if once the village of Pir-Paimal, at the foot of the hill of that name, were captured, his troops would take the whole position in flank, when a determined advance must roll up the whole of Ayoub's line, and infallibly lose him his guns. Orders were accordingly given assigning this operation to Hardy, with the Cabul Brigades, while the Baba Wali and Murcha Passes should be watched and menaced by the Candahar garrison, and the guns on the Baba Wali be silenced by the heavy battery. General Gough's Cavalry was to act independently on the left, and cut off fugitives from the main attack. At nine a.m. the troops were in position, and at half-past ten a commanding village in front of the infantry had been stormed by the 92nd, the 2nd Goorkhas, and the regiments of the First Brigade, after being heavily shelled by Battery C 2 of the Royal Artillery and by the screw-gun Battery C 8 Royal Artillery. This brigade was then joined by the Second, or Baker's, Brigade, and the two advanced along the line of the canals until they were lost to sight round the shoulder of Pir-Paimal. The fighting was severe during this advance and in taking the village of Pir-Paimal, but the Third Brigade (Macgregor's) was in reserve to afford support if necessary. It was intended that the troops should halt for some time in Pir-Paimal and reconnoitre further; but the enemy showed continued confidence, and it was found advisable by Major-General Ross, who conducted the operation, to push on. The enemy resisted stoutly, and it was here that the principal loss was sustained. Two small advanced camps were then sighted and captured, together with some guns. After a brief struggle, the alarm caused by this success was communicated to Ayoub's main camp further on, and a general flight ensued. Guns were captured by our troops at each step, and thirty-two had been taken before they drew breath at the village of Mazra, far beyond the Baba Wali Pass. Here General Ross halted his brigade at one p.m., further infantry pursuit being impossible and useless. As soon as General Roberts saw how matters were proceeding, he sent for the 3rd Bombay Cavalry and the 3rd Scinde Horse from the front of the Baba Wali Pass to Mazra, and ordered them to carry on the pursuit for fifteen miles further. They met General Gough's cavalry returning, and returned with them to Candahar. The cavalry pursued the fugitives in the direction of Khakrez, and killed between 200 and 300, seventy of whom fell to the sabres of the 3rd Punjaub Cavalry in one place. They then swept round and met the Bombay Cavalry, as before mentioned. At the enemy's main camp was found the lifeless body of poor Lieutenant Maclaine. Some Native soldiers, prisoners in Ayoub's camp, reported that when the Afghans were about to fly, the guard at his tent called him out and deliberately murdered him. Remains of bread, which the poor fellow had been eating, his journal, his pipe, and other trifles were found in the tent half an later hour by Evan Smith. The First Brigade bivouacked for the night at the enemy's camp, in charge of the captured guns, among which were the two Horse Artillery guns lost at Khushk-i-Nakhud. The rest of the troops returned to Candahar by the Baba Wali Pass, arriving at six p.m. When General Roberts, at the end of the action, rode up to the different regiments to thank them for their conduct, he was loudly cheered, showing how entirely he possesses the confidence and the affection of the troops.

Colonel Brownlow's loss is deplored by the whole force, as that of one of the best and bravest soldiers who ever led a British regiment. Capt. Straton had likewise rendered great service as the head of the Signalling Department from Char-Asiab up to his death. He was shot in the leg by a Ghazi as he was riding, almost unattended, to establish a heliograph station on the Baba Wali Kotal. His death was promptly avenged by a signaller of the 72nd.

The casualties were as follow:—72nd—killed, 7; wounded, 17. 92nd—killed, 11; wounded 51. 60th Rifles—wounded, 1. Native Regiments—killed, 11; wounded, 72. The officers killed were Colonel Brownlow and Captain Frome, both of the 72nd Regiment; and Captain Straton, of the 22nd. The officers wounded were Captain Murray and Lieutenant Monro, of the 72nd; Lieutenants Menzies and Stewart, of the 92nd; Lieutenant-Colonel Battye, of the 2nd Goorkhas; and Major Slater of the 2nd Sikhs.

According to intelligence received on Tuesday from Candahar, all Ayoub Khan's guns were captured by General Roberts. The British cavalry is now at Kokoran, five miles west of the city. It is believed that Ayoub Khan has fled to Herat. The gates of Candahar have been reopened, and the inhabitants are returning. General Phayre's force, from Quetta, has been ordered to halt at a place two stages from Candahar, and part of it will at once return to Quetta. The hostile army, which lost about 1000 men, seems to be completely dispersed.

The total British loss in the battle with Ayoub Khan's forces amounts to 248 killed and wounded.

We refer to our Map of the Argandab Valley, in which the reader will find nearly every place above-mentioned—Mazra, the Baba Wali Pass (or Kotal), the Murcha (Kotal-i-Murcha), Pir-Paimal, and the road westward to Khakrez. The battle was fought within six miles north-west of Candahar.

The Illustration we gave last week of the Camp of the 25th Regiment (King's Own Borderers) at Pezwan, was from a masterly and beautiful Sketch by Lieutenant Reynell Taylor, of that regiment, who is a son of Lieutenant-General Reynell Taylor, formerly in command on the Punjaub frontier.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The race-meetings which have taken place during the last few days at Warwick, Derby, and Sandown Park have possessed few features of general interest, though one or two of the events at Derby merit a passing word. The Champion Breeders' Foal Stakes, which was run for the first time, proved a great success, the original entry of 299 supplying a field of fourteen. The penalties which had been incurred by Simnel and Wandering Nun effectually stopped their success, but both ran prominently, the former finishing a good third to Amber Witch and a filly by Galopin—Adversity, the winner coming from Kingsclere with a great reputation, in spite of having disappointed the stable at Goodwood. Fordham rode three winners in succession on that afternoon, and once more just headed Archer in the list of successful jockeys. Exactly a score ran for the Hartington Plate, in which Charibert (10 st. 7 lb.) sustained his first defeat this season, the race falling to Glen Ronald (6 st. 13 lb.), a three-year-old brother to Prince Charlie, who was ridden by Kellett. Besides having such a crushing weight on his back, Charibert was greatly interfered with at a critical point of the struggle. The sport at Sandown Park on Tuesday and Wednesday was quite up to the average, but, owing to so many people being out of town, the attendance was rather small.

There is still only a very limited market on the St. Leger, and it is rather difficult to compile a reliable list of the probable starters and jockeys on Wednesday next. However, the following may not be very wide of the mark:—Bend Or (Archer), Robert the Devil (Cannon), Abbot (Webb), Zealot (J. Osborne), Cipolata (Constable), Beauminet (Fordham), Jenny Howlet (Snowden), Novice, and Napsbury; whilst amongst the doubtful division we must place Teviotdale, Mask, Retreat, and Ulster. Reports concerning Bend Or and Robert the Devil are as favourable as they can be, and it is impossible to find anything capable of preventing them from running first and second, as they did in the Derby; whilst in spite of the fancy for Abbot, Zealot, and Cipolata, we incline to the chances of Beauminet or Novice to fill the third place.

Undoubtedly the great event of the week, in fact, we may almost say of the season, has been the cricket-match at Kennington Oval between England and Australia. The brilliant successes of the colonial team all over the country led to a very general desire that they should not return home without opposing a team really representative of England, and the most carping critic must admit that the eleven commanded by Lord Harris could scarcely have been improved upon. The only drawback to the match was the unfortunate absence of Spofforth, whose damaged hand still disables him from playing; and, as the loss of such a bowler can scarcely be over-estimated, it is not too much to say that, though England eventually won by five wickets, the honours of the match rest equally with the victors and the vanquished. Owing to the perfect state of the ground, it was essentially a batsman's game, and some splendid scoring took place. Where so many did well, it is almost invidious to single out one or two for special mention; but W. G. Grace, through all his marvellous career, has never given a more brilliant exhibition. His power of placing the ball was as wonderful as ever, and he only gave one chance through his long innings. The Australians once more showed themselves unrivalled in playing an uphill game, no less than eighty-eight runs were compiled between the fall of their ninth and tenth wicket in their second innings, and Murdoch's performance eclipsed even Grace's, as he did not give the shadow of a chance, and carried his bat out.

We append the full score:—

Upwards of 50,000 spectators entered the ground during the three days.

The close of the yacht-racing season finds the famous Vanduara at the head of the prize-winning list with fifteen prizes, valued at about £1150, to her credit. The Latona comes in a good second, with the Samœna close up.

At the Grand Northern Archery Meeting last week, the winner of the prizes for the greatest gross score amongst the ladies was Miss Legh, Cheltenham, and of that for the greatest number of golds, Mrs. Kinahan, West Kent; similar prizes for gentlemen were won by Mr. G. L. Aston, Edgbaston, and Mr. P. S. Neville, Barnsdale, respectively.

On Monday evening W. G. George, the amateur champion at one and four miles, attempted to beat the best time on record for four miles—20 min. 22 sec., made by Walter Slade in his match with J. Gibb in 1875. The attempt took place at Stamford-bridge Grounds, George being scratch in a handicap, for which there were six other starters. The crack took the lead soon after entering the last mile, and, running very strongly to the finish, beat W. Snook, eighty-five yards start, by about sixty yards, in the marvellous time of 19 min. 49¾ sec. He thus eclipsed Slade's time by no less than 32⅔ sec., and there is no doubt but that Snook did as good as 20 min. 18 sec. for the full distance. The following is a table of George's and Slade's time for each mile:—

1	4 42	4 49
2	9 48	10 4
3	14 50	15 21
4	19 49 3-5th	20 22

It is now arranged that W. Mitchell will meet J. Roberts on the 27th inst., while he is to play Cook on Oct. 4. Each match is for £200 a side, and he is to receive a start of 400 points in 2000 from each of the ex-champions. Messrs. Thurston and Co., will put up a new table at the St. James's Hall for the first contest.

"AND TEETH LIKE ROWS OF PEARLS."
THE ORIENTAL TOOTH-PASTE.
The celebrated original and only genuine Oriental Tooth-Paste is signed "JEWSBURY and BROWN, Manchester. Established 20 years." PEARLY WHITE and SOUND TEETH, a healthy action of the gums, producing that firmness and rosy brightness of colour so essential to beauty, and fragrant breath, are all insured by the use of this most perfect Dentifrice. Pots, 1s. 6d.; double, 2s. 6d. All Perfumers and Chemists.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

TOURISTS.—Their skins always suffer. Blotches, roughness, and general coarseness disfigure it. THE ALBION MILK AND SULPHUR SOAP is the whitest and purest of all soaps, and by its wonderful purifying action preserves it soft and free from complexionable blemishes. Recommended by the entire Medical Profession. A boon to sensitive skins. By all Chemists, in Tablets, 6d. and 1s. Chief Depôt, 532, Oxford-street, London.

MITCHAM LAVENDER.—PIESSE and LUBIN.

EPPS'S COCOA. GRATEFUL and COMFORTING. "By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT. Trade Mark, "Anti-Fat" (Registered), is purely vegetable, and perfectly harmless. No change of diet required. Will reduce from 2 lb. to 5 lb. a week. Acts upon the food in the stomach, preventing its conversion into fat.

ALLAN'S ANTI-FAT is endorsed by those eminent in the medical professional.
The late THOMAS FAIRBANK, M.D., of Windsor, Surgeon to Her Majesty the Queen, referring to ANTI-FAT in the "British Medical Journal" of June 7, 1879, says:—
"I gave some of this extract (Fucus Vesiculosus) to a very corpulent lady, who in three months lost three stones in weight without any change of diet. Since then I have frequently given it for reducing weight depending on the accumulation of adipose tissue, and have never found it fail."

"LOUIS"

IN ALL THE NEWEST AND MOST FASHIONABLE COLOURS.

"LOUIS." LE FOLLET says:—
"The Louis Velveteen is a very close and admirably wearing material, with a lustrous silky surface, draping richly and softly, and the brilliant blue light on the folds cannot be surpassed by the best silk velvet. For every purpose to which black velvet can be applied, we can recommend the Louis Velveteen; and a dress of this material would be a most elegant and useful addition to any lady's wardrobe, successfully representing, as it does, a silk velvet at more than four times the cost."

"LOUIS." The MORNING POST says:—
"Probably, in no city in the world is all that pertains to dress and personal adornment submitted to a keener criticism than in Paris, which has long enjoyed the reputation of being the centre of fashion. One of the most recent examples of attire of English manufacture, satisfactorily passing such an ordeal, is afforded by the favour with which the introduction of the Louis Velveteen has been received in that city. This beautiful fabric, which, in texture, appearance, and durability, bears the closest possible resemblance to the best Lyons silk velvet, has completely won the suffrages of the most severe Parisian critics, and deservedly so too."

"LOUIS." The ENGLISHWOMAN'S DOMESTIC MAGAZINE says:—
"This Velveteen costs no more than ordinary velveteen, and is worth at least double, so that purchasers should be sure that it is really the Louis Velveteen that they get. It is stamped with the words Louis Velveteen upon every yard of the fabric."

"LOUIS." The ROCK says:—
"At the present time, when there is a great demand both in England and France for velveteen, many ladies are disappointed at the wear of the velveteens they purchase, because the beautiful surface of the material disappears before the dress has been worn many times. A simple method of avoiding so unpleasant a disappointment is that of purchasing the Louis Velveteen, the back of which is clearly marked with the name."

"LOUIS." MADAME SCHILD'S JOURNAL says:—
"By far the best velveteen ever yet submitted to us, is that called the Louis Velveteen."

"LOUIS." The PICTORIAL WORLD says:—
"Now that velvet is being so largely used for the adornment of ladies' dresses, the introduction of the Louis Velveteen may be regarded as a boon to those ladies who desire to be in the fashion, but whose purses are not long enough to afford real silk velvet. Indeed, many to whom money would be no object have abandoned the use of velvet for the Louis Velveteen. In Paris, where everything appertaining to fashion has to undergo such keen criticism, this Velveteen has been very generally admired and adopted."

"LOUIS." The LONDON AND PARIS LADIES' MAGAZINE says:—
"Foremost in this class of fabrics we must place the Louis Velveteen."

"LOUIS." The QUEEN says:—
"The Louis Velveteen is capital."

"LOUIS." The BRIGHTON GAZETTE says:—
"The reason that velveteens have hitherto never become thoroughly popular has been entirely due to their readiness to turn brown and otherwise suffer after the least wear. These drawbacks are, however, now disappearing consequent upon the introduction of a fabric known as the Louis Velveteen, which is entirely free from those defects which have for many years created a prejudice against velveteens in the female mind."

"LOUIS." The SUNDAY TIMES says:—
"The suave assurances of not a few of the assistants in some of our linendrapers' emporiums are delivered with such apparent sincerity that they often experience little difficulty in ensnaring the unwary. This seems particularly to have been the case with a correspondent of the 'Courier,' who informs its readers how easily she was entrapped into purchasing a worthless material in place of the now well-known Louis Velveteen, because she was unaware that the article sought after was stamped at the back with its name."

"LOUIS." SOCIETY says:—
"The velours Anglais, so much lauded at Trouville and elsewhere, must be the Louis Velveteen, as no other make has the same variety in colours and shades of colours."

"LOUIS." LA MODE ILLUSTREE says:—
"'It may be for years and it may be for ever.' The above well-known line from a popular song may be truthfully applied in commendation of the almost interminable wear of the Louis Velveteen. Its excellent appearance, imitating so closely as it does Lyons velvet, renders the expense of using that material an unnecessary one."

"LOUIS." The FAMILY HERALD says:—
"These Velveteens dyed in this country certainly prove that it is possible, at an exceedingly small cost compared with the expensive German process, to obtain a colour and lustre equal to that of a silk velvet; and, moreover, these Velveteens neither change colour nor spot with rain."

"LOUIS." SYLVIA'S JOURNAL says:—
"The Louis Velveteen is an improvement upon ordinary Velveteen that is sure to be appreciated, not only during the coming winter, but for many seasons. The usual make of this pleasant material can very easily be distinguished from silk velvet; but the Louis Velveteens, though no more expensive, resemble the Lyons velvet very closely indeed, so short and compact is the pile and so perfect the tint of the blue black."

"LOUIS." MYRA'S JOURNAL says:—
"The advantages claimed for this Velveteen are not a few. The appearance is certainly very handsome and not easily distinguished from velvet; it is thinner and finer in texture, and, consequently less heavy than ordinary velveteen, and is said to take the needle more easily than any other make."

"LOUIS." The WHITEHALL REVIEW says:—
"Of all materials at present in vogue in Paris, I recommend the Louis Velveteen, which I am told is also procurable in England. This material is alike serviceable and elegant, and its texture and surface are beyond all praise. It has already usurped the position hitherto occupied, without challenge, by velvet."

"LOUIS."

LADIES ARE RESPECTFULLY INFORMED THAT ON, AND AFTER THIS DATE ALL LOUIS VELVETEEN, BOTH BLACK AND THE NEW AUTUMN AND WINTER COLOURS, HAVE STAMPED ON THE BACK PLAIN INSTRUCTIONS FOR REMOVING ALL CREASES, FOLDING MARKS, &c., MADE IN CONVEYANCE BY RAIL, POST, OR OTHER CAUSES.

DR. DE JONGH'S
KNIGHT OF THE LEGION OF HONOUR)
LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.

THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS. THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL which produces the full curative effects
CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL, Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE, Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S., Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

No. XI.—THE NEWSPAPER EDITOR.

The transformation of the London Mercury from a threepenny into a penny organ was at once a big speculation and a great event. The prophets whom the proprietors consulted predicted that the venture would fail; they said that England had enough of cheap newspapers, and that the subscribers to the threepenny journal—a faithful, square-toed phalanx—would be shocked at getting their newspaper for eight farthings cheaper than they had purchased it before. Nevertheless the proprietors persevered, and spent about £30,000 in advertising, purchase of new type, steam-presses, and so forth. One morning the Mercury appeared improved, enlarged, more readable in every way, at the cost of 1d., and it became at once a thorough success.

The old editor, Mr. Baulker, was distressed at this unexpected stroke of fortune, for he had been among those who foretold failure. A heavy, shambling sort of person, full of wise saws and petty prudence, he was one of those men frequently met with who, while advocating progress heartily and, indeed, recklessly in matters that do not concern themselves, dare not risk a sixpence when it may entail a loss to their own purses. He was faithful to his employers and strictly upright in all that concerned the management of his paper. He would not have bartered his conscience for millions, had anyone been tempted to offer him such a price for so colourless a piece of merchandise. He thought the Mercury at threepence the glory of British merchandise; and certainly he had contributed to give it a high character for truth by inserting nothing in it which was new, and a reputation for impartiality by keeping out of it all that was likely to offend anybody. So this man was like one who drives a steady-going one-horse gig, and who is suddenly invited to climb on to the box of a flashing new drag, drawn by four mettlesome thoroughbreds. His salary was almost doubled when he ascended to his new seat, but he could not accustom himself to the change. He knew not how to hold his reins, and he could not understand what was the use of the long leashed whip at his side. As soon as his team had started with him he felt inclined to cry "Stop!" and would have put on the break there and then if the owners of the coach had allowed him to do so.

Poor old soul, he had never imagined what a popular newspaper was! He was expected to insert telegrams as they came piping hot from the wires, without waiting to deliberate whether there was any truth in them; he was required to have new theatrical pieces reported on the morning after their performance; and if an interesting trial took place he was told that he must devote six columns to it, even though he must thereby elbow out those magnificent letters from his pet correspondent at Leipsic, who used to give him such interesting and long-winded statistics on the evolution of Rationalism from scientific data in Germany. After driving the new Mercury for six weeks, Mr. Baulker felt that he had undertaken more than he could perform, and he wistfully appealed to his employers to relieve him of his duties, remarking, at the same time, that he was a married man with a family. The proprietors thereupon set some Parliamentary influence at work, and obtained for the good old man a comfortable Government sinecure; after which they cast their eyes about them to find a younger, spryer, and experter coachman.

There was at that time in the office of the Mercury a young fellow of thirty, with a shock head of hair and a pair of eyes that looked you straight in the face like those of an inquisitor. Brimmer was this gentleman's name, and he had begun life as a compositor, rising thence to the post of proof-corrector, and becoming afterwards sub-editor to the Mercury. He had enjoyed little education as a boy, but he had taught himself by perusing the manuscripts that passed through his hands; and in his few leisure hours by day he diligently studied the newspaper that he had helped to put in type over-night. A man picks up a good deal of desultory instruction in this way; and when he makes use of it, as Mr. Brimmer did, to grasp the fact that this world of ours is for ever spinning round and requires change, he may come to great destinies. Now, at the moment when Mr. Baulker vacated the editorial chair in the Mercury office, the proprietors of the paper were inclined to quarrel as to who should succeed him. One wanted to appoint a professor, a second a sportsman, a third a Baptist deacon; so, as the strife waxed hot between them, one of the disputants put in a plea for compromise, and mentioned the name of Mr. Brimmer: "He's a sharp young fellow," said he, "and has not enough opinions of his own to jostle any of ours."

All unsuspicious of the honour that was awaiting him, Mr. Brimmer was at that minute seated in a frowsy room, littered with torn paper, and was sorting telegrams for the printer. A messenger summoned him, and he entered the presence of the proprietors, not guessing what was wanted of him, but bearing himself with a certain natural dignity of demeanour which came from the confidence he entertained in his own talents. He was seedily dressed, and had a complexion sallowed from overwork; in one of his hands he held a bundle of telegrams, in the other a pair of scissors, and there was a red pencil behind his ear.

Without much parley the proprietors made their offer to him—the editorship of the Mercury, with £2000 a year; and the thing that surprised them most was to see how coolly the young man greeted their rich proposal. He did not redden or stammer; he simply replied that he should be happy to do his best; and, after a few civil words of thanks, begged their leave to withdraw for the present, as this was the time when work pressed most heavily on his hands. But who can tell what sensations thrilled in the clever young man's breast as he descended the rickety wooden stairs of the office and reflected that without any scheming or favour, but by sheer dint of hard work and punctuality in his engagements, he had won his way to the front rank in his profession? When he reached the unclean den in which he used to ply his labours, he sank into his cane chair near the table and put his hands before his eyes for a moment as if to dream. But this fit of emotion only lasted an instant, and then he went to work again, for the presses below were getting up steam, and the voices of the "devils" were heard crying for more "copy." Mr. Brimmer soon made of the Mercury the most remarkable newspaper in England.

It was beautiful to see how quickly he understood his business—how deftly he gathered up the reins at which Mr. Baulker had fumbled, and how briskly he set this fresh coach tooling along the road to catch up the others that had a start of him. It was no longer a slow coach now! The others in front had to accelerate their pace that it might not overtake them; and they failed, for within less than a year—which is but as five minutes in time-races of newspapers—it was abreast of the foremost of them; and, to keep up our metaphor, it added to the number of its passengers at every stage. In other words, the Mercury, if it did not attain to what one of its rivals boasted as "the largest circulation in the world," had such a circulation and such a mass of advertisements as soon converted its proprietors into millionaires.

What was Mr. Brimmer's secret for thus winning success? One might define it in many ways, but this formula would always have to be reduced to one word. A Frenchman said that three ingredients were required to make a salad—oil, vinegar, and talent in the mixing; so one may say that Mr. Brimmer's recipe for making a first-class newspaper was simply "intelligence."

But, of course, intelligence required money to back it; and, luckily, the proprietors of the Mercury were not chary of their pounds, knowing well that the lively Mr. Brimmer would not hide them in a napkin. His maxim was to get everything of the best, and to pay for it the proper price. He disbursed in telegrams such sums as would have given Mr. Baulker a fit of indigestion. Did a war break out, he dispatched two, four, six correspondents, if need were, to the scene of action, and instructed them to send home telegraphic letters three columns long and full of facts. For comments he did not care: "Give me news," he used to say, "and we at home will furnish opinions about them." By "we" he meant his editorial staff of leader-writers, whom he used to pay at the rate of a guinea per column more than any other penny journal.

This leader-writing department of the Mercury was as well managed as the other. No man was admitted into it on a permanent engagement; but writers having mastery of special subjects were at all times invited to join its ranks temporarily, until they had written all they had to say. As to Parliamentary and law reporters, Mr. Brimmer's mandates to them were invariably issued in the words, "Don't be dull," and, indeed, the Mercury was not a dull paper. Even when discoursing on politics it was apt to throw new lights startlingly crude on old subjects.

Naturally, it was a keenly partisan journal. Mr. Brimmer himself was too shrewd a man to believe that there are deep differences of opinion between the rulers of this earth; but he recognised the forces of party animus, and of that deadly antipathy which a statesman who sports "blue" may inspire in the bosoms of politicians who "wear" red. "Men, not measures," is the real cry of every electorate in no matter what country, and so Mr. Brimmer had his men, and in particular his great man to whom he did homage—with his tongue in his cheek, as it were, but loyally for all that. The readers of the Mercury were made to read day after day glowing panegyrics on the virtues, genius, and disinterested patriotism of the statesman who led the party to which Mr. Brimmer affected to belong; and that statesman took these laudations so much au sérieux that in the effusion of his gratitude he offered to make the editor a knight. The proposal was formulated one evening at an official party, and it almost took Mr. Brimmer's breath away. For the first time in his life, he was almost losing his temper, for he really considered it a degradation to be offered a reward for having rendered what he considered to be independent party service. However, he controlled himself enough to return a witty answer:—"I have never worn a helmet Mr. ——, and think my silk hat more comfortable. When I discard it I shall take to a wideawake."

And he laughed, looking the Premier straight in the eyes as he spoke, as his usual manner was. The great man stammered an apology.

Mr. Brimmer is no courtier of society. He has never attended a levée, nor accepted an invitation to go and shoot for a fortnight over the estate of a nobleman. He cannot shoot, nor hunt, nor dance. When he wants a holiday he runs over to Paris for a couple of weeks, or takes a month's touring in Switzerland. But he will not do this often, for he cannot tear himself away from his newspaper without being seized with fidgets lest everything in the office should go wrong. One year, when his doctor had prescribed a little rest as a necessity, Mr. Brimmer was induced before going abroad to confide the editorial reins to a sort of friend of his, who was conductor of a weekly society journal, and who, moreover, contributed leaders occasionally to the Mercury. This gentleman, named Jowler, was so prudent a writer that Mr. Brimmer thought he would make a good editor; but, alas! scarcely had he got possession of the Mercury than he yielded to the temptation of editing that journal after views of his own instead of following out the instructions which Brimmer had left with him. The old stock paragraphs found their way into the paper; a correspondence on female rights invaded the columns of the second page; and a political question of importance having been suddenly started Mr. Jowler declared that his party—i.e., the Mercury's party—was divided on the subject, and, lo! there was a rumour at the clubs that the Mercury was going to trim! Mr. Brimmer hurried back at express speed from Geneva, and was dismayed at the confusion which had got into the office during his absence. Two out of the three proprietors were actually taking Mr. Jowler's side in his onslaught upon the party leader, and Mr. Brimmer had to exercise, not only great tact, but something more than common firmness, before he could get all things under his own control again. It took the Mercury a full year to recover the prestige and the character for loyal partisanship which it had lost during Mr. Jowler's brief administration, and Mr. Brimmer was heard to record a vow that he would never again surrender his editorship for more than a week at a time.

Another great mishap once befell this model editor. It was when his colleague, the City Editor, so called, who presided over the money article department was exposed for venality. He had been selling himself to joint-stock company promoters and to issuers of foreign loans bearing ten per cent interest. The outcry was great all over England, and the public who did not understand the difference between an Editor and a City Editor laid the blame of the whole shocking affair on the Mercury in the concrete. But Mr. Brimmer resolved that no such disgrace should occur again to the journal which he led; and he prevailed upon his employers to let him take the City department under his own hand for the future. The better to conduct it, he set himself to study finance; and the newly appointed City sub-editor had soon to reckon with the most vigilant censor, who would let not a line pass that bore the faintest resemblance to a puff. City men sneered at so much puritanism; but honest men thought well of a journal whose praises might be got from favour, perhaps, but not for money.

Thus Mr. Brimmer continues to flourish and work, and he will probably die in harness. Every night, from eleven to the time when the first copies of the Mercury are dispatched by the country mails, the editor may be seen at his office superintending the general work. He goes to bed at six on every day of the week except on Saturday, when he treats himself to the luxury of a country outing of twenty-four hours' length, and goes to bed at nine. Mr. Brimmer drinks no wine, does not smoke, seems to have no passions, vices, or weaknesses. He is all absorbed in his paper, and has gradually become a sort of intelligent machine for working it on the safest plans. Doctors, however, say that Mr. Brimmer "overdoes his work," and that he will some day repent it, to which the editor drily answers "that if he had no work he would pine away and die." "My diet, Sir, is newspapers," he said once to an astonished leech who had been bothering him. "I eat paper plain for breakfast, and paper buttered with ink for tea. When I want to soothe my nerves I chew the stump of my red pencil."

THE ELEMENTARY EDUCATION ACT.

A circular has been issued by the Education Department to the various local authorities respecting the new Elementary Education Act, 1880. The special object of the circular is to draw attention to sections 1 to 4. "The object of this Act," it is stated, "is to make by-laws universal, and it provides that unless before Dec. 31 next by-laws have been made for any school district by the local authority thereof, it shall then devolve upon this department to perform the duty thus left unfulfilled. Hitherto by-laws could not be made for a parish, except on the requisition of the ratepayers calling on the School Attendance Committee of the Union to pass by-laws; such requisition is no longer necessary. Henceforth the School Attendance Committee may make by-laws for all the parishes under their jurisdiction; and if it is thought expedient to adopt for several parishes in the Union the same distance in by-law 2 and the same standards for exemption in by-law 5, one form will suffice for all these parishes. The proceedings for making by-laws will in all respects (except as to the necessity of a requisition) continue to be the same as they were before the passing of the Act. Particular attention is directed to section 4, pursuant to which a child, before being legally employed, must reach (or pass in all three subjects of) the standard for partial or total exemption fixed by the by-laws; and if a child is employed who has not reached one of the prescribed standards the employer will be liable to a penalty. The proviso at the end of section 2 will meet the case of children legally employed in districts in which by-laws were not in force at the date of the passing of the Act; while the proviso at the end of section 4 allows employers to continue to employ children who at the same date were attending school in accordance with the provisions of the Factory and Workshops Act, 1878."

The supply of live stock and fresh meat from the United States and Canada, landed at Liverpool last week, showed a decrease when compared with the previous week, the totals being as follows:—1120 cattle, 2417 sheep, 2873 quarters of beef, 155 carcasses of mutton, and 103 dead pigs.

Lord Hartington received yesterday week a deputation from the Patriotic Association, who urged that the city of Candahar and district should be permanently annexed to India. His Lordship, in reply, observed that the views of the Ministry with reference to Afghanistan differed from those of the late Government; but, while refusing to enter into matters of controversy, the Indian Secretary admitted that there were strategic reasons for holding Candahar, while the difficulties of holding it were not so great as they would be with respect to other parts of Afghanistan. But he was not clear that we had any right to annex Candahar, and he was not aware that the people would submit to our rule. It would, moreover, be a very costly step, and would require large garrisons in the city and on the line of communication, which would be more usefully employed in protecting India. The whole subject was not yet absolutely concluded, however, and his Lordship promised that the memorial presented by the deputation should receive the attention of the Government.

Tuesday's Gazette contained a notice of the prorogation of the Convocations of Canterbury and York till Nov. 25.

The Chapel Royal, Whitehall, will be closed during the remainder of the month for cleansing.

The Church of St. Giles, Cripplegate, was on Sunday reopened, after being thoroughly restored and improved.

The Archbishop of York is leaving England for a few days. Matters of urgent business can be referred to the Archdeacons.

The Bishop of London has left town for the Continent for a few weeks. He requests that all letters on business may be sent to his secretary, Mr. J. B. Lee, 2, Broad Sanctuary, Westminster.

The Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Rosenthall, on the anniversary of their twenty-fifth wedding-day, Aug. 28, have been presented with a massive silver tea and coffee service by the members of St. Saviour's Church, Forest-hill.

On the 2nd inst. the ancient parish church of St. Andrew's, Cherry Hinton, Cambridge, was reopened by the Bishop of Ely, after a careful and conservative restoration conducted by Mr. Gilbert Scott, costing upwards of £4000.

The Bishop of St. David's has left for the Continent, and does not return until immediately before his Visitation, commencing Oct. 13. The clergy of the diocese are requested to write to their respective Archdeacons (or, on formal business, to the Bishop's secretary) concerning any urgent matters which may arise during his absence.

Services of commemoration and thanksgiving were held in the new parish church of St. Peter and St. Paul, Upton-on-Severn, on the 3rd inst., the anniversary of the day of consecration. The cost of the church, which was very nearly £13,000, has been defrayed within the twelvemonth. Notwithstanding strenuous efforts extending over five years, this result could not have been attained but for the large-hearted aid of Mr. Martin, of Ham Court, and members of his family, the total subscriptions and gifts from whom have amounted to £6100.

The Bishop of Liverpool on Tuesday held his first confirmation service at the Pro-Cathedral, Church-street, when a number of boys from the training-ship Indefatigable were confirmed. The Bishop was entertained in the evening at a banquet given in the Townhall, St. Helens, by a number of the leading clergy and laity of the town. The Bishop, in replying to the toast of his health, exhorted the clergy and laity of his diocese to be earnest in the propagation of evangelical principles, but, at the same time, tolerant of the views of those who preferred another form of faith.

A painted window (from the studio of Mr. W. G. Taylor, of Berners-street), in memory of an attached servant, has been given by the Earl of Harewood to the parish church of Harewood, near Leeds, the subject, "The Presentation in the Temple," being carried out with great richness of detail.—A stained-glass window (by Messrs. Heaton, Butler, and Bayne) from the text, "And Jesus called a little child unto Him," has been placed in the village church of Kingsley, Cheshire. It is the gift of Mr. Henry Thompson, jun., of Liverpool, in memory of his deceased children.

The Archbishop of Canterbury resumed his third visitation of the clergy and laity of the diocese of Canterbury yesterday week, when he addressed the clergy of the deaneries of North and South Malling and Shoreham, at the Church of St. Peter and St. Paul, Tonbridge. His Grace observed that he had no doubt that the aspect of Christian society was somewhat troubled. It would be sad if, through our weakness, we should give to those who were banded together to resist or ignore Christianity any encouragement for the advancing foe by being occupied with frivolous disputes amongst ourselves. He pointed out the evils of superstition and infidelity, and especially referred to agnoticism, materialism, and atheism, and, in conclusion, called upon the clergy and laity to resist the inroads of these evils.—In his address to the assembled clergy and churchwardens at Dover on Tuesday he pointed out that, although infidelity might not be expected to flourish greatly in their time, Deism, or Philosophic Theism, was a danger of a more practical and pressing nature. Oriental religions, like Buddhism, were continually brandished in the face of Christians on account of the purity of their precepts. Those religions, however, required to be more deeply studied before modern philosophy could very widely spread the principles of Theism.—After each of his Visitation addresses the Archbishop entertained at luncheon the clergy, churchwardens, and sidesmen who have obeyed his summons. At Tonbridge, in responding to the toast of his health, the most rev. prelate said he could not boast that he never had any difference of opinion with his clergy; but then he remembered the anecdote of Archdeacon Paley. Bishop Barrington once said to him, "Let me introduce you to Mrs. Barrington: we have lived together for fifty years, and we have never had a single word of difference upon any subject whatever." Paley replied, "Mighty dull!" (Laughter.) Nor could he (the Archbishop) repeat the words of a distinguished French prelate, who once remarked, "When I say to my clergy, 'March!' they march, and when I say 'Halt!' they halt." That certainly was not his (the most rev. prelate's) experience, and he did not think that, living as we did in a free country, anyone had a right to say to anyone else "March!" or "Halt!" Everybody was entitled to think for himself, and great results were thus arrived at both in Church and in State. People said we lived in very bad times; but, after all, he would ask in what other times or in what other country would persons who used that language have preferred to have had their lot cast? For himself, he was tolerably well satisfied as things were, and he did not see why we should take a desponding view. He had ever received the greatest possible kindness in many times of trial from the clergy and laity of Canterbury, and he hoped they might enjoy every blessing which the Almighty could bestow upon them.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

BELGIUM.

The International Congress of Commerce and Industry at Brussels was opened on Monday in the great hall of the palace of the Academies. The King was present. M. Dansaert, member of the Chamber and President of the Congress, and M. Sainctelette, Minister of Public Works and Honorary President of the Congress, explained its purpose. The Belgian organisers and members of the Congress are all free-traders. M. Mignot-Delstanche, the Secretary-General of the Congress, stated the order in which the different questions before the Congress will be discussed. The King was warmly cheered both on entering and leaving. The Congress is divided into a section of political economy, a scientific section, a section of the industrial arts, and a section of commercial law. The sections meet in the morning, and the general meetings take place in the afternoon. Among the Vice-Presidents of the Congress are Mr. Kennedy, of the Foreign Office, and Mr. John Corbett, M.P.

GERMANY.

The tenth anniversary of the battle of Sedan was celebrated on the 2nd inst. throughout Germany. The churches were open in the morning and the theatres at night; the school children had a holiday, after the teachers had recounted to them the significance of the day; and in other ways the Germans manifested their joy at the recollection of Sept. 2, 1870.

The King of Bavaria, by a special rescript, has communicated to his troops (forming two army corps) the Emperor's late Sedan anniversary address to the German army. The celebration of the festival in Munich was, for some reason or other, reserved till the 5th, the main feature in the commemoration being a gay procession of guilds and societies, such as is spoken of in few other cities of the Empire.

Field Marshal Count von Moltke attended Monday's performance of the Oberammergau Passion Play, the Crown Prince having honoured last week's with his presence.

The fifty-fourth autumn exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts has been opened at Berlin. The exhibition, which will be closed in two months' time, contains one thousand objects of painting and sculpture. Sir John Gilbert has sent a "Murder of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester," from "King Henry VI.;" while Messrs. W. C. T. Dobson, Elmore, R. J. Gordon, George Crossland Robinson, and Alma-Tadema are among the exhibitors.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

After witnessing the military manœuvres at Olmütz on the 1st inst., the Emperor went to Cracow, into which place his entry from the railway station partook of the nature of a triumphal procession.

The Emperor has acceded to the request of a deputation from the Diet to transform the old Royal Castle of Wawel into an Imperial residence.

The progress of the Emperor through Galicia became more and more a triumph, for which Cracow gave the signal. All classes of the population shared in it. Up to the last moment of his Majesty's stay in Cracow the enthusiasm would appear never to have once flagged: and so it was on the journey to Przemysl, where his Majesty arrived last Saturday morning. All along the road even the smallest stations were crowded by the country people, who came from all sides to greet their Sovereign. Crowds of them, in their picturesque costume, were on horseback, and were seen galloping along as if they were trying a race with the engine. In the evening his Majesty continued his journey to Krysowitze, in the neighbourhood of which the great manœuvres took place. The last part of the journey, for about three English miles, was by road, all along which the country people were ranged in an uninterrupted line. At the last part of it, and just before the château of Count Stadnicki, where his Majesty has taken up his residence, the people had improvised an illumination with torches, the bearers of which crowded before the château and gave loud and hearty cheers for their beloved Sovereign.

The military manœuvres in Galicia began early on Sunday morning, when the Eastern corps in full force filled and surrounded Lemberg. The Western corps was eighty-five miles distant, at Przemysl, Eradimnow, and Medica. The operations were begun by the cavalry, both sides advancing with such rapidity that the advanced guards of each army corps came in sight of one another before twelve o'clock. They had, therefore, traversed forty-two miles each in seven hours. Towards evening the Chasseurs arrived and commenced operations. The fighting ceased at sunset. The marches were first-rate feats. The Emperor met the Minister for War, the general staff, and the foreign officers at noon in Sadowa Wisznia, and witnessed the operations. His Majesty returned to head-quarters in the evening, when hundreds of country people knelt bareheaded to him. On Monday morning the infantry columns marched upon each other, when the commanders for the first time were allowed liberty of action, and, in fact, were told that they must act as in real warfare. The foreign officers greatly approved this plan. The Emperor arrived at eight o'clock on the field of operations near Sadowa Wisznia. The manœuvres lasted until Friday.

RUSSIA.

The Emperor arrived at Livadia safely from Simpheropol by land on the evening of the 2nd inst. It is stated that the 400 miles of railway over which the Czar travelled were guarded by about 40,000 men—soldiers, peasants, police, and gendarmes.

The anniversary of the Emperor's coronation was celebrated at St. Petersburg on Tuesday. A Te Deum was sung at the cathedral, and popular games were played in the Champ de Mars.

Lord Dufferin has left St. Petersburg for England. His Excellency was prevented from leaving sooner by the state of Lady Dufferin's health, which is now restored.

A new issue of the Nihilist organ, Will of the People, has been published and circulated in St. Petersburg. The print bears the date of Sept. 3.

The annual fair at Nijni-Novgorod was officially closed on Monday.

The Morning Post correspondent at Berlin states that China and Russia have arranged the preliminaries of a new treaty for the definitive settlement of the Kuldja Question, and that the formal execution will take place at Pekin, whither the Russian Plenipotentiary, Baron Bützow, proceeds.

GREECE.

The King and Queen of the Hellenes arrived at Libau on Monday, and proceeded in the evening in the steamer Danneborg for Copenhagen, where their Majesties arrived on Tuesday evening.

An ordinance has been issued by the Government postponing the opening of the Chamber of Deputies until Oct. 21, in consequence of the necessity for the King to delay his return to Athens in order to visit the Sovereigns of Germany, Austria, and Italy.

The total strength of the army is said to be now 27,000 men, and a Daily News' telegram states that the rate of recruiting is increasing rapidly.

TURKEY.

The Porte handed a Note to the Ambassadors on Tuesday evening, in which it informs the Powers that, thanks to the efforts of General Riza Pasha, the Albanians have accepted the cession of Dulcigno to Montenegro. Orders have consequently been sent to the General to make over the town and district to the Montenegrins. As to the other territory in dispute, the Daily Telegraph correspondent at Constantinople understands it is proposed that both parties shall retain possession of the positions now actually occupied by them. Meanwhile the allied fleets are assembling at the proposed meeting-place. The British, German, and Italian divisions, fourteen vessels, had arrived at Ragusa on Sunday.

AMERICA.

President Hayes was present at a soldiers' gathering at Canton, Ohio, on the 1st inst., and made a speech, in which he dwelt on the necessity of Government aid and protection for education. The late Civil War, he said, would never have occurred if there had been universal suffrage in the United States based on universal education, upon which Republican institutions depended. He pointed out that the steady and rapid reduction of the public debt and the accumulation of coin since the resumption of specie payments might well serve as an encouragement to take the remaining steps necessary to reach a perfectly sound condition of the currency. In conclusion, the President referred to the immense increase of foreign commerce and to the internal prosperity of the country. Foreign nations understood this, and hence the great influx of immigration. President Hayes passed through Chicago on the 2nd inst., en route for the Pacific coast. Hearty welcome was given to President Hayes in Utah. He was met at Ogden, and accompanied to Salt Lake City by President Taylor and other Mormons, who, however, did not tender him any public hospitality. On his return to Ogden, whither he was accompanied by the Mormon President and other authorities of the Mormon Church, he was met by a deputation of Californian citizens.

The Democratic Ticket has been elected in the State of Arkansas by a majority of 60,000 over the Greenback party. No Republican ticket was nominated. The Democrats of Massachusetts have nominated Mr. Charles P. Thompson for the Governorship of that State. The nomination had been declined by General Butler. The latter made a bitter anti-Republican speech in the Convention.

The Government has received official information from the Southern Ute Agency, Colorado, announcing that seventy-five Ute Indians have signed the ratification of the agreement with the United States authorities. The signatures of all the Utes in that agency are expected shortly.

Twenty-five thousand three hundred emigrants landed at New York during August.

It has been decided by the Treasury Department at Washington that American shipmasters in European waters may follow the new European rules to avoid collisions.

AUSTRALIA

From the text of the Governor's Speech in the prorogation of Parliament we learn something as to the progress being made in New South Wales. Several important Acts were passed during the Session ending July 13 last. Amongst these are the Act to amend the Land Acts of 1861 and 1875, the aim of which is to afford additional facilities and securities for industrial settlement upon the soil; the Public Instruction Act, for carrying out a system of primary instruction, open alike to all classes and all creeds, and which provides the means for improving the methods of teaching to the highest degree, and places the teacher within reach of the remotest child in the land; the Electoral Act, which reduces the anomalies in the representation to a principle of virtual equality, and enlarges the representative branch of the Legislature. As regards the material progress of the colony, it is stated that during the current year 223 miles of new railway lines will be opened to the public, whilst provision is made for new extensions, which will when completed add more than a thousand miles to the railway system of the colony. The revenue from the working railways is steadily increasing, and at the present time is £50,000 in advance of that for the corresponding period of 1879. Other large public works have been completed or are in course of construction, including the fortification of the harbours of Sydney and Newcastle, lighthouses on various parts of the coast, Government offices and public buildings. It is confidently expected that the International Exhibition of Art and Industrial Skill recently closed will have given a stimulus to enterprise and invention, and amply justify the grants for its inauguration.

Princess Orloff, mother of the Russian Ambassador to the French Republic, died on Thursday evening at Bellefontaine.

Prince Alexander of Bulgaria returned to Sofia on Sunday from Varna, and met with an enthusiastic reception from the inhabitants.

Two explosions occurred last Saturday in the magazine of the fortress of Belgrade, setting fire to the upper storey of the building, which was completely wrecked.

Cattle plague, according to an announcement of the Roumanian Board of Health, is prevalent in five districts of Moldavia, and measures have been adopted for its extinction.

We learn that a Treaty of Peace has been projected between Chili and Peru, whereby the former Power becomes master of all the territory of Bolivia on the Pacific. The cost of the war, 40,000,000 dols., it is stipulated shall be borne by Peru.

A Montreal telegram says that engineers are engaged daily in making surveys for the purpose of determining the site of the projected tunnel under the St. Lawrence, between Hochelaga and Longueil.

Two ceremonials in honour of distinguished Italians were held on Sunday. At Genoa the first stone of a monumnt to be erected to Mazzini was laid; and at Pieve di Cadore, the birthplace of Titian, a bronze statue of the painter was unveiled.

The Egyptian Official Journal publishes the new harbour dues of Alexandria, which are to come into force from Oct. 1 next. The harbour receipts for last month, amounting to £4000, were for the first time applied to the service of the Preference Debt.

A Portuguese steamer has penetrated further up the Congo than had been done before by a ship from that country, and the captain has had an interview with Mr. H. M. Stanley, who told him that his object was to open a path for future traders.

During the passage of a battalion of troops across a wooden bridge, over the Ebro, near Logrono, the structure gave way, and one captain, three lieutenants, and a large number of men were drowned, notwithstanding the efforts made to save them.

A medal has been granted by the Royal Humane Society to Mr. Augustus Alexander Samuel, of Kingston, Jamaica, who on the night of March 9 last, with great heroism, rescued a young lady from drowning in Kingston Harbour.

Owing to the good harvest in Servia, the Government has been enabled to collect the taxes in full from the agricultural population, and the Finance Minister has already set aside the sum required to meet this year's interest of the National Debt.

The French, who have held a protectorate over the island of Tahiti since the year 1842, concluded on June 29 last an agreement with King Pomare, by which Tahiti and the neighbouring islands under his rule were annexed to France. The King is to retain his titular privileges.

It is announced in the Gazette that the Queen has directed letters patent to be passed for the annexation to the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope of the British possessions or territories in the Transkei, known as Tembuland, Emigrant Tambookieland, Bomvanaland, and Galekaland.

The Congress of Jurists was opened at Turin on Tuesday, the attendance of eminent lawyers both from Italy and abroad being very considerable. Signor Mancini, the Minister of Public Instruction, was elected President. Speeches were afterwards delivered by Signor Villa, the Minister of Justice, and by the delegates of France, Greece, Holland, Russia, and Switzerland.

The Guion Line United States mail-steamer Nevada left the Mersey last Saturday, having among her passengers 347 Mormons and elders, who were on their way to Salt Lake City. This is the fourth company of the sect that has left Liverpool dnring the present year, and another company is to go next month. The party on Saturday was composed of Mormons from England, Scotland, Wales, and about six from Ireland. There were also Italians, Germans, Danes, Swedes, and Norwegians included. The total number of Mormon emigrants from Liverpool this year is 1524.

Details are given in the American papers with respect to the famous Dalrymple farm, twenty-five miles west of Fargo, Dakota, which is the largest cultivated farm on the Western Continent. It contains 36,000 acres of arable land, 24,000 of which are now under wheat, and 12,000 under oats; 125 reaping machines were set to work last month to cut the wheat. Mr. Dalrymple manages his farm on strict business principles, his harvest work being performed on a forty day contract with each workman at 1 dol. 75 cents per day, he boarding them. The harvesters all board at large dining-halls prepared expressly for the Dalrmyple family. Each reaper is operated by three horses or mules. There are 375 of them on these reapers. When shocked and sufficiently dried, both wheat and oats are thrashed from the stubble and without stacking. The estimated yield by harvesters and proprietors is about eighteen bushels of wheat per acre and ninety of oats. The wheat product of this one farm amounts to 430,000 bushels—about 900 car-loads, or 45 train-loads of 20 cars. This immense crop will go to the seaboard by way of the lakes, through Canada and the Erie Canal, and is expected to net 60 cents per bushel at the farm.

A despatch from Panama, dated Aug. 10, published in the New York papers, says:—The eruption of the Fuego, the largest volcano in the Republic, was preceded by earthquakes of much violence, the theatre of whose operations was confined to the country surrounding the volcano, with a radius of some twenty or thirty miles. In Antigua, Amatitlan, Palia, Petapa, and several other places, the shocks were of such violence as to cause serious alarm among the inhabitants, and they abandoned their houses for several hours. With the commencement of the explosion, however, the earthquake period ended, and the people in the streets of the various pueblos were able to witness in tranquillity the splendid appearance of the burning mountain. During the morning of the day succeeding the eruption the pueblos on the Costa Grande, to the northward of the volcano, were shrouded in gloom, and for some time after sunrise people in offices were compelled to employ artificial light in order to carry out their labours. Ashes and dust fell in great quantities at many miles distance, and people who were at too great distance from the volcano to witness the explosion were for some time in doubt as to their origin. Happily, the disturbance has passed with no more serious matter to record than the alarm which it momentarily occasioned.

A correspondent of the Cape Times at Zanzibar writes:—Mr. Thomson has come back after a most successful journey. In fourteen months, and at the cost of £2600, he has examined the country to the north of Lake Nyassa and then to the south of Tanganyika. He has followed the Lukuga from the Lake on its way to the Congo, it takes the north-west course and led him too far off, so that he did not reach the junction. Notwithstanding this, the Lukuga has been seen as a large, swift river flowing off to the Atlantic, but utterly useless for trade, as it is full of rapids. The blocking of the outlet seems to have been caused by an accumulation of vegetation which probably takes place periodically and at long intervals. It is in each case only a question of time as to when the lake bursts through. This time the lake fell eight feet after the occurrence, and an inundation passed down, sweeping villages away in the Congo Valley, near Nyangwe. Mr. Thompson has visited Lake Hikna, a lake about twenty miles long, and which would be a considerable one were not Africa already so filled with greater ones. The best of the expedition is that there has not been a bale of goods lost, a single man deserted, or any one died; not a shot has been fired in defence or attack, and Mr. Thomson agrees with old travellers that African travelling is very interesting, but rather monotonous and devoid of adventure.

A return has been issued giving the numbers of those who passed in each year from 1870 to 1879 for appointments in the medical departments of the East India, the Army, and the Navy services. In the Indian medical service 20 passed the examination, and 11 entered the service in 1870; 67 passed, and 31 entered in 1879. In the Army medical service 53 passed, and 36 entered the service in 1871; and 72 passed, and 71 entered the service in 1879. With regard to the Naval medical service in 1870, 24 passed, and 24 entered the service; and 15 passed and the same number entered the service in 1879.

A circular issued from the War Office states that "cases having occurred of ammunition issued to volunteer corps and rifle associations improperly coming into the possession of merchants and others, officers commanding volunteer corps are informed that they are held strictly responsible for the safe keeping and proper use of all Government ammunition, whether issued gratuitously or supplied on payment for the use of the corps. The sale or exchange of ammunition outside the corps to which it has been issued is not permissible, and it is to be understood that any transaction of such a nature, except under orders from the War Office, is illegal, and will render the parties concerned liable to proceedings at law."

The Newcastle-on-Tyne Free Library will be opened by Mr. Joseph Cowen, M.P., next Monday, the 13th inst., and the foundation-stone of an extensive new building will be laid by Mr. Newton at the same time. There will be a luncheon in the afternoon and a large public meeting in the Townhall in the evening. Among the gentlemen who have intimated their intention to be present are the United States Minister, Mr. J. R. Lowell, the French Ambassador, M. Challemel-Lacour, Mr. Ashton W. Dilke, M.P., Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P., Mr. Joseph Dodds, M.P., and Mr. J. C. Stevenson, M.P. The Chamber of Commerce and other public bodies will embrace the opportunity of the visit of the Ambassadors of France and the United States to present them with addresses.

The Extra Supplement.

THE RESULT OF A LUFFING-MATCH.

On more than one occasion during the yacht races of the past season, the coveted prize has been lost to the clippers of the yacht fleet by indulgence in a luffing-match.

A luffing-match is a crucial test of the "weatherly qualities" of a yacht, or, in other words, of the power that a yacht possesses of sailing as nearly as possible against the wind. Scarcely a match is sailed in which two or more yachts do not resort to this competition, very frequently to the detriment of their own chances of winning, and thus it sometimes happens that the actual winner is found among the ranks of those reckoned but little better than cruisers.

To pass to "windward" of a doughty antagonist—in fact, "to take the wind out of his sails"—is the highest ambition of the yacht sailing-masters; and often, when at last their attention is directed to the movements of the remaining competitors in the race, it is only to discover that they have allowed this ambition to put them hopelessly astern of the other vessels.

The mishap delineated by our Artist really occurred some years ago during a match of one of the Thames Yacht Clubs. The two vessels started with every chance in their favour, in company with eight or nine other yachts. The course was from Gravesend to the "Mouse" Light-Ship and back. When they breasted the Nore Light a luffing-match immediately commenced between the two yachts in question, which were leading considerably at the time. What actually happened to them was not observed from the committee steam-boat, but a cry was raised that So-and-So had fouled each other, and there, sure enough, they were; one minus her bowsprit and topmast, the other with her mast injured (sprung), some of the rigging carried away, mainsail ripped up, and other injuries. Each had hoisted the signal of protest. Fortunately the doctor was not required, and there was nothing left for the antagonists to do but to bear up for Sheerness or Gravesend, to repair damages. On consideration, each owner withdrew his protest; and, when dining together in the evening, agreed that luffing-matches were all very well, if not too perseveringly indulged in; but on that particular occasion the prizes had not come their way in consequence of a slight oversight on somebody's part.

The reader who is totally unacquainted with nautical matters will perhaps need to have it explained that, in "luffing," each of the two yachts which have come to grief was trying to intercept the wind from reaching the sails of the other, having the wind on their starboard, or right-hand side. Their proper course, as shown in the Artist's Sketch, would be towards the Mouse Light, indicated in the far distance by the light-ship, with the ball at the mast-head, which is dimly seen beyond the six yachts that are now bearing up towards it. The two yachts shown in the front of the Sketch have, in their mutual attempts to get to windward of each other, run about three miles out of the course to the south, unmindful of what the others were doing; and finally, they have disabled one another by a collision, the effects of which are but too apparent in the torn sails of one and the broken spars of the other. The flags exhibited by them both, attached to their lower shrouds, are the understood signal of a protest against the conduct of the race. To the right hand of the Sketch is seen the Club steamer, coming back to render any assistance that may be required.

SUNDAY EVENING IN REGENT'S PARK.

The summer Sunday evenings in several of the London Parks are wont to afford healthful and pleasant recreation, of a befitting tranquil kind, to many thousands of families, including both the middle and poorer classes of our townsfolk. The music of the band which is engaged to play in the stand erected not far from the south-eastern entrance to the Zoological Society's Gardens, about midway along the Broad Walk, is an unfailing attraction in fine weather. People are drawn within reach of its "concord of sweet sounds," and find themselves presently seated on the chairs placed there for hire, or perhaps on the cool greensward, to listen and to enjoy, while some keep strolling round and round, preferring freedom of movement, and surveying every part of the lively scene before them. The refreshment-stall, which is at no great distance, furnishes many a bottle of lemonade, and many a cup of tea or coffee, with biscuits or sponge-cakes, to relieve the exhaustion felt by those who may have walked a long way from their homes to this Park; especially the women and children. Men who smoke have probably the ready pipe or cigar for needful solace under these circumstances; and, here in the open air, there is nobody who would wish to say them nay. Incidents of this nature, with a general air of ease and contentment among the various groups of kindred and friends bearing each other company upon the agreeable occasion, will be recognised in our Artist's Sketch. He has introduced, by one Hogarthian touch, the ludicrous mishap of a boy, running in fright away from a dog, knocking cups and saucers out of a young gentleman's hands. But this, too, is a pleasantry. Nowhere, that we know of, can you see different classes of our London population quietly mingling in a common entertainment with so little fuss or mutual constraint. It may be "a Continental custom," but not, therefore, objectionable or unworthy of English gravity and propriety of manners.

The new Master Cutler of Sheffield, Mr. W. Chesterman, was sworn in on Thursday, the 2nd inst. In the evening the annual Cutlers' Feast was held in the Cutlers' Hall, the Master Cutler presiding. Amongst the guests were the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Wharncliffe, the Right Hon. A. J. Mundella, M.P., and Mr. Stuart Wortley, M.P.

The annual British conference of delegates of the 370 Young Men's Christian Associations in Great Britain and Ireland was held at Manchester on Wednesday and Thursday last week, and included large public meetings each evening. Upwards of one hundred delegates were in attendance. Mr. W. Hind Smith, of London, took the chair at the opening meeting. Mr. Hughman, travelling secretary for Scotland, read a paper on the work of district and travelling secretaries. The idea of appointing such officers for all large districts was discussed, and on the motion of Mr. Thorne, of Leeds, it was resolved to recommend the matter to the consideration of the general conference, along with the proposed oversight, by means of a committee, of the work of the associations in England. Mr. W. H. Newett stated that the international conference of the association will be held in London next year.—The sixteenth conference of the North-Eastern District Union of the Young Men's Christian Associations began at Newcastle-on-Tyne on Monday, Mr. C. S. Wilson presiding. It appeared from the report that there are in connection with the society twenty-five associations, with 1408 members and 1175 associates. The financial report was also satisfactory. The members of the conference were entertained at luncheon by the Sheriff.

RESULTS OF THE HARVEST.

Harvest has been finished over the greater portion of England, and is far towards completion in Scotland and Ireland. Never has the weather been more favourable for the in-gathering of the corps. In the early districts farmers have not been stopped in their work for a single day, and they have, therefore, garnered the produce of their fields quickly, cheaply, and without loss. This alone is a great advantage, as well as a great saving of trouble and anxiety; but what is even more important is the excellent condition in which the corn has been stacked. When wet weather occurs during harvest there is always more or less waste through shedding of grain, occasioned by the corn lying a long time in the fields, and having to be turned or moved to dry it. Still worse, there is a deterioration of quality; and when sprouting supervenes, a great deal of grain is rendered unfit for market, except for grinding for cattle food. This year almost every kernel that has been grown has been secured in such condition as will render it fit for the most valuable purposes. The wheat will make excellent flour, and the barley good malt if it is not too thin or too coarse. Consumers, as well as farmers, are to be congratulated upon so fortunate a completion of the labours of the agricultural year, as they will have a nutritious and digestible loaf, and good beer, too, if the brewers will use plenty of the abundant barley crop instead of inferior substitutes.

The wheat crop is the least prolific of the season, though it is far better than the extremely defective crop of last year. There is a great difference of opinion as to its probable yield amongst those who profess to be judges. It is the custom of some writers on the subject to express very confident opinions as to the number of quarters forthcoming, although they have had but few opportunities of forming a judgment beyond those obtained by noticing the bulk of the crops from the windows of railway carriages. This cursory kind of observation may give a general idea as to the quantity of straw, but it is often very misleading in respect of the yield of grain. The weather, up to the verge of harvest, was extremely unfavourable to the maturing of the ears of wheat, as well as conducive to fungoid disease. It is, therefore, unreasonable to expect a large yield in proportion to straw. Sanguine reporters, however, have ventured to predict a crop over average; and one gentleman, apparently recognised as an authority by the Times, has gone so far as to state that we may expect a produce of thirty bushels per acre. Returns collected from hundreds of competent observers in all parts of the country by two of the agricultural papers do not bear out these flattering tales. The writers nearly all complain of mildew and blight, and most of them estimate the wheat crop as less than an average, which for England is about twenty-nine bushels per acre. The fact is that there is an unusual variation in the crops of different soils and districts this year. On gravelly or chalky land the heavy rains of July did comparatively little mischief, and many parts of the country escaped some of the worst of the storms. But mildew has been prevalent nearly all over the country, so that the estimates of those who assess the wheat crop at a little under average will almost certainly turn out to be correct. Nevertheless, as already observed, what is produced will all be marketable, and we may, therefore, expect quite an average supply of millers' wheat. Last year, with a very small yield, the quality and condition were so inferior that there was a difference of several shillings per quarter between the price of the fine foreign wheat that was imported in such great abundance and the bulk of the home supply. The British farmer will not have this disadvantage to contend with in the present season, as his wheat is equal to all but the superfine foreign wheat, and superior to the bulk of the American produce.

Barley is the great crop of the year, and, although the berry is generally rather small, and in many cases discoloured from the crop having been laid by the July storms, the dry and sound condition of the grain will render a large proportion of it suitable for malting. Oats and beans are also good crops, and peas tolerably abundant. Root crops, on the whole, are very promising, the great abundance of the turnip crops more than compensating for the deficiency of mangolds. A large proportion of the rather small first cut of hay was badly injured by rain, but there has been a very heavy second crop of clover, and a good growth of late grass; so that the total hay crop is a fairly good one. Potatoes are unusually abundant in yield; and, although disease appeared in most fields, the dry weather of the last five weeks has greatly checked it.

Everyone must rejoice in the turn of fortune which has come to the cultivators of the soil after such a prolonged series of black years as they have experienced. Thousands of them must have been ruined if we had been cursed with a bad harvest this year. Tenantless farms are already far too common, and it is to be feared that the return of agricultural prosperity is too late to save many who have been holding on in an insolvent condition. Still, landlords are disposed, for their own sakes, as well as out of sympathy with unfortunate tenants, to be indulgent in the matter of rent payments, and whenever there is a chance of going on in the hope of continued good seasons, the present occupiers of farms will probably be helped to retain them. It is true that prices are likely to be low, as the Americans have an enormous surplus of wheat to send us; but British farmers do not live by corn alone, and meat and dairy produce are selling well, and cattle are exceptionally healthy.

There has been much talk lately about the decline of agriculture in this country, and pessimists have ventured to predict that American competition would ruin the home producers of corn and meat. The publication of Messrs. Read and Pell's report on American agriculture, however, has done much to disperse exaggerated fears in this direction. Farmers on the other side of the Atlantic have not yet discovered the secret of getting rich by selling corn at less than the cost of its production, and it has been clearly shown that they cannot afford to send us their wheat at such low prices as ruled in 1878, when, according to the official report of their own Department of Agriculture, they only received an average of forty-two shillings per acre for a good crop. If this were all profit men who farm, as a rule, only 180 acres of land would not grow wealthy very rapidly; and as, according to the best authorities, their expenses in wheat-growing are about £2 per acre, it is certain that they will turn their attention to other branches of production if they are not paid better for growing cereals. With respect to meat, it must be many years before they can do more than keep pace with their own and our own increasing consumption.

In the production of cheese and butter, the farmers of the United Kingdom should be able to compete with the world; and they are doing their best to set their dairies in order—none too soon. Our legislators are now fully awake to the necessity of removing all legal impediments to the advancement of agriculture; and, if landlords will follow suit by relaxing the absurd restrictions upon freedom of cultivation, farming in this country may yet maintain its position as the best in the world.

THE MAGAZINES.

The chief attraction of the Cornhill is an unusually absorbing tale by "R. L. S," "The Pavilion on the Links." It is not remarkable for probability, pathos, or the delineation of character, but appeals to the sentiment of curiosity with a power which we have not seen approached since Julian Hawthorne's story of "Mrs. Gainsborough's Diamonds." The present instalment leaves us in a fever of curiosity; the truth and beauty of the natural descriptions also deserve acknowledgment. Mr. James's "Washington Square" would be a masterpiece of comedy if the situation were not almost too painful. The position of poor Catherine between her disagreeable father and her more disagreeable lover is so nicely balanced betwixt comedy and tragedy that it is hard to say which sentiment should preponderate. Mr. Grant Allen's essay on the growth of sculpture is mainly a development of the proposition that the perfection of the Greek artists was largely owing to the material in which they wrought, a material inaccessible to their Egyptian and Assyrian predecessors. "A Gossip about Madeira" is a very delightful piece of gossip indeed, bringing the picturesque aspects, not only of Madeira but of Teneriffe, vividly before us. "The Seamy Side of Letters" is an entertaining essay, full of curious instances of the foibles and misfortunes of literary men, imbedded in a vein of quaint humour.

Macmillan continues Mrs. Oliphant's novel successfully, and starts a new one by Mrs. Macquoid—"The Story of Yves"—with abundant promise. Mr. Schuyler has unearthed a Turkish historian who may be said to have attained literary excellence in spite of himself, having been driven to adopt a straightforward style by sheer lack of time to bring his diction up to the mark prescribed by Turkish literary etiquette. His subject was the first of Catherine the Second's wars with the Porte. Mr. Quilter's "New Renaissance" is a review of the unexpected direction taken by the Pre-Raphaelite movement since the secession of its original leaders. It is clever but partial, omitting to take account of more than a single aspect of the matter. The ingenious financier who proposes to extract revenue from the Heralds' College is, we fear, a trifle too sanguine. Titles which anyone could obtain by payment would lose all their value in losing all their exclusiveness.

A generally inferior number of Blackwood shines with one admirable article, a description of a week spent in Athens, excellent as a piece of writing, and full of suggestive hints on ancient art. There is a good review of the recent life of Sir James Outram, evidently the work of some one possessing special knowledge, and a rather tedious discussion of some novels, of which the only one possessing any literary pretensions is the only one treated with severity.

Fraser, so frequently obnoxious to the charge of heaviness, is this month adorned by one of the most graceful and fanciful contributions which have appeared in any magazine for some time back. Mr. Lang's "Prehistoric Apologue" reminds us of Lord Beaconsfield's "Popanilla," except that its purpose is diametrically opposite, the moral being that all progress is due to the innovators who from time to time give the example of surmounting social and traditional conventions. A somewhat similar piece of fancy from the pen of Mr. Julian Hawthorne, entitled "Calladon," is pretty, but too artificial, and the drift is somewhat obscure. Mr. Blackmore's "Mary Anerley" is concluded in a very satisfactory fashion. It would be interesting to know how far the particulars given of Trafalgar are authentic. Miss Betham-Edwards writes a very pleasant account of autumn in the Côté d'Or, Mr. Baden Powell opposes the demand for retaliatory duties as a means of combating French bounties on sugar, and Mr. G. H. Graham contributes a lifelike sketch of a power in the world of journalism, the late witty and genial Alexander Russell, editor of the Scotsman.

The Fortnightly is chiefly remarkable for Mr. Francis Galton's report of his recent investigations of the power of visualising absent objects, possessed in such strangely various degrees; and Mr. Nelson's discouraging statement of the existing judicial administration of the Madras Presidency. Mr. Nelson lays especial stress on the fact that the only class of natives sufficiently civilised to be capable of acting as magistrates are as much strangers in the land as the English, and much less inclined to sympathise with the aboriginal inhabitants. A hitherto unpublished account of the storming of the Bastille, translated by Augustus Craven, will not gratify those by whom the event has recently been celebrated, but bears every internal evidence of truth. Mr. Grant Allen volunteers a defence of Messrs. Darwin, Huxley, and other naturalists against the alleged misrepresentations of critics who, on his own showing, are unworthy of serious notice.

Mr. Froude, writing on Ireland in the Nineteenth Century, naturally discerns in the present state of the country a confirmation of his well-known views respecting the history and treatment of earlier aspects of the ever-recurring Irish problem. According to him, the main error of the English people in their dealings with Ireland has not been the assumption of arbitrary power, but the selfish misuse of it for merely English interests. Despotic government he regards as the sole alternative to anarchy in a country like Ireland. The experience of the next few years will do much to confirm or confute his opinions. Lord Carnarvon advocates the tempting but impracticable scheme of "national insurance," and Mr. Sedley Taylor describes the more practical steps towards effecting Lord Carnarvon's object taken by the first French apostle of co-operation, M. Leclaire. Mr. Ruskin's essay, or rather rhapsody, on Byron is marked by exquisite taste in the selection of passages from his author, with even more than his usual eccentricity in the dicta proceeding from himself. Mr. Payne's essay on François Villon is a fine piece of criticism and biography, composed in an eloquent and animated style. Mr. Fitzedward Hall's protest against wilful archaism and over purism in modern English is not uncalled for; but it may be questioned whether he does not offend against his own principle in some of his strictures upon the Americanisms of the generally fastidious Bryant.

The most remarkable contribution to the Contemporary Review is the commencement of a philosophical work by the Duke of Argyll on "The Unity of Nature," a sequel to his "Reign of Law," and promising to be of no less interest. The Chief Justice of Fiji's notes of a vacation tour in the Archipelago are highly picturesque, and his view of the prospects of the colony is highly encouraging. Mr. Anderson is unable to take an equally favourable view of the Canadian Dominion, unless the connection between it and England should be rendered more intimate. There are also an excellent notice of Mr. Main's collection of English sonnets, and a sound piece of criticism on Heine.

The American Art Review for July contains some capital etchings and woodcuts, and is full of interest for the art student. The general "get up" of this work is highly commendable, and is one among many proofs of the great advance in art culture in America. We have also received the September number of St. Nicholas—Scribner's Illustrated

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL BROWNLOW.

Lieutenant-Colonel Francis Brownlow, C.B., Commanding the 72nd Highlanders, who fell in General Roberts's victory in Afghanistan on the 1st inst., was the eldest son of Mr. William Brownlow, of Knapton House, Queen's County, J.P. and D.L., by Charlotte, his wife, daughter of Mr. William Browne, of Browne's Hill, County Carlow, and was grandson of the Rev. Francis Brownlow, Rector of Upper Comber, County Derry, by the Lady Catherine, his wife, daughter of Anthony, Earl of Meath. He thus belonged to a near branch of the noble House of Lurgan. This gallant and lamented officer entered the Army in 1854, and attained the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in 1877. He served in the Crimea with the 72nd, was in the expedition to Kertch, the attack of June 18, and the siege and fall of Sebastopol, for which he received a medal with clasp as well as the Turkish medal. Subsequently he took part in the siege and capture of Kotah, was present with the leading column of assault on March 30, 1858, was afterwards in the operations in Central India, and in the pursuit of the rebel forces under Tantia Topee and Rao Sahib, for which also he received medal with clasp.

The Rev. Henry Schneider, late Rector for forty-four years of Carlton Scroop, Lincoln, on the 1st inst., aged eighty.

Lieutenant-Colonel Francis Pitts, late 72nd Highlanders, on the 1st inst., at Bridlington, aged seventy-eight.

Mr. Henry Lewis, formerly of the Royal Navy, on the 31st ult., at 5, Devonshire-street, in his ninety-fifth year.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. D. Wilson, late Bengal Army, on the 30th ult., at Rotunda-terrace, Cheltenham.

The Rev. Marcus Richard Southwell, for fifty years Vicar of St. Stephen's, St. Alban's, on the 1st inst., at his vicarage, aged seventy-five.

Captain Edward Straton, 22nd Regiment, killed in action at Candahar on Sept. 1. He entered the Army in 1861, and was made Captain 1872.

John Carr, LL.B., late Chief Justice of Sierra Leone, and Bencher of Gray's Inn, on the 2nd inst., at Bedford House, New Barnet, aged seventy.

Mr. John Christopher Lethbridge, of Granville House, Blackheath, and 25, Abingdon-street, Westminster, on the 27th ult., at Tregeare, Launceston, Cornwall.

Mr. Mordecai Jones, J.P. and D.L. for Brecknockshire, on the 30th ult., at Morganwy House, Brecon, in his sixty-eighth year. He served as High Sheriff of that county in 1876.

Captain St. John Thomas Frome, 72nd Regiment, killed in the battle near Candahar on the 1st inst. His first commission bears date Feb. 22, 1861, and that of Captain June 8, 1872.

Lieutenant-Colonel William Henry Newport, 28th Regiment N.I., killed in the sortie from Candahar, was second son of the late Major Christopher Newport, of the Bombay army. He was forty-three years of age.

Major Thomas Burton Vandeleur, 7th Royal Fusiliers, who died of wounds received in the sortie from Candahar on the 16th ult. He entered the Army Sept. 21, 1855, and became Brevet Major Oct. 1, 1877.

Lady Knight (Harriet Isabella), widow of Sir Arnold James Knight, M.D., on the 29th ult., at The Priory, Little Malvern. Her Ladyship was the daughter of Mr. Thomas Milnes Smith, of Dunston Hall, Derbyshire. She was married in 1821, and was left a widow in 1871.

Mr. Gideon Scott Lang, in New South Wales, on July 13. Mr. Lang, a partisan and associate of Garibaldi's, was extensively known for his literary and general knowledge. Latterly he took an active part in the management of the International Exhibition at Sydney.

Lieutenant-Colonel Mark Shewell, Major in the Bombay Staff Corps and Deputy Assistant-Commissary-General, First Class, died of wounds received in the sortie from Candahar on the 16th ult. His first commission bears date Dec. 13, 1856. He served with the Commissariat in Abyssinia, and was specially mentioned in the Commander-in-Chief's final despatch.

The Rev. Robert Cholmeley, D.D., for twenty years Vicar of Findon, late Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, on the 30th ult., at The Vicarage, Findon, Sussex, aged sixty-two. He was second son of the Rev. Robert Cholmeley, B.D., Rector of Wainfleet, All Saints', Lincolnshire, and nephew of Sir Montague Cholmeley, first Baronet, of Easton, Lincolnshire.

The Rev. Henry Leigh Bennett, of Thorpe Place, Surrey, on the 31st ult., at his seat, Chertsey, in his eighty-sixth year. He was son and heir of the late Rev. John Leigh Bennett, of Thorpe, and was married to Caroline, daughter of George Henry Crutchley, Esq., of Sunning Hill Park, Berks, by whom he leaves issue.

Lieutenant Hector Maclaine, Royal Artillery, who had been taken prisoner at Khuski-i-Nakhud, was found murdered in Ayoub Khan's camp, when it was captured by General Roberts's forces. This young and gallant officer was elder son of Mr. William Osborne Maclaine, of Kyneton, in the county of Gloucester, J.P. and D.L., and grandson of Colonel Hector Maclaine, a very distinguished Peninsular officer.

Dr. William O'Connor, of 30, Upper Montagu-street, died suddenly on the 3rd inst. He was the first surgeon of the London Irish Volunteers, and Surgeon of Gray's Inn Free Hospital. He was a much-esteemed member of the Irish Colony in London, and enjoyed the intimate friendship of the late Samuel Lover, and other leading compatriots. His son, Mr. Arthur O'Connor, is M.P. for Queen's County.

Mr. William Henry Wills, J.P. for Herts, so long and honourably known in periodical literature, died at his residence near Welwyn, on the 1st inst., aged seventy. He was working editor of Household Words from its commencement, and sub-editor of All the Year Round up to the time of Charles Dickens's death. He had previously taken part in the establishment of the Daily News, and was author of various articles which were published in a separate form in a volume entitled "Old Leaves Gathered from Household Words." Mr. Wills was married to a sister of the Messrs. Chambers, of Edinburgh.

Another public park, the fourth, was opened at Bradford last Saturday afternoon by the Mayor (Alderman Holden), in the presence of the members of the Bradford Town Council and a large concourse of the inhabitants. The park consists of seventy-two acres of land, and is situated in the township of Bowling. It is of a highly ornamental character, and has been laid out from the designs of Messrs. Kershaw and Hepworth, architects and landscape gardeners, of Brighouse, near Halifax. The cost of the park is estimated at £30,000. The Mayor afterwards entertained the members of the corporation at luncheon at the Townhall. It was there stated that the aggregate expenditure of the corporation on three of the parks they possessed—namely, Lister Park, Horton Park, and Bowling Park—amounted to £150,000.

A lifesize portrait of Dr. Adler has been painted by Mr. B. S. Marks for presentation, by Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild, M.P., to the council of the United Synagogues, who some time ago decided to place in their council-room a picture of the Chief Rabbi. The likeness is excellent. Dr. Adler is represented seated in his study, robed and holding in his right hand a volume inscribed in Hebrew "Nethinah Lagger." The choice of the volume is appropriate, it being a commentary on the Chaldaic version of the Pentateuch, one of Dr. Adler's best-known works.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

H C A (New York).—Many thanks for the cutting from the Philadelphia paper. The Turf comes regularly to hand.

W I (Essen).—The amendment is noted; all are under examination.

L C (Malta).—The "German Handbuch" (Veit and Co., Leipsic) is the best work on the subject of the chess openings.

J S (Edinburgh).—See answer to L C.

A R (Barnsley).—The problem inclosed in your letter is a very good one; but, as it has been published before, it is unsuitable.

Dr F St (Blandford-square).—One of the problems shall have early insertion.

Eagle Marden.—We fear the double solution is a "true bill," but we have not yet had time to examine the position.

An Old Hand.—The problem will appear under the nom de plume, but we require the name and address of the author in all cases, before publication.

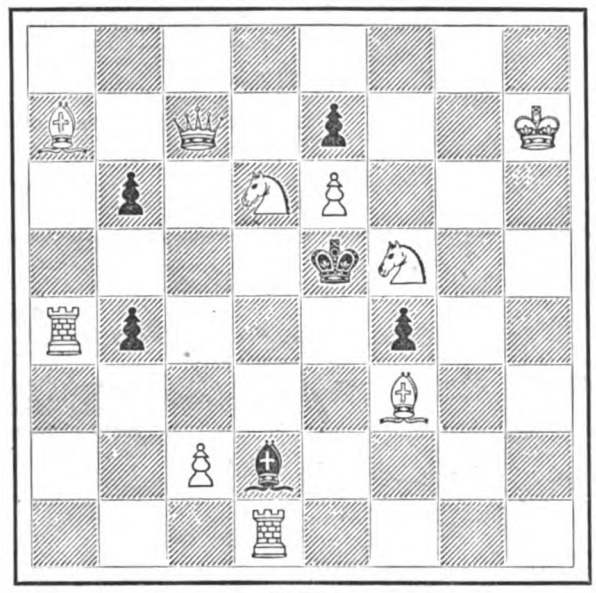
T G (Hornsey).—We do not know the address of the player named in your letter.

A Hindoo Youth.—In the position described a player is allowed fifty moves to mate.

D W K (Hastings).—The game shows promise, but it is not up to the standard of publication. There is a more direct road to the mate than your "pretty termination."

Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1904 received from W D Jones, James Atkinson, J J T, B C M S, W J Eggleston, and Brough (Alexandria).

Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1905 received from W D Jones, Theodor Willink, James Atkinson, J J T, Dr F St, A C Edwards, A Snellen, Julia Short, Meursius, A W Hale, Alphon, and W J Eggleston.



Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1906 received from H B, R H Brooks, East Marden, M O'Halloran, Elsie, R Ingersoll, H Blacklock, C Oswald, C Darragh, Ben Nevis, S Farrant, H Langford, B L Dyke, E Elsbury, C S Cole, H Barrett, Kitzen, R Gray, D W Kell, Jupiter Junior, T Greenbank, An Old Hand, D Templeton, R Jessop, L Sharswood, E Sharswood, A Kentish Man, A R, Otto Wolter, Franklin Institute, P Richmond, Lulu, Hereward, W M Curtis, John Tucker, Botkin, John Simpson, W D Jones, Smutch, E Louden, A C Edwards, Norman Rumbelow, E Firmstone, Alphon, Hopted de Groot, Dr F St, Alpha, J W W, C T B, Queen Bee, Shadforth, E L G, James Dobson, W J Eggleston, N Cator, and N Warner.

Another of the prize problems in the tourney of the American Congress has failed to stand the test of public examination, the latest case being the position declared by the judges to be the best in the competition. The Turf, Field, and Farm, whose proprietors presented the composer of this problem with a handsome prize, now gives an analysis showing that there is a "dual" arising on the second move of White in the solution. Experience has shown that the best judges may fail to discover errors in the solution of a problem, and in this country it has become the practice to publish competing problems before awarding the prizes. Our American cousins should follow the example.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated July 19, 1880) of Mr. Peregrine Hogg Purvis, late of Winchmore-hill, who died on the 5th ult., was proved on the 26th ult., by Peregrine Purvis, the son, and George Smith, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator bequeaths £100 each to the British Orphan Asylum, the Asylum for Idiots, Earlswood, the British Home for Incurables, Clapham, the Metropolitan Free Hospital, Devonshire-square, the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn-road, the City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park, Dr. Lanerou's Deaconesses' Institution and Training Hospital, Tottenham, the Boys' Refuge, Commercial-street, Whitechapel, and the Church Missionary Society; and he directs the sum of £2000 to be purchased in the Government funds in the names of the Vicar and Churchwardens of St. Paul's, Winchmore-hill, and out of the dividends twenty shillings each is to be paid on Dec. 23 or 24 every year to fifty poor persons, male and female, irrespective of creed, two guineas to the Vicar, 10s. to the clerk, and 5s. to the pew-opener; £200 like stock to be purchased in the same names, the dividends to be applied towards the annual expenses of the said church; £200 like stock to be purchased, the dividends to be applied towards the annual expenses of the National School at Winchmore-hill; and £100 of the same stock is to be purchased, the dividends of which are to be applied towards the annual expenses of the New Congregational Church, Compton-lane, Winchmore-hill. There are other legacies to relatives, friends, and servants, all of which are given duty free; and the residue of his real and personal estate he leaves to his said son Peregrine.

The will (dated Jan. 25, 1879) with two codicils (dated Nov. 1 following, and March 5, 1880) of Mr. Robert Everard, late of Fulmey House, Spalding, Lincolnshire, who died on July 6 last at Tonbridge Wells, was proved on the 23rd ult. by Mrs. Sarah Everard, the widow, the sole executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator bequeaths all moneys due to him on mortgages, bonds, or promissory notes, upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Welby, her husband, and children; annuities are given to two nieces; legacies to farm servants and others; and the residue of the personalty to his wife absolutely. All his real estate he devises to the use of his daughter for life, with remainder to her husband, Henry Montague Earle Welby, for life, with remainder to her first and other sons, successively, according to their seniorities in tail male. In the event of testator's grandson, who succeeds to his estates, coming into the baronetcy and property of the Welby family, provision is made for his estates going to his next grandson.

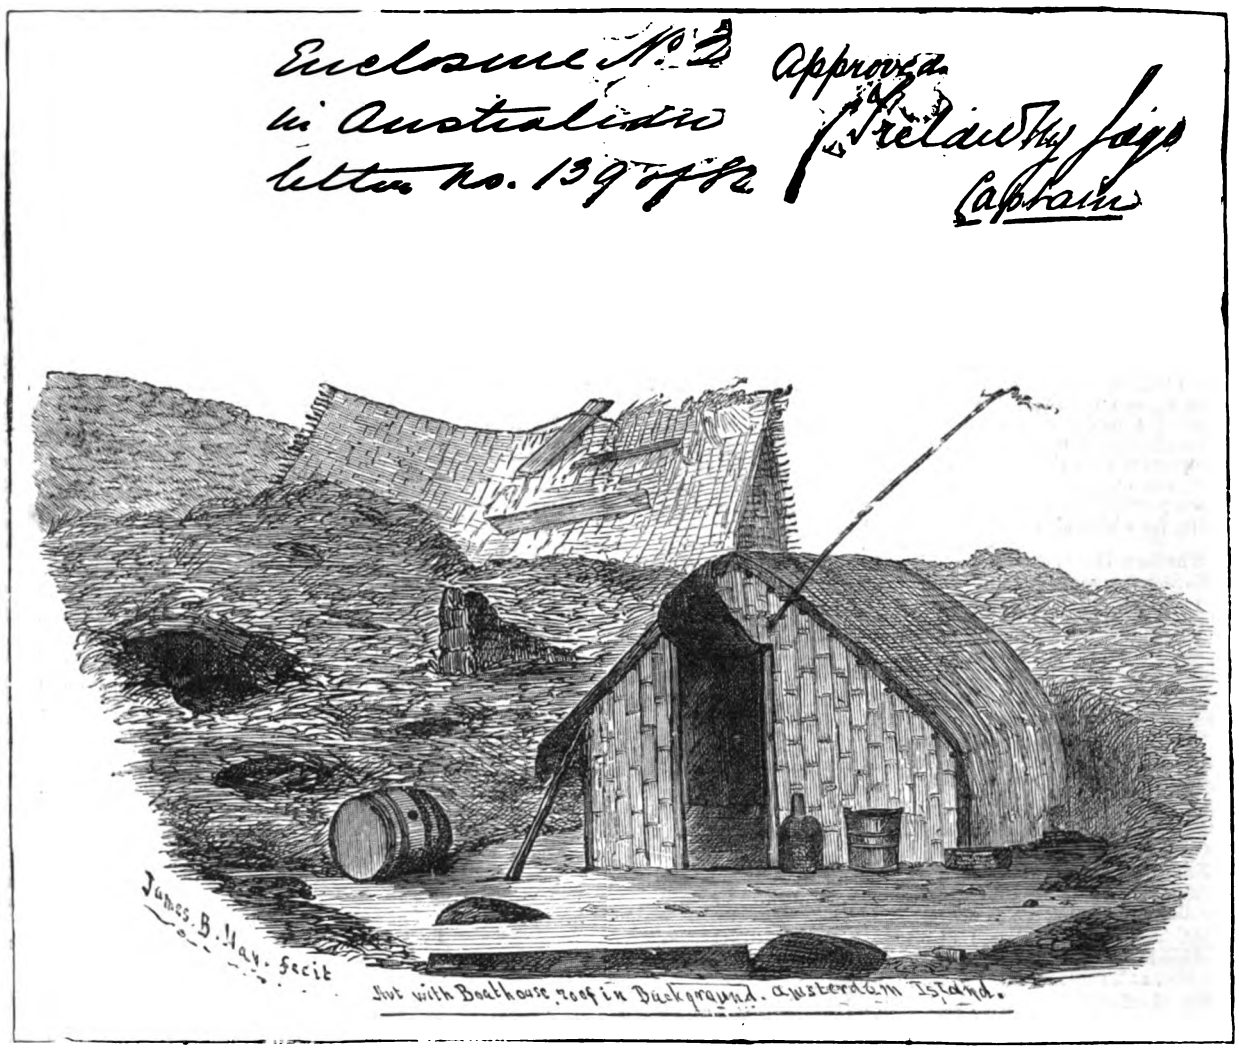
The will (dated Sept. 25, 1879) of Mrs. Lilian Adelaide Lee (Miss Neilson), who died on the 15th ult. at Neuilly, near Paris, was proved on the 30th ult. by George Henry Lewis, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The deceased is described as the wife of Philip Lee, and the probate is limited to the personal estate she had at her disposal as a feme sole by virtue of a protection order dated July 15, 1875, but no further or otherwise. The testatrix bequeaths to Lady Sinclair, of Thurso, her diamond necklace complete and solitaires; to her servant, Anne Pierre, her wearing apparel; to her former servants, Susan Brown, Emily Lloyd, of Cincinnatti, Julia Goodhall, and Mary Ann Clouder Stevens, £100 each; to Joseph Knight and Edward Compton, £1000 each; upon trust for Anne Bland for life, £3000, at her death half of this sum is to go to Anne Bland's three younger sisters, and the other half to Thomas Brown fo life, and then to fall into the residue of her estate. The residu of her property the testatrix leaves to Rear-Admiral Henry Carr Glyn.

The will (dated May 16, 1879) with a codicil (dated May 11, 1880) of General Sir Maurice Stack, K.C.B., late of The Hayes, Prestbury, near Cheltenham, who died on July 20 last, was proved on the 19th ult. by Edgar Francis Jenkins and Arthur Maurice Pinhey, the nephew, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator gives to his wife, Dame Cecilia Stack, all his ready money and cash at the banker's; the residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust for her for life, and then for his children or issue, as she shall by deed or will appoint.

The will (dated July 8, 1880) of Mr. Robert Kenrick Gibbons, late of Fairlawn, Mount Sion, Tonbridge Wells, who died on the 5th ult., was proved on the 23rd ult. by William Gibbons, the son, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator gives legacies to his daughters and to the widow and son of his deceased son Robert; and the residue of his property to his said son William.

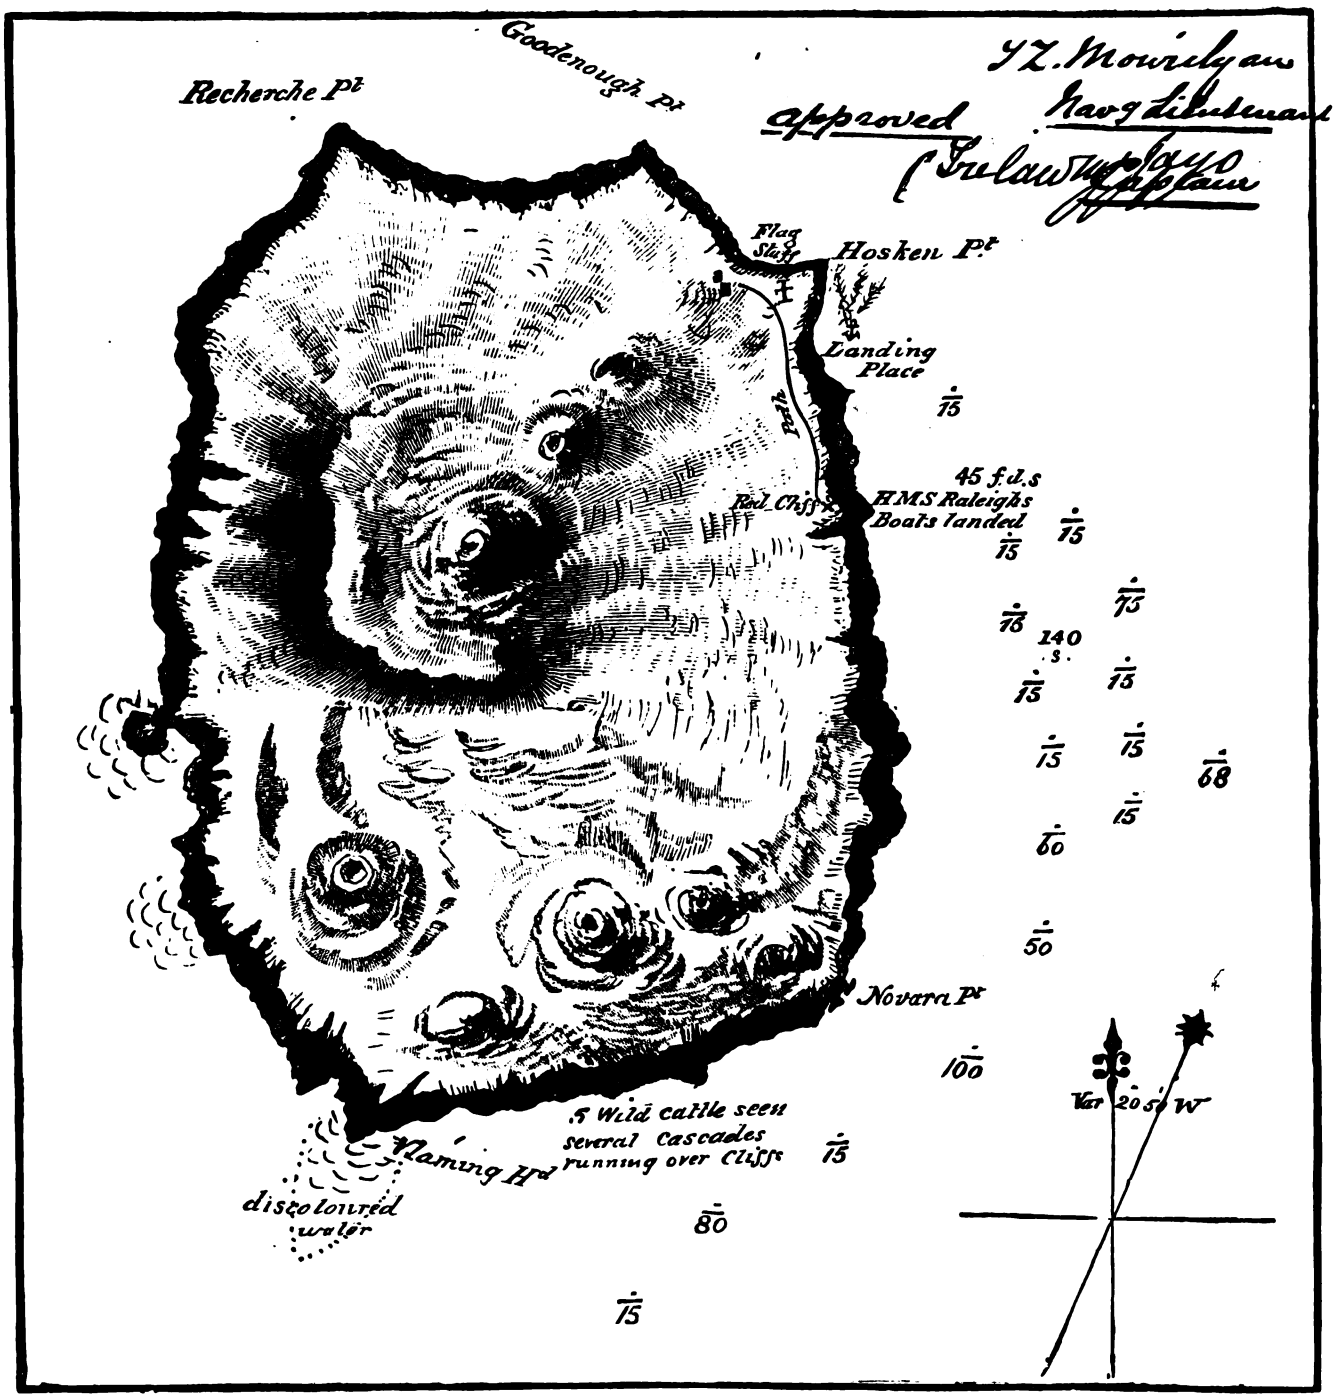
The will (dated Nov. 21, 1870) of Mr. Joseph Dawson, late of Bedford Lodge, near Newmarket, trainer of racehorses, who died on July 23 last, was proved on the 26th ult. by Mrs. Harriott Elizabeth Dawson, the widow, and Mathew Dawson, the brother, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. The testator leaves to his wife £200 and all his household furniture and effects; to his mother, Mrs. Jane Dawson, his sister, Miss Mary Dawson, and Sarah Maria Briggs, annuities of £50 each. The residue of his property, including his freehold estate, Bedford Lodge, is to be held upon trust for his wife for life, and then for his next of kin, according to the statute for the distribution of an intestate's effects.

The will (dated June 21, 1879) of Mr. John Rahles, late of No. 103, Camden-road, who died on July 16 last, was proved on the 7th ult. by Augustus Eldred Hughes and George Staker, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £6000. Among other bequests the testator gives £200 to the German Hospital, at Dalston.



The will (dated Sept. 17, 1876) of Mr. James Southerton, the well-known Surrey cricketer, who died at Mitcham, on June 16 last, has been proved by Mrs. Sarah Southerton, the widow and sole executrix, to whom he gives and bequeaths all his estate and effects, real and personal, for her own use and benefit. The personalty is sworn under £1500.

AMSTERDAM ISLAND.



We are indebted to the Admiralty, and that department to Captain Trelawny Jago, R.N., commanding H.M.S. Raleigh, which lately visited this remote and solitary isle of the South Indian Ocean, for the Map and Sketch we have engraved. The former was drawn by Navigating Lieutenant T. Mourilyan, the latter by Lieutenant James B. Hay. Amsterdam Island is situated in latitude south 34 deg. 42 sec., longitude east 76 deg. 51 sec., midway between Africa and Australia. The island is rather more than four miles long from north to south, and two miles from east to west. It was originally a volcano, but the huge basin of its crater, from 2500 ft. to 3000 ft. in diameter, has been filled by an irruption of the sea. On May 27 last the island was visited by boats from H.M.S. Raleigh, and the report of Captain Trelawny Jago to the Admiralty, inclosing Lieutenant Gissing's report of what he saw on shore, has been issued. Lieutenant Gissing states that they had some difficulty in landing, but when that was accomplished he and Lieutenant Hay proceeded in the direction of the Nuts, keeping at a distance of about 700 yards from the cliffs. "The land here rises gradually from the cliffs to the highest central peak, which is 2760 ft. high. On the side of the hill were several small extinct craters, and higher up larger ones, which we had not time to visit. The walking was very difficult, owing to the rough nature of the ground and the length of the grass, which here grows to the height of several feet. After about a mile of this walking we climbed up one of those small extinct craters, and found on the top of it a cairn of loose scoriæ stones, which we examined to see if any records were inclosed in or buried beneath it, but, finding nothing, we rebuilt it. During our walk we frequently came across footprints of cattle, but we did not see any. After leaving this cairn we directed our steps towards Hosken Point. On arriving there, we found in the valley, where some protection could be obtained from the wind, a number of tall shrubs from 10 ft. to 15 ft. in height; many of them had been cut down, and the branches bore the marks of an axe. From here we saw the flagstaff which had been seen before landing from the ship. To this we walked and found, about fifty yards to the north of it, a small hut, about seven feet high, eight feet long, and six feet wide, built of stout poles driven into the ground, thatched on the roof and sides with dry grass, having no door, but a piece of matting substituted for it. Outside were a miscellaneous collection of empty casks, a wooden tub, bucket, iron hoops, a large glass jar covered with wickerwork, containing water, some iron staples, ringbolts, feathers of sea-birds, empty egg-shells, also of sea-birds, empty bottles, &c. On examining the inside of the hut we found three bunks with a narrow space in the centre. The bunks were made of a light stick framework, partially closed in with grass matting, bedded with dry grass and matting to about a foot from the ground; but there was no furniture of any kind. A large iron pot, in perfect repair, lay on one of the bunks. Below the hut on the rocks was an old rotten whale-boat. North of this hut, and about twenty yards from it, was a larger one about thirty feet long by fourteen feet across. The walls had been made of loose scoriæ stones built to about four and a half feet high, on which had rested a roof, well built, and thatched with grass; the ends of the building were made of planking. Owing to some cause, probably wind, the walls had fallen outwards and settled partially on the ground and partially on the remaining stonework, the rafters and cross pieces being much broken by the fall. On crawling inside to examine the interior we found it contained a boat, bottom up, in very good repair, covered with pitch, evidently to preserve it against the return of its owners; also the oars belonging to it, a quantity of dried fish, some wooden cases, partially filled with dried fish, some casks, iron hoops, and a miscellaneous collection of small gear belonging to a fishing-boat. On coming outside the boat-house, we found carved on the rock, in Roman capital letters—'1880. Enault, Etienne, A l'âge 22.' On some rocks between the boat and the old whaler, were the following, also in Roman capitals:—'Louis Dugaw. L. Edward. 1880. Ducain Julien. A.N. 1880. Mulot.' The position of the hut is about fifty yards from the shore, which here slopes down conveniently to the water, the rocks forming a natural pier over which the surf was breaking heavily. On this natural pier, which extended out about thirty yards, were two iron davits let into the rock, and evidently used in fine weather for hoisting up a boat, also some iron crutches evidently for supporting a planked gangway. About fifty yards above the hut was a wooden cross, near which was a small cave or natural well of dripping water. About fifty yards inland of the flagstaff was the following inscripton, cut on a slab of rock:—'Daniel Low, departed this life June 13th AE, AD. 1803.' This inscription was also in Roman capitals. From all appearances we came to the conclusion that there were no signs of any shipwrecked people having been there, but, on the other hand, there was every indication of recent habitation by fishermen, who, it would appear both from the inscriptions on the rocks and the fact of so good a boat being left behind, and so much useful gear belonging to their trade, make periodical visits during the fishing season. During our search we could find nothing of the bottle recording the visit of the late Commodore James Goodenough, R.N., C.B., C.M.G., on Aug. 30, 1873, in her Majesty's ship Pearl. The hut mentioned by him we believe to be the one we term the boat-house. It contains no furniture now—neither boxes nor partitions, as mentioned by him. The cabbage garden we found about twenty yards inland of the hut, but quite overgrown with thick grass. A few cabbages still remain, having grown into small bushes with stems several inches thick. Before leaving we deposited in a conspicuous place a bottle containing a statement of our visit to the island by order of the Admiralty, adding thereto in pencil that the hut and boat-house had been visited by Lieutenants Gissing and Hay, of her Majesty's ship Raleigh, and we had not found the statement of the visit of her Majesty's ship Pearl, in 1873, nor the box containing seeds or books."

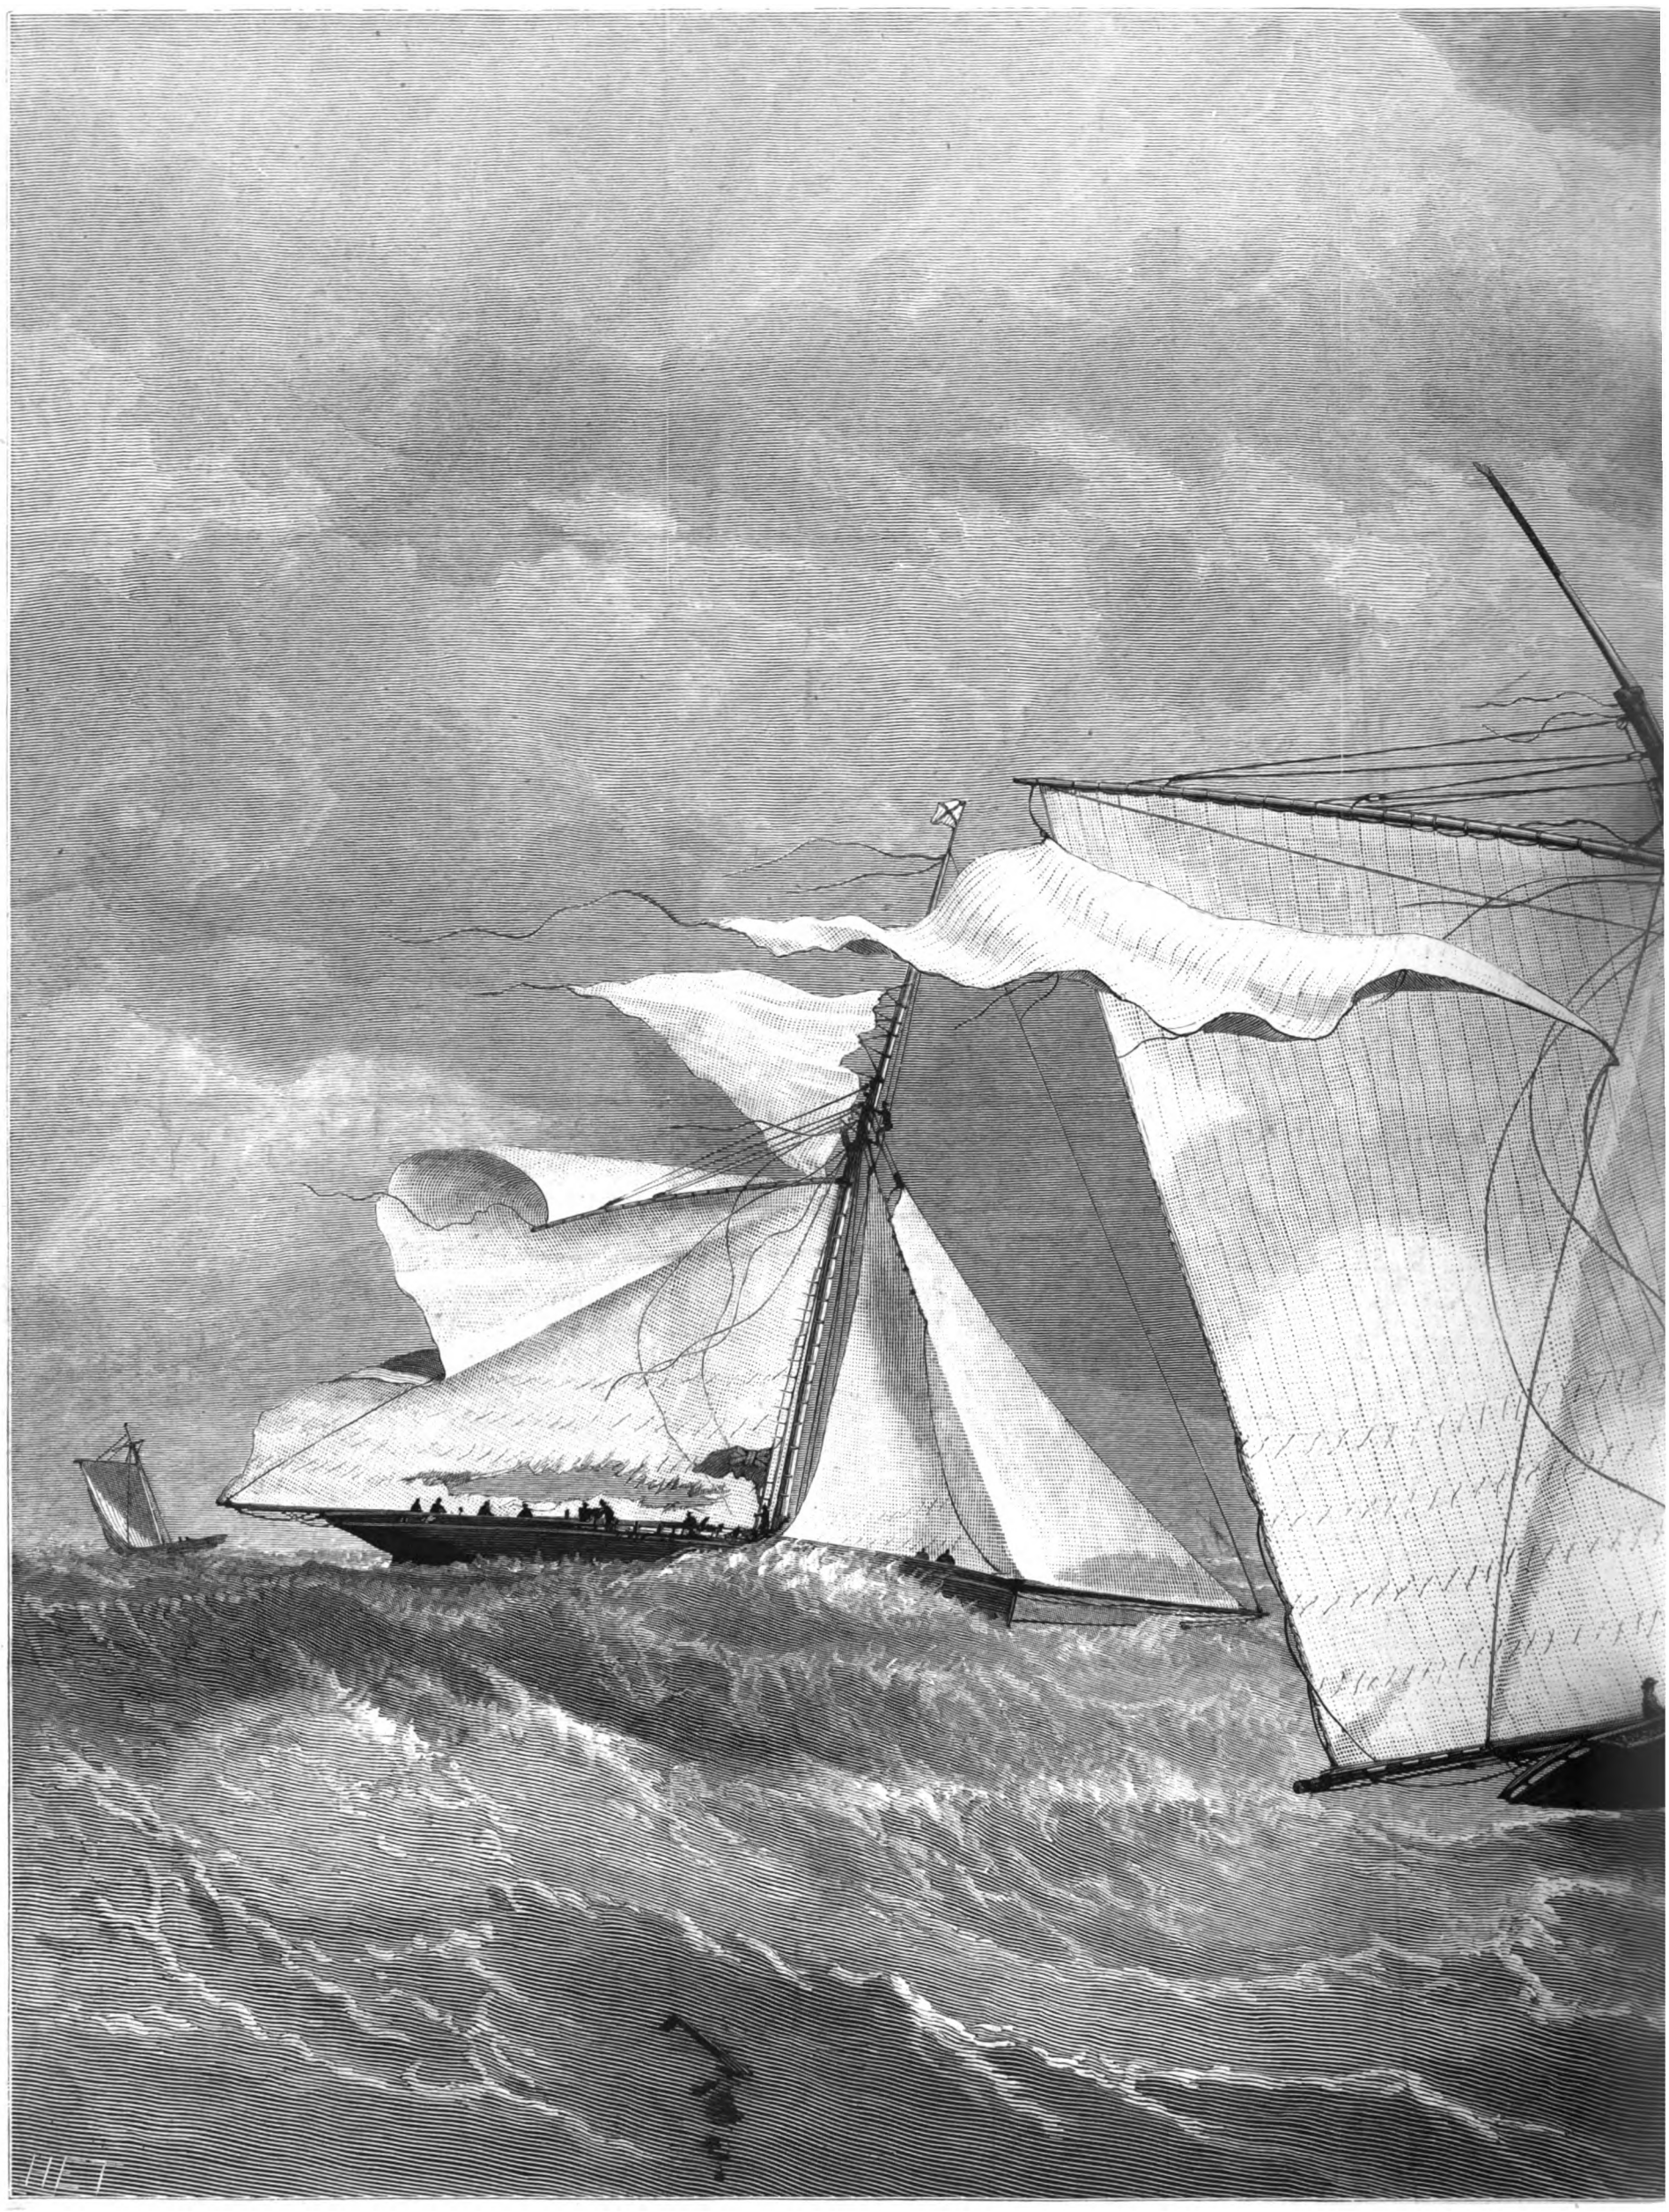
HUTS ON THE ISLAND OF AMSTERDAM, SOUTH INDIAN OCEAN.



PLAN OF THE ISLAND OF AMSTERDAM.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1880.

Are we to annex Candahar, to occupy it for an indefinite period, or to withdraw from it as soon as practicable the forces by which it is now held? Such are the political questions which now appeal to the British mind. The decisive and splendid victories of General Roberts and the flight of Ayoub Khan, with a small remnant of his followers, towards Herat, have suggested for early solution this old problem, now presented under a new aspect. Is it wiser, having regard to the interests and wants of our Indian Empire, to extend its Frontier so as to include within them a considerable portion of Southern Afghanistan, or to shake ourselves clear of all entanglements in the country alluded to, and retire within the territory that used to be regarded as safe from all probable invasion? Of course, there are two sides to the question offering itself for consideration, and it would be puerile to deny that high authorities and powerful influences are brought to bear on each of them, with a view to the ultimate disposal of the matter. The facts, as they stand, leave us at liberty to do what, on the whole, we may regard as best fitted to promote the stability and prosperity of our Indian Empire. Our reputation in the East is as safe as it is ever likely to be. For aught that appears, we have made no engagements which would prevent our adopting whatever policy may best commend itself to our judgment. Our hands are free, or may easily be made so; and there is no imperative necessity to coerce us to a decision, either on this side or on that. But there cannot be a doubt that any decision must be a critical one, drawing after it very important consequences, and entailing responsibilities both upon the Government at home and upon that of India, the entire breadth of which it would, perhaps, be impossible to measure.

Let us try and estimate the force of the arguments presented on each side of the case. By those who demur to the annexation of Candahar to the Indian Empire, such considerations as the following have been strongly urged:—What right have we at Candahar? What justification, except that of superior might, can the Indian Government plead before the world to possess itself of the territory which it is asked to annex? Have the people of that district signified their wish that we should govern them? Is there any special aptitude in the benevolent despotism of India to conciliate the goodwill of Afghan Tribes? Has any considerable party made overtures in this direction? or is the convenience (assuming it to be such) of the Government of India to be deliberately set down as identical with the demands of justice or the existence of international right? That is the first query to be answered. The next is, supposing it to be right, is it expedient in the interests of either Afghanistan or India? In some respects, no doubt, the first might profit by an affirmative decision. Life and property might, after a while, become more secure. Trade might flow more abundantly, to and fro, in well-established channels, and natural resources might be more freely developed than heretofore. But the Afghan nature is not likely to be essentially changed for generations to come, and, if history be consulted, overpowering physical might has never conspicuously succeeded in transforming national and moral defects into virtues. As to India, the possession of Candahar, and such portion of South Afghanistan as would necessarily be held with it, would be an enormous drain upon the means of that Dependency—and what for? Candahar is said to be the gate of India. Through it Russia would have to make her way should she ever venture upon a hostile invasion. Well, upon the military elements of the question we cannot presume to speak. Judgment has been given on the one side as well as on the other, whether it is better to meet a foe in advance or to wait for him on your own ground is not to be determined upon abstract reasons, but upon the circumstances which generate, and attach themselves to, each individual case. It is the contention of those who condemn the annexation of Candahar that nothing material can be gained by pushing the Indian frontier into the heart of Afghan territory, and that, even if it could, "the game is not worth the candle."

The truth is, that the juxtaposition of civilisation and barbarism, or even semi-barbarism, is almost invariably followed, in whatever quarter of the globe it may take place, by similar results. We have seen it exemplified in India, in South Africa, in Central Asia, and in the United States of America. There is no one to lay a sufficiently restraining hand upon a civilised Power in such circumstances, and to say to it with a prevailing voice "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther." If British authority take possession of Candahar, it will not stay its advance at that point. No one may intend to move further forward, but events will necessitate such a movement. Now, neither India nor the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland could long afford a perpetual extension of its frontier. Each has upon its hands enough, we might almost say more than enough, to fill them; each may be described as pressing upon the outer limit of danger; each is throwing more strength than it can well spare towards the extremities of its Dominion; and increase of territory, so far from adding strength to it, rather disperses it. Our work will soon overtax our energies. This, at all events, is the peril against which we have to guard at present. The Nemesis of physical conquest is that it must repeat almost incessantly its expenditure of labour, wealth, and life, until it succumbs to mere exhaustion. The disposition of this country at present appears to be to live within the boundaries it has acquired, and not to enlarge them unless compelled to do so by a visible and almost irresistible necessity. Slowly, it may be, but surely, we cannot but think, the nation is beginning to feel the want, not of wider physical limits, but of fuller moral development. Whether it will prove itself competent to regulate its own destinies in this respect remains to be seen. If it be, it will have to attest the truth in this generation. Our hope is that it will not show itself inferior to the exigence which events have imposed upon it. Justice is assumed to be the chief aim of its policy; may justice rule its determinations in all its relations to other political communities, not excepting Afghanistan!

MR. GLADSTONE'S THANKS.

The following letter from Mr. Gladstone has been received by Mr. Cowan, Beeslack, Chairman of the Midlothian Liberal Association:—

10, Downing-street, Whitehall, Sept. 9, 1880.

My dear Mr. Cowen,—A short time ago you forwarded to me a resolution of the executive committee of the Liberal Association for Midlothian, which congratulated me on my recovery from a severe illness, and expressed a desire that I should henceforward spare myself as much as possible in the discharge of my official duties.

I made at once a brief acknowledgment of this resolution, but I am desirous, now that I have been able to resume the active and regular transaction of business, to put upon paper in a more full and regular manner my warm thankfulness for the cordial and considerate feeling thus exhibited towards me by and on behalf of those who conferred upon me the distinction of returning me to Parliament.

I have a further object in view, which this letter enables me to gain. It is that of publicly expressing my hearty gratitude to all those who—in this and other nations, in every position of life, and lastly, but not least, I am thankful to say from every section of political feeling and opinion among my countrymen—have been pleased to express a kindly sympathy in my illness and a sincere pleasure at my recovery.

If I do not dwell in greater detail upon the warmth, number, and variety of these manifestations—which, in truth, took me by surprise—it is only because I fear that my yielding to such an impulse might wear the appearance of egotism; but the recollection of such generous feeling can never be effaced, and will, I hope, both cheer and guide me in the future.

Believe me, sincerely yours, W. E. GLADSTONE.

The Premier left London yesterday week on a visit to the Earl of Rosebery at Mentmore. On Monday evening about half-past seven he arrived at Chester, accompanied by Mrs. Gladstone. Although, in compliance with the right hon. gentleman's wish, there was no organised reception, a number of persons were assembled at the station and cheered Mr. Gladstone on his alighting from the train, and subsequently attended him as he walked through the city to call on the Bishop. After leaving the Bishop's palace, Mr. Gladstone walked to Hawarden Castle, a distance of eight miles, whither Mrs. Gladstone proceeded by train.

Lady Burdett-Coutts has given a second donation of £100 to the Open-Air Mission.

Her Majesty approves, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, of a pension of £500 a year being granted from the Civil List to Lady Stratford de Redcliffe and her unmarried daughters, with the benefit of survivorship, in consideration of the long and highly distinguished public service of the late Lord Stratford de Redcliffe.

In connection with the Irish agrarian agitation another landlord has been shot at. Mr. C. W. Stoughton, an extensive landowner in North Kerry, was sitting, with his daughter, in the drawing-room of his house, near Ballynoe, on Friday night, the 10th inst., when a pistol was fired at him through the window. The bullet smashed a wine-glass on the table.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

Following closely on the erection at Blois of the statue of old Dr. Denis Papin, who did invent the Digester and the safety-valve, and did not invent the steam-engine, has come the installation (it would be as well, perhaps, to allow that terribly overworked word "inauguration" to take an autumnal holiday), at Clermont-Ferrand, in the department of the Puy-de-Dôme, of a statue of the renowned mathematician and theologian Blaise Pascal, who died in 1662 in his thirty-ninth year. But for the cruel shears of the Fates, Newton, Wren, Harvey, Boyle—all the egregissimi ed illustrissimi of the Royal Society in its early and palmy Caroline days—might have known the wondrous geometric genius whom Bayle (in his "Critical Dictionary") calls "one of the brightest spirits this world ever produced."

Do you know Clermont-Ferrand (the Clarus Mons of the Romans)? It has been called "the City in Perpetual Half-Mourning," for the materials of which most of the houses are built is the grey and black stone of the Volvic; and the town itself is surrounded by an amphitheatre of dark grey mountains. Clarus Mons, indeed! The ancient capital of Auvergne would be more appropriately styled Montenegro.

The streets of Clermont-Ferrand, as you ascend them, are like ladders with the rungs very wide apart. Those thoroughfares which you descend are like cataracts. This topographical "up-and-downism" is picturesque, but somewhat fatiguing; and if the roofs of the houses of Clermont-Ferrand were only of tin the place would remind you strongly of that most precipitous of American cities, Quebec, where, as non-natural historians are well aware, there are two distinct breeds of cab-horses—one with their fore legs shorter than their hind legs (like kangaroos), for going up-hill; and another with hind legs shorter than their fore legs (like giraffes) for coming down hill.

Still, Clermont-Ferrand must not be spoken of with disrespect. It is, like Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, a "Monumental City," and boasts sculptured or graphic memorials of General Desaix, the hero of Marengo, of the illustrious Fléchier, Bishop of Nimes and author of "Les Grands Jours d'Auvergne" (a kind of Special Commission of Assize dispatched from Paris in Louis XIV.'s time in order to teach the Auvergnat grands seigneurs that they could no longer be permitted to murder, plunder, and torture their vassals with impunity); of Jacques Delille, the translator of Virgil (who persisted in retaining in his version of the Æneid the four apocryphal (?) "Ille ego qui quondam, &c.," which Spenser has paraphased in his prologue to the "Faerie Queene") and of the great French painter Girodet-Trioson, whose outline illustrations of Anacreon almost rival the renowned Homeric drawings of John Flaxman in beauty of composition and intensity of classic feeling.

Mem.: Among mathematicians the fame of Pascal is doubtless as bright as ever it was; and those who are not versed in exact science must continue to marvel at the precocious genius who, at twelve, was solving problems in Euclid without ever having seen "Euclid's Elements," who wrote a treatise on Conic Sections when he was sixteen, to the almost incredulous astonishment of Descartes; and who, before he was twenty-five, had carried out to demonstration the conjectures of Torricelli as to the equilibrium of liquids, and the weight of the atmosphere. Pascal's sublimely noble "Pensées" must also continue to find attentive and reverent readers both in England and on the Continent. But as to the "Provincial Letters"? Have you read those satirical exercitations lately? And if you have done so, is it high treason to hint that the poignant diatribes of "Louis de Montalte" (the satirist's pseudonym) have grown rather wearisome reading. There must come a period, "Junius" warns us, when "the force and direction of personal satire shall be no longer understood." That which he said of particulars may often apply to generals. Do you care much now, about analyses of Popinion de Captan, and bantering disquisitions upon Don Escobar's casuistry as to whether it be lawful to kill a man who has given you a box on the ear?

I have seen the second livraison of the sumptuous "Art de la Mode," which, from the point of view of being a "fashion book" from which milliners and dressmakers can work, pleases me no better than did the first number of this handsome but somewhat pretentious publication, the leading pictorial attraction of which for September is an immense aquatint or autotype sepia drawing by M. Détaille of a mounted standard-bearer of cuirassiers. C'est beau; mais ce n'est pas la Mode.

Among the really modish diagrams, however, I am glad to recognise the now fashionable ladies' long glove, polychromatically crossed-barred in curious fashion. The Americans call these fantastic things "barber-pole stocking gloves." On the other hand, I learn from the San Francisco News Letter that hose are being worn "in which the nerves and veins are meanderingly traced, after the manner of an anatomical drawing." Civilisation is progressing; and the inventiveness of the Caucasian is not played out, "Qu'avez vous inventé, Gualches!" Voltaire indignantly asked of his countrymen. Well; they have invented the "barber-pole stocking glove;" and the Americans have improved on it in the "anatomical drawing stocking." But we men-folk have no right to protest. Thirty years ago, did not the "gents" of the period (there are no "gents" now) delight in shirt fronts and cuffs embellished with the effigies of death's heads, ballet-girls, and racehorses?

What is the matter with Mr. W. Cave Thomas? Is it the recent undue prolongation of the Session, or the deplorable condition of Covent Garden Market, or the (apparently) interminable proceedings of the Portsmouth Court-Martial on the Wimbledon marking scandal, that have embittered Mr. Thomas's views of things, and incited a most distinguished painter, a profound judge, and an experienced teacher of art to write an acid letter to the Times in which he denies that the existence of public museums of art is of vital importance to the development of national taste and rational art, and in which he asserts that "the establishment of museums of art is quite a modern fashion and craze." "It is a mistake," goes on Mr. Thomas in another part of his letter, which is too long to quote in its entirety, "to do much for people in the way of teaching. We do not want art museums at everybody's door. Let the public, as of old, learn in a great measure to seek their knowledge under some degree of difficulty, and there will be the more likelihood of their obtaining it and making the best use of it." By a parity of reasoning, dear Sir, the best way to educate the people would be to make Board Schools fewer in number and much more difficult of access.

I think that I had once the honour to meet Mr. W. Cave Thomas, and with much sympathetic deference (I was a raw lad at the time) listen to his wise and pregnant remarks on the lamentable want of public patronage for Art in England. It was a great many years ago; but it should have been only twenty; and I ought to have met Mr. Thomas on the Catskill Mountains, where he was playing ten pins with Hendrik Hudson and his demon crew and quaffing whisky from a magic keg: the liquor being largely diluted with Batley's solution of opium. And now, seemingly, Mr. Thomas has just woke up, and as a Sleeper Awakened scatters broadcast denunciations on the Art Museums, which I hope to see increase and multiply by tenfold ere I go.

Nevertheless, I thoroughly agree with the writer of the acid letter in the Times when he says that municipalities would do well to call in living painters and sculptors to decorate monumental public buildings. Mr. J. C. Horsley said something to the same effect some time ago; and his appeal was especially addressed to the great City Companies. Our Railway Companies might well take a hint in the same direction. You happy ones (or have-been happy ones) who are returning from your autumnal outings in Italy and Switzerland, tell me, have you not gazed with admiration, mingled perhaps with a little shame, at the magnificent fresco paintings with which the Lombardo-Venetian Railway Company have decorated the waiting-rooms of their station at Milan? What has been done at the new railway terminus at Rome is unknown to me. I have not visited the Eternal City since I entered it through the Porta Pia in the wake of the Italian army in 1870. Our English railway termini are, architecturally, the handsomest in the world; but the decorations of their interiors are, as a rule, miserably mean and tasteless.

I usually notice that when any of my correspondents have anything spiteful or anything arrogant to say (the number of such correspondents is, I am grateful to remember, exceedingly small) they write on postcards, and anonymously. Referring to a haphazard assemblage of books for "general" reading which I lately suggested, an anonymous and postcardial person writes:—

> Have you clean forgotten "Plutarch's Lives," "Butler's Analogy," and that glorious English classic, "The Poetry of the Antijacobin"? I should be sorely sorry to part with "Hallam's Literature of Europe," or Izaac Taylor's "Words and Places" from my shelves; would you not miss them likewise? I hope you will give addenda to your I.L.N. list. F. P.

I beg respectfully to state that I do not consider "Butler's Analogy" a work for "general" reading. I have also to state that I have not "clean forgotten" either "Plutarch's Lives;" or, for the matter of that, the writings (on Politeness) of Lord Chesterfield. The gentleman has evidently "clean" misunderstood the meaning of the paragraph in last week's "Echoes." I had no idea of importing the catalogue of a whole library into my columns; and I specifically mentioned only "a few books" which I kept on my shelves "close at hand." I happen to work in a room walled in on three sides and two thirds by some three thousand books, irrespective of the volumes and papers which litter the table, the chairs, and the floor; and, had I proceeded to give an inventory of all the books that I love, the general body of my readers would have risen in revolt against me; denunciations would have poured in from the Great Salt Lake Valley and indignant protests from the Straits of Malacca.

Nor (very respectfully again) do I consider the "Poetry of the Anti-Jacobin" to be "a glorious English classic." The droll, sparkling, ill-natured versicles penned by "Mr. Pitt's clever young men" are excellent fooling; but as literary productions they are not superior to the "Rejected Addresses" (those diverting satires on the Jingoism of the period), and they are certainly inferior to the Thackeray "Policeman X" ballads in Punch. The Anti-Jacobin lyrics are all underlaid by a sneering contempt for the working classes and a fierce denial of popular rights. The best of the series is the "Needy Knife-Grinder," the diction of which is in parts as coarse as Peter Pindar's; and the most significant commentaries on the spirit and moral of the Needy Knife-Grinder are the existing French Republic and English Parliamentary Reform.

The dramatic critic of the World, speaking of the approaching revival (vide "Play Houses") of the "Corsican Brothers" at the Lyceum, asks Mr. Irving why the playbill should describe the play as a "legendary drama." "So far as I know," continues the critic, "it has no other foundation than the fiction of Alexandre Dumas the Elder." Oh! Mr. Critic. Oh! Mr. "D. C." Surely you must have heard that while the vendetta episode in Alexander the Great's romance of "Les Frères Corses" is Alexander's own, so far as an aspect of manners which have formed part and parcel of Corsican life from time immemorial can be called original, the real plot, the real foundation, the real pivot on which the highly "legendary" interest of this gruesome drama turns in the identity of thought, feeling, sympathy, and sensation between the twins, is based on an incident in the career of a person still living. Two years ago I had the honour to dine, at the Café Anglais, Paris, in the company of one of the Real Corsican Brothers, and I heard him relate, with enthralling dramatic effect, the strange chain of events in his own life, which suggested the "Frères Corses" to Dumas Père. The Real Corsican Brother is a renowned member of the French Legislature, and his name is Louis Blanc.

A courteous and kindly correspondent, "A. L. E.," writing from Somerton, Somerset, tells me that he has always understood that the whimsical term "parson-cooler" was first applied to the chalice-shaped stone pulpit in the pretty little church of Charlton Mackrell (West Charlton), and that the author of the bon mot was no less a jester than the Rev. Sydney Smith, who ended his days in the Somersetshire incumbency of Combe Florey (pretty name!). The pulpit in question, continues my correspondent, much resembles an old-fashioned wine-cooler; but its outline is much more graceful.

Mem.: Unless I am mistaken, I first heard the expression "parson-cooler" applied to a pulpit by that distinguished archæologist Lord Talbot de Malahide at a meeting in the Jerusalem Chamber of the Westminster Chapter-House Committee, close upon twenty years ago. Possibly, his Lordship had heard the mot from Sydney Smith himself.

My correspondent from Somerton incidentally glances at a few distinguished wits and humourists who were clergymen; citing, among others, Rabelais, Swift, Sterne, Sydney Smith, and Barham ("Tom Ingoldsby"). The catalogue could be widely extended. The names of Hugh Latimer, Dr. Donne, Bishop Still, Bishop Hall, South, Bishop Samuel Wilberforce, Archdeacon Paley (more of a rough humourist than a wit) the Abbé Prévost (and a whole host of Abbés), Talleyrand (he was once Bishop of Autun), Rowland Hill, Dupanloup (he said innumerable good things), Father Paul Sarpi ("Stilo di Roma:" he murmured when he was stabbed by a Jesuit emissary), and "Father Prout" (the Rev. Francis Mahony) will at once suggest themselves without our turning to a biographical dictionary. Crabbe was a humourist, I take it, but scarcely a wit. Walcot (Peter Pindar) was a gross farceur—a kind of poetical Paul de Kock. Churchill was a savage wit. The wittiest clergyman in the United States is, to my mind, a certain Professor Swarg, of Chicago: and let me not forget that kind, gentle humourist, the Rev. Dr. Bellows, of New York.

From the "Junior Liberal Club, Birmingham," H. K. A. writes me that Mr. A. C. Selous's drama of "Æsop; or the Golden Calf" was produced in the go-ahead Midland metropolis, under the management of the lamented Mr. Charles Calvert. "It is a well-written drama," continues H. K. A., "and well worthy to be rescued from its present ignored condition." Another correspondent, from Boston, in Lincolnshire, observes that when Mr. Selous's drama was brought out at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, Birmingham, two years ago, it was called "Æsop; or the Golden Bubble."

From the Petersburg Club in the old State of Virginia, U.S.A., a valued friend, "J. D. Y.," sends me a copy of verses said to have been written by the late Tyrone Power, the Irish comedian, on the wall of Old Blandford Church, Petersburg, which was built so long ago as 1735, but is now (War, not Time, the cause) a shapeless ruin. The lines were found on the wall the day after Power's visit to the church. There are four stanzas, but I am only able to quote the first one:—

> Thou art crumbling to the dust, old pile,
> Thou art hastening to thy fall;
> And round thee in thy loneliness
> Clings the ivy to the wall.
> Thy worshippers are scatter'd now,
> Who knelt before thy shrine,
> And silence reigns where anthems rose
> In days of "Auld Lang Syne."

My correspondent wishes to know if these lines are original I should say that they are so, seeing that Tyrone Power wa possessed of considerable literary ability. I gave his book o American travels away to a friend, else I would refer to it, and see if he has anything to say about Old Blandford Church, Petersburg.

Mem.: There is an odd suggestion of the footlights on the last line of the last stanza, of which I may just quote the conclusion:—

> How would our very souls be stirred
> To meet the earnest gaze
> Of the lovely and the beautiful,
> The Light of Other Days.

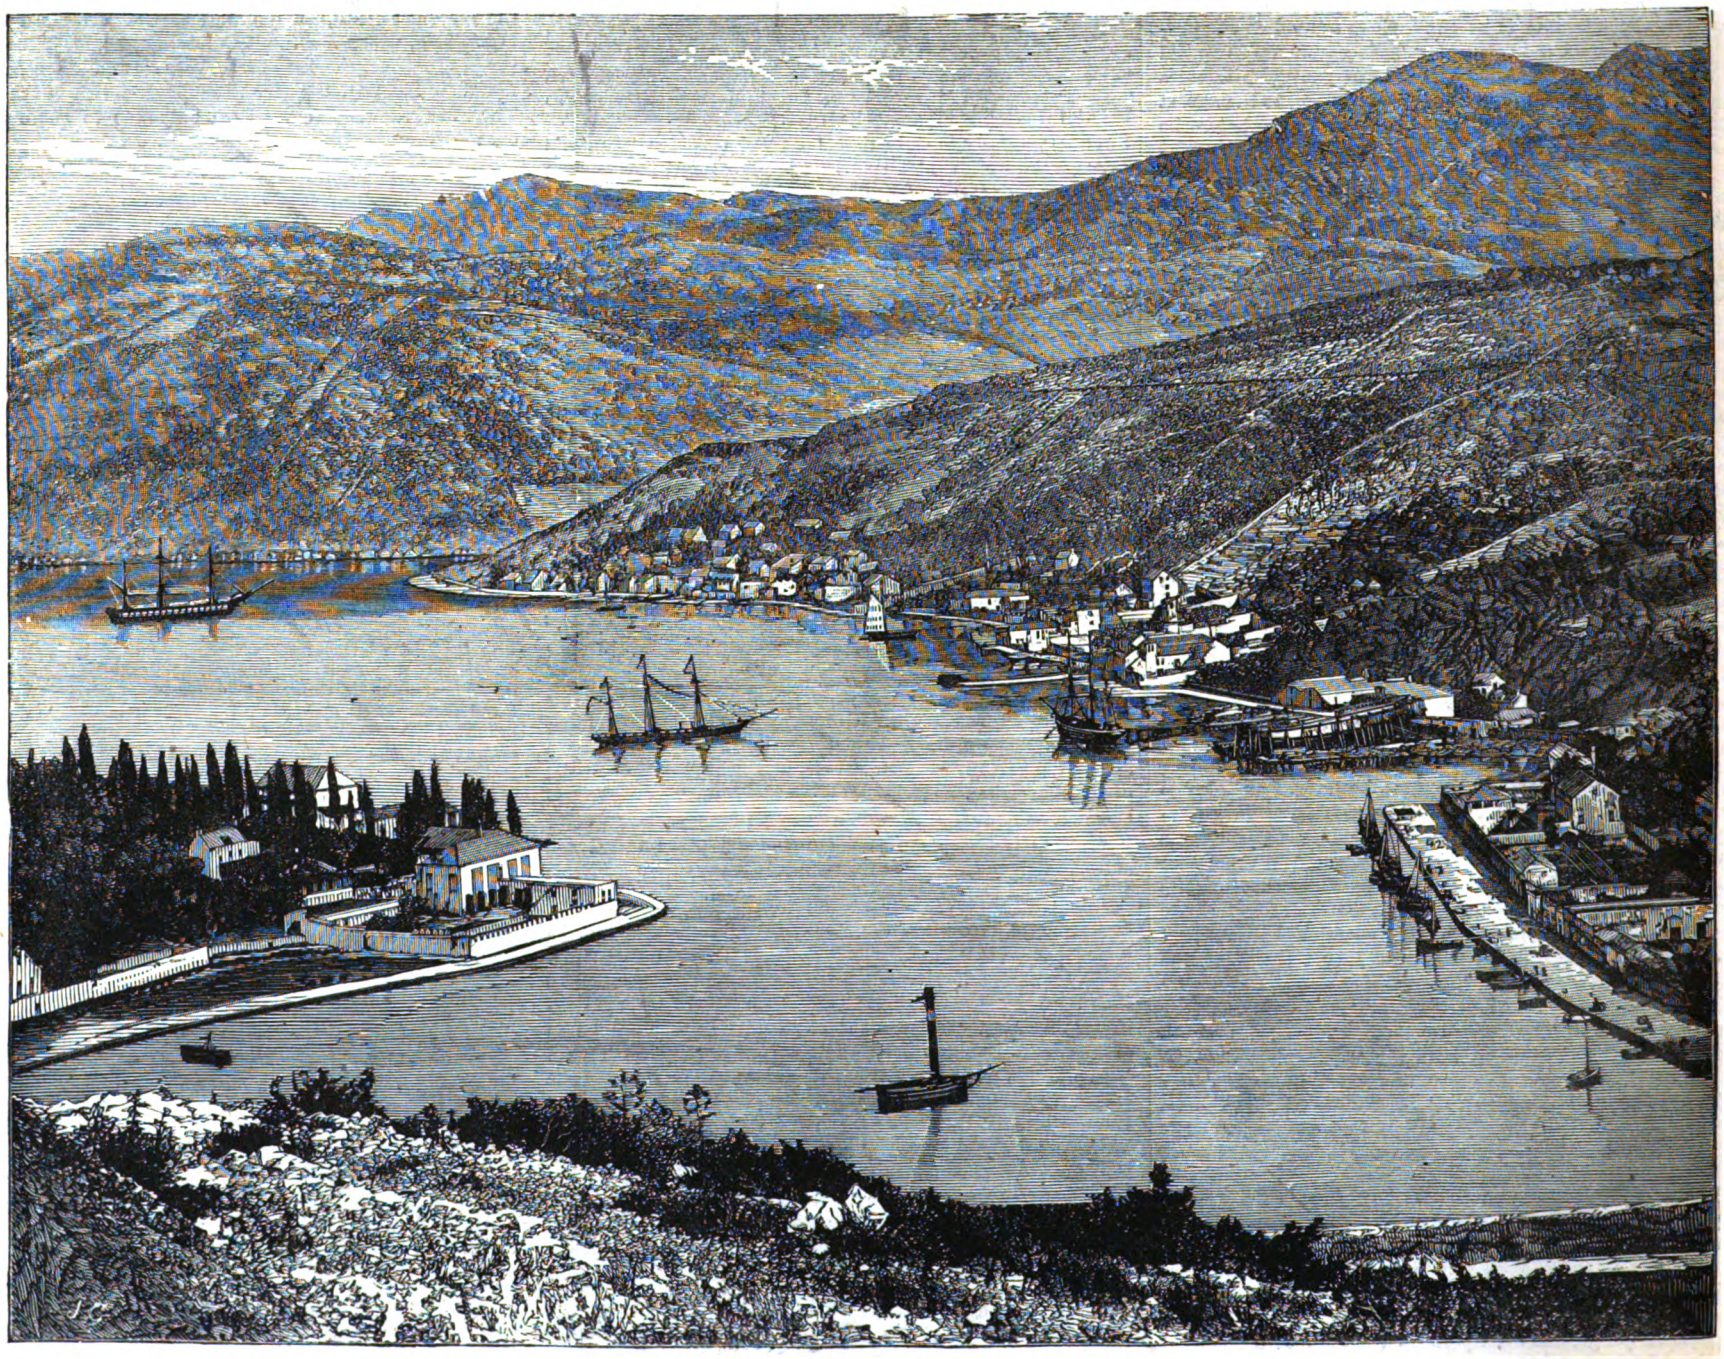
The "Light of Other Days" was, as everybody knows, the exquisitely melodious ballad sung by the late Henry Phillips in Balfe's opera of the "Maid of Artois," produced at Drury Lane about '35 or '36. Malibran was the heroine—and what a heroine! A few years afterwards her part was charmingly sustained at the selfsame Old Drury by the still living Madam Anna Bishop. I wonder whether Tyrone Power was thinking of Henry Phillips and his "Light of Other Days" when he wrote those verses (if he did write them) on the wall of Old Blandford Church.

Mem.: The words of Balfe's ballad, which was ground on every organ in London during many months, were excruciatingly parodied in a burlesque by Mr. Gilbert à Beckett, produced at the St. James's. I can only remember (and that faultily) a scrap of the first verse—



> The Coat of Other Days has faded,
> And all its glory 's past,
> Since dust with little specks hath shaded
> The gloss too bright to last.

In mine old age I have found favour in the sight of the ladies. Both "Myra" and "Sylvia" have written me most gratifying letters thanking me for having drawn attention to their "fashion" journals in a recent paragraph about the Paris "Art de la Mode." But my dear Mesdames or Mesdemoiselles there was nothing whatever to thank me for. I am as constant to "Myra" as I am to "Sylvia;" but I also adore "Le Follet," I dote on Madame Marie Schild's "Journal des Modes," and I revel in the "Ladies' Gazette of Fashion," "La Mode Parisienne," and a dozen more periodicals of the same class, which I regularly take in. I have no heart: I am only a collector. At the same time, I renew my thanks to my fair correspondents, not wholly forgetting the possible contingency of "Myra" being a barrister of seven years standing, and "Sylvia" an ex-captain of heavy dragoons. TRANSPORTING SUPPLIES FOR MONTENEGRIN TROOPS AT PODGORITZA.

Our special Correspondent, Mr. Athol Mayhew, writes upon the subject of some of our Montenegrin Illustrations as follows:—"None but those who have travelled over the barren peaks and bluffs and spurs of that rocky region can possibly conceive the difficulties of transport in a country like Montenegro; where there are no carts, by reason of there being no roads; where the mountain tracks ascend by mere serpentine fissures in the cliff's side, or descend in perpendicular 'shoots' like dry cataract-courses. But the reader may form a very fair idea both of a Montenegrin highway and of the characteristic manner in which the men employ their womankind as pack-animals, for the conveyance of merchandise in peace, or of military baggage in war, by glancing at Mr. Woodville's drawing of transporting supplies for the troops at Podgoritza.

"If I cannot say that the 'beer and skittles' of life are reserved only for the men in Montenegro, it is only because malt beverages and nine-pins have not, as yet, been included among the national pastimes. But if I may be allowed to substitute 'raki and tobacco' for our insular symbols for infinite enjoyment, then the alacrity with which a Montenegrin will take any given quantity of the former and consume endless funti of the latter, shows that he is keenly alive to recreative existence. Truth to tell, although he has a prodigious appetite for fighting, his stomach for any other form of hard work is, so far as I have observed, delicate in the extreme. As a soldier he is an overwhelming mass of vitality; and, while in quest of Turkish heads, the tough, sinewy fibre of the man is unconquered by hardship—his stalwart frame being apparently impervious to the vicissitudes of war and insensible to hunger, thirst, exposure, or fatigue. Regarded as a civilian, however, he is a conspicuous failure. Save the profession of arms, he has neither trade nor calling. As the last trump of war fades from his ears, so his occupation vanishes into thin air. Henceforth he becomes as the lily of the field—though hardly as white. He toils not, neither does he spin. For himself, he takes no interest in agricultural pursuits. His thoughts are bent more upon storing up an abundance of cartridges than raising a heavy crop of potatoes. The utmost manual exercise he will permit himself is the tillage of such scraps of land as he can find in the hollows and basins of his barren rocks; but he handles his Wenzel rifle far more dexterously than he does the plough, and his eye is truer at sighting the long barrel of a "Gasser" revolver than making a straight furrow. For the rest, the noble warrior, under his pastoral aspect, will sit upon an elevated stone smoking for hours together, complacently superintending nature, whilst his children tend his sheep, and his wife works herself into premature old age in the potato-patch, or hastens the partition of body and soul hoeing around the Indian corn. He rises with the sun and applies himself strictly to idleness for the day. At night, he rolls himself in his long woollen struche—indifferent as to whether he reposes under his own rafters, or upon the hillside where night has overtaken him—and during the relaxation of sleep fortifies himself afresh to resume the inertia of the morrow.

"But peace in Montenegro is generally as brief as an autumn holiday, and it is no exaggeration to say that for the last 500 years wars have been as frequently recurring there as quarter-day with us. In this fact must be found the excuse for a country which at present is destitute of all trade, commerce, and industry, and at the solitary factory in the Principality at Cettinje, manufacturing only cartridges!

"Flint and steel seldom clash without flashing fire; and it argues well for the tact and toleration of Prince Nikita's Government that the only spot upon the borders of Montenegro and Albania where the white-coated Tzernagorians and the kilted Arnauts meet and rub shoulders without making the sparks fly is in Podgoritza. In a former article I have said that the town has been only recently annexed to Montenegro, and that it is, both from its position and its size, by far the most important centre in the Principality. At present, it is true, the place is rather perilously exposed to assault and battery from Turkish artillery; but should the Montenegrins receive the broad plain, which stretches from the town away southwards, by way of Tusi, as far as Helm, on the lake of Scutari, in compensation for the territary at Gusinje and Plava, the safety of the place will be assured. In this event—I have it on the authority of M. Popovics, the Prince's secretary—the capital will be removed from its present airy perch among the barren rocks at Cettinje and become permanently located upon the fertile land at Podgoritza. For the nonce, however, and until the frontier question has been settled, the latter place is neither a safe nor a desirable locale for any executive save the Ministry of War."

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Sept. 14.

Although we are only in the middle of the Parliamentary recess the tide of political discussion is running very high. As long as the Chambers were sitting events were as dull as a London Sunday; but hardly had the deputies arrived in their respective departments than the storm broke out—first of all on the question of the execution of the religious decrees of March 29, and secondly on the question of the naval demonstration. The affair of the decrees concerning the unauthorised religious congregations is still enveloped in mystery; and, as far as one can judge from enigmatical and semi-official utterances of various newspapers, a Ministerial crisis is imminent. In France Ministerial crises are, by-the-way, in a chronic state of imminency. Since my last letter M. de Freycinet has been disowned by Gambetta, indirectly, and by means of a third person, M. Guichard, his intimate friend, who has written a letter to M. Devès, president of the Republican union, demanding the immediate meeting of the bureau of that group. M. Devès has replied likewise by a letter, which has been published in the newspapers. All this may seem very obscure to the outside observer. It is obscure in reality, unless you see that behind M. Guichard is M. Gambetta and behind M. Devès is M. de Freycinet. The upshot of it all is that M. Gambetta wishes that there should be talk of the meeting of the Chambers, but that they shall not meet, and that he should seem to wish for the execution of the decrees without ever having them executed. It is one of the manœuvres of opportunism to conciliate public opinion. At the bottom of his heart, M. Gambetta doubtless wishes that M. Jules Ferry had never persuaded him to support the religious decrees. Meanwhile, he throws over M. de Freycinet to gain time until the Chambers meet and pass a new and comprehensive law regulating all kinds of associations, both civil and religious.

The naval demonstration against Turkey is considered by the Radicals not merely as ridiculous but as a violation of the Constitution, the Chambers having exclusive right of deciding questions of peace and war. It is announced that if Turkey refuses to obey, like the lapin qui rebiffe, the French will not take part in any hostile measures. Then what is the good of the demonstration. The French Commander will say to Turkey, "Now, you must obey our injunctions, or else par la morbleu! la tudieu! la palsambleu! I will show you a move that you never can have expected." "What?" asks Turkey. "I shall just go home quietly, for I do not care two straws."

Naturally, in presence of all this hubbub, there is much conjecture as to who will replace M. de Freycinet at the head of the Foreign Affairs. M. Challemel-Lacour is spoken of, with M. Ferry as Prime Minister and M. Paul Bert as Minister of Public Instruction. M. Floquet has been speechifying at Havre, with a view, doubtless, to a portfolio.

All this is, of course, mere talk and conjecture; but as everybody is discussing such matters, and as nobody knows the secret of the riddle, it is my duty to record simply what I hear. M. Grévy is expected at Paris this week, and a grand Ministerial Council will meet and, doubtless, pour oil upon the troubled waters of public opinion.

Paris is gradually waking up from its summer lethargy. The leaves are turning yellow, and the late loiterers in the Bois de Boulogne begin to feel the evenings growing cooler. Soon the open-air concerts in the Champs Elysées will be deserted, and Paris will settle down to its gay and cosy winter life. The theatres, as usual, defer night after night the production of their new pieces; but by the end of the week all of them will be open. Last night MM. Briet and Delcroix invited the press to visit the restored and redecorated Palais-Royal Theatre, which is now certainly one of the prettiest in Paris. The idea of offering a soirée to the press is an innovation, and an ingenious one. How can a critic speak ill of a theatre whose managers offer him ices and champagne and a fine instrumental concert by the Tsiganes? When I saw Christine Nilsson in a baignoire, I thought that we were to have a vocal concert also, the more so when I discovered Thérésa in an avant-scène opposite. The theatre has been very beautifully redecorated, and in the foyer M. Bayard has painted a frieze in which he has represented all the famous actors of the Palais Royal from the days of its founder, Mdlle. Montansier, up to the days of the joyous and rubicund D'Aubray. To-night the theatre opens its doors to the public with a revival of "Les Diables Roses" and "Les Deux Chambres," a new piece by Maurice Ordonneau.

The affair of Colonel Jung, about which I sent you some particulars last week, is pursuing its regular course before the tribunal. The charge of betraying War Office papers to Germany brought against the Colonel will be thoroughly investigated. M. de Woestyne has summoned as witnesses General Farre, the Minister of War, Marshal MacMahon, General de Cissey, and the Baronne Kaulla, the wife of General Jung. Colonel Jung is separated from his wife, who is a German lady, known as Baronne Kaulla. When Colonel Jung was taken prisoner at Sedan and sent to a fortress in Germany, it happened that his gaoler was his own brother-in-law. While the matter is sub judice it would be presumptuous to hazard any conjecture as to the real state of the case.

An international postal Congress, under the presidency of the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, M. Cochery, will open in Paris on Oct. 9. The object of the Congress, which will last three weeks, will be to arrange a tariff for an international parcels post.

On Thursday last the Journal Officiel published two decrees touching upon the great question of bringing Central Africa into communication with the civilised world. I have already spoken in a previous letter of the activity of the French in African exploration, and of their desire to take advantage of the position of their colony at Senegal. In Central Africa there are two vast and fertile regions which are placed in a state of complete isolation by their distance from the sea and the difficulty of communications. One of these regions in the southern hemisphere will, perhaps, be some day connected with the Mediterranean by the Nile, with the Indian Ocean by a railway, and with the Atlantic by the Congo. The other region, in our hemisphere, may be connected with the Mediterranean by the proposed Sahara Railway, and with the Atlantic by several proposed lines of railway, one of which would pass through the French colony of Senegal, and put it into communication with the upper basin of the Niger, which is inhabited by independent tribes. This railway from the Atlantic to the upper basin of the Niger was proved to be possible by the explorations of Lieutenant Mage. The decrees which I have mentioned above are to organise expeditions for studying the details of the line, first of all between the upper basin of the Senegal river and the upper basin of the Niger.

The annexation of the Society Islands, which was announced in the Journal Officiel last week, is not viewed here with unmixed satisfaction. The Radicals consider the event as a perpetuation of the arbitrary and proconsular traditions of the Empire, which the principles as well as the interests of the Republic condemn. The annexation practically took place forty years ago, and there is no reason to suppose that the subjects of Pomaré have become subjects of France of their own free will. Henri Rochefort, who knows something about that part of the world, wrote a terrible article on the subject last week. When Cook visited the Tahiti he reckoned the population at 80,000. In 1870 (says Rochefort) the French protectorate, the French missionaries, and the régime imposed by the monks of the Marist order, had reduced the population to 8000; it is now 7000. The Marists have forced the indolent Oceanians to fish for pearls and to make cocoa-nut oil; and it is a significant fact that the fortune of the Marists, who are spread all over Oceania, is estimated at more than thirty-five millions of francs. Under Napoleon III. the French Government Commissioner at Tahiti introduced the guillotine in order to give a fresh impulse to the depopulation of the country.

Amongst the minor events of the week are the opening of the autumn race-meetings at the Bois de Boulogne; the proclamations of the banns of marriage between the sémillante and pétillante Jeanne Samary, of the Comédie-Française, and M. Paul Lagarde; the appearance of a new comic journal, La Silhouette; and of a new two-sous cigar, which differs from the old deux-soutados in being square instead of round.

TAHITI.

Tahiti, or Otaheite, which beautiful island, with its adjacent islands, has just been annexed to France, is the principal of the Society Islands, is situated in the South Pacific, in lat. 17 deg. 29 min. 2 sec. S., and long. 149 deg. 29 min. W., and has been for some time a kind of head-quarters for the French Navy in those seas. It is about 108 miles in circumference and thirty-two miles long, and is described as an elongated range of highland, which, being interrupted in one part, forms an isthmus (submerged at low water) about three miles broad, which connects the two peninsulas. The larger of these is Tahiti proper, while the smaller is named Tairaboo, and both are surrounded by coral reefs. The highest summit in the island is a mountain in the northern part, 8500 feet above sea level; another attaining 6979 feet. From these two peaks ridges diverge to all parts of the coast, throwing off spurs as they descend. The fertile portion of the island lies in the valleys, which are of small extent, and in the plain, which stretches from the seashore to the spurs of the mountains. These produce tropical plants in great abundance and luxuriance. The climate is agreeable, being warm, but not enervating. The natives are a good-humoured, gay, happy, and cheerful people, and are further described as honest, well-behaved, and obliging. They have been converted to Christianity by the labours of missionaries, and there are few of them who cannot both read and write. The island is divided into seven districts, and is the seat of a Supreme Court, consisting of seven Judges, two of whom reside in Eimeo. Several vessels of about 130 tons burden have been built there, which have been employed in the trade to New South Wales, whither they carry sugar, cocoa-nut oil, and arrowroot, the principal productions of the island, and whence they bring back in return hardware, cloths, calicoes, &c. Most of the vessels that visit Tahiti are whalers, though until lately they only averaged less than one hundred annually. Its principal town and port is Papiete, and its estimated population is somewhat over 9000. In 1842 a protectorate was established over Tahiti by France, in virtue of a convention between the then Queen (Pomare) and Admiral Dupetit-Thouars, the Queen and her successors retaining their sovereign rights and also the administration of the country, but the foreign relations of the islands being under the control of the French Government. Up to 1846 a small portion of the natives struggled against this protectorate, but since the population have caused no embarrassment to France, and virtually it has been a French possession since that year.

The returns of emigration from the Mersey, prepared at the Board of Trade offices in Liverpool, show that, large as was the exodus in the month of July, it was nearly equalled by the departures in the past month. The total number of vessels that sailed from Liverpool during August with emigrants was 83, and the total number of persons they carried 15,941. In July last the total departures were 16,248. The increase this year in emigration as compared with last is indicated by the fact that in August, 1879, only 13,588 emigrants sailed, there being thus a balance in favour of the past month of 2353. The detailed returns for August show that 13,454 persons sailed to the United States; 2194 to British North America; 29 to Australia; 102 to South America; 20 to Honolulu; 56 to the East Indies; 14 to the West Indies; 4 to China; and 68 to the West Coast of Africa. The nationalities of the emigrants, so far as could be ascertained, were—English, 8504; Scotch, 187; Irish, 1788; foreign, 4974.

THE NAVAL DEMONSTRATION IN THE ADRIATIC.

Our illustrations of Gravosa and Cattaro, Austrian seaports of the Adriatic Coast, have a special interest connected with the presence this week, at the first-named port, of the combined naval squadrons of the six Great Powers, to enforce upon the Ottoman Government and the Albanians a recent decision of the Conference at Berlin, for the cession of Dulcigno by the Turkish Empire to the Principality of Montenegro.

On Tuesday morning, as we learn by telegraph, the assemblage of the combined squadrons was completed by the arrival of the French ironclads Suffren and Friedland. The whole fleet now in the harbour of Gravosa, which is the larger and deeper harbour of the Austrian port of Ragusa, consists of twenty war-ships, carrying 136 great guns, and manned by crews amounting together to 7300 men. They are British, French, Russian, German, Austrian, and Italian, under the chief command of Vice-Admiral Sir Frederick Beauchamp Seymour. He takes this position as senior naval officer, not as claiming any superiority for Great Britain; and we learn that his authority over the commanders of the foreign squadrons is limited to the technical and maritime operations. In anything of a political or warlike character, he would have to confer with the other Admirals, who would be guided entirely by the instructions of their own respective Governments. It is understood that in no case will any forces be landed from the ships for military operations ashore. Such is the arrangement of this "naval demonstration." A correspondent of the Times at Ragusa, describing the position of the combined fleet, says:—The port of Gravosa resembles a Norwegian fiord in its general aspects. At the northern end it is partly sheltered by the island of Dexa from south-westerly gales. Her Majesty's ships Alexandra and Téméraire, with the gun-vessel Condor and the despatch-boat Helicon, have been moored with hawsers to rocks on shore. South of them are the Russian ships Svetlana and Jemschoug. Beyond are moored in the stream the Austrian ironclad Custozza, next the Italian ironclad Palestro, with the German corvette Victoria. Inshore in Ombla Creek is the Italian ironclad Roma, and in the real port of Gravosa are the Austrian ships Loudon, Prinz Eugen, and Srenyie. Not more than three weeks of weather now remain during which it would be advisable for ironclads to navigate the Adriatic, as the weather breaks up generally in October. The Turks appear to be counting on this, and think that, with a little procrastination, the bad weather will effect the dispersion which international jealousies apparently will not. Another despatch seems to indicate that the bad weather has already begun. It says:—"A tremendous thunderstorm, with violent squalls, burst over the fleet on Saturday night, and the Italian ironclad parted the hawser mooring her to shore and shifted her berth further out on Sunday morning. The British ships are in by far the safest anchorage, in twenty fathoms, with good holding ground." The French ships—namely, the Suffren, the Friedland, and the despatch-boat Hirondelle, have taken up a position next to that of the British squadron.

The bay or inlet of Gravosa, as shown in our Illustration, is landlocked and surrounded by hills, so that it affords a secure harbour, except against a northerly wind, the "Bora," which in the autumn and winter is frequent and extremely violent. This harbour is formed by a hilly and rocky peninsula, which projects two miles from the mainland in a north-westerly direction. The village of Gravosa, at the head of its harbour, is only a mile and a half distant from the town of Ragusa, which is situated on the more open shore to the south-east of Gravosa. The height of Mount Vierna and Mount Petka, in the aforesaid peninsula, with Fort Imperial overlooking both waters, and several other forts and batteries at the entrance to the inlet, afford great facilities for the defence of Gravosa.

As for Ragusa, though anciently of great commercial and political importance, its natural strength is far less considerable. Its roadstead is sheltered by the island of Lacroma, which has some historic and romantic interest as the place where Richard Cœur de Lion, in his return voyage from the Crusades, went ashore and fell into the hands of the Duke of Austria. Ragusa was an independent mercantile Republic, of the Venetian type, during many ages of mediæval history. We gave some Illustrations of the fine old city, which is now sadly decayed, in our publication of Sept. 16, 1876. Its own harbour, not including the adjacent harbour of Gravosa, has only accommodation for small vessels of 200 tons, which quite accounts for the dwindling trade and diminished population, now reduced to six or eight thousand. It is still, however, along with Cattaro, thirty-six miles farther down the seacoast, the chief outlet of products from the Herzegovina, which has lately been annexed, with Bosnia, to the Austrian Empire.

Cattaro, which may possibly be visited by the combined naval squadrons, as it is the port nearest to Montenegro, possesses the best harbour of the Adriatic. This is formed by a winding gulf or inlet, thirty miles long, which presents three basins, with connecting straits, inclosed by protecting hills or mountains. The town is even smaller than Ragusa, but was once a petty commonwealth, which became part of the Republic of Venice in 1420. It was, like Ragusa, taken by the French under Napoleon I., from whom it was taken by England, and was given to Austria at the Congress of Vienna, in 1815.

Dulcigno, which is ninety miles south-east of Ragusa, on the strip of Albanian coast separating the Adriatic Sea from the Lake of Skutari, was captured by the Montenegrins in the late war with Turkey. At the Congress of Berlin, in July, 1878, it was settled by formal treaty that the Sultan should cede to Montenegro the inland districts of Tusi and adjacent valleys, giving access to the navigable lake from the Montenegrin highlands. The execution of this plan has been resisted by the Mussulman Albanians of Skutari, and not less by the Roman Catholic tribes, the Miriditæs and others, inhabiting those border lands. It has consequently been agreed by the Berlin Conference this year, with the assent of the Turkish Government, that, as an alternative, instead of Tusi, the seaport of Dulcigno, which the Montenegrins had relinquished at the peace, shall be ceded to their Principality. The Albanians, however, still threaten resistance, and have taken possession of Dulcigno, with or without the connivance of the Turkish provincial authorities. This is the present difficulty, for which the united naval forces of all Europe have been collected to make a "demonstration." Some further Illustrations of the subject will appear in our next.

The foundation-stone of a new building in course of erection in New Bridge-street, Newcastle, for the new public library, was laid on Monday afternoon by Mrs. H. W. Newton. The lending department of the library, containing 19,783 volumes, was also formally opened by Mr. Alderman Cowen, M.P., the chair being occupied by Mr. H. Newton. After the ceremony the company adjourned to luncheon in the Westgate Assembly Rooms. A crowded public meeting was held in the Townhall in the evening, when Mr. Cowen, M.P., occupied the chair.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

The dramatic world (it is a much larger world than I, who for many years had ceased to be a playgoer, imagined, for the "Playhouses" column bring me nearly as many letters as the "Echoes" do) is in a fever of expectation touching an important dramatic event which is to "come off" on Saturday, the Eighteenth instant: the day of publication of this Journal—when the "legendary" drama of "The Corsican Brothers" is to be revived at the Lyceum, with, of course, Mr. Henry Irving in the characters of Fabien and Louis de' Franchi. It is not precisely accurate to say that "The Corsican Brothers," as altered for the English stage by Mr. Dion Boucicault, is founded upon Dumas' novel of "Les Frères Corses." There was a middle man between the French novelist and the English adapter. Mr. Boucicault's version is a free translation of a melodrama called "Les Frères Corses," which had a long run in Paris, and which was directly founded on the novel. I think that I can speak "by the card" in this matter, since it so chanced that (early in '52, I think) I translated Alexandre Dumas' romance (there is a strange episode in it of a feudal Corsican Baron who keeps a captive lady in a cage by the wayside) for Mr. Pierce, the publisher, of the Strand, and that (in conjunction with my brother) I translated the French melodrama and produced it as "The Corsicans" at the Surrey Theatre, then under the management of Messrs. Shepherd and Creswick. Mr. Creswick played the leading character; but we altered the names as much as we could from those in the Princess's version. The deed of translation from the French was done in the course of a single summer's night (I think we worked from nine p.m. till seven p.m. on the morrow); and within ten days the Surrey piece (the Princess's one had taken many weeks of elaborate preparation) was "out." The scenery was painted by Mr. W. J. Callcott.

Mem.: The famous Masquerade scene in "The Corsican Brothers" was, I believe, entirely Mr. Boucicault's own, and affords only another illustration of his exceptionally keen insight into the requirements of the English stage. The French have been satiated these many years past with theatrical simulations of bals masqués and with real bals masqués to boot; and, unless my memory wofully deceives me, only the box-lobby of the Opera was shown: but it is the gift of Mr. Boucicault, as it was that of Oliver Goldsmith, to touch nothing that he does not adorn. To be sure, he has touched a good many things in his time.

I undertook a few evenings ago a somewhat lengthy pilgrimage to the National Standard Theatre, High-street, Bishopsgate. When I was young we used to speak of the Standard, Shoreditch. It was there, many years since, that I saw certainly the next best to Mrs. Keeley's wonderful impersonation of Jack Sheppard. The Standard Jack (or was it the City of London?) was Mrs. R. Honner. Be it as it may, it was quite another Standard Theatre, of a stall in the auditorium of which I found myself an occupant a week ago. A vast house—so vast as to remind you of one of those immensely roomy theatres on the Rambla at Barcelona—handsomely decorated, with plenty of approaches, wide stone staircases, a spacious vestibule, mirrors, hangings; neat-handed Phyllises in "pinafore" dresses and "Goody Twoshoes," otherwise "Kate Greenaway," caps to conduct you to your seat; and, with smiles as sweet as those of Fielding's Amelia when Captain Booth came home to tea (he always came home to tea), these dainty damsels handed you programmes with embossed edges, redolent of Rimmel. And all this in Shoreditch—I mean in High-street, Bishopsgate.

The performance at the house so excellently conducted by Messrs. J. and E. Douglass was extremely good. First came a drama of the Domestic Affections, called "The Noble Soldier; or, Love in Humble Life;" and after that was given the great legendary drama by Dionysius Briareus Boucicault (who has herein "touched" and adorned Washington Irving), of "Rip van Winkle; or, the Sleep of Twenty Years." Rip was played, and very well played, too, by the American comedian, Mr. J. A. Arnold; and it is extremely embarrassing to remember that he, and, indeed, many other highly efficient Rip van Winkles, can never obtain a full meed of justice from critics who have seen Mr. Joseph Jefferson in the part of the tipsy but tender-hearted slumberer of the Catskills. Fortunately for me, some years have elapsed since I saw Mr. Jefferson in Rip. That accomplished artist and comedian happened to be making one of his professionally triumphant progresses through the States when I was there last year. In fact, for some weeks I may say that I travelled "en sandwich," so to speak, between Mr. Joseph Jefferson and Mr. John MacCulloch. The comedian was generally a city before me and the tragedian a city behind me. Now and again we "collided" and "telescoped" (happily without damage), notably at Richmond in Virginia, and at Augusta; and there I believe my belongings went to the local playhouses to see Mr. Jefferson. I did not go. I was watching the more novel performances at a much bigger theatre. I was thus enabled to come comparatively fresh to Mr. Arnold's performance of Rip Van Winkle at the Standard, and I am glad to note it as a very studious, earnest, and artistic impersonation. His scenes of dalliance with the children were exceedingly good. The Derrick Von Beeman of Mr. W. M'Intyre was also very intelligent; although, in "make-up," &c., Mr. M'Intyre was slightly too suggestive of a historic conspirator, hight Guido Vaux.

But Mrs. Billington in her original character of Gretchen van Winkle, Rip's incomparably shrewish wife! I will trouble you for Mrs. Billington as Gretchen, if you please. I should like to place her on a pedestal and keep her in a glass case, and walk round her, and admire her, and analyse her—always keeping at a respectful distance; for Gretchen's arm is long, and her flexor and extensor muscles are wondrously tough and supple; and when she hits, she hits hard. And her tongue; I will not trouble you for her tongue, thank you. I hear it now, thrilling through the vast house in Bishopsgate; and it makes my ears tingle; and I tremble. Seriously, I look upon Mrs. Billington's Gretchen as one of the most original, the most powerful, and the most artistic dramatic conceptions the modern stage has seen. Were it not wicked to take liberties with Shakspeare, I should like to see a new version of "Katherine and Petruchio," with Mrs. Billington as the heroine of a play, to be called "The Shrew whom Petruchio could Never have Tamed."

Mem.: How curiously true to American life, and how curiously different from English manners, are the domestic scenes in "Rip Van Winkle." Gretchen has the privileges of a feme sole, and owns house property in her own right. She beats her tipsy husband with a broomstick and turns him out of doors on a stormy night. In England things are managed in precisely a contrary manner: 'tis the drunken husband who beats his sober wife and turns her out of doors. G. A. S.

MUSIC.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Our last week's record of this event was necessarily incomplete, as the Festival did not close until the Friday night. But little additional need be said in reference to the performances of Mozart's "Requiem" and Spohr's "Last Judgment." The solos in the former were well sung by Miss de Fonblanque, Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley; those in the last-named work by Misses Anna Williams and Damian, Mr. Maas and Mr. F. King. The "Requiem" was preceded by the two completed movements of Schubert's unfinished symphony in B minor. In the evening a fine performance of "St. Paul" was given in the cathedral, the solo music having been efficiently rendered by Miss A. Williams, Madame Patey, Mr. Maas, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Santley, Mr. F. King, and Signor Ghilberti.

Thursday morning's performance was of a very mixed character. First came the fine "Dixit Dominus" in C major (for double choir), by Leonardo Leo, who flourished contemporaneously with Handel, and was the chief representative of the great Neapolitan school of church music in his period. The work contains some masterly choral writing, and some for solo voices that is in the suave and florid styles of the Italian opera of that time. The principal solo soprano music was finely sung by Madame Albani, who was well supported by Misses A. Williams and Wakefield, Mr. Maas, and Mr. F. King. Palestrina's "Stabat Mater," which followed, offered a fine example of the earlier and severer style of the sixteenth century. This work—also for two choirs—had an impressive effect amid the solemn surroundings of the cathedral. Some passages were assigned to solo singers, these being Misses A. Williams, De Fonblanque, H. Wilson, and Damian; Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Maas, Mr. F. King, and Signor Ghilberti. The next piece was Mr. H. Holmes's new cantata "Christmas Day" (the words by Keble), composed expressly for the Festival. The vocal portions of the work are by far the best written and most effective. The solo music lies well for the voices, and is smooth and melodious in character; but nowhere presents any marked individuality or originality. The movements of this class are the tenor solo "Yet stay," and that for soprano, "Wrapped in His swaddling bands," and the duet "The past'ral spirits," which were well sung, the first by Mr. E. Lloyd the second by Miss A. Williams, the duet by both these singers. Of the several choruses, the most important are the motet for triple choir, "Thee on the bosom laid," and the final movement, "O faint not." Mr. Holmes conducted the performance of his cantata.

The concluding portion of Thursday morning's performance was the specialty not only of the day but of the whole festival. It was a bold undertaking to produce a work so exceptionally elaborate and difficult as Beethoven's mass in D (the "Missa Solemnis") at a provincial festival, the rehearsals for which are necessarily in sections until the assemblage of all the executants on the spot affords the only opportunity for a full rehearsal by all concerned. It is, therefore, most honourable to Mr. C. H. Lloyd to have carried out his arduous undertaking with such success as that which attended it. Of the unparalleled sublimity of the work, which belongs to Beethoven's latest period, and was esteemed by him as his greatest composition, we have several times spoken in detail, and it will be sufficient now to say that its elevated religious sentiment, purity and beauty of expression, and grandeur of conception and construction produced the most profound impression, finely rendered as it was, and heard in a temple of worship, whose associations aid in effects that can scarcely be realised by sacred music when performed in secular buildings. The very difficult soprano solo part was splendidly sung by Madame Albani, the tones of whose superb voice, at once brilliant and sympathetic, and her certain execution of passages that severely test the highest vocal powers, will long be remembered by those who were present. The other solo portions—also of exceptional difficulty—were satisfactorily rendered by Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley. The exquisite violin solo which runs throughout the "Benedictus" was delicately played by M. Sainton. The choral writing in this mass requires for its execution not only choristers of special excellence, but, even with this requisite, long preparation and frequent rehearsal. These conditions would seem to have been observed at Gloucester, judging from the generally satisfactory result obtained.

Of the concluding Oratorio performance, on the Friday morning, it will be sufficient to say that "The Messiah" was worthily given, the solos by Madame Albani, Misses A. Williams and Damian, Madame Patey, Mr. Maas, Mr. Santley, and Mr. F. King.

At the two miscellaneous evening concerts in the Shirehall, on the Tuesday and the Thursday, the vocal performances of Madame Albani were the chief features—on the first occasion, in Spohr's fine scena, "Tu m' abbandoni," and an Irish ballad; in the second instance, in the scena, "Sovvenir dei prim' anni" (with violin obbligato by M. Sainton), from Hérold's "Le Pré aux Clercs," and the duet, "Una remota, vaga rimembranza," from "Wagner's "Der Fliegende Holländer" (as Italianised). The brilliant delivery of Hérold's scena elicited an enthusiastic demonstration that was acknowledged by repeating the latter portion. In the duet, Madame Albani was associated with Mr. Santley, who was the representative of the Dutch Captain in the Italian performances of the work at Drury Lane Theatre in 1870. Another specialty at Thursday's concert was the very clever violin playing of Mr. Sutton, who executed Vieuxtemps' difficult "Ballade et Polonoise" with great success. M. Sainton (whose pupil Mr. Sutton is) conducted in this instance. The programme also included vocal pieces by most of the principal singers, two choruses—"Thou Comest," from Mendelssohn's "Œdipus" music, and Mr. Prout's "Hail to the Chief,"—and Sterndale Bennett's overture "Die Waldnymphe," and Schumann's first symphony (in B flat), effectively played by the orchestra.

The Festival was supplemented yesterday (Friday) week by a special evening service in the nave of the cathedral, the musical portion having included the co-operation of the orchestra and chorus. A new "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis," composed for the occasion by Mr. C. H. Lloyd—skilfully-written pieces—and Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's Anthem, "The Lord is the true God," were well rendered.

Mr. C. H. Lloyd has fulfilled the onerous duties of conductor of the Festival with much success: Mr. Colborne (of Hereford) having co-operated as organist, and Mr. Done (of Worcester) occasionally as pianoforte accompanist.

The collections at the cathedral were less than at the last Gloucester Festival (in 1877), the amount this year having been about £600; this, however, will be largely increased by the stewards' contributions and donations, to be hereafter received; and it is expected that nearly £1600 will ultimately be realised for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy of the dioceses of Hereford, Worcester, and Gloucester, this being the object of these three-choir meetings, held in yearly alternation at each place—that just recorded having been the 157th annual occasion.

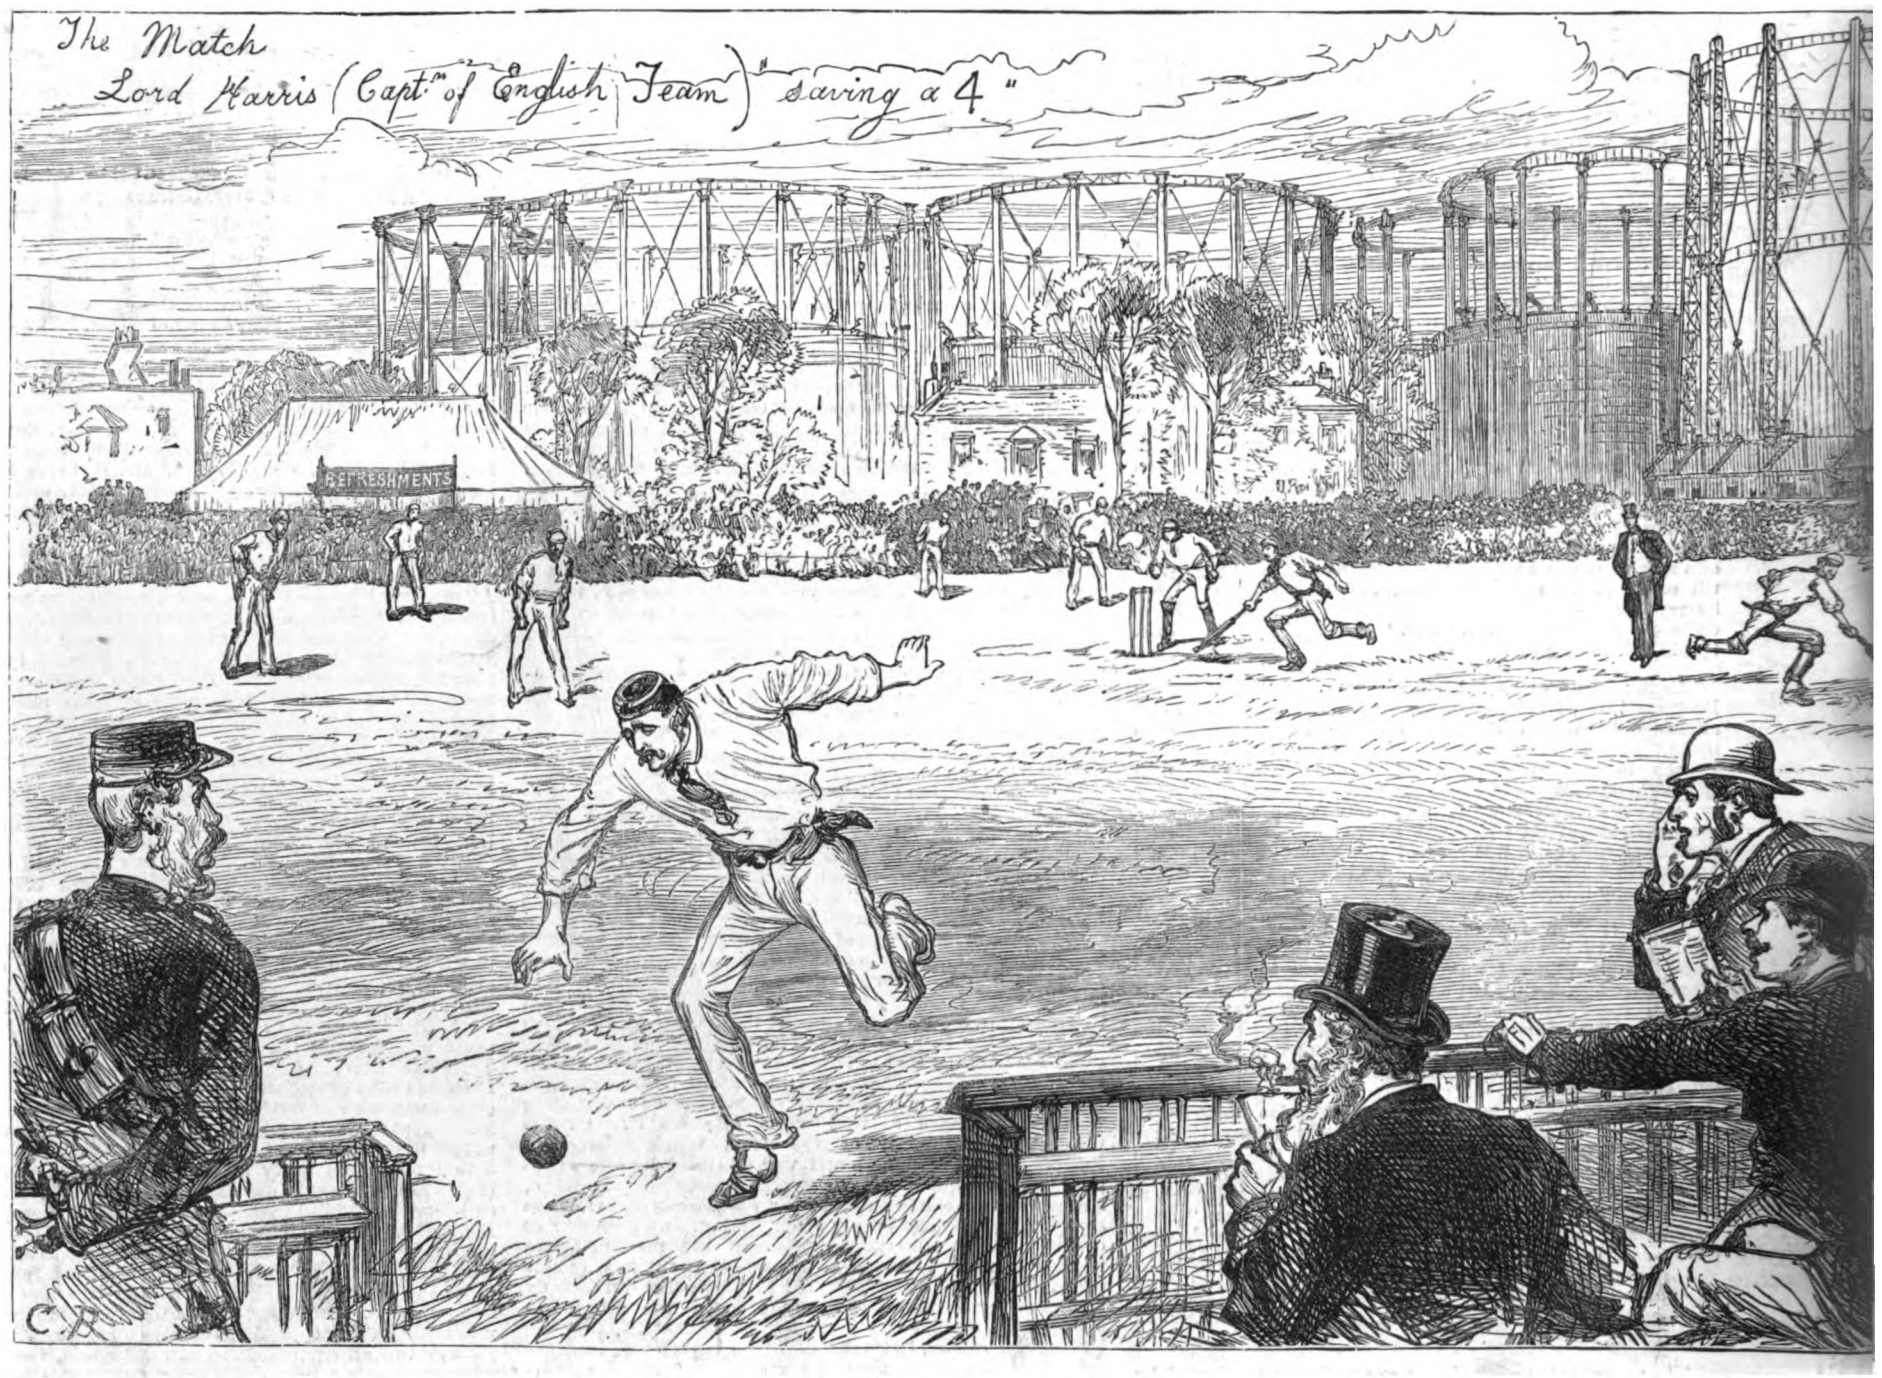
Messrs. Gatti's season of promenade concerts at Covent Garden Theatre will close with the end of next week. Last Monday was a Mendelssohn night, and Wednesday was a classical night. Thursday's programme was chiefly devoted to music of a humorous character, the principal pieces having been Mozart's "Musicalischer Spass" (Musical Joke), the finale of Haydn's "Farewell" symphony, Gounod's "Funeral March of a Marionette," and Romberg's "Toy Symphony." Under the conductorship of Mr. F. H. Cowen, these concerts have maintained unflagging interest since their commencement, on July 31.

A season of Italian opera, at cheap prices, is to begin at Her Majesty's Theatre on Monday, Oct. 18.

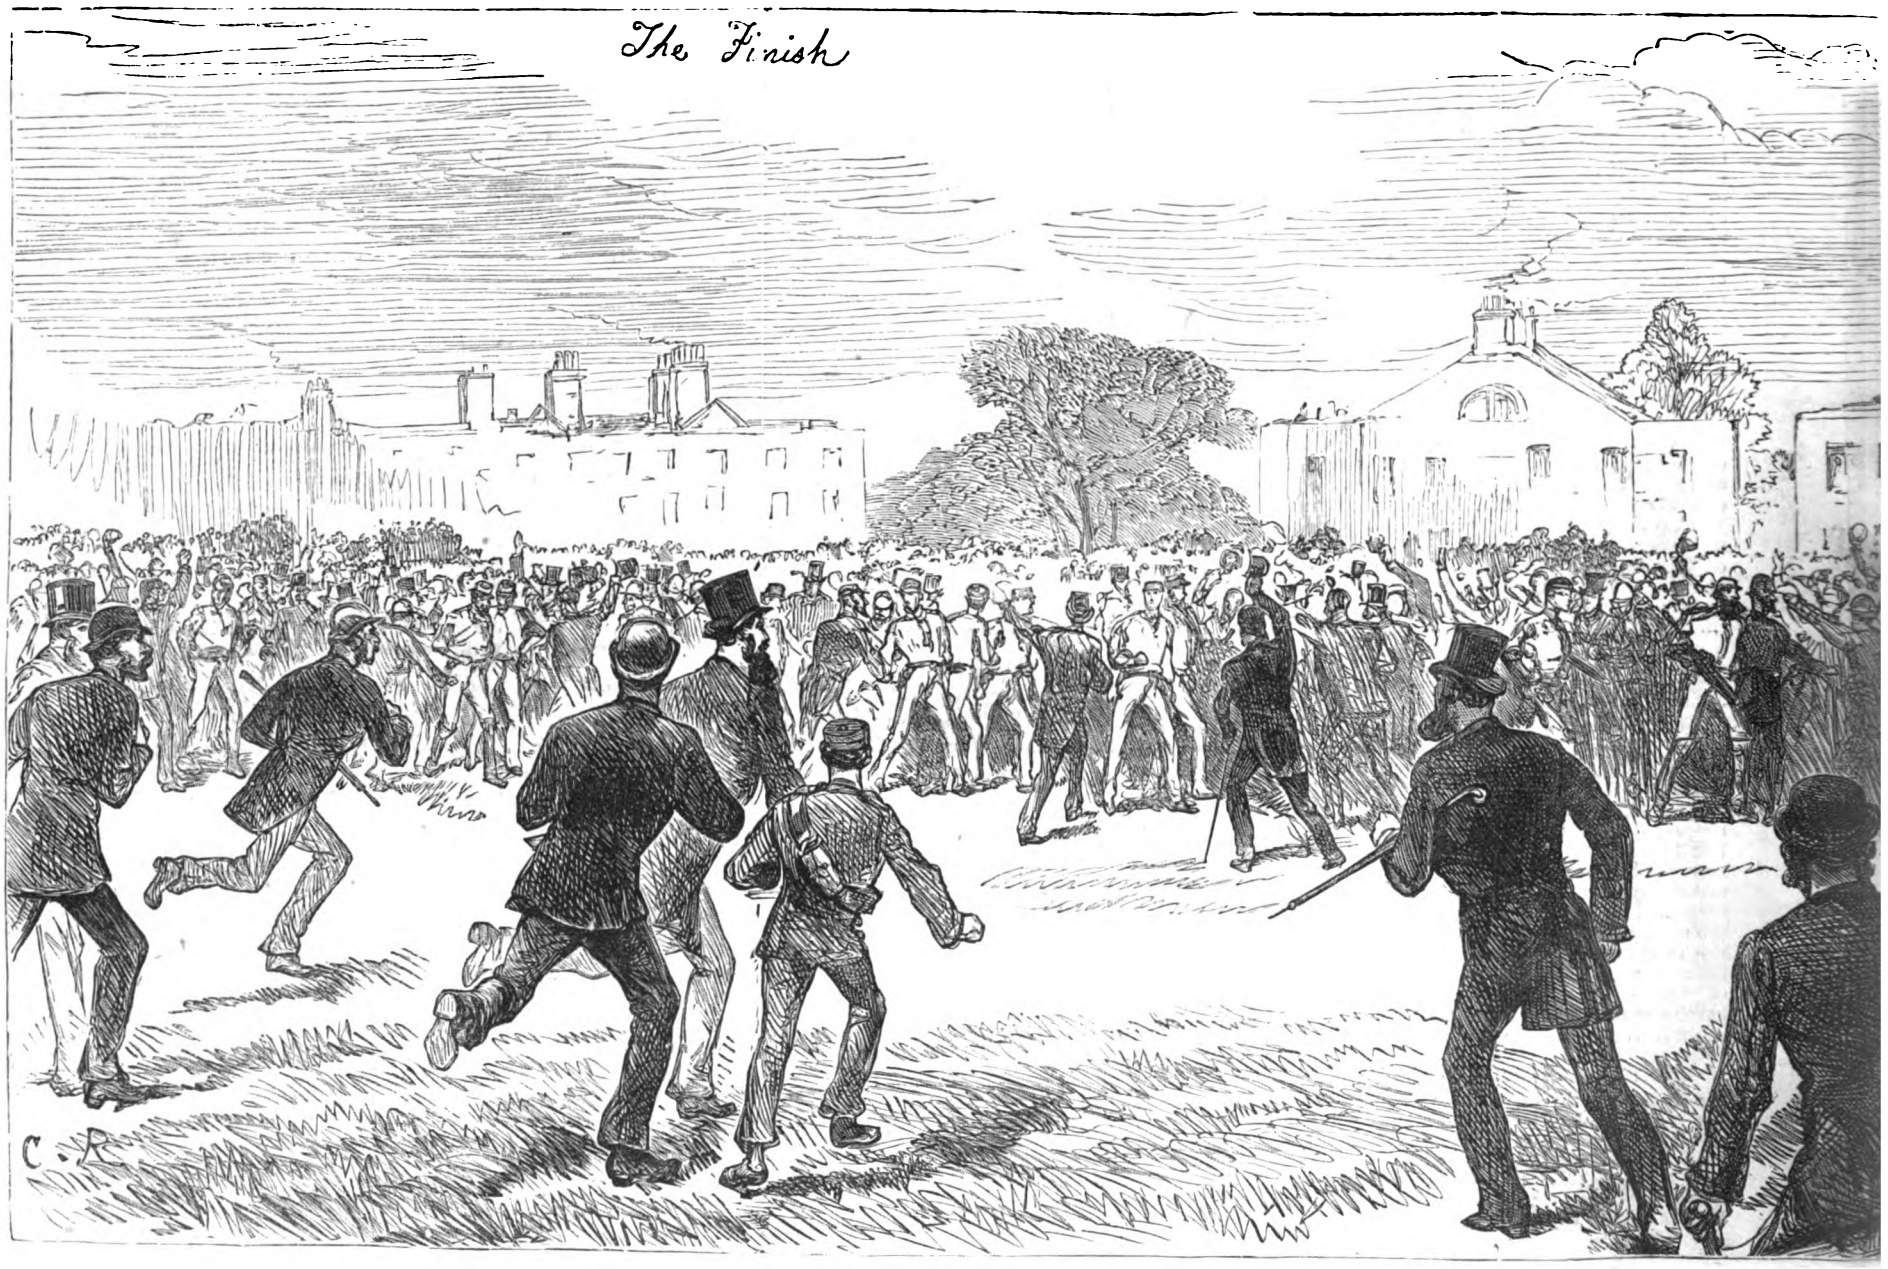
The Brixton Choral Society—directed by Mr. W. Lemare—is about to begin the rehearsals for a new season, to consist of four concerts, at which will be given Haydn's "Creation," Hiller's "Song of Victory," Weber's "Preciosa," Mendelssohn's "Lorelcy" music, Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Mr Arthur Sullivan's "The Prodigal Son," and Handel's "Samson."

The programme of the Leeds Triennial Musical Festival—to be held in the Townhall, in aid of the local medical charities on Oct. 13 and three following days—has been issued. The principal vocalists are Madame Albani, Mrs. Osgood, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patey, Madame Trebelli, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. J. Maas, Mr. Henschel, Mr. H. Cross, and Mr. F. King. Mr. Arthur Sullivan is the conductor, and Dr. Spark the organist. The Duke of Edinburgh will preside.

NATIONAL SPORTS.



After a very long spell of beautiful weather, we seem to have suddenly stepped from summer into mid-autumn, and the first day of the Doncaster meeting was very wet and uncomfortable. The miserable morning may partially account for the very poor attendance round Mr. Tattersall's rostrum on Tuesday morning, but we fear that there is little money in the market for the purchase of blood stock; and, though some sixty lots were offered, only eleven changed hands. Mr. Wright may, therefore, be accounted fortunate in getting rid of four of his eight yearlings, especially as Royal Blue, a beautiful colt by Blue Gown—Lucy Bertram, made 800 gs. A bid of 950 gs. was made for Alfred, another young Blue Gown, but, his reserve price being 1000 gs., he was sent back unsold. The remaining lots changed hands at very low figures. The rain ceased just before racing began, but soon came down again, and there were several violent storms during the afternoon. As usual, the Fitzwilliam Stakes was first on the programme, and the very useful Tower and Sword proved good enough to dispose of eight moderate opponents. Amy Melville, who created such a surprise by beating Sleeping Beauty and Œnone at Kempton Park, won the Chamber Plate very cleverly, and, after two other minor races, ten numbers were hoisted for the Great Yorkshire Handicap. Mr. Perkins did not start either Dresden China or Rochampton, and though weight of money, consequent on her having won a great trial, made Bonnie Marden (6 st. 3 lb.) first favourite during the morning, the public never deserted Reveller (7 st. 12 lb.), so that at last 3 to 1 was taken freely about each of them. Bay Archer (8 st. 9 lb.) was next in demand, but both Elizabeth (7 st. 8 lb.) and Favo (7 st. 7 lb.) receded considerably in the quotations. Bonnie Marden ran prominently for a mile and a quarter, when she was beaten, and Reveller, taking the lead as soon as they were fairly in the straight, won just as he chose from Roulette (6 st.) and Schoolboy (6 st. 5 lb.), neither of whom had a price in the market. Both first and second belong to Mr. Jardine, who has been very lucky in handicaps this season. The heavy ground was all against Favo and Elizabeth, the former of whom is a roarer, while the latter does not care to gallop more than a mile; and the poor performance of Bonnie Marden was one more proof of the wretched quality of the Oaks field. The opposition to Bal Gal for the Champagne Stakes was stronger than had been generally anticipated, but doubtless the knowledge that her wind is affected induced owners of youngsters that could gallop at all to have a cut at Lord Falmouth's flyer. Iroquois, who ran such a rattling race with her in the July Stakes at Newmarket, never saw where she went on Tuesday, and everything was pulling up as she passed the post.



The victory of Exeter over Roehampton and Pearlina in the opening race on Wednesday was very encouraging to the followers of his stable companion Robert the Devil; nevertheless, the public backed Bend Or so persistently that at last 4 to 1 could be obtained against the second in the Derby. Jenny Howlet was the first to appear on the course, and after Novice had shown the way in the preliminary canter, attended by Robert the Devil, Mr. M'George took the twelve runners under his charge, and at the first attempt the flag fell to a capital start exactly at four o'clock, the race being run in a blinding storm. Bend Or, who held a position on the inside, was first away, and he was followed by Robert the Devil, Zealot, Cipolata, the Abbot, Beauminet, and Jenny Howlet, with the Maryland colt acting as whipper-in. When they had settled down into their places Novice drew clear of Incendiary, who was now going on second, clear of Abbot, Apollo, and Jenny Howlet, while the others were headed by Bend Or, Robert the Devil, Zealot, and Cipolata, with Beauminet and Maryland colt in the rear. Little alteration took place in this order until going down the hill to the Rifle Butts, when Novice drew away with a three lengths lead of Incendiary, The Abbot, Apollo, and Jenny Howlet, then followed Bend Or and Robert the Devil, with Cipolata, Apollo, Abbot, and Zealot coming on next. Approaching the Red House Incendiary closed with Novice, while at the same time The Abbot, Bend Or, and Robert the Devil took closer orders with the leaders, of whom Cipolata, Apollo, and Jenny Howlet were in a line just behind the two favourites. Half a mile from home Novice and Incendiary were beaten, and Napsbury fell back into the company of Maryland, while Bend Or took up the running, and the favourite came on with a slight lead of The Abbot, at whose quarters lay Robert the Devil, Cipolata, Apollo, and Zealot, and to this lot the race was now confined. Before the bend was reached, about a quarter of a mile from home, Bend Or was in trouble, and on his retirement Robert the Devil shot out with a clear lead, followed by Abbot and Cipolata, and, striding along to the end, won easily by three lengths from Cipolata, who beat Abbot by a neck for second place; Zealot was fourth, Beauminet fifth, Bend Or sixth, Incendiary seventh, Apollo eighth, Novice ninth, and Jenny Howlet tenth; Napsbury walked in, and the Maryland colt was beaten off. Time, 3 min. 32 sec.

A six days' "go-as-you-please" race, twelve hours per day, which took place at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, last week, was won by Littlewood, of Sheffield, with a score of 406 miles 6 laps. There was also a twelve hours' race for amateurs, which fell to W. C. Davies, Westminster (Chester) R.C., who covered eighty-one miles. This is the best performance on record for either professionals or amateurs. The attendance throughout the week was poor in the extreme; so we hope that the days of these wearisome contests are numbered.

POETRY.

Sophocles, according to tradition, was ninety years of age, or not much less, when he composed his beautiful "Œdipus at Colonos;" and Ultima Thule: by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow (George Routledge and Sons), will probably convince some of its readers that modern poets, like the ancient, though full of years, may still be full of song. If the Americans's latest productions seem poor in comparison with the lays of his prime, the reason may be rather that the themes are for the most part less inspiring than that the writer is less susceptible of inspiration.

Irresistible as was the song of the Sirens, it is impossible to read the preface of The Odyssey of Homer, Books I.—XII., translated into English verse, with notes and parallel passages, by Sir Charles Du Cane, K.C.M.G. (William Blackwood and Sons), without coming to the conclusion that the song of "blind Mæonides" himself has, for those who once permit themselves to listen, as potent a spell as that which was exercised by the sweet-voiced traitresses whom he has celebrated. Here is a gentleman, evidently of mature years and considerable experience, who, for lack of such trusty comrades as Perimedes and Eurylochus to bind him, as they bound Odysseus, hand and foot, and so prevent him from committing himself, has to make the following confession of amiable weakness and even infatuation. "I began this translation," he says, "more than five years ago, soon after my return from the Antipodes by a voyage round Cape Horn, the monotony of which I sought to beguile by reading once more that poem of which it has been well said that it is, above all others, 'The Epic of the Sea.'" First of all, he intended to confine himself to the four books from the ninth to the twelfth, both included; then, of course, he could not resist the charm and "was induced to add the four preceding ones," and ultimately he was compelled by the fascination of his task, as well as by a sense of symmetrical fitness, to "complete the first half of the poem with the four first books." Some day, no doubt, he will yield still further to the magic influence against which it is apparently vain for him to struggle, and will convert into English the other half of the poem. It may be said at once that he has produced a work which, though the lines occasionally halt, is creditable as a version, and more than usually valuable and interesting by reason of the added notes and parallel passages. The metre he has chosen is that which, to use his own words, is "familiarly known as 'ballad' metre," notwithstanding that he is "much exercised with the doubt whether it is possible for the whole, either of the Iliad or the Odyssey, to be adequately interpreted into English through the medium of only one metre." It may be remarked, however, that a translation accomplished in a variety of metres would obviously fail to reproduce one characteristic feature of the original, and would almost certainly produce a false impression as regards the Greek poet's or poets' style, upon the mind and senses of the purely English reader. There is no room here to discuss such matters at any length; but an opinion may be ventured to the effect that whatever there may be in the Homeric poems capable of adequate representation at all in English verse may be reproduced as faithfully, as vigorously, and as harmoniously in the "ballad metre" as in any other. The great obstacles in the way of a translator are, no doubt, the proper names, the titular epithets, as they may be termed, the mythological absurdities, as they seem to us moderns, the strange modes of address, the peculiar customs and habits of life, devoid of all that is poetical in the views of later ages; and these obstacles no metre or variety of metres would enable a translator to surmount. As regards the proper names, it is pertinent to observe that Sir Charles Du Cane belongs to the old school, and not only disregards the new-fangled fashion of spelling, but patronises the good or bad old practice of considering the Greek and Roman mythological nomenclature interchangeable at will, whether for convenience or from mere preference. A pretty careful comparison between the version given by Sir Charles of the book in which the meeting of Odysseus and Nausicaa is described and another, an unpublished version of the same book, also in "ballad metre," has led to the conviction, as might have been expected, that he has rendered some of the passages with noticeable spirit and grace, and that, on the other hand, there are many passages so rendered by him as to be far from satisfactory, suggesting the reflection that, if a poetical treatment of the Greek were more than flesh and blood could manage, an excellent translation in sheer prose was effected some little time ago by Messrs. Butcher and Lang. But when was it ever otherwise? Even Worsley's "Odyssey" is sometimes prosaic: and Sir Charles Du Cane can scarcely have hoped to throw Worsley into the shade. Sir Charles, translating the famous description of Olympus, writes—

> She spake and of Olympus sought forthwith the lofty crest,
> Whereon they say th' eternal seat of the great gods doth rest,—
> That seat secure, whereon the blasts of rude winds never blow,
> Nor ever is it wet with rain, nor carpeted with snow;
> But round it spreads without a cloud the firmament serene,
> And o'er it floats for evermore a light of silvery sheen.
> There endless days the blest gods pass in joyance and delight;
> And thither, having warned the maid, did Pallas wing her flight.

Eight lines are thus given for seven; which seven, in the unpublished version already spoken of, are rendered as follows:

> Thus having said, Olympusward grey-eyed Athena clomb,
> To where, men say, the gods have made their everlasting home;
> Nor rocketh it with any wind, nor drippeth it with rain,
> Nor lighteth any snow thereon; all cloudless doth remain
> The floating air; and overhead the glory shimmers white:
> There the blest gods for evermore have joyance and delight.
> And thither, having schooled the maid, the Grey-eyed went her way.

Anybody who will take the trouble to compare the two versions with the original (Book VI., lines 41-47) will see in a moment that Sir Charles has introduced what is not to be found in the Greek, without much, if any, gain of perspicuity, smoothness, or poetical expression.

A very tender, pretty, picturesque piece of composition, with a prevailing tone of deep but gentle and winning melancholy, is Riquet of the Tuft (Macmillan and Co.), which is called "a love drama," and in which an anonymous writer has exhibited considerable powers of poetical conception and treatment. It may be worth while to recall to mind the story of fabulous Prince Riquet whose physical deformity was made up to him by the fairy's gift of mental and moral beauty. His portion in life, in fact, was, at the outset, something like that of the blind bard of whom Homer says, "Him the Muse loved exceedingly, and she gave him good and ill; she took his eyes away from him, but she gave to him sweet song." So with Prince Riquet: he was born with a hump; but the fairy Gentilla said to the Queen, his mother, "Fear not; I will care for your son. He shall be happy and beautiful when he comes to love and be loved, and he shall be wise and witty even in sorrow, and gay and kind to all, and he shall be able to make the woman who loves him as wise, and witty, and pleasant as himself." Of course, it is the business of this "love drama" to show how the fairy's promise is fulfilled. The drama is, almost from the very nature of the case, of the romantic, dreamy, sentimental, pensive, sententious sort, with very little stir and excitement. It is divided into three acts; the first exhibits Prince Riquet under the influence of a love for some fair vision that haunts him; the second brings him into personal communication with the reality, in flesh and blood, of his vision; and the third concludes with the incidents of "the deformed transformed" and the marriage of Prince Riquet, converted into a handsome young gallant, with the peerless Callista, the lady of his vision. The drama is, of course, allegorical, containing a moral; and the moral is that love will rectify any defects, whether outward or inward, of the beloved object, will make the witless wise and the crooked straight. This seems to be only another way of putting the old doctrine that love is blind, so blind that it cannot see how silly is the lovely woman or how misshapen the otherwise eligible man. Only in the case of Prince Riquet and Princess Callista the spectators, contrary to general experience, are affected by the same visual peculiarity as the high contracting parties. That such a composition should be of a somewhat airy and unsubstantial character was to be expected, and that it should suggest here and there the manner of the extravaganza is neither to be wondered at nor condemned. It is, on the whole, a very agreeable, poetically written piece, though, perhaps, the language employed by the gardener and his son in the opening scene, and by others occasionally elsewhere, is less simple and unaffected than their condition and the fitness of things would seem to require.

Subjective poetry, such as the greater part of that which an anonymous writer has collected into a little volume entitled A Love's Gamut and Other Poems (C. Kegan Paul and Co.), requires, unfortunately, for its proper appreciation, that the reader should be able to perceive instinctively, as it were, what is the mental and moral condition of the writer, and what, if any, is likely to be the lesson taught, or the theory propounded, or the mystery meant to be revealed in any particular outpouring of the muse. Else the poet seems to be an utterer of dark sayings, of which it is impossible to divine the purport; one gropes about for a clue, one feels like a person who, having a knotted string to untie, cannot get hold of either of the ends. So, in the present case, the anonymous writer no doubt requires what is called a sympathetic reader; otherwise the compositions are liable to be set down, for the most part, as so many enigmas. Everybody can see that the writer is strong in passion and in colouring, and has no slight command of versification; but what is the drift of each, or any, effusion it is not everybody who could say or would venture to opine. Sometimes, however, it appears easier to declare what is the meaning than where is the poetry, as in the lines—

> And, O love, it is hard that thy love,
> The high heaven to me—
> Should come to be common enough
> To whoe'er it may be!

This seems to be intelligible, certainly, but suggestive of far from a pleasant idea.

THE AUSTRALIA AND ENGLAND CRICKET-MATCH.

The great event of last week, for all who take an interest in the game of cricket, was the match played at Kennington Oval, the Surrey Ground, on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, between the representative eleven of Australia, headed by Mr. Murdoch, and the eleven amateur champions of England, whose captain was Lord Harris. Some account of it was given in our last, in the record of National Sports. The performance day after day attracted a vast assemblage of spectators: 20,000 one day, 25,000 the next, paying for admission. The match ended, about four o'clock on the Wednesday afternoon, with a victory for England, having five wickets to spare in the second innings, and having exceeded the total score of the Australians for both innings, which attained the large number of 476 runs. The complete score appeared in our last. The eleven players of England were Lord Harris, Dr. W. G. Grace, Dr. E. M. Grace, Mr. G. F. Grace, Mr. A. P. Lucas, Mr. F. Penn, Mr. A. G. Steel, the Hon. A. Lyttelton, and three Nottinghamshire men, Mr. Barnes, Mr. Shaw, and Mr. Morley. The Australian players, who have been frequently mentioned as winning many local matches in this country, were Mr. W. L. Murdoch, captain, Mr. A. Bannerman, Mr. T. U. Groube, Mr. P. M'Donnell, Mr. J. Slight, Mr. J. M. Blackham, Mr. G. J. Bonnor, Mr. H. F. Boyle, Mr. G. E. Palmer, Mr. G. Alexander, and Mr. W. H. Moule. The Australian cricketers visited England two years ago, and were then victorious over a team which undertook to play for England, but which was not equal in force to the one engaged in the match of last week. The contest was renewed last year; and a party of English amateurs, led by Lord Harris, visited Australia in their turn; but the result was not altogether satisfactory, and it is scarcely agreeable to dwell upon it here. There was some very fine playing upon this last occasion; Dr. W. G. Grace's batting, to the amount of 152 in his first innings, and that of Mr. Murdoch, on the other side, in the Australian second innings, were remarkably good. The bowling was less worthy of note in the absence of Mr. Spofforth, the great Australian bowler, who was accidentally disabled; but much of the fielding, especially that of Lord Harris, excited a high degree of admiration. One of our Illustrations shows his Lordship, at the long-off post, in the act of saving four runs which would have been made against his side by the batsman, if not stumped out, in the Australian second innings. At the wickets, also, Lord Harris performed in a masterly style, scoring 52 in a very short time, while Mr. Lucas made 55, and Mr. Steel, of Lancashire, 42, in the Monday's play. The batting, however, of Dr. W. G. Grace was such as can seldom have been equalled by any player. He remained in precisely four hours, making twelve "fours," ten "threes," fourteen "twos," and forty-six single runs. The first innings of the English eleven produced a score of 410 altogether. It was considered that the Australians were put at some disadvantage by the light not being so good, on these English September days, as they are accustomed to enjoy in their own climate. In bidding them farewell, at the conclusion of the match they had lost, Lord Harris spoke of them in handsome terms of friendly compliment. They will return to Australia, we trust, well pleased with the fair reception they have met with in this country, though finally defeated in the principal contest they have waged against the best cricketers of England.

The Sheriffs-elect for London and Middlesex, Mr. Alderman Fowler, M.P., and Mr. Herbert Jameson Waterlow, whose term of office will begin on the 28th inst., have appointed as their under-sheriffs Mr. Archibald Hanbury, of the firm of Messrs. Hanbury, Hutton, and Whitting, solicitors, of 62, New Broad-street, and Mr. Edward John Layton, of the firm of Messrs. Layton, Son, and Lendon, of 29, Budge-row; and as their chaplains the Rev. William Hunt, Rector of St. Michael's, Cornhill, and the Rev. Richard Whittington, Rector of St. Peter's, Cornhill. The first duty of the new Sheriffs will be to preside at the election of Lord Mayor on Michaelmas Day (Sept. 29), and for that office there is no opposition to the return of Mr. Alderman M'Arthur M.P

THE PENNY BUN.

The penny bun is generally believed to be peculiar to England; and one is apt, rightly or wrongly, to look upon it in its present form as a product of our own century. It certainly seems a quite unhistorical kind of food: one cannot imagine Oliver Cromwell eating a penny bun. It had, very likely, its Anglo-Saxon prototype; but its regularity, its stickiness of surface and paucity of plums, and its curious quality of never seeming quite fresh baked, must all have been acquired in or near the Victorian era. George IV., perhaps, vulgarised it: under his successors it acquired the qualités which belong to the défauts just enumerated.

For even monotony has its good points. If you go into a shop and ask for a penny bun, you know within a little what you will get. There are certain small Italian confectioners where stickiness is carried to the verge of the offensive and nastiness almost creeps in; but take it for all in all, the bun is about the safest of all articles of refreshment. Think of promiscuous coffee—look at the Mugby Junction sandwich—remember ordinary beer, restaurant wine, village cider—consider the meat you have met; the drinkables in France, the eatables in Germany, the everything of Spain—and confess that, greatly to its credit, our hero, wherever encountered, is an English bun.

It has its varieties, of course; but the points of difference are small. In many country towns you are supplied with an excellent bun—large, substantial, and not at all sticky, which contains no currants: a happy innovation, which, after all, is very likely but a survival, or a return to an earlier form—Greek, philologists tell us; though on such a question I would sooner trust bakers. Then, at one town at least—the quaint and delightful seaport of Yarmouth—the penny bun attains a sort of apotheosis, being resolved into four farthing ones: exquisite little things, the delight of the connoisseur, with a freshness as of youth, and daintily be-plummed, tempting the jaded palate that the luxuries of Robb or Buszard could not move.

And we will not be unjust to the metropolis. There is in London one shop where a distinct variety of bun is to be obtained, though it is sold under no pretentious name and does not in price exceed the modest penny. This bun is somewhat over-sticky when quite new, but loses this property—so serious in its effects upon the glove of young ladyhood—before many hours; it is slightly flavoured with saffron, but must not therefore be confounded with the actual saffron bun. The shop where this delicacy is to be purchased I must not name; such mention would have too much the air of an advertisement. But I may say that it is Italian by proprietor, modest in appearance, and, indeed, not very clean; that it is not a hundred miles from the Haymarket; and that behind its counter are usually to be seen a young matron and her sister who ook exactly as if they had this moment stepped out of a Holy Family of Leonardo da Vinci.

And this divergence from the bun to the bun-seller reminds us what a story-teller—a Scheherazade, or perhaps a Sphinx—is this little cake. How strangely its purchase in some shop that very likely you have never noticed before brings you for a moment alongside another life, another personality, quite new to you, and curiously like or unlike those you already know. Sellers of buns, except in very thronged and busy shops, usually feel obliged to say something to their eating customers, if it is only—as often it is—a stereotyped criticism of the weather. Sometimes there is something very sad in the purely formal way in which the listless words "It's a very fine day" are dropped out; the speaker is—one knows almost without looking up—a tired, worn-faced woman of thirty, evidently with a large small family in the background. Not hers is the pleasure of the born seller of small goods, with whom conversation is an essential part of the stock-in-trade—whom, indeed, one suspects of carefully getting up the newspaper before encountering his early customers, whose information, mixed (often most illogically) with the aforesaid newspaper, is passed on—ever increasing, snowball-fashion—to those who drop in later.

Quite unlike this shrewd successor of the ancient pedlar is the gabbler pure and simple, who sells buns merely as a pretext for talk—inartistically reversing cause and effect; she (it is not unfair to indicate her sex distinctly) she too often, plunged in an absorbing discussion of the latest trial—her elbows settled well on the counter, her lips mysteriously approached to the collocutor's ear—is apt to keep waiting, to disgust, finally to lose, some impatient and business-like applicant for a bun. It is like dram-drinking, this love of gabble: let us hope that all gabblers can afford its cost.

But there are comfortable, maternal, discreet bun-sellers as well—who advise, console, and cheer all the young women of the neighbourhood—and more young men too than you would be apt to think. I have one such in my eye now: wrinkled, spectacled, old, but with a very pleasant, powdery face: who sits at the receipt of not very overwhelming custom all through the quiet, lazy summer afternoon. Large flies tramp about over her muslin-covered tarts, children enter occasionally for "halfpenny stale" buns—she is always cheery and encouraging to the little ones, and is wont to christen them offhand Tommy or Polly, as the case may be—but nothing really distracts her attention from the woes of the rather shapeless girl of sixteen, who has a cold (of all things in this weather) and a consequent unbecoming red nose, or of her elder sister, who has fallen in love, not absolutely for the first time, and wants Miss MacWhirter's real, candid, and unbiassed opinion of her conduct—and the young man. Miss MacWhirter's store of unforced sentiment is astonishing and inexhaustible; I sometimes fancy that she writes for the Family Herald—perhaps those wonderful "answers to correspondents"—and, sometimes, that she in her silliness is quite right and the wise people who laugh at her all wrong.

And this mention of old maids (for Miss MacWhirter represents the type, pure and simple—how pure, and how simple!) this digression naturally makes me digress yet further, by bringing me face to face with the largest class of consumers of penny buns. The connection between this edible and feminine celibacy is difficult to trace; but it is an undoubted fact that buns enough to reach from here to Labrador—tuns of buns, hogsheads and van-loads of them—are annually devoured by the old maids of Great Britain. The qualities on which we have insisted as especially appropriate to the penny bun—monotony, cheapness, want of strongly-marked flavour, and perfect harmlessness—are all such as might well recommend themselves to the old maid; as might be said, indeed, to bear affinity enough to her own existence, triste et fade. England is the country of specialities, par excellence: and here, with our strong beef and beer for robust and violent men, with ample and admirable provision for our countless babies, with sweets for schoolboys and vast factories of biscuits for mothers trying to tranquillise their noisy families—side by side with these, we have provided tea, weak or strong, animating or soothing, as required, to refresh our cohorts of visiting, chattering, shopping old maids; and, to sustain them during their constant, unvarying little afternoon excursions, the simple, homely inexpensive Bun.

HOME NEWS.

There were severe thunderstorms in the midland counties on Tuesday.

The Axminster Board of Guardians have banished beer from the dietary table of their workhouse altogether; cocoa, coffee, and tea being substituted.

The Sanitary Institute of Great Britain—the president of which is the Duke of Northumberland—will this year hold its autumn congress at Exeter, Earl Fortescue presiding.

Sir E. J. Reed, M.P., on the 8th inst. laid the foundation-stone of the new mercantile, marine, and post-office buildings at Cardiff, which, it is stated, will cost £20,000.

Meetings of the Floral and Fruit Committees of the Royal Horticultural Society were held on Tuesday at South Kensington, and several first-class certificates were awarded for new plants.

By invitation of Colonel Haverly, the children of the Duke of York schools, accompanied by their own band, attended the matinée performance at Her Majesty's Theatre on Wednesday.

Sir P. Egerton, M.P., speaking at the Wirrall Agricultural Show, congratulated his hearers upon the difference between last year's crops and this, which, he said, represented a gain of from £50,000,000 to £60,000,000 sterling.

Committees have been formed in North and South Wales to formulate a scheme for secondary and higher education in the Principality to be presented before the departmental committee recently nominated by the House of Commons.

On Monday night, at Sheffield, an Irishman, named Stephens, who is stated to have had a dispute with the "Irish Brotherhood," was called out of his house and shot in the mouth. Three men were afterwards seen running away.

At the parish church of Foleshill, Warwickshire, on the 8th inst., a deaf and dumb couple named Arthur Davis and Hannah Ellis were married. They made the responses on their hands, following the service from a book placed before them. The wedding excited great interest.

Mr. Johnson has been appointed Coroner for Canterbury, in the room of Mr. de Lasaux, solicitor, who recently resigned the office, after having held it for half a century. Mr. de Lasaux retains the office in respect to the county, which position he has occupied about sixty years.

On Monday morning Miss Beckwith began an attempt to swim for one hundred hours, during six days, at the Royal Aquarium, Westminster. The Princess of Wales was present during Monday afternoon, and seemed greatly interested in Miss Beckwith's exhibition of ornamental swimming.

The arrivals at Liverpool of live stock and fresh meat from the United States and Canada last week showed a large increase in comparison with the preceding week; there being a total of 2206 cattle, 2304 sheep, 686 pigs, 3993 quarters of beef, 302 carcases of mutton, and 116 dead pigs.

The Raikes centenary was celebrated at Bangor on Tuesday by a procession of the Nonconformist Sunday schools, including some 3000 scholars. The procession marched through the town to Upper Bangor, where addresses were delivered by Mr. Watkin Williams, M.P., Mr. Richard Davies, M.P., and others.

Dr. Frankland reports that all the samples of Thames water supplied to the Metropolis during August were of very bad quality, and quite unfit for dietetic purposes, owing to their pollution with organic impurity. The river waters, he adds, were delivered at a high temperature, which rendered them vapid and unpalatable.

Notwithstanding the very unfavourable state of the weather last Saturday, the programme of the Brighton Regatta, postponed from Wednesday, was successfully carried out, in presence of a great gathering of spectators. In the evening the prizes, amounting to £152, were distributed by the Mayor at the Aquarium.

The annual Congress of British Homœopathic Practitioners was held on the 9th inst. at Leeds, under the presidency of Dr. Yeldham, of London, who read an address on the pursuit of certainty in medicine. Papers on points of professional interest were read by Dr. Burnett (London), Dr. Drysdale (Liverpool), Dr. Dayes (London), and discussed.

The autumn show of the Brighton and Sussex Horticultural Society was held at the Pavilion on the 8th and 9th inst., being, for quality and quantity of exhibits, one of the best that has been held of late years; and on the same day the second annual show of the Whitchurch Floral and Horticultural Society was held, and was most successful.

Experiments were made on Monday at Woolwich with one of the 100-ton guns purchased of Sir William Armstrong, and with the emplacement in which it is mounted at the proof butts. One shot only was fired, the charge consisting of 425 lb. of pebble powder and a bolt weighing nearly one ton. The gun experimented upon is one of four which are intended for the defence of Malta and Gibraltar.

Earl Spencer, in company with the Lord Advocate, visited on Monday one of the elementary schools under the Edinburgh School Board and two of the same class of schools belonging to George Heriot's trust. His Lordship listened to the pupils going through their ordinary course of instruction, and asked many questions of the teachers regarding the pupils and the methods of tuition followed.

The season for salmon net-fishing in the Tweed closed on Tuesday. It has been the worst ever known, and lessees of fisheries are said to be heavy losers. Trout, although numerous, were below the average. The rental of the river has this year fallen from £14,000 to £13,000. In the month of August the Berwick Salmon Fisheries Company were 9000 fish short of the catch for the same month of last year.

The Aboyne Highland gathering, held near the entrance to Aboyne Castle, Deeside, came off on the 8th inst. with great success. Among those on the ground where Prince Leopold, the Marquis and Marchioness of Huntly and a party from Aboyne Castle, Sir William Forbes, of Craigievan, Sir W. Stafford, Mr. W. Cunliffe Brooks, of Glentanner, M.P., and representatives of the leading families of the district.

A gold watch was presented on Thursday, the 9th inst., at the Swedish and Norwegian Consulate in Cardiff to Captain Mortensor, of the Norwegian barque Grid, for bravery at sea. The vessel was laden with corn and bound from Richmond to Falmouth, when she ran into an iceberg. The captain remained by the ship, and at length succeeded in bringing her to England, notwithstanding great difficulty.

The winter session of the Charterhouse Science and Art School and Literary Institute, the largest science school in the United Kingdom, will, under the continued presidency of the Rev. J. Rodgers (vice-chairman of the London School Board), commence on Saturday, Sept. 25. During the late session about 800 students availed themselves of the privileges afforded by this institution, and of this number nearly 600 presented themselves for examination, and were successful in obtaining 140 Queen's prizes, awarded by the Science and Art Department of South Kensington.

A Leather Trades Exhibition, which is to last a week, was opened at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, on Wednesday morning, the object being to give the public as practical an idea as possible of an article which is used in close upon 300 industries, and in the preparation and manufacture of which considerably over 300,000 of our workpeople are employed.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the first week in September was 82,140, of whom 45,916 were in workhouses and 36,224 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the year 1879, these figures show an increase of 571. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 550, of whom 419 were men, 115 women, and 16 children under sixteen.

The statute, which received the Royal Assent on the day of the prorogation, to amend the laws relating to the protection of wild birds, contains the names of as many as 85 wild birds, including the cuckoo, nightingale, and snipe. The object of this Act, which takes effect from Jan. 1, is to protect wild birds in the United Kingdom during the breeding season, and provides penalties for shooting and taking wild birds between March 1 and Aug. 1 in any year.

The present free library at Cardiff having become inadequate for the growing requirements of the rapidly extending borough, the Corporation has resolved to build a handsome block, comprising a free library and the museum and art schools in Trinity-street. Plans have been prepared by Messrs. James Seward and Thomas, and on Monday the Town Council resolved to apply to the Treasury for a loan of £10,000 for the new buildings, the first stone of which is to be laid next month.

The report of the Commissioners of the Patriotic Fund to the Queen for the year 1880 was issued yesterday week. The income received up to Dec. 31, 1879, was £2,968,000. The sums appropriated were as follows:—£668,000 in the purchase of annuities, £1,518,500 to widows and orphans, £46,000 in the purchase of nominations to schools and colleges, £218,100 to the Royal Victoria Patriotic Asylum for girls, and £61,200 for boys. The cost of management is set down at £96,100.

The Army and Navy Gazette states that a distinguished service reward of £100 per annum has been granted by the Government of India to Major-General Sir F. R. Roberts, V.C., K.C.B., in recognition of his services in Afghanistan. The same paper says that the appointment of Inspector-General of Artillery in India, vacated by the transfer of Colonel C. G. Arbuthnot, C.B., R.A., to the Horse Guards, as Deputy-Adjutant-General, has been given to Colonel G. Leslie, R.A.

The Architectural Association have arranged for a number of their members and friends to make a tour in Lombardy during the autumn. Visits will be paid to Turin, Milan, Bergamo, Brescia, Cremona, Mantua, Pavia, and other places notable for objects of architectural interest. Accompanying the party will be three or four distinguished art-students who, being in training at the National Art Schools, South Kensington, have been selected by the Lords of the Committee of Council to undertake this journey as a part of their course of instruction.

There are eleven sections in the Ground Game Act which recites that it is expedient in the interest of good husbandry, and for the better security for the capital and labour invested by the occupiers of land in the cultivation of the soil, that further provision should be made to enable such occupiers to protect their crops from injury and loss by "ground game," which is explained as meaning "hares and rabbits." The occupier is to have the right, inseparable from his occupation, to kill ground game concurrently with any other person entitled to kill such on land in his occupation.

The Institut de Droit International concluded its session at Oxford yesterday week. Some very complete reports on the question of material rights with regard to maritime seizures, and that of the application to Eastern nations of European laws, were presented by Sir Travers Twiss and M. Bulmerincq. Sir Travers Twiss also gave an account of the labours of the Association for the codification and reform of the rights of nations. It was resolved that the next meeting of the Institute, to be held in 1881, shall take place in Italy, probably at Turin.

Last month the officers of the Fishmongers' Company seized at Billingsgate Market, as unfit for human food, 183 tons of fish, of which 100 tons had arrived by land and 83 by water. The single fish numbered 220,000, and included 5 brill, 57 coalfish, 150 cod, 10 crabs, 500 dabs, 176 dorees, 700 flounders, 33,510 haddocks, 34 hake, 79,151 herrings, 4479 lobsters, 586 mackerel, 800 mullets, 19,646 plaice, 3500 rouch, 1 salmon, 1289 skate, 4800 smelts, 10 trout, 76 turbot, and 70,600 whiting; and, in addition, there were seized 4 bushels of cockles, 1677 lb. of eels, 1024 bags of mussels, and 14 of oysters, 666 bushels of periwinkles, one kit of pickled salmon, 2675 gallons of shrimps, 200 bushels of whelks, and 77 quarts of whitebait.

The thirteenth annual Trades Union Congress of Great Britain began its sittings in Dublin on Monday, under the presidency of Mr. Slatter, secretary of the Typographical Association of England. On Tuesday Mr. Murphy, president, gave the opening address. He observed that one of the results of the meeting would be the formation of a Trades Council in Dublin, which was not intended to be an aggressive institution. He then invited attention to a reform of the Jury Laws and the direct representation of labour in Parliament, recommending that energy should be concentrated on returning labour representatives for Irish cities. The report of the Parliamentary Committee was adopted. A resolution in favour of developing the Employers' Liability Act so as to give a workman compensation like any member of the general public was carried, and, after some other business, the congress adjourned.

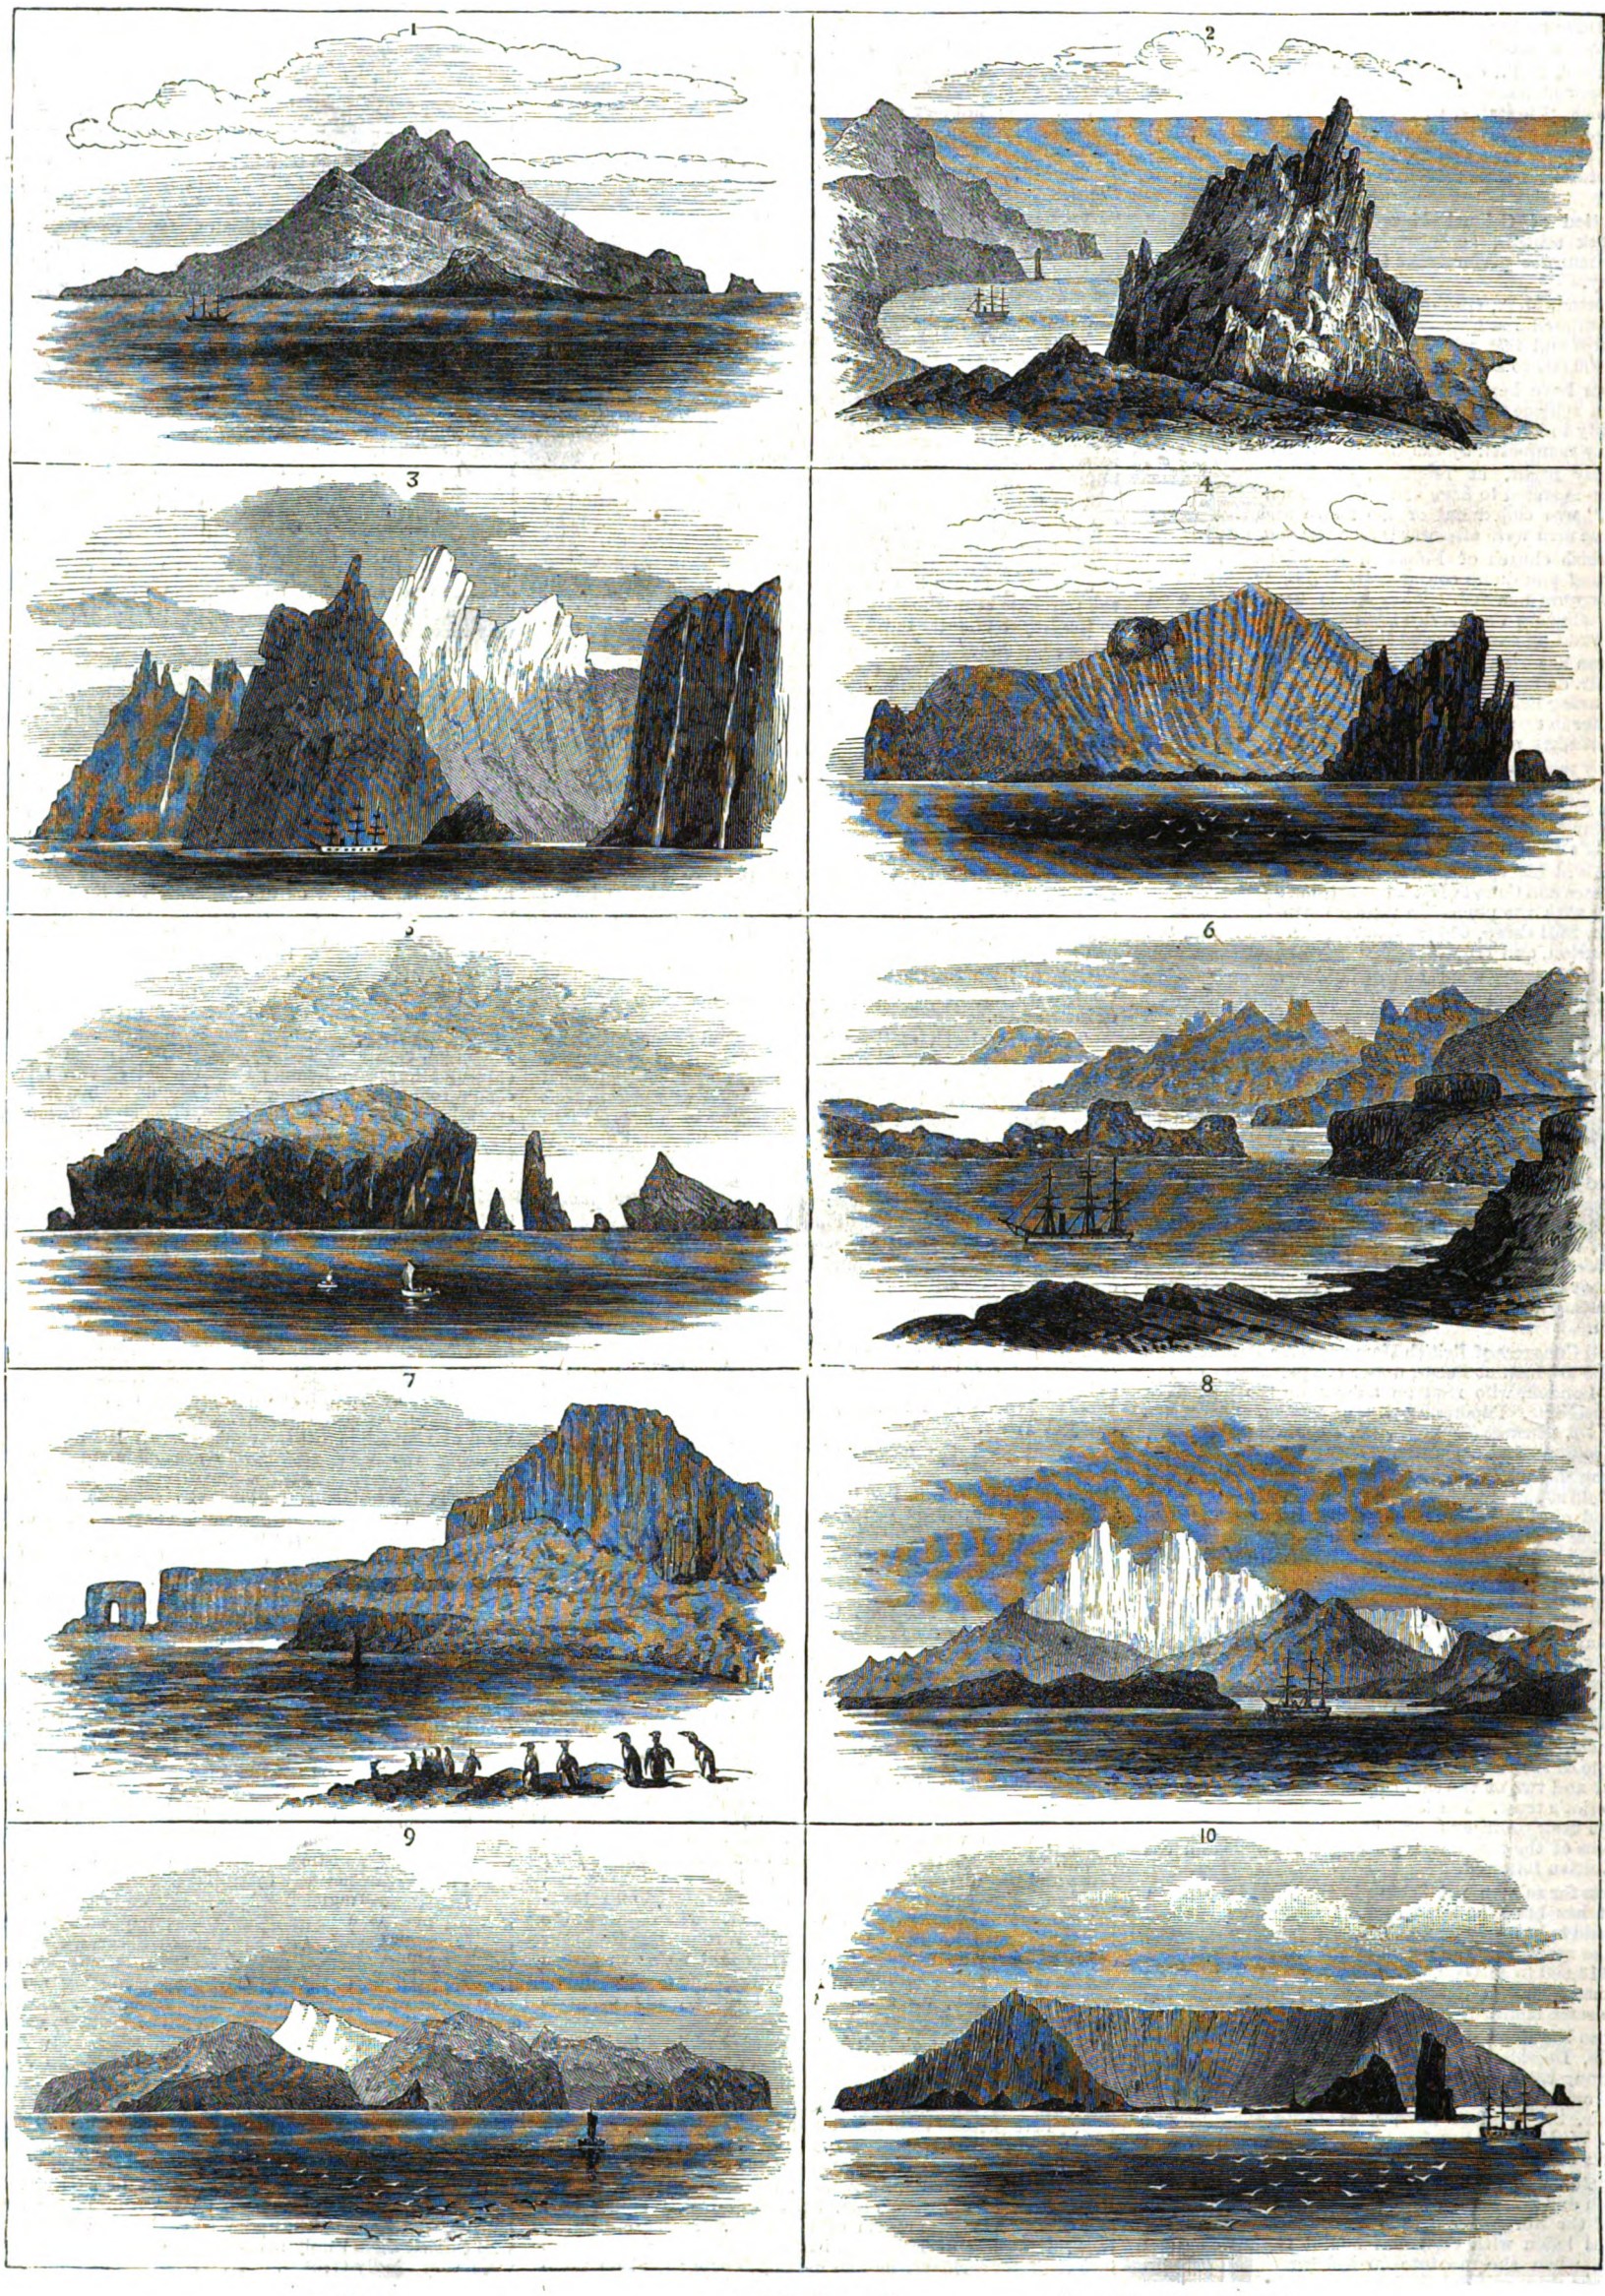
Shortly after ten o'clock last Saturday night a train from Waterloo to Hampton Court came in collision with an empty engine which was standing at some little distance westward of the Vauxhall station of the London and South-Western Railway. Five persons were killed and upwards of forty injured. The killed are—Mr. George Dale, of High-street, Kingston; Mr. John Lee, of Savile Lodge, Surbiton; Mr. John Ramsay, of 7, Champion-terrace, St. Anne's, Wandsworth; Mr. Walter P. Roberts, of 1, Copse Villa, St. John's-hill, Wandsworth; and Henry Arnott, fireman of the train. Major Marindin, R.E., Inspector of Railways, has been appointed to inquire into the fatal accident, and an inquest is being held on those who were killed.—The Coroner's inquiry into the accident to the Flying Scotchman, near Marshall Meadows, on Aug. 10 last, by which three persons lost their lives, was on Monday brought to a conclusion, the jury finding that the circumstance was accidental.—It is reported that an attempt was on Monday morning made, near Bushey Station, to blow up the early express down train, which leaves Euston at 5.15 a.m. A quantity of dynamite was, it is stated, placed on the line, the fact remaining undiscovered for two hours after the train had passed over the metals. The train appears to have owed its safety to the "jar" of the train having shaken the exploding apparatus off the line.

ISLANDS OF THE SOUTH INDIAN OCEAN.

The recent cruise of H.M.S. Comus in search of the crews who might have been landed from some missing vessels—the Knowsley Hall and others, which are supposed to have been shipwrecked among the groups of uninhabited islands in the South Indian Ocean—was noticed some weeks ago. We have since been favoured by Captain J. W. East, R.N., with a set of interesting Sketches of those islands, which are now presented to our readers.

The principal groups of islands situated in that region of the globe, all between the 35th and 55th degrees of South latitude, and between the 35th and 80th degrees of East longitude, are Prince Edward's Islands, the Crozets or Marion Islands, St. Paul's and Amsterdam Island, and Kerguelen Land.

The Crozets, which are notable from the shipwreck there of the New Zealand emigrant-ship Strathmore in 1875, will be found in about latitude 46 deg. 27 min. S., longitude 52 deg., and consist mainly of four islands, namely—Possession Island, the largest, East Island, Hog or Swine Island, and Penguin Island. They are of volcanic origin, and are quite mountainous; Possession Island has eminences rising to 5000 ft., covered with perpetual snow, the melting of which keeps the lowlands and valleys always wet. This produces deep bog, from the decomposition of the volcanic soil, but overgrown with moss and fern of the most beautiful verdure. In American Bay, in a cove named after H.M.S. Comus, when she lay there, and placed there a dépôt of provisions for the use of future shipwrecked people, the singular form of the basaltic rocks was peculiarly striking. East Island, which is distant seven miles from Possession Island, presents jagged snowy peaks 4000 ft. high, and its cliffs are precipitous, with many waterfalls, some of considerable magnitude, continually pouring over them into the sea. There are several little bays on the north and east sides of this island, where a landing is not difficult. Hog Island is only precipitous on its western side, but on the other sides descends with a more gentle slope to the sea. Its position is very incorrectly shown in the Admiralty chart, thirteen miles too far to the south and east. It is recommended that, in case of any vessels coming to grief near the Crozets, the boats should make for the east shore of Hog Island, or the north side of East Island. The former "abounds in game, so that no one need fear to be starved; the skins of the animals would afford plenty of clothing; and fuel, in the shape of oil, is in abundance, one penguin alone giving a gallon." The Kerguelen cabbage is abundant on Possession Island, and a plant called red root, on which human beings "could not only exist, but get fat." There is a small white bird called the "snowdrop," about the size of a pigeon, which is very good eating. The chase of the sea-elephant on the Crozet Islands has been abandoned as unprofitable, but large numbers of these huge animals were seen by the officers of the Comus. Their tongues, fins, and kidneys were found excellent to eat. Penguin Island, one of the same group, is a mass of volcanic matter, with peaks of 1200 ft., thrown up into a variety of strange forms and shapes: there is not the slightest appearance of a beach, but deep water all round it. The rocks upon which the Strathmore was wrecked five years ago, called the Twelve Apostles, are seven miles north-east of Possession Island; they consist of two large rocks, each a mile or mile and a half long, about 900 ft. high, and several detached pinnacled rocks, from 50 ft. to 400 ft. high, with deep channels between them, besides a few outlying rocks to the south-west. It is not difficult to land upon them in times of smooth water.



Kerguelen Land, which was one of the places chosen for an astronomical expedition to observe the Transit of Venus, with a view to determine the sun's distance from our earth, in the year 1874, is a large island, one hundred miles long and fifty miles broad, in latitude 49 deg. 54 min. south of the Equator, longitude 70 deg. 12 min. east of Greenwich. It has an area of 1318 square miles, and is not of volcanic formation, but of primary rock, with carboniferous strata. A high range of mountains runs through the length of the island from north-west to south-east. Its loftiest summit, Mount Ross, has an an altitude of 6700 ft., with a second top, as shown in our Illustration, somewhat lower. We invite attention to the view of Christmas Harbour—one taken from the west end, showing the very remarkable natural arch formed by a detached fragment of rock, at the east end of Mount Havergal, which is a curious feature in the southern coast of that harbour. The remaining Kerguelen sketch is one of Gazelle Basin, in Stromwetter Harbour.

The last place visited by H.M.S. Comus in quest of any people who might need relief was St. Paul's Island, which lies considerably more to the north, in latitude 38 deg. 43 min. below the Equator, and east longitude 77 deg. 38 min., nearly half-way between the Cape of Good Hope and Cape Leeuwin, the south-westerly point of Australia. Amsterdam Island is at no great distance from St. Paul's to the southward. It will be remembered that the unlucky Admiralty transport-ship Megæra, which broke down at sea a few years ago, left her remains on St. Paul's Island. This place is much frequented by various parties of fishermen. A French schooner from the Isle of Bourbon, with twenty-nine men so employed, was met here by the Comus, which supplied them with bread, sugar, and tobacco. The British corvette, having then completed her task of examining the southern islands and looking for shipwrecked crews, no traces of any such being anywhere found, made the best of her way to Singapore.

With regard to Amsterdam Island, we last week published a small map or plan of it, with a sketch of one of the huts occasionally inhabited by the French fishermen, which were drawn by the officers of H.M.S. Raleigh, accompanied by their report of a visit to that island. An interesting narrative of the wreck of the barque Meridian, in August, 1853, on her voyage with passengers from London to Sydney, was written by the late Mr. A. J. P. Lutwyche, afterwards Attorney-General of New South Wales, and one of the Judges in Queensland. It was published at the Mauritius in the French language, and at Sydney in the following year; and one of his friends has kindly lent us a copy for perusal. The shipwrecked party, consisting of eighty-four passengers, men, women, and children, and a crew of about twenty, were twelve days on the island, with scanty means of shelter and subsistence. They were rescued, on Sept. 5, by an American barque, the Monmouth, under command of Captain Ludlow, who carried them safely to the island of Mauritius, where they were very kindly treated. Mr. Lutwyche was formerly well known at the Bar and on the Press in London, and gained a good social position in the Australian colonies.

Yesterday week the Balloon Society held a meeting at which it was resolved to award a silver medal to each of the five aeronauts engaged in the late balloon contest, as the distances traversed were so nearly alike that it was impossible fairly to bestow the medal on one aeronaut alone. It was also resolved to arrange for another contest, with the view of determining the strength and direction of air currents at different altitudes.

NEW BOOKS.

Insanity in some form, more or less virulent, is commonly believed to lurk in the system of every human being; and a perusal, however slight, of Literary Frivolities, Fancies, Follies, and Frolics: by William T. Dobson (Chatto and Windus), a volume of "The Mayfair Library," will tend to encourage the belief that "It is a mad world, my masters." A gentleman has, at much cost of time and trouble, collected and published numerous, not to say innumerable, specimens of the various ways in which harmless lunatics have from a very early date exercised their ingenuity in the production of utterly useless, though not always uninteresting or unamusing, literary monstrosities or curiosities, or whatever is the proper name for them. Alliterative verses, bouts-rimés, lipograms, macaronics, chronograms, echo-verses, Jesuitical verses, monosyllabic verses, nonsense verses, centos, anagrams, and palindromes have, each in turn, some words of comment and explanation devoted to them, accompanied by a liberal supply of examples. There are also some observations concerning "figurate or shaped poems," that is, poems in which the lines are so arranged that the form of a decanter, or wine-glass, or some other object is presented to the eye, and concerning "prose poems," that is, prose so put together, accidentally to all appearance, as to run of itself into metrical lines, if anybody should take the trouble of splitting it up; and illustrative instances are provided. Of course alliteration is a perfectly legitimate and occasionally very powerful device, much to be commended sometimes as an aid in the construction of prose or verse; but to string together a quantity of either prose or verse with the sole or chief object of showing how far the alliterative hobby can be ridden is an exercise worthy of Bedlam. Something may be said, no doubt, in favour of bouts-rimés as a pastime when an evening has to be got through; and no doubt some very clever verses, worthy of being preserved in a book, are now and then thrown off under such circumstances. It is a question, however, whether in the book under consideration the author has been very happy in his selection, and whether his selection might not with advantage have been considerably curtailed. As for anagrams, and all the rest of it, the "Prisoner of Chillon" or another in like case, with time hanging heavy on the manacled hands, might be excused for attempting to beguile the leaden hours in torturing or dislocating an innocent word; but it is almost incomprehensible that reasonable beings, under no sort of restraint or constraint, should perform, or commemorate, or derive any gratification from such puerile feats of wasted ingenuity. Yet it is quite certain that there have been thousands of not only intelligent, but grave and learned, persons who have taken pride as well as pleasure in the accomplishment of such exploits, and that there are tens of thousands who will be greatly entertained, if not roused to emulation, by the pretty little volume consecrated to the commemoration and to illustrative samples of those exploits. How ready a weapon the lover of alliteration offers to the scorner may be gathered from the wound inflicted upon Rogers, who, having written

So up the tide of time I turn my sail, was ruthlessly parodied with

So up the tide of time I turn my tail.

The lipogram proper is a form of verse in which a certain letter is designedly omitted all through, and is, perhaps, the most idiotic of all "literary frivolities," unless anybody not an idiot can see anything either clever or funny in producing a set of verses remarkable for nothing but the complete exclusion of some particular vowel or consonant. Everybody knows the game of "bouts-rimés;" but when Horace Walpole himself, having the rhymes "brook," "crook," "why," and "I" given, could produce nothing better than—

I sit with my toes in a brook,
If anyone asks me for why,
I hits them a rap with my crook,
'Tis sentiment kills me, says I.

The game scarcely seems to be worth the candle. A very amusing story is told about the anagram, a device whereby a word or sentence is transformed, by transposition of the letters, into something totally different, so that a certain Dame Eleanor Davies, who, finding that her name and title could be anagrammatised into "Never soe (so) mad a ladie," was struck with despondency, and renounced the prophetic powers she had been induced to claim by her own imperfect anagrammatisation of "Eleanor Davies" into "Reveal, O Daniel!" taking a little liberty with an l and an s. The cento, a patchwork made up of fragments pieced together, so as to form a new composition, not necessarily nonsensical, from the works of an author or of several authors, has sometimes been turned to infamous account, as, for instance, by that reputed Christian, Ausonius, who has the discredit of having employed it for the purpose of perverting Virgil's "pure muse" into a tissue of obscenities; a fact which speaks volumes in condemnation of such "literary frolics." Quite enough has been said to let the reader understand what kind of little book is that which may now be dismissed with the final acknowledgment that it is provided with an index, a very useful addition, and that it is undoubtedly a bright, amusing, and not altogether uninstructive publication.

More brilliancy of style and a more enthusiastic tone might have been expected in the treatment of so inspiring a subject as that of Byron, by John Nichol (Macmillan and Co.), a volume belonging to the series of "English Men of Letters," edited by Mr. John Morley. Professor Nichol has performed his task as if it were a task; admirably so far as the conveyance of much information within a small compass is concerned, and sagaciously as far as regards appreciation of personal character and poetical merit, but almost as dispassionately as if he were lecturing upon a fossilised beetle, and almost as negligently, as regards diction and the arrangement of sentences, as if he were writing a business-like letter to a familiar friend. There is no intention of insinuating that the English, such as it is, is not perfectly good, or that the constructions are grammatically faulty; but surely the mere remembrance of Byron's genius ought to put his biographers and commentators upon their mettle, kindle a little fire in their brain, and cause them to rise, as they write, a little above their level best. However, the Professor has evidently taken pains to give an accurate and comprehensive account of the noble poet's descent, career, merits and demerits, both as a man and a "maker;" and that, after all, was the main purpose of his undertaking. No poet, perhaps, since the world began, has been so differently estimated by different judges and at different periods as Byron; for a while he was exalted to the very top of Parnassus, and anon he was sent down to the bottom of his class, as a schoolboy would say. It seems to have been reserved for our age to assign him his proper place, a very high one, among the genuine bards. Who can think lightly of him in whom Shelley acknowledged a master? Not Professor Nichol, certainly; and yet, with all his evident appreciation, the Professor can scarcely be considered happy when he says that Byron was "more nearly a dwarf Shakspeare than a giant Pope." What have we to do with either Shakspeare or Pope in our consideration of Byron? He was no dwarf-likeness of anybody; he was sui generis; and the best proof of this is that, though he would fain have moulded himself upon the model of his idol, Pope, he simply could not do it. He could only speak as he was moved; sometimes ungrammatically, often uncouthly, but nearly always, unless he deliberately hampered himself, in unmistakable poetry, bearing his own peculiar brand.

Exuberant spirits, which sometimes do duty very well indeed for wit and humour, and which, at any rate, invest with liveliness the commonest details of the most uneventful narrative, are the main characteristics of Five Weeks in Iceland: by C. A. De Fonblanque (Richard Bentley and Son), a volume describing how a young lady, in company with some friends, of both sexes, paid a visit to Iceland and came away again. They were sometimes cold and sometimes hot; they roughed it a good deal, sleeping, as well as eating and drinking, not only in queer houses and sheds, but in uncomfortable churches amid disagreeable smells; they had guides who were either "stuck up" or idiotic, and ponies that sometimes would go and sometimes wouldn't go, and occasionally kicked and bucked and jolted and went on just as other ponies in other places besides Iceland have been known to do; they travelled many scores, perhaps hundreds, of miles, and made pleasant and unpleasant aquaintances, including a lady, "the wife of a highly respectable Icelander," which lady appears to have "made a good thing of them" by selling them certain articles at more than the market-price on pretence of saving the travellers "the trouble of going to the shop;" they bathed in cold rivers and hot springs; they saw geysers, of which the world in general has heard before now; and once they lost their way and had to pass the night in a sort of out-house. This was the most notable adventure they met with, though everything else, or at any rate, a great deal else, that they did, or said, or saw, or felt, is related with much circumstance. There are some amusing passages, and some pretty pieces of writing; but the writer, on the whole, seems to have a low opinion of Iceland, and to have found very little to admire or enjoy there. The narrative bristles with the names of persons, Icelanders and others; and it does not appear to have occurred to the writer that, if the real names have been given, a deed of questionable taste may have been committed. Some people object to being "put into a book" at all; and they object still more, no doubt, when themselves or their countrymen or their country, or all these, are made fun of or unfavourably criticised. And English is not an altogether unread or unknown language in Iceland. The impression left upon the mind by the book is that Iceland may be a dreary place for English travellers to go to; but that an irruption of English travellers must be an awful nuisance to the poor Icelanders.

OLD LEADENHALL MARKET.

The partial demolition of the buildings, sheds, and stalls in this ancient place of business, with a view to the erection of a new and more commodious market-house, was commenced some weeks ago. A large space is already cleared of that portion, towards the north side, which was known as the Old Leather and Hide Market, and the Old Meat Market, but which has been occupied by a mixture of different provision trades. The Poultry Market, or so much of it as is comprised within one large covered space, to the south of the central alley entered from Gracechurch-street, will not be disturbed till after the first-mentioned part is rebuilt. One of the principal salesmen there has, nevertheless, already put up a board near his stalls bearing the inscription, "Last Year of Old Leadenhall Market, Established 1345, by Edward III." We find it recorded, however, that it was in 1479 that Simon Eyre erected a "granary," which he gave to the Corporation of the City of London, on the site of the ancient manor-house of Leadenhall; and he also built a chapel, adjacent to this granary or corn-market. The hall there was some time afterwards used as a place for keeping the weapons of military service belonging to the City Companies and other public stores. We are told that the scales and beams for weighing meal, wool, and various commodities brought for sale, were long to be seen there; and in the upper lofts of the building were painted the patterns of certain artistic devices for City pageants. This was the state of the edifice called Leadenhall, in the sixteenth century, as described by the Elizabethan Antiquary, John Stow; and it is mentioned in 1726, by Chamberlayne, as "a noble ancient building." But, a very few years later, the original structure was removed, and gave place to the low-roofed sheds and small houses, with a labyrinth, of intersecting passages, that extended over a large space between Gracechurch-street, Leadenhall-street, and Lime-street, having entrances from all three sides. The Green Yard, one part of this ground, had once been the garden of a stately mansion, belonging to Sir Hugh Neville in 1309, when this was the most aristocratic part of town. In the time of Charles II. we find the Spanish Ambassador visiting Leadenhall Market, and expressing to the King his wonder at the vast quantity of meat sold there. Newgate Market was then its only rival; but Clare Market, Hungerford Market, and Newport Market were soon afterwards established for the accommodation of the western parts of London. The slaughtering of cattle in this neighbourhood, as well as at Smithfield, was complained of as a great nuisance little more than thirty years ago. Our Illustrations of old Leadenhall Market will be recognised by everybody who has strolled through it, either as an intending customer for household use, or simply as a curious spectator. The scene in some of those narrow passages, with open shops at each end, under projecting eaves and pent-houses constructed of massive woodwork, might remind one of the descriptions of an Eastern Bazaar. Its picturesque aspect is enhanced by the working costume of the people attending these shops, the blouses, aprons, and caps, worn for convenience and cleanliness, as well as by the profuse display of animals and vegetables: of the former, both living and dead. All kinds of poultry, feathered game, hares and rabbits, carcases of deer, and some fish, with bacon and sausages; live cocks and hens, pheasants, peacocks, ducks and geese; lap-dogs and fancy terriers; canaries, larks, and other singing-birds are here offered for sale. There are many greengrocers' and fruiterers' stalls, besides those of numerous other trades, such as the cheesemonger's and butterman's, oddly mingled in the older part of the market, which is rapidly disappearing. In the remaining Poultry Market properly so called, this mixture of diverse merchandise will not be observed.

The Boy's Newspaper, an excellently arranged penny weekly paper, edited by Mr. Thomas Archer, made its first appearance on Wednesday. News and information—social, political, and sporting—and of all kinds in which boys take an interest, are attractively set forth; and the first number is highly creditable to the enterprising firm of Cassell, Petter, and Galpin, under whose auspices the periodical has been issued.

The Christmas Number of The Quiver for 1880 will be entitled "The Golden Mark."

"SALLET-HERBES."

That "a sallet, in hot weather, is not amiss to cool a man's stomach," we have the authority of the renowned Jack Cade, and the term, as we know, is an old one. Thus, we find, in "All's Well That Ends Well," that Lafen says, addressing the Countess, "'twas a good lady: we may pick a thousand sallets, ere we light on such another herb;" to which the Clown, replies, "Indeed, Sir, she was the sweet marjoram of the sallet, or rather the herb of grace; and we have the term elsewhere, in this allusion—"my sallet days, when I was green in judgment." Dryden, too, alludes to salads—"some coarse cold salad;" "happy old Coricyman's fruits and salads;" as does Ben Jonson, also, in his "Alchemist," where Sir Epicure Mawworm proposes, with his prospect of wealth, to give up salads—"I myself will have the beards of barbels served, instead of sallads." Like allusions by others might be readily cited. With country people—who believe in salads most "at spring and fall"—namely, April and September—the old term "sallet" is still in use, and an inclusive term it is, embracing weeds and herbs; as it does, indeed, elsewhere. Mrs. Scott Stevenson—in "Our Home in Cyprus"—says that Cyprus weeds make good salads, wild geranium serves for spinach, and that thistles, when cooked, are very like sea kale—that "cale" which, as asparagus, too, as is mentioned by Pliny, was salted down by the Romans for the long voyages they made. Their asparagus, though, was no doubt the wild sort, which, at Bath and Bristol, is still sold freely in the months of May and June.

With us, however, the general use of salads is a more modern custom, as Ray, in his "Tour of Europe"—the date of which was 1663—notes that the Italians used several herbs for salads which were not then thus used in England; and, speaking of vegetables, he instances "selleri"—though he was quite wrong there, as it was grown largely at Sandwich, in the reign of Elizabeth—and goes on to say that their endive excelled even the lettuce itself, which, amongst things most cooling, has so long held sway, as it did in the days of Horace. "Nam lactuca innatat acri, post vinum stomacho," a property also belonging to parsley, as lovers of good wine know, and which Pliny recognised; as also, that it gave a good odour to the body. "Apium; hoc arceri ebrietatem, bonumque corpori odorem conferri aiunt." Parsley was used for garlands, too, as we read in Virgil, "Apium igitur inter coronarias herbas memorandum est;" and in Horace, too, "Est in horto, Phylli nectendis apium coronis." That salad-eating and the use of vegetables was in vogue with our Saxon ancestors, we may infer from the names given by them to two of the months—"sprout-cale" to February, and "diet and weed" month to June. Vegetables were, in fact, in those days a staple form of diet, as Izaac Walton knew, as we find by Piscator, who, after alluding to "those wiser countries that feed on herbs, salads, and fish," proposes to make a "brave breakfast, with a piece of powdered beef and a radish or two;" and in that form of diet beans had a place, nearly 2000 years ago, for we find Horace writing thus—"O quando faba Pythagoræ cognata, simulque uncta satis pingui ponentur oluscula lardo?" Bean-feasts are hence an ancient institution. The greatest bean-eaters were the Italians, as they still continue; but the Egyptians did not like them, for "they are sown in no part of Egypt," says Herodotus. "Neither will the inhabitants eat them, boiled or raw."

To return, however, to our special subject, some of the best salads grow wild, as the gipsies know. Thus, dock and dandelion, sorrel and land-cress, which are excellent when eaten between sliced buttered bread. But not only are the former—dock and dandelion—eaten by gipsies and by country people, but they are grown freely in Paris, in a succession of crops, for the Continental markets. We grew them, too, for Covent Garden in 1851, when, as was the case more recently during the siege of Paris, so many of the French were here. They are also grown, for the same purpose, at that "hothouse of France," that "Town of Palms," Hyères, As a salad the spring wood-sorrel, called "alleluya" in Spain and Italy, and which makes a fish-sauce in France, is, as is the summer field dock-sorrel, and the sheep's-sorrel, too, in common use in Lapland, where Linnæus says the natives make that and angelica their chief green food. Good salads are made of green leaves and shoots, and of common weeds as well. Thus in the young tops and leaves of the blackberry we have that salad which was so common at the tables of the Greeks, who mixed with their lettuce, as did the Romans, too, the leaves of the mallow and marigold, as the people do still, in Egypt, China, Syria, and Hindostan; and those leaves were commended by Horace, for their healthful properties, but with this proviso, that they were best "when boiled," like the leaves and shoots of the patience dock, which thus are used by the Manchester poor, and the leaves of the nettle, which are eaten by the Swedes, and the Irish, and by the English, too, as they were in the days of Pope—"His court with nettles and with cresses stor'd, with soups unbought, and sallads, blessed his board."

In France, nasturtium leaves and shoots are used in salads, as also whitloof and sweet basil, and the leaves of some kinds of the prince's feather, which in the East Indies they use as spinach; while on the Malabar coast, hibiscus leaves, called there "red sorrel," furnish a welcome salad. In our own hop counties, hop shoots are eaten, as the young shoots of the willow herbs are in Kamschatka, which, when boiled, are like asparagus, a flavour possessed by the tall sea holly, of which the Swedes, who eat the lesser celandine leaves, are fond; and by the stems of that kind of goosefoot we know as "the good King Harry," which, together with the leaves, are eaten in Lincolnshire, where it is grown as a salad. In the wild treacle mustard, the rough-leaved comfrey, and the golden saxifrage, we have three others; and the latter, under the name of "cresson de roche," furnishes a salad to the people in the Vosges. The leaves of Venus's comb formed at one time a salad for the Greeks; and the young green shoots of the bladder campion, blanched to correct their bitterness, are eaten in Zante; and in many of the islands in the Mediterranean they are still in common use. The leaves of the syringa, as also the burnet—to which Shakspeare alludes, "the freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover"—are used in salads, when cucumbers are scarce, and their flavour is wanted. Sea-beet leaves, chervil, and purslane, too, as also the succulent leaves of the common scurvy-grass, and wood-sage—which is eaten with bread and butter—and the leaves of the cardamine and swine's-cress leaves are all good salads, and in use with many people. Then there is the leaf of the lamb's-lettuce, monk's-salad, as the French call it, or corn-salad, as we term it—"corn-sallad is an herb," says Mortimer, in his "Husbandry," "whose top leaves are a sallet of themselves"—which was the old "white pot-herb" of our ancestors, that was in use in Elizabeth's time, as we know by Gerarde. On the Continent, where borage is a salad, the large, showy leaves of the Judas-tree are eaten, as are those of the Canadian species, by the settlers in the woods; and by the rustics in this country the young leaves of the sow-thistle are much enjoyed.

Such are a few of the things which serve our turn for salads; but the one that is most in use is the well-known watercress.

HOMŒOPATHIC DOMESTIC MEDICINE. By J. LAURIE, M.D. Completely re-arranged, revised, re-written, annotated, and brought down to the present time, with a copious introduction, by R. S. Gutteridge, M.D. The present edition contains many important new chapters and sections, with new features and matter pertaining thereto, including the specific characteristic effects of all the new American remedies, the symptoms and treatment of all general diseases, including those of women and children. Diseases of Tropical Climates are fully considered, and the volume may be pronounced of the greatest value to families, emigrants, and missionaries.

Of this work a Physician of high standing writes:—"I have gone pretty well through your Edition of Laurie's Domestic Homœopathic Medicine, and I can truly say that it is the most perfect work of its kind ever published; in fact, it is, to my mind, too good for the general public, as it enlightens them too much in the art and mystery of medicine and surgery. For young medical beginners such a work is invaluable, as it would save them a great amount of reading. It is really superior to any Domestic yet published. I have the First and Second Editions of Laurie, and your Edition only shows what the work has developed into."

EPPS'S COCOA. GRATEFUL and COMFORTING. "By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operation of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately-flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.

EAU DE SUEZ.
EAU DE SUEZ, so called from the name of its inventor, M. Suez, has been with justice termed "Vaccine for the Mouth," inasmuch as it does away with toothache as completely as vaccination does away with smallpox. It immediately and permanently cures toothache, whitens and preserves the teeth, removes all unpleasant odours, including that of tobacco, and secures a pure and healthy state of the gums, mouth, and throat.
There are three kinds, distinguished from each other by a Yellow, Green, and Red Silk Thread.
EAU DE SUEZ.—GREEN THREAD must be considered the most valuable of all, and should be used as a daily mouth-wash. Those who suffer periodically from toothache, sensitiveness of the teeth and gums, decay, and offensive breath will never suffer again, and will preserve their teeth sound and white till the end, by using ten or twelve drops in a little water to rinse the mouth well night and morning.
EAU DE SUEZ.—YELLOW THREAD instantly removes toothache, however violent it may be.
EAU DE SUEZ.—RED THREAD is used in the same manner as the green, but is specially adapted for children.
SUEZ TOOTH-BRUSH.—This brush is soft, being made of the finest badger-hair. A hard tooth-brush is not only a foolish, but also a criminal instrument, so to speak. For by rubbing a soft substance like the gums with a hard brush the former will evidently become spongey and weakened, thus being no longer of any use in protecting the roots of the teeth, which naturally become exposed, and impart an offensive smell to the breath.
SUEZ ORANGE TOOTH PASTE secures the permanent removal of tartar, and by daily use restores the whiteness of the teeth.
EAU DE SUEZ.—To guard against counterfeiting, buy only those tooth-brushes which are stamped on the handle with the name "Suez," and those bottles which bear the words "Wilcox and Co., 336, Oxford-street, London," on the labels.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

THE LATE BRIGADIER-GENERAL H. F. BROOKE.

The death of this distinguished officer, who was killed in the sortie of the garrison from Candahar on the 16th inst., has been mentioned in our news of the Afghan War. He obtained his first commission in June, 1854. He landed with the 48th Regiment in the Crimea on April 21, 1855. He served at the siege and fall of Sebastopol, for which he received the medal with clasp and Turkish medal. He also served throughout the campaign of 1860 in China, as aide-de-camp to Sir Robert Napier, and was present at the actions of Sinho and Tan-Khu, the assault of the Taku Forts (severely wounded), and the final advance on and surrender of Pekin. For this service he was promoted to the brevet rank of Major, and received a medal with two clasps. He was Brigade Major in Bengal from April, 1863, to January, 1865; Assistant Adjutant-General to April, 1866; and again from 1872 to 1876; Deputy Adjutant-General in 1876 and 1877; and Adjutant-General at Bombay from November in that year. He obtained the brevet rank of Colonel in February, 1877. He was in command of the 2nd Infantry Brigade at Candahar, having, at the second outbreak of the Afghan War, proceeded from Bombay, where he was Adjutant-General.

Brigadier-General Henry F. Brooke was forty-four years of age. He was the eldest son of Mr. George Brooke and Lady Arabella Brooke, of Ashbrooke, Brookeborough, in the county of Fermanagh. He is the first General Officer for twenty-two years past who has been killed in action. This was while he was endeavouring to carry off a wounded brother officer, under a heavy fire of the enemy. On July 22, when General Brooke was returning from the Argandab Valley up the Murcha Kotal, accompanied by Major Adam, with eight troopers of the Poona Horse he was fired upon by some men from behind the rocks. The General, Major Adam, and half the men dismounted, and, each taking a carbine, slowly ascended the pass, returning the fire of their assailants. They thus forced their way through the Kotal, driving the enemy up the hillside. A company of the 4th Rifles, in the meantime, arrived and relieved the General. Search was made, but the ruffians escaped. General Brooke was twice fired on by assassins in Candahar, but on each occasion escaped unhurt. It was by him, as we now learn from a letter which has reached England this week, that the fugitive remnant of General Burrows's brigade, when it approached Candahar after its defeat at Khushk-i-Nakhud, on July 27, was met at Kokoran, with a small force hastily collected from the garrison, and was protected and assisted to get into the citadel in safety. "Lucky it was he did so," says the letter referred to. "Half a mile from Candahar we had to begin our fighting, and without supports or communications fought our way to Kokoran, some nine miles. Awful were the sights we met on the way." The details of this memorable action, which may perhaps have saved Candahar as well as the lives of the defeated British troops, will probably be supplied by General Primrose's despatches, hereafter to be published. In the meantime, the value of General Brooke's services at Candahar, to the day of his death, must already be made apparent.

The portrait is from a photograph by Bourne and Shepherd, of India.

MILITARY PONTOON DISASTER IN SPAIN.

Our Illustration, in last week's paper, of the exercises of the Royal Engineers, at Runnymede, in the operation of constructing a pontoon bridge across the Thames, has made the non-military reader somewhat better acquainted with the use of such an apparatus. The melancholy subject of an Illustration now presented is the disaster that was also mentioned in our last as having taken place on the river Ebro, near Logrono, in Spain, where the upsetting of a pontoon raft cost more than a hundred soldiers' lives. The particulars at first reported were not quite exact. An official statement informs us that a battalion of infantry, numbering 275 officers and soldiers, had been ordered, in the programme of military manœuvres, to cross the river on a raft made of pontoons. The raft was being moved slowly towards the Navarre bank. The band continued playing, and the soldiers, mostly young lads of the last conscription, began to keep time with their feet, despite the warnings of their officers. The result was that very soon the raft began to roll ominously. The men became afraid, and when they saw the water splash over the sides and the bottom of the raft, they were not easy to control. The raft gave a lurch forwards and another aft; the soldiers rushed forwards and capsized it. The people on both banks witnessed this accident with intense anxiety. When the first moment of panic was over, they hastened to assist the men who were struggling for life in the deep and rapid stream. Barges were manned, and everything that the soldiers could hold on to was thrown into the river. Planks, rafters, casks served to save more than one life, and some civilians stripped and swam boldly to rescue the soldiers. Such among them as knew how to swim assisted their comrades, and the Colonel, badly hurt, was saved by a sapper and bandsman. Here and there, eight or ten men were just seen for a moment clinging to one another, and then they disappeared. Eleven officers and ninety-seven men were drowned, while the Colonel, twelve officers, and a hundred soldiers were saved. The bodies recovered were buried in separate tombs. The garrison of Logrono paid their late comrades military honours at the interment; and all the inhabitants and the local clergy attended the funeral. The Spanish Government has authorised a subscription for the victims. The King has given £400, and the Queen and Princess £700.

Yesterday week the New Savings Bank Act was promulgated. After Nov. 20 the rate of interest to trustees of savings banks is to be reduced to £3 per cent, and to depositors not to exceed £2 15s. From Nov. 1 next, when the new law comes into operation, any deposit with a trustee or Post-Office savings bank, or any part of a deposit, not being less than £10, may, on the request of the depositor, be invested by the savings bank authority into any Government stock.—On the same day was issued the new Act to empower the Postmaster-General to issue money orders, in the form prescribed in the schedule, for the purpose of the transmission of small sums, and the law is extended to the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. The new law has immediate operation, and the smallest sum to be received is one shilling, on which the poundage is "one halfpenny," and other amounts to 20s., when the poundage is to be twopence.

THE COURT.

The last week has been one of complete repose for the Queen. Her Majesty, since the close of the Session being temporarily relieved from the more onerous state duties, has enjoyed the quiet pleasure of visiting during her daily drives many of the tenantry and dependents upon the Royal estates. The Queen has also paid visits to the Misses Farquharson at Invercauld and to Mrs. Campbell at the Manse; and Colonel J. Farquharson, of Invercauld, and Miss Farquharson have dined with her Majesty. Mr. Walter Campbell has also dined with the Queen.

Earl Spencer left the castle last Saturday, having had an audience of her Majesty before leaving.

The Rev. Archibald Campbell performed Divine service at Balmoral on Sunday, which was attended by the Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Leopold.

The Queen, with the Princess, has made frequent excursions, having driven to the Linn of Dee, the Derry Shiel, Loch Bulig, and various other picturesque places on Dee Side.

The Royal family circle has been augmented by the arrival of the Grand Duke of Hesse and the younger members of his family from Germany, who will make a long stay with her Majesty in the Highlands.

Prince Leopold was present at the Aboyne Highland gathering last week.

The Queen has conferred the Order of the Garter on the Duke of Bedford.

Her Majesty has approved the appointment of the Earl of Aberdeen to the Lord Lieutenancy of Aberdeenshire.

The Earl of Dalhousie, Lord Sandhurst, and Lord Thurlow have been appointed Lords in Waiting.

Lord Braye has been permitted by her Majesty to hang up the sword of his elder brother, the Hon. Edmund Verney Wyatt-Edgell, who was killed at Ulundi, in the Braye Chapel at St. George's, Windsor.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales closed their yachting season at the Isle of Wight yesterday week, when they crossed from Cowes to Portsmouth, with Princes Albert Victor and George and Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, in the Osborne, on board which, at the jetty, their Royal Highnesses entertained at luncheon Rear-Admiral Foley, Admiral Superintendent of the dockyard, Admiral Clanwilliam, Captain Lord Charles Scott, of the Bacchante, and Prince Louis of Battenberg. The Prince and Princess, with their family, left shortly after for town, travelling by the South Coast Railway to Victoria, Mr. J. P. Knight, the general manager, being in attendance. Their Royal Highnesses visited the Duchess of Cambridge at St. James's Palace directly after they arrived at Marlborough House; and the Prince called upon the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia at Claridge's Hotel. In the evening the Prince and Princess took their sons to Drury Lane Theatre.

The Duchess of Teck and the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia visited their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House on Saturday, and in the evening the Prince and Princess, with their sons, went to the Gaiety Theatre.

On Sunday their Royal Highnesses and their family attended Divine service. Prince John of Glücksburg (uncle of the Princess) arrived in the afternoon. The Prince, accompanied by Prince Louis of Battenberg, met his Royal Highness at the Charing-cross Station.

The Princess drove out with her sons on Monday morning, and in the afternoon accompanied them to the Westminster Aquarium, with Prince John of Glücksburg and Prince Louis of Battenberg. In the evening the Prince and Princess, with their sons and daughters, went to the performance of Haverly's Mastodon Minstrels, at Her Majesty's Theatre.

Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales took leave of the Princess and their sisters on Tuesday, and left Marlborough House, attended by the Rev. J. N. Dalton, to join H.M.S. Bacchante (Captain Lord Charles Scott), which proceeds to Vigo, to await there the arrival of the detached squadron, under the command of Rear-Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam. The Prince, accompanied by Prince John of Glücksburg and Prince Louis of Battenberg, went with his sons to Spithead, and proceeded in the Bacchante as far as Cowes, where, in consequence of the unsettled state of the weather, the Bacchante anchored for the night. The Prince and Prince John of Glücksburg returned to London in the evening.

The Prince and Princess, with their daughters, have gone to Abergeldie for a short stay previous to the departure of the Princess on a visit to her parents in Denmark.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and the Duke of Cambridge are on a visit to the Imperial Court at Berlin.

The Grand Duke Constantine of Russia returned to Claridge's Hotel shortly after eight o'clock on Saturday morning from Glasgow, where he had been especially to inspect the Czar's yacht Livadia in Elder's yard. The Grand Duke visited the Royal Exchange during his short stay. Saturday being the Emperor of Russia's fête day there was the customary Te Deum at the Russian Chapel, Welbeck-street, Cavendish-square, which the Grand Duke attended; and afterwards visited the Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Cambridge, and dined with Prince Lobanoff at the Russian Embassy. On Sunday, Prince Louis of Battenberg visited his Imperial Highness at his hotel, and the Grand Duke dined with the Prince and Princess of Wales. His Imperial Highness left town on Monday morning by the Continental mail from Victoria en route for Paris.

Musurus Pasha, who has represented Turkey for so many years at the Court of St. James's, has just received from the Sultan the Grand Order of the Osmanie in diamonds.

It is announced that a gentleman, advanced in years, who desires that seaside accommodation for convalescent poor patients should be greatly extended during his lifetime, has placed at the disposal of the Committee of Management of the Metropolitan Convalescent Institution £6500, on condition that they at once establish a branch seaside home. The institution at present comprises a home at Walton-on-Thames for 300 adults of both sexes, and one on Kingston Hill for 150 children. Upwards of 3500 convalescent patients, many of whom have been under treatment at the different hospitals, are admitted every year free of payment. A suitable freehold site has been secured at Bexhill-on-Sea, near St. Leonards, and plans for a building capable of accommodating one hundred inmates have been prepared and approved by the board. The cost of the land, building, and furnishing complete is estimated at about £12,000. The committee of management have already entered into a contract for the erection of so much of the building as will receive fifty inmates, and they ask for funds to enable them to fit up and furnish that portion, and also to complete the rest of the building at once, thus carrying out the condition imposed by the generous donor.

[The notice of appointment of the Rev. C. B. Ratcliffe to the incumbency of Christ Church, Weymouth, is incorrect.]

The ancient parish church of Hordley, Ellesmere, Salop, was reopened on the 2nd inst., after restorations so extensive as almost to amount to rebuilding, under the direction of Mr. W. MacCarthy.

The late Miss Mary Windle, of Stanley Villa, St. Giles's, Oxford, has bequeathed £500 to the National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church.

The Sheffield parish church, which has been considerably enlarged and beautified at a cost of £20,000 (the whole of which amount has been obtained except £1500) will be reopened on Oct. 26, when the Archbishop of York will preach.

The Rev. H. C. White, who has been Curate of St. Paul's Cray church, Chiselhurst, for the last four years, has been presented by the congregation with a purse of sovereigns as a mark of their esteem and appreciation of his ministrations.

The Citizen tells us that the monument of John Milton, in Cripplegate church, which since its erection in 1832, stood in an obscure corner, has during the recent restoration of the edifice been placed in a conspicuous position near the south-west door.

Her Majesty in Council has ratified a scheme for assigning sundry lands and estates in Herefordshire as endowment of the bishopric of Hereford, subject to certain liabilities and charges, and reserving the rights to coal, clay, sand, and other minerals. The total acreage thus assigned amounts to 3059.

Mr. Baring, of the London banking firm of that name, has undertaken to defray the entire cost of erecting a new parish church at Revelstoke, a village near the mouth of the river Yealm. His country seat is situate at Revelstoke. Mrs. Baring yesterday week laid the foundation-stone of the new church. Mr. J. Pier St. Aubyn, of London, is the architect.

On Monday the foundation-stone of the works for the extension of St. Andrew's Church, Buckland, Dover, was laid by Earl Granville, who referred to the great increase of church accommodation everywhere to meet the growing requirements of the population as showing that there was now more action, more energy, and more vitality in the Established Church than ever.

St. Andrew's Church, Maghull, was consecrated on the 8th inst. by the Bishop of Liverpool, and to it is attached the honour of being the first church consecrated in the new diocese.—Yesterday week the Bishop consecrated the church of St. John the Evangelist, Walton-on-the-Hill, which has been open by license for two years, the service being choral throughout.

The first interment under the new Act took place on Thursday week in the parish churchyard of Beckenham. The officiant was Mr. Samuel, Baptist minister at Penge. The service consisted of an extempore prayer, the reading of passages of Scripture, a brief address, and the singing of a hymn. Several clergymen and strangers were present. The service lasted half an hour, but no reference was made to the change in the law.

The opening of the Flower Sermon Window in the Church of St. Katherine Cree and St. James, Leadenhall-street, took place on Wednesday afternoon, when a sermon was preached by the Rev. W. M. Whittemore, D.D., Rector of the united parishes of Katherine Cree and St. James's, Aldgate. The first flower sermon was preached by the Rector in St. James's Church in 1858, and is now, since the union of the parishes, preached in this church every Whitsun Tuesday. The new stained-glass window at the east end of the church is placed there in commemoration of this flower service. The cost has been met by voluntary contributions.

On Sunday morning the Rev. Brooke Lambert, who succeeds the late Canon Miller as Vicar of Greenwich, read himself in at the parish church of St. Alphege, in the presence of a large congregation. The ceremony consisted of the reading from the pulpit, in lieu of a sermon, of the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion (the omission of which, he explained, would forfeit the benefice), delaring his assent to the same, and his intention to celebrate the sacrament according to the book of Common Prayer. In the afternoon at the same church he gave an address to a large body of children, and in the evening preached to a crowded congregation at St. Mary's, Greenwich.

Yesterday week the Archbishop of Canterbury resumed his third quadrennial visitation of his diocese. His Grace urged that it was the duty of the clergy to endeavour to imbue the minds of the laity with a love of Apostolical Christianity. He thought the tendency of the age was towards a lax view of Christian doctrine, and the substitution of a new in place of the genuine Gospel. The Primate then referred to the Biblical view of the Resurrection, contrasting it with modern views, remarking that the Gospel with the supernatural elements eliminated ceased to be the Gospel. The existing prejudice against miracles, his Grace maintained, was unreasonable, and he contended that the whole of Christianity is built on the supernatural.

The gable cross has at last been placed upon the south transept of York Minster, and thus has completed the last work of the late Dean of York. The present Dean, Canon Fleming, Dr. Monk (the organist), and the clerk of the works ascended the scaffolding on Tuesday, and the Dean said a special office as the cross was lowered into its place. The south transept of the cathedral was eight years ago in a sadly dilapidated condition; but, thanks to the late Dean Duncombe's munificence, under the able treatment of Mr. Street, it has been completely restored, the walls underpinned, the Purbeck shafting repolished or replaced, the wooden groining of the roof repaired and cleaned from paint and whitewash, so as to show the ribs and boarding, and the bosses richly gilt.

The local arrangements for the forthcoming Church Congress at Leicester are complete. A hall has been erected close to the railway station spacious enough to contain the largest audience ever yet assembled on such an occasion, and specially adapted for the purposes of the meetings. The town of Leicester is preparing to give the congress a most hearty welcome. The Mayor, Mr. John Bennett, though a Nonconformist, is inviting the members to a conversazione to be held at the close of the proceedings. Offers of hospitality have come in from Churchmen and Nonconformists alike to an extent sufficient to provide for a considerable proportion of the expected visitors, and an abundant supply of lodgings has been secured by the committee in addition to the accommodation supplied in the ordinary way by the hotels of the neighbourhood.

At a recent meeting of the Roman Catholic Archbishops and Bishops at Maynooth College an address to the Irish people on the education question was adopted. It reminded the people that nothing had been done to change the objectionable character of the Queen's Colleges. As to the Royal University, it was complained that in it there is no recognition of the rights of Catholics to aid in teaching of Catholic youth. The right to equality must be insisted on.

The fourteenth annual report of Cardinal Manning's Westminster Diocesan Education Fund shows that there has been during the past twelvemonth an increase of 1086 in the number of the children on the books of the poor schools of that faith in the metropolis and the adjoining districts. The increase in the average daily attendance of the children is given at about 1000, and the number of those examined on the day of inspection was 480 in excess over those examined in 1879. The number of schools examined during this year was 271, out of which 176 were parochial, five Poor-Law, and four industrial schools; one was a reformatory school, nine were orphanages, and forty-six were middle and upper-class schools. The parochial schools have improved both in numbers and in the average attendance, and the pupils of several of the middle-class schools gained good places in the examinations held lately at South Kensington. It is added, as a matter of congratulation by the Roman Catholic body, that their schools in England and Wales earned during last year grants from the public purse to the extent of £112,276, being an increase of £2780 over those of the preceding year. A table of the percentage of "passes" in reading, writing, and arithmetic, annexed to the report, shows that the Roman Catholic schools stood above the Church of England, Wesleyan, British, and Board schools, both in reading and in writing, though lowest but one in arithmetic. There are five religious orders of men and twenty-four of women engaged in the teaching of the poor within the limits of Cardinal Manning's "diocese."

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The unusual occurrence of the holding of a Convocation in the vacation took place on the 8th inst. in the Sheldonian Theatre, Oxford, to confer the honorary degree of D.C.L. upon two members of the International Law Society. The Vice-Chancellor presided, and the recipients of the degree, G. Rolin Jacquemlyns, the Belgian Minister of the Interior, and Professor G. Bluntschi, of Heidelberg, were presented by Mr. J. Bryce, M.P., Regius Professor of Civil Law.

The Ven. Canon Watkins, Archdeacon of Northumberland and Canon of Durham, has been appointed to the newly-established Professorship of Hebrew in the University of Durham, and Mr. W. E. Gabbett, M.A., of Lincoln College, Oxford, to a senior tutorship in the same University.

Mr. Arthur Stanley Butler, newly appointed Professor of Natural Philosophy in St. Andrew's University, was formally installed in the chair last Saturday afternoon. The ceremony took place in the large hall of the University College. Principal Shairp presided, and administered the oath to the new Professor and invested him with the insignia of office.

A large gathering of the Roman Catholic clergy and laity took place at Woolhampton, Berks, last Monday, on the occasion of the presentation of a testimonial to the Rev. Dr. Crookall, Vicar-General and Provost of Southwark, in recognition of his devoted services during the past twenty-five years, as president to St. Mary's College, Woolhampton. After service in the chapel, an adjournment to the College took place, when the Rev. Joseph Reeks, of St. George's Cathedral, Southwark, read an address to Dr. Crookall, and handed him a cheque for £700, subscribed by old Woolhamptonians and friends. Dr. Crookall, in reply, announced his intention of devoting £500 of that amount as the nucleus of a fund for erecting new school buildings. A luncheon followed.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

The annual prize-shooting meeting of the Salisbury Rifle Volunteers took place at the range at Laverstock on Thursday and Friday last week. The Challenge Cup, given by Sir Alexander Malet, and five guineas presented by the Mayor of Salisbury, were won by Sergeant Butcher with a score of 145, Captain Hodding taking the second prize. Mr. M. H. Marsh's piece of plate was taken by Private Millard. A £5 prize given by Mr. W. H. Grenfell, M.P., was won by Corporal Crick with 38 marks; and one of a similar amount, presented by Mr. J. Passmore Edwards, M.P., fell to Sergeant Wells for 70, Quartermaster-Sergeant Harris taking the second prize with a score of 64. The seven prizes given by the officers of the corps were won by the following—viz., Corporal Rumbold, Corporal Blake, Sergeant Newbery, Corporal Masters, Private Soper, Corporal Vick, and Private Hibberd. The special camp prize was carried off by Private Horder with a score of thirty-two, and the prizes for honorary members by Messrs. Purton and Tryhorn.

A rifle-match came off at Tottenham on the 8th inst. between teams advocating the prone and back positions respectively. Some of the best shots in the metropolis entered, firing seven rounds with the Martini-Henry at the usual Queen's first stage distances. The "back" were the winners, with an average per man of 82·93, compared with 80·58 for the prone.

A rifle tournament was held on Tuesday at the ranges of the South London Rifle Club, at Nunhead, among some of the best shots of Middlesex, the City, Surrey, Essex, and Kent.

The Registrar-General's weekly return states that last week 5602 births and 4140 deaths were registered in London and twenty-two other large towns of the United Kingdom. The mortality from all causes was at the average rate of 25 deaths annually in every 1000 persons living. The annual death-rate was 21 per 1000 in Edinburgh, 17 in Glasgow, and 35 in Dublin. In London 2463 births and 1391 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population, the births exceeded by 35, while the deaths were 4 below, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths included 5 from smallpox, 7 from measles, 55 from scarlet fever, 8 from diphtheria, 19 from whooping-cough, 18 from different forms of fever, and 223 from diarrhœa. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 124 and 152 in the two preceding weeks, declined again to 124 last week, and were 18 below the average; 68 were attributed to bronchitis, and 38 to pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 49 deaths.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

SPAIN.

The Queen gave birth to a daughter on Saturday evening, and the latest bulletins report that mother and child are doing well. The event has caused great rejoicings in Madrid, and all the customary formalities were observed on the occasion. About 250 Spanish and foreign persons of rank were assembled in the ante-room adjoining the Royal bedchamber, and a few moments after the birth King Alfonso entered the room and carried the infant Princess about to let all see her.

The infant Princess was baptised on Tuesday, and received the names of Maria Mercedes Isabella. Queen Isabella acted as sponsor. All the Ministers, the principal Court and State functionaries, and the foreign Ambassadors were present at the ceremony, which was performed by the Archbishop of Toledo.

The King and Queen have received telegrams of congratulation from all the European Governments, including a very kind message of hearty felicitation from Queen Victoria and the Prince of Wales.

A Madrid telegram in the Standard says that the provincial elections have given a large majority to the Ministerial candidates all over Spain, but the Dynastic Liberals abstained from voting except at about fifty polls. The Democrats and Moderate Republicans were returned in towns like Valencia, Seville, Toledo, Bilbao, San Sebastian, and Vittoria. In Madrid only 7200 electors out of 42,000 went to the poll, and and in the provinces abstentions were even more numerous.

An unsuccessful attempt was made yesterday week at Valladolid to assassinate the Prefect of that town.

ITALY.

The military manœuvres in Tuscany ended on Sunday with a review on Campo di Marte, outside Florence, where two Army Corps defiled before the King, who was surrounded by a brilliant staff, comprising his brother, the Duke of Aosta; Lieutenant-General Bonelli, Minister of War; General Milon, Secretary-General to the War Department; and twenty-five foreign military attachés. The King's reception in Florence was most enthusiastic.

The foreign officers who officially assisted at these manœuvres intend to present King Humbert with a handsome album containing all their portraits, which have been taken specially for the occasion

HOLLAND.

The ceremony of unveiling the statue recently erected at the Hague in memory of Spinoza was performed on Tuesday in the presence of a distinguished assemblage. The Minister of the Interior represented the Prince of Orange, and amongst the foreign personages present was Herr Berthold Auerbach. M. van Vloten delivered an address eulogising the character and writings of the philosopher, whom he described as the promoter of civilisation and of the progress of humanity. The Cosmophile Club of Leipsic sent a wreath to place on the statue, which is the work of the sculptor Hexamer, and was much admired.

GERMANY.

The German military manœuvres began yesterday week by a parade of the 3rd Army Corps on the Tempelhoferfeld. The Emperor, the Crown Prince, and the other Princes of the Imperial family, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and the Grand Dukes of Hesse and Mecklenburg-Strelitz attended the parade on horseback. The troops subsequently marched past the Emperor, the Duke of Connaught riding by the side of the Ziethen Hussars. Sir Garnet Wolseley and several English officers were in the Emperor's suite. All the foreign officers, diplomatists, and other guests, to the number of 360, were invited to dine with the Emperor at the Royal castle after the parade; and the day finished with a gala fête at the Opera.

The military manœuvres were continued on Saturday on the plain that lies south of Berlin, and at a distance of about ten miles from the capital. The manœuvres consisted of an attack on a skeleton enemy, consisting of some battalions to represent sixteen battalions of foot, twenty-four squadrons of horse, and twelve batteries. The weather was magnificent, and a large crowd of spectators on foot, in carriages, and in carts, had assembled to watch the operations.

A parade of the Corps of the Guard took place at Berlin on Monday in presence of the Emperor, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Prince Rudolph of Austria, and the King and Queen of the Hellenes. The appearance of the troops, about 26,000 in number, as they marched past the Emperor, was the subject of general admiration, and the whole spectacle was of a most imposing character. A large number of foreign officers of high rank witnessed the review. As the Duke of Cambridge was driving to the parade one of his horses fell, and nearly turned the carriage over. However, the Duke sprang out in time, and no particular damage was done. In the afternoon the Emperor gave a banquet in the White Hall of the Royal castle, to which all the field officers of the Guard and all the foreign officers in Berlin were invited. Lord Odo Russell, Lord Dufferin (who had just arrived at Berlin), and Sir Garnet Wolseley were among the guests.

On Tuesday morning the manœuvres of the Corps of the Guard, south of Berlin, were witnessed by the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Connaught, the Austrian Crown Prince, the Prussian Princes, and all the princely guests present in Berlin, in company with the Emperor William.

Many distinguished persons have arrived at Berlin to witness the military manœuvres. The Duke of Cambridge and the Grand Duke of Hesse arrived at Berlin on Thursday week, and were received at the station by Lord Odo Russell and Colonel Methuen, military attaché, with several representatives of the Court and army. The Emperor William paid a visit to the Duke at half-past twelve, and his Royal Highness returned the visit at one o'clock, when he was received by the Emperor and the Empress at the palace. A banquet was given at the palace in the evening, to which the Crown Prince, the various princely personages who had arrived in Berlin, Lord Odo Russell, Count Moltke, and many superior officers received invitations. Sir Garnet Wolseley is lodged in the Kaiserhof with numerous other foreign officers.

Prince Rudolph of Austria arrived on Sunday, and was received at the station with great respect and attention by the Emperor, the Crown Prince, Prince William, Prince Frederick Charles, and other illustrious persons. The Emperor gave a dinner in the evening in honour of the Prince. The King and Queen of Greece also arrived on Sunday, and went to the Hôtel du Nord, where apartments had previously been bespoken for them. Scarcely, however, had their Majesties taken possession when the hospitality of the Emperor was courteously but firmly pressed upon them, and they had no alternative but to remove to the Old Schloss. The Duke of Cambridge on Sunday attended Divine service in the English Church, and subsequently paid a long visit to Prince William at the palace of the Crown Prince.

The Berlin telegrams concur in stating that the reception of the Crown Prince Rudolph by the German Emperor was of a very cordial and demonstrative character, and the Prince's reception is said to have given great satisfaction at Vienna. On Sunday the Emperor created the Prince a Major-General of the German army, fastening on his epaulettes himself.

The King and Queen of the Hellenes have received visits from all the members of the German Imperial family, the Crown Prince of Austria, and other Royal and distinguished personages now staying in Berlin. In the afternoon their Majesties returned the visits, and also called upon the Prussian Ministers, the members of the Diplomatic Corps, and Count Moltke.

The Morning Post correspondent at Berlin telegraphs that the King of Denmark has arrived there, and that his Majesty is travelling in the strictest incognito.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The manœuvres of the Austrian army in Galicia ended on Friday, the 10th inst., when the Emperor, who had been present throughout, complimented all the branches of the service on their marching and their tactics. On his arrival in Lemberg on Saturday last the Emperor of Austria was presented by the Marshal of the province with the keys of the city and an address of homage. Subsequently the Emperor entered the town amid the pealing of bells, the firing of cannon, and other tokens of popular rejoicing.

On Monday the Emperor visited numerous institutions, among others the new Landtag building, the Ossolinsky Institution, and the Museum. His Majesty received a Jewish deputation, and visited the Protestant church and school, where a little girl addressed him in German. He next visited the forest school. In the Polish boys' school his Majesty visited the gymnastic room, and expressed the opinion that gymnastics should become obligatory in all schools. He visited the theatre, in which an historical Polish custom of a remarkable character was shown. It consisted of a representation by hussars in armour, to whose shoulders two silver eagle-wings were attached, the object of which was to frighten the enemy's horses.

The verbal understanding between Austria-Hungary and Germany which was arrived at last year is said to have been reduced to writing in the form of an offensive and defensive alliance. One clause is believed to promise support to the Austrian advance to Salonica, which would involve the absorption by the Empire of Servia. Great efforts have been made to secure the adhesion of Italy. This combination is directed against Russia and France.

RUSSIA.

The Czar has conferred upon Count Melikoff the Order of St. Andrew, the highest decoration bestowed.

Count Loris Melikoff left Livadia on Sunday last for St. Petersburg.

Last Saturday's Russian Official Messenger published a telegram from the Minister of the Interior, dated from Livadia, announcing that the Emperor had directed the Committee of Ministers to consider the best means of commencing without delay the construction of a portion of the projected Siberian railway.

The first iron bridge over the Volga, uniting the Orenburg line with the cis-Volga railway system, was opened for traffic last Saturday.

Next year, according to statements of the St. Petersburg press, strong fortifications are to be constructed round Wyborg, Finland.

TURKEY.

The Sultan has dismissed Kadri Pasha from the Premiership, and appointed Said Pasha as his successor. In the Imperial Hatt announcing these decisions his Majesty states that, in view of the gravity of the present state of affairs and the urgency of the measures to be taken, he has considered a change of Ministry to be necessary. From Said Pasha he expects a satisfactory solution of pending questions. Assim Pasha is appointed Minister for Foreign affairs, but several of the Ministers retain their present posts.

A telegram from Constantinople states that the Ambassadors, recognising the goodwill of the Porte and the difficulties which it has to encounter in the surrender of Dulcigno to the Montenegrins, have ordered the Naval Demonstration to be postponed for a few days. Riza Pasha has explained to the notables of Dulcigno the necessity for the surrender, and stated that the Sultan would reimburse them from his own personal revenue the cost of the fortifications which they had erected.

We learn from Ragusa that 6000 Montenegrins, with eight cannons, are on their way to Dulcigno, resolved to fight if they meet with any resistance; and from independent sources the grave intelligence comes to hand that the Albanian League has determined to resist the cession of Dulcigno to Montenegro by force of arms.

GREECE.

From Athens it is reported that on the 8th inst. there were already 42,000 men of the active army under arms. Orders have been given for winter uniforms for 24,000 troops.

AMERICA.

President Hayes arrived at San Francisco on Thursday, the 9th inst. Governor Perkins met him at Colfax, welcoming him to California. He had receptions at Sacramento, Benicia, and Oakland, and arrived at San Francisco in the afternoon. Enormous crowds received him, and a long procession escorted him to the Palace Hotel along a route gaily decorated with evergreens and flags. In the evening he was serenaded. He will remain for one month on the Pacific coast, returning east by a southern route through Arizona.

The full returns of the Vermont election (the Times correspondent says) show that the Republican majority was 27,354. This majority inspirits the Republicans, who now anticipate a decisive victory in Maine next week.

At the Maine election on Monday Harris Plaisted, a Fusionist, supported by combined Democrats and Greenbackers, was elected Governor by a majority of about 2000 over Davis, Republican, the present Governor of Maine.

CANADA.

Advices from New York state that the total revenue of the Canadian Government for the year ending June 30 was 24,768,585 dols. The expenditure of the year exceeded this sum by 393,127 dols.

Destructive fires, causing the loss of several lives, have occurred in the fir plantations near Upton. One hundred families are stated to have been rendered destitute by these fires.

At all the Roman Catholic churches in Quebec on Sunday a pastoral letter from the Catholic Archbishop was read, deploring the continued emigration from the province of Quebec to the United States, and appealing to the patriotism of the people to check the movement.

SOUTH AFRICA.

The Cape Mounted Rifles have entered Basutoland, and encamped at Maseru.

The Cape Town correspondent of the Times telegraphs:—The Premier and Mr. Orpen, travelling without an escort, have interviewed the chiefs, and there is fair hope of a peaceful settlement, except in the case of Masupha. Several who were concerned in the rebellion have expressed their penitence, and have been informed that they must pay a fine for their offence. The colonial force has moved forward. Colonel Bayly's wing of the Cape Mounted Riflemen are at Maseru; Carrington's have gone to Mafeting. The Premier, after meeting Sir George Colley, returned to Maseru on the 12th inst.

Several farewell addresses have been presented to Sir Bartle Frere. A telegram through Reuter's agency, sent from Cape Town on Monday, states that the departure of the Union Company's steamer Pretoria, in which his Excellency and family return to England, had been postponed to Wednesday, in consequence of the indisposition of Lady Frere.

AUSTRALIA.

Great excitement has been caused in Australia by the discovery of the Temora gold-field, near Sydney. The rush of people into the township, the Sydney Morning Herald says, increases daily, men arriving even from Victoria. The great drawback to the development of the field is want of water for puddling purposes. Gold is being struck very freely. Pegging out and sinking are rapidly going on, and bark huts and tents are springing up everywhere along the road. The Herald adds—"Unless plenty of water can be stored, a good many miners will be starved out before a month is over, for at present it is principally the money they brought with them that supports them. No one should come here who cannot wait a while, for unless he gets a claim rich enough to allow him to pay for the carting of water from a long distance he cannot get his wash-dirt puddled."

The Melbourne International Exhibition is to be opened on Oct. 1. At a meeting of the commissioners, sixty-seven being present, on July 21, the executive presented a report, which was adopted. It stated:—"The ceremonial committee have reported that out of twenty-seven musical compositions received for the inaugural cantata, that of M. Léon Caron, of Melbourne, was found to be the most meritorious, and well deserving the premium of 100 guineas offered by the commissioners. The recommendation of the ceremonial committee has been adopted by the executive, and M. Caron has been intrusted with the necessary arrangements for the performance of the cantata. Instead of conferring the exclusive privilege of taking photographs within the exhibition on one artist, the executive have adopted a recommendation of the Fine Arts Committee that licenses of £25 each should be issued to approved photographers desirous of taking views."

Among the items of Australian news, weather of unusual severity is reported, and especially in New South Wales. Heavy snow had fallen on July 20 in the Braidwood district, lying at least two feet deep on the roads, and causing great destruction to flocks. In the Cooma district one squatter lost 500 sheep. In South Australia the cold is reported to be intense, and the fall of snow on the Flinder range the heaviest experienced for the last twenty years.

The King of the Belgians went from Ostend last week to visit the Fine Arts Exhibition at Bruges.

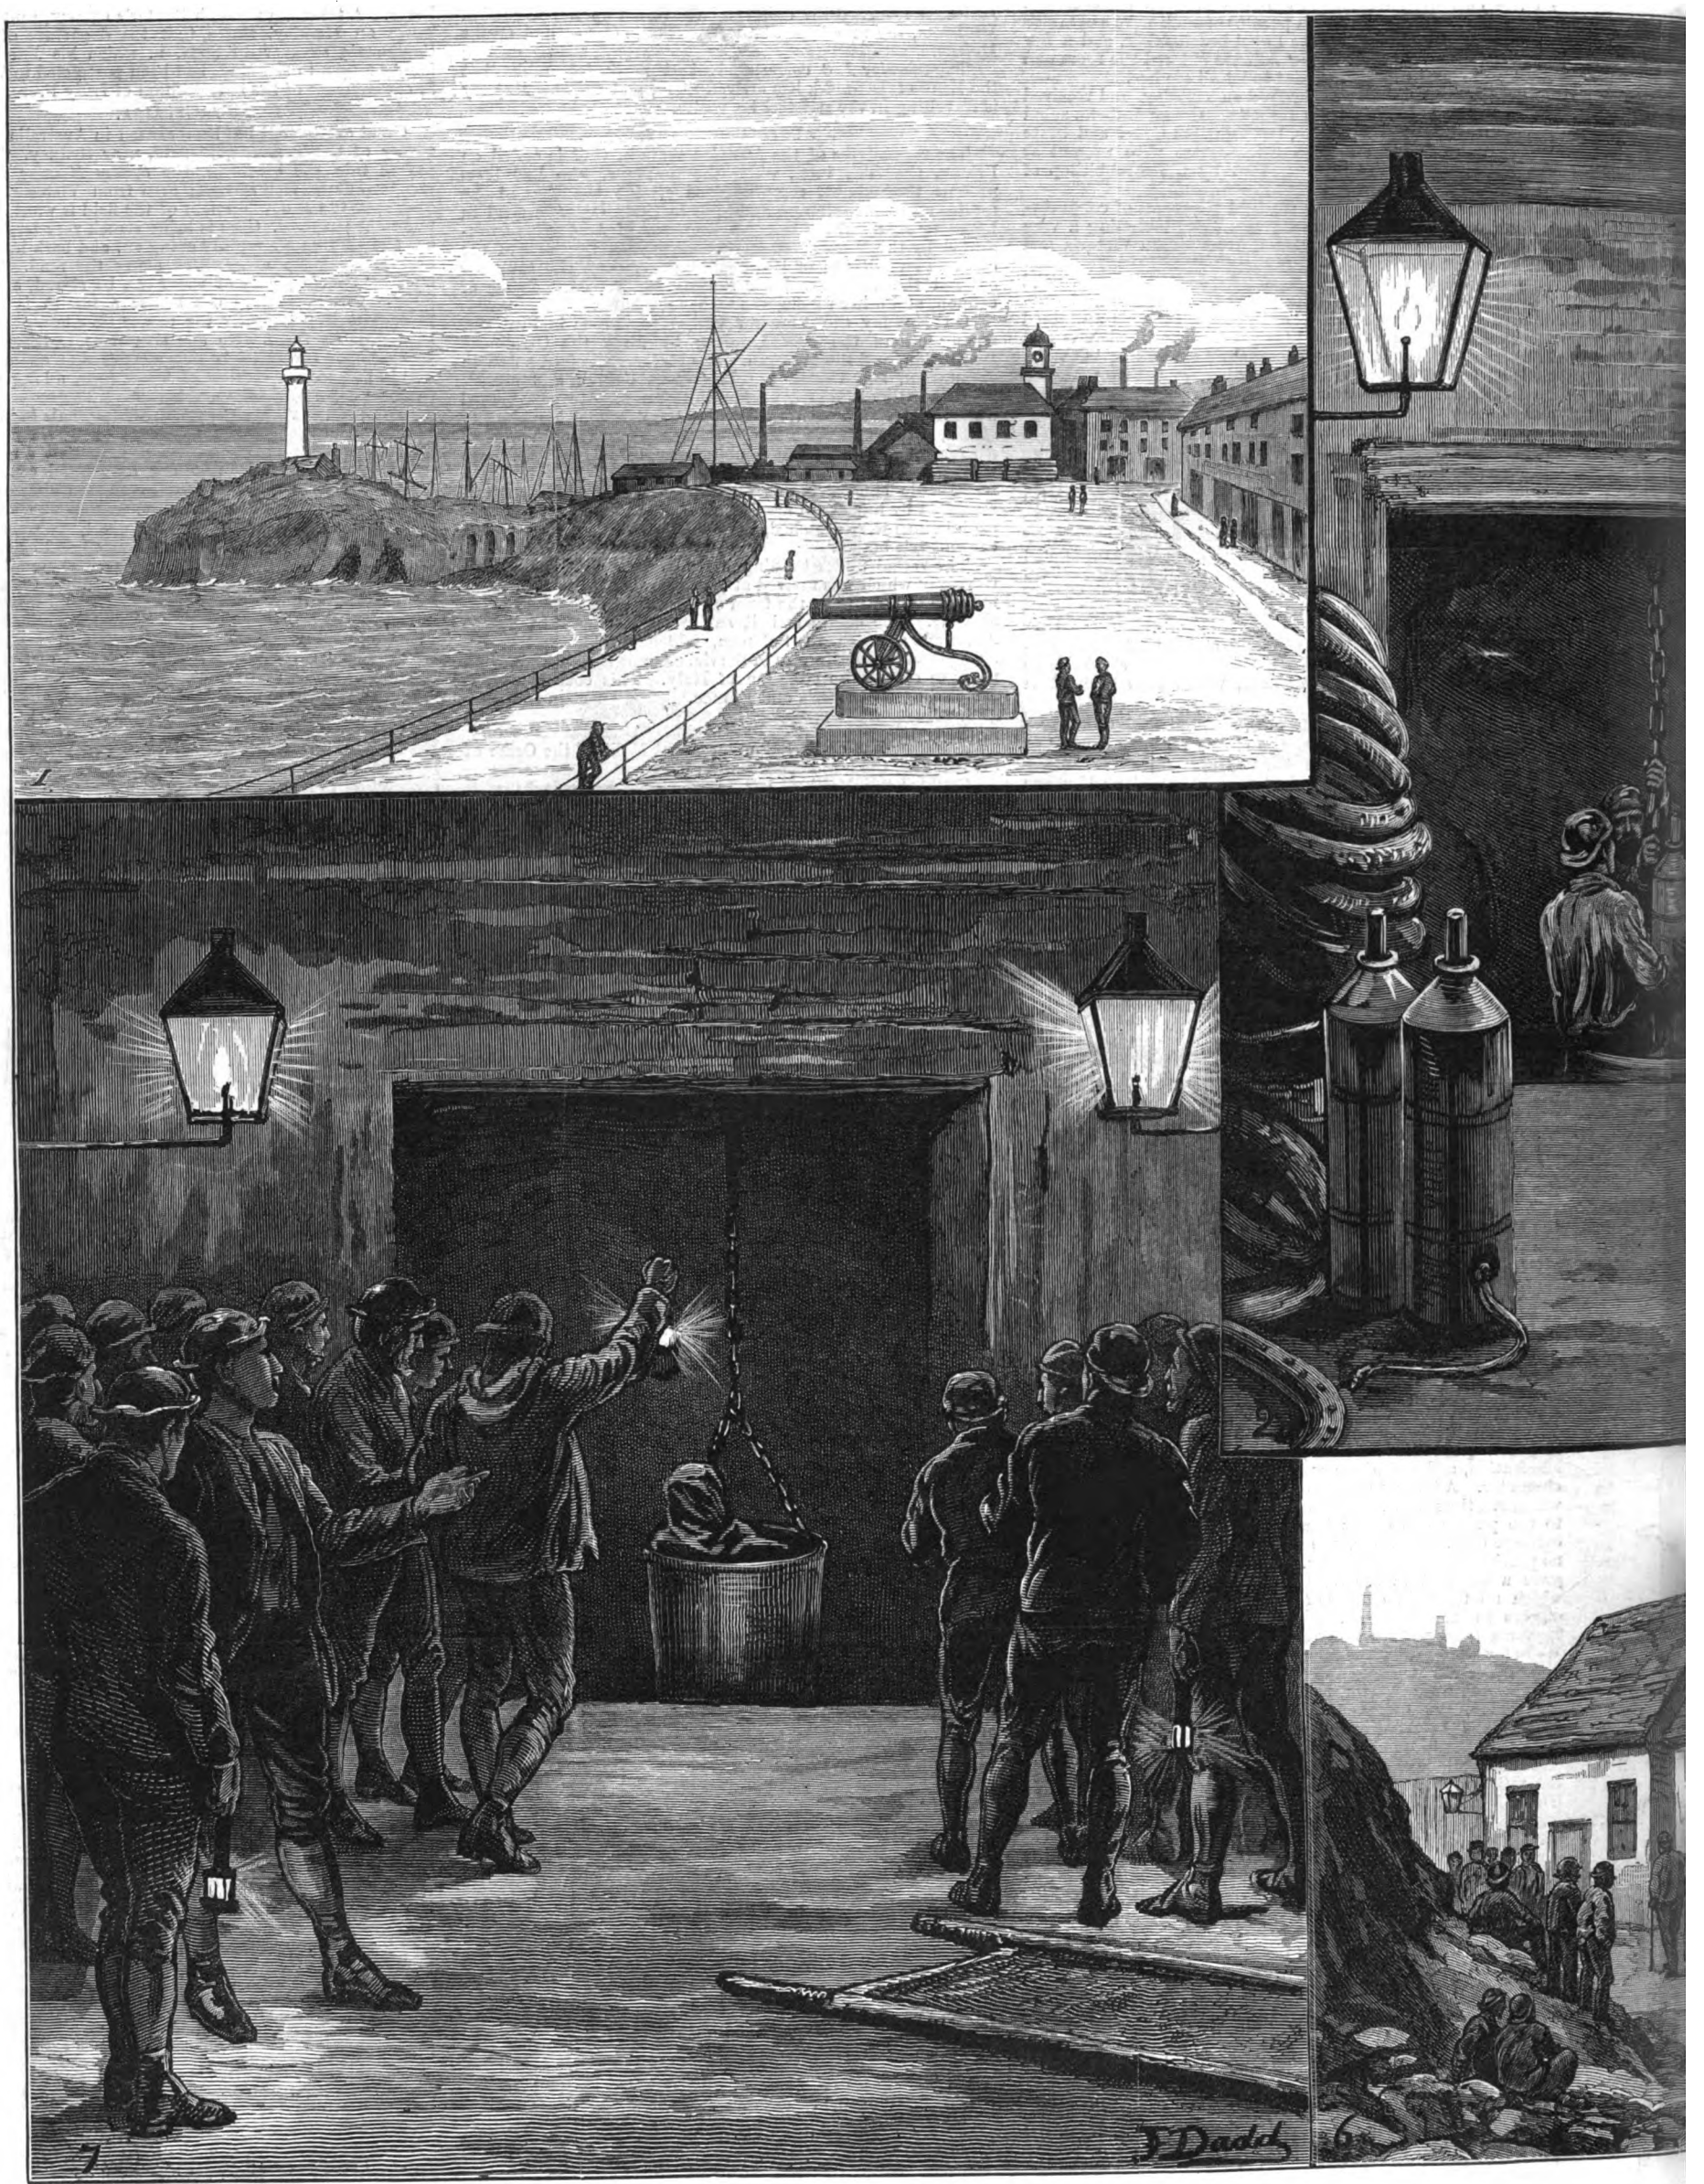
Prince Alexander Lubomirski, a Galician nobleman who resides in Paris, has given two million francs to be expended in works of public advantage to the people of Galicia.

The longest bridge in the world has been completed. It has been constructed upon the Volga, near Syrzane, in Russia, and will form part in the Orenburg Railroad. In length it is more than 4176 feet, or nearly three times as long as the bridge across the Menai Straits. It is 126 feet above the level of the water. There are in the bridge thirteen spans, which are of such enormous size that an edifice like the Winter Palace at St. Petersburg could be placed between any two of them.

At Bradford, Pennsylvania, on the 28th ult., a tank containing 25,000 barrels of oil, was struck by lightning, and ignited, causing an alarming conflagration. Fears were entertained as to twenty other tanks in close promixity, and trenches were being dug around the burning liquid. The flames lighted up the whole valley, which contained about 1,800,000 barrels of oil. Latest advices report that the efforts to keep the fire from the adjacent tanks had been successful, but that 26,000 barrels of oil, as well as other property, had been destroyed.

LOUIS KOSSUTH AND CHARLES GILPIN.

In a notice of M. Kossuth's "Memories of My Exile," which recently appeared in our columns, strong doubts were expressed as to the truth of the author's statement that the British Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary of State, at the request of Mr. Charles Gilpin, furnished M. Kossuth with letters, written by themselves, which he was to show, with their consent, to the Emperor Napoleon, pledging her Majesty's Government to a friendly neutrality in case the war should extend to Hungary. Our critic's scepticism on this point is strongly corroborated by Mr. Capper, a nephew of Mr. Gilpin, in a letter to us, which, from the importance of the matter at issue, we give in full:—



Kinhaus, Seewis, Prattigau, Switzerland, Sept. 6, 1880.

Sir,—I have just seen the remarks in your impression of Aug. 21 anent the relations between Kossuth and my late uncle, Charles Gilpin. I have no access to Mr. Gilpin's papers, and I would at once premise that the untarnished character of the great Hungarian, and his well-known scrupulous truthfulness, an estimate of his character which, to my mind at any rate, is strengthened by the love and affection which my uncle bore to him for a quarter of a century, absolutely forbid the notion of any wilful untruthfulness in the passage of his memoirs relating to the alleged communication between the heads of the Liberal party and the Emperor Napoleon at the time of the Italian war.

While, however, absolutely exonerating Kossuth from the possibility of anything approaching wilful deception, there are two circumstances which were deeply impressed upon my mind at the time, which appear to me to militate against the notion that my uncle, great as was his admiration for Kossuth, would have allowed himself to act the part of intermediary, in what would practically have been an intrigue for committing England to a hostile position towards Austria, in favour of Hungarian independence. I remember well Mr. Gilpin telling me at the time that, being accidentally at the South-Eastern terminus, London Bridge, one morning, in the summer of 1859, he saw a familiar form in the corner of a first-class carriage, but as the hat was drawn down over the gentleman's eyes he could not at first recognise him. "Hallo, Kossuth, is that you!" "Hush!" replied Kossuth, "don't mention my name;" and then he told my uncle that he was off on a confidential mission to the Emperor Napoleon to arrange for a rising in Hungary. This is wholly inconsistent with the idea that he was a party to the negotiations. About May of the same year died my great uncle and Mr. Gilpin's uncle, Joseph Sturge, of Birmingham. The Liberal party in the city of London were alarmed at the pronounced Austrian proclivities of the late Lord Derby's Government, and called a meeting to protest against our being involved in hostilities in favour of Austria. This meeting chanced to be summoned for the evening of the day of Mr. Sturge's funeral, and Mr. Gilpin left Birmingham early in the afternoon on purpose to attend it. Before his arrival, the meeting was disposed to accept a resolution, which, if acted upon, would have committed the country to an active alliance with France and Italy. Mr. Gilpin succeeded in carrying an amendment in favour of absolute neutrality, and those present averred that seldom was an immense public meeting so completely brought round by a single speech. In the course of it, Mr. Gilpin used, with thrilling effect, the circumstance that he came straight from the grave-side of that great apostle of peace, Joseph Sturge. If Kossuth can produce the letters, he will prove his position; if not, I think these fugitive recollections of mine sufficient to make most readers think that some confusion in the mind of the aged exile has caused him to make a serious mistake in the record of what took place twenty-two years ago. SAMUEL JAMES CAPPER.

The last stage of the long inquiry into the charge against a Wimbledon marker was reached on Thursday, when the Court found the prisoner "Not Guilty." His sword and sash were handed to him, and he was directed to return to his duties at once.

NOVELS.

Sensations similar to those of a sea-sick voyager are not unlikely to be experienced by many a reader of White Wings, by William Black (Macmillan and Co.); so far, at any rate, as bewilderment, dizziness, and complete self-abandonment are concerned. Throughout the three volumes there are a rush and a whirl, a staggering to and fro of persons and things, a confusion of scenes and sounds, a tumultuous, irresistible flow of narrative, description, dialogue, philological discussion, love-making, humorous anecdote, poetical quotation, and more or less comic or sentimental song, accompanied or unaccompanied by the printed score. The effect produced gives an excellent idea of the state of mind and body to which a passenger might be reduced at sea, when the waves were rolling mountains high, when it was impossible to distinguish water from land, or to separate sky from ocean, when all around was hurly-burly, and when the voices of men and women were heard as noises in a swound. And as the novel is termed "a yachting romance," and as the yacht on which the romance is supposed to have been worked out made some bold cruises and saw a good deal of weather, the remarkable billowiness of the style, combined with a considerable amount of tacking and veering, and occasional windiness, discursiveness, and haziness, may be regarded as eminently appropriate. The author presents us with a sea-piece, healthy, vigorous, and refreshing, Turneresquely handled, though, perhaps, a little more than was desirable in the master's latest and least perspicuous manner; and, whilst showing us his picture and explaining the various portions of it, he tells us a pleasant little love-tale, in which figure the personages whose portraits he has introduced into his picture. It is a very little tale, a very slight romance, but agreeable withal; even if it be objected that the representatives of the gentler sex are of a very common, milliner-like sort, and that the heroine throws her handkerchief to the hero in the outrageously plain fashion of "kiss-in-the-ring," whilst the "queen" and her friends show scarcely so much of delicacy, refinement, and reticence as is generally believed to be usual in dealing with affairs of the heart and matrimonial matters. The hero is a young doctor, of extraordinary mental, moral, and physical gifts, though he has no claim to be considered handsome: he excels in most things, and he is especially great upon the subjects of bandaging ankles and steering yachts. It may be observed, by-the-way, that the heroine had sprained her ankle and was fond of steering. The whole of the romance, then, lies between these two; and the only incident of importance is the heroine's loss, during the cruise, of her small fortune, a loss which a Scottish laird, who is on board the yacht and has taken a great fancy to her, makes up to her out of his own pocket. It is upwards of three thousand pounds that he presents to her; and she accepts it without much ado. If any reader should consider such behaviour incredible either on the part of a Scottish laird or an English lady, the author would probably reply, and with reason, that more incredible things happen daily. The gist of the story, at any rate, lies herein: the hero and the heroine are in love from the first; when she loses her fortune, she, unwilling to hamper his prospects, as he is a poor man, assumes a noble pretence of indifference towards him and drives him away at the risk of breaking her heart; and, when the Scottish laird, having tried in vain to recommend his own nephew to her favour, comes to the rescue, her flown bird has to be wheedled back to the yacht and to her side. This is accomplished by the agency of sympathetic and sharp-sighted but somewhat meddlesome friends; and the romance is over. Some readers, if not most, will think little of the romance, in which, however, the laird and his nephew are made to provide good sport, and something more touching than sport; but all readers will admire the many passages in which the sights to be seen on land and sea, in calm and storm, during a cruise in the waters of the Western Highlands, are described by one who has eyes to see, ears to hear, a poet's sensibility, and language wherewith to interpret his impressions.

Command of literary graces, the subtle charm of style, the art of attractive composition, though they may amply atone for the deficiencies of a novelist, are by no means necessary to render an otherwise good story readable, as the three volumes entitled Pious Frauds, by Albany de Fonblanque (Richard Bentley and Son), may be cited to testify. In none of the three volumes, perhaps, could a single passage be selected as a specimen of masterly, or even noticeably elegant, writing; but the language and the arrangement are quite good enough for the purpose, which is evidently neither more nor less than to tell an interesting and ingenious, rather than an instructive or any other story. This purpose is fairly attained; there is no little originality in the conception of more than one character, the plot is contrived and developed with sufficient ingenuity, there is plenty of action and incident, and the inclination to read on, which is aroused in the very first chapter, is well sustained to the close. It may be a little late in the day for a revival of those old superstitions which once upon a time gave so much piquancy to works of fiction; novel-readers may nowadays shoot out the lip of scorn at sight of the prophecy, in rhyme, which predicts that the death of him who is from time to time the head of a certain noble house will follow upon the sinking of a certain stone or upon the occurrence of some other more or less singular event; but such a superstition and such a prediction are turned to pretty good account in the novel under consideration. The personages with whose fortunes the story is chiefly concerned are four in number, two of each sex; and they are introduced in the very first chapter, where two lovely girls, who appear to be not exactly ladies, meet two young fellows, who are certainly gentlemen in the world's acceptation of the term, for a sail upon a nameless river and a tea at a highly "respectable place" on the riverside. It is natural, at once, to feel alarmed lest something very wrong should be in the wind; but there is nothing of the kind. There is a wholesome atmosphere throughout the tale. It is true that a sweet, noble young gentlewoman accidentally falls into a marriage-trap and comes out very much hurt, having discovered that her supposed marriage was no marriage; but, if she may be open to a charge of haste in the matter of the supposed marriage, nothing can possibly have exceeded the propriety of her conduct either generally or on her discovery of her dreadful mistake. Indeed, this young gentlewoman and her fair cousin, the two lovely girls encountered in the first chapter, are creatures whose characters it does one good to study as they are gradually developed by the novelist. The only question that arises is whether that one of the twain who at first exhibits herself and is exhibited by the novelist as an artful, scheming, heartless hussy, could, with a due regard for psychological laws, ever have emerged from her moral chrysalis in the splendid, angelic form she subsequently displays. Certainly she had felt the magic touch of true love, and love can-work wonders. Besides, she had always proved by her behaviour towards her fair cousin that there was a heart concealed somewhere about her, a spark of goodness which required only the blast of favourable circumstances to kindle it into flame. Let us grant, than, that she is true to the life, and a worthy pendant to the picture of her apparently more discreet, but really rasher, cousin. As for Norman Drummond, the clever barrister, the calculating scoundrel, let him be anathema: it could only have been from a desire to be sternly regardful of reality that the author became reconciled to the idea of recording that such a villain "prospered," actually "visited Duchesses," and ultimately married an Earl's daughter, who was or had been in everything but law his wife, leaving her to read the news of his marriage and shudder. One cannot help thinking that the novel would have ended more satisfactorily if it had pleased the author to remove the sweet woman who unfortunately contracted a Scotch marriage on the English side of the border to a better world.

Excellent sentiments, sound morality, Christian principles, liberal doctrines, careful study of womankind, a wide acquaintance with various branches of literature, an eye for the picturesque, and a hand for the description of it, are among the most prominent characteristics of Oliver Constable, by Sarah Tytler (Smith, Elder, and Co.), a novel, in three volumes, from which unhealthy excitement is most carefully excluded. Indeed, it might be truthfully asserted that the story is free from every kind of excitement. Deeds of derring-do are unusually conspicuous by absence; there is scarcely an instance of heroic action in its physical form beyond a single kick on the shins administered to a muscular Christian by a drunken journeyman-baker. And that word recalls the main purpose of the story, which is to show what befell a young man, Oliver Constable by name, who, having received his education and taken high honours at the University of Oxford, determined to throw away his chances of becoming as much of a gentleman as he could have become by embracing some one of the vocations for which his scholastic training had qualified him, and to carry on his father's and grandfather's business as a "miller and baker." And certainly the description given of the old mill and mill-house, fronting the water, will justify him in the eyes of many a reader. His sister, however, the only other child of his lately deceased father, is disgusted at his choice, and unsuccessfully attempts to shake his resolution; for she has lady-like instincts, and aspires to gentility. In this girl and her fate the main interest of the novel undoubtedly centres; and when she, whose personal appearance has been so minutely delineated, whose nature and thoughts have been so elaborately and sympathetically analysed, whose arguments have been so amusingly set forth, whose drifting into love has been so delicately indicated, whose trials after marriage have been so graphically sketched, and whose premature death has been so touchingly described, is removed from the pages, there is small temptation to read any further. Henceforth it is hardly to be expected that the majority of readers will care what is the result of Oliver Constable's magnanimous efforts to conduct the miller's and baker's trade on principles of scrupulous honesty, and to impose pure flour and fair weight upon a public which rather seeks after adulteration, and which, proverbially, "likes to be deceived." Nevertheless, the character of Oliver Constable, a man a little after the fashion of the "prodigious" old Scotchman, "Dominie Sampson," is well conceived, though the development of it is not accomplished without an excess of uninteresting and wearisome detail.

Dentists may find encouragement without dipping far into Winged Words, by Henry Spicer (Tinsley Brothers), for at the second page of the first out of two volumes it is written that a dentist had so "splendid a practice" as to leave behind him at his death "a hundred and twenty thousand pounds." And it cannot have been the celebrated Mr. Cartwright, for we are distinctly informed that the dentist's name was Morfew. He must have been no ordinary man, for he proposed to and was accepted by a lady who had just bitten his hand frightfully as he was drawing one of her teeth, and who had apparently never given him any other encouragement. This lady is the heroine of the first among a collection of short stories with which the two volumes are filled; and the way in which she is represented to have fastened her teeth in her dentist's hand is all of a piece with her general character. A more detestable old woman was never conceived by story-teller; she is too unreasonably spiteful for a step-mother even, and yet she was a mother and a grandmother. The historiette relating to her and her grandchildren and her man of business is told with considerable humour; and, indeed, a vein of fun and humour, degenerating occasionally into the mere comic man's affected drollery, runs through many of the stories. Some of them, on the contrary, are coloured tragic; others, supernatural, with ghostly apparitions, vouched for by credible witnesses. Two or three of the pieces are very good reading indeed; the literary level, however, is not a high one, and the amount of constructive skill is inconsiderable.

A dreadfully old play upon words, much older, no doubt, than the song about the joker who had "only been ringing the convent-belle," is audaciously adopted, as if it were something novel and striking, in the title of Belles and Ringers, by Hawley Smart (Chapman and Hall), a "novelette" contained, as the diminutive would suggest, in a single volume. And in this "novelette" the merry jest involved in the title is expanded with an ingenuous complacency worthy of that great discoverer little Jack Horner. "Miss Blanche is, of course, the belle, you the ringer, and Mr. Beauchamp the clapper," says one of the characters, with the air of a facetious Columbus. "You" is Lady Mary, mother of Miss Blanche, be it understood. After this explanation an intelligent reader will, no doubt, conclude, not without reason, that the drift of the story is to show with what success or failure Lady Mary schemed to marry Miss Blanche to Mr. Beauchamp. And to justify the use of the plural number in the title there is another lady who is engaged in similar business to that which occupies what a flatterer might be pleased to call the mind of Lady Mary, so that the two match-makers carry on a sort of rivalry. The author is not one of your profound students and analysers of human nature, revealing unsuspected but, when they have once been revealed, instantaneously acknowledged attributes and impulses, with all their consequences; but he tells a lively, agreeable story in a sprightly, dashing manner; and he introduces his readers into the best and most aristocratic society, so far as titles and position, which a novelist can bestow at will, are concerned. The personages hold such views and employ such language, and conduct themselves in such wise as would be expected of a certain class of military gentlemen and philomilitary ladies and their connections: they make not a single remark for which a single reader is likely to be the better or the wiser or very much the merrier or happier; but they talk in a strain of rather common, perhaps, though somewhat piquant worldliness. The chief incidents, besides love and marriage, are a foot-race, a horse-race, a gallop across country, with a harmless fall, charade acting, a game of polo, and a water party—incidents full of life, gaiety, movement, and colour such as made up the round of idle people's existence, and such as working people, though they may have but little personal participation in them, can enjoy, as it were, by proxy through the mere exercise of their reading faculties.

POST-OFFICE WORK.

The twenty-sixth annual report on the Post-Office, being that for the financial year ended March 13, was presented to Parliament last week.

The number of post-offices open in the United Kingdom on March 31, 1880, was 912 head and 13,000 sub-offices, being an increase of 331 offices since last year; 661 new letter-boxes in streets, roads, &c., have been established during the year, and the total number of receptacles of letters of all kinds is 26,753, of which number 1-13th are in London. The new building for the Savings Bank Department has been completed and occupied. New and large branch offices have been opened in Queen Victoria-street and Fleet-street, and arrangements are in progress for enlarging and improving several of the branch offices in London.

Arrangements have been made with the Isle of Man Steam-Packet Company for a daily mail (Sundays excepted) to the Isle of Man throughout the year, instead of during the summer only, as formerly was the case, and one or two of the smaller Orkney and Shetland Islands have now had granted to them the novel privilege of a post. A service, unique of its kind, has been established at the Clyde, on a steamer plying between Greenock and Ardrishaig, in which all the ordinary work of a post-office, even to the transmission of telegrams, is performed. At Liverpool the foreign plan of affixing to pillar and wall letter-boxes indicators, showing the public when the box was last cleared, has been introduced, and will shortly also be tried in Edinburgh. On March 1 last the late fee charged for posting inland and ordinary letters after the time of closing the boxes for the dispatch of a mail was reduced to a uniform rate of a halfpenny.

The number of inland letters dealt with in the year was 1,137,997,500, showing an increase of 2·8 per cent on the previous year; the number of post cards was 114,458,400, showing an increase of 2·7 per cent; the number of book packets and circulars was 213,903,000, or an increase of 8·6 per cent, and of newspapers 130,518,400, or an increase of 0·3 per cent. Taking the correspondence of all kinds, the number was 1,586,937,000, showing an average of 46 per head of the population, and an increase of 3·3 per cent over the previous year. The number of letters registered in the United Kingdom during the year was 8,739,191, being an increase of 21·3 per cent, and more than double the number dealt with in 1877, before the reduction of the registration fee. No fewer than 5,762,853 registered letters passed through the chief office, and 47,000 parcels of Christmas presents were dealt with in that office as compared with 30,000 in 1878.

No less than 1417 letters containing coin and articles of value were observed which had been posted without registration, a practice which, as Mr. Fawcett points out, throws great temptation in the way of Post-Office servants. One of such letters, which contained £200 in bank-notes, was stolen in 1877, and eventually the theft was brought home to a letter-carrier, who was convicted, and £175 of the money recovered. Exclusive of postage-stamps found loose to the number of 72,000, no less than 27,224 articles of various kinds escaped from their covers, and were sent to the Returned Letter Office, this number being about half as large again as in the previous year.

The total number of returned letters was 5,345,678; of book packets, 3,541,103; of post-cards, 496,446; and of newspapers, 374,741. Of these 4,570,743 were returned to the writers, and 78,291 reissued to corrected addresses. In 526,469 cases the writers had given no address to admit of the letters being returned to them; 21,621 letters were posted without any address, among which were 1141 containing cash and bank-notes to the amount of £433, and cheques, bills, &c., for £4251; 4500 letters and packets were stopped on account of the objectionable nature of their contents, such as frogs, lizards, insects, &c., and in one instance a marlinspike.

In the telegraphic department, the number of messages received during the first six months of the year was less than in the corresponding period of the previous year, but a marked increase then showed itself, and, being more than maintained, brought up the number of messages at the close of the year to 26,547,137, as against 24,459,775 in the previous year, being an increase of 2,087,362. About 313,500,000 words of news were delivered to newspapers, clubs, &c.; seventy-one new offices were opened for telegraph business, the total number of postal telegraph offices in the United Kingdom being 3924, in addition to 1407 railway stations. Various improvements have been effected, notably in the Wheatstone receiving apparatus, and it is proposed to provide additional wires between London and many of the principal towns. The private wire business continues to increase. The revised regulations and tariffs agreed to by the International Telegraph Conference came into operation on April 1 last.

Ten years have elapsed since the telegraphs were transferred to the State, and from the particulars given it appears that whereas the telegraph companies had at the time of the transfer 1992 offices in addition to 496 railway offices, the Post Office can boast of 3924 offices of its own and 1407 railway stations open for telegraph work, or in all 5331 offices, against 2488 under the companies. The number of instruments in use by the companies was 2200; by the Post Office, 8151. In 1869 the total length of submarine cables connecting different parts of the United Kingdom was 139 miles. Last year it was 707 miles. The length of pneumatic tube employed by the companies was 4844 yards; the Post Office now employs 48,260 yards. The total number of telegraphists employed by the companies was 2514 (of whom 479 were women), and the number of messengers 1471. The total number of telegraphists employed by the Post Office last year was 5611 (of whom 1556 were women), and of messengers 4648; but, besides these, many persons are employed in telegraph work who hold no appointment on the establishment, but are paid by the postmasters out of allowances for assistance. Last year the Post Office forwarded 26,547,137 messages, or four times as many as in 1869.

The inland money-order business shows a falling off, but that with foreign countries and the colonies exhibits a satisfactory increase, and a reduction in the rates of commission, which came into operation on Jan. 1, will tend to its further development. Taking the whole business together, the total number of orders issued was 17,307,573, or a decrease on the previous year of 433,049; the amount of such orders being £26,371,020, or a decrease on the previous year of £932,073. Notwithstanding the dulness of trade and the bad harvest in 1879, the excess of deposits over withdrawals continues, and the balance due to depositors shows an increase of upwards of a million and a half sterling. Of this increase no less than £91,853 falls to the share of Ireland, and of this amount the counties chiefly affected by the distress—viz., Clare, Cork, Donegal, Galway, Kerry, Mayo, Roscommon, and Sligo—contributed £25,418.

Mr. Fawcett alludes to the death of Sir Rowland Hill, and also pays a graceful and well-deserved tribute to the value of the labours of Sir John Tilley, who retired during the year from the position of secretary, after a service of fifty years, and to those of Mr. Page, the late assistant-secretary.

OBITUARY.

LORD ASHTOWN.

The Right Honourable Frederick Mason, second Baron Ashtown, of Moate, in the county of Galway, in the Peerage of Ireland, died on the 12th inst. He was born Dec. 25, 1804, the eldest son of Francis Trench, of Sopwell Hall, in the county of Tipperary, by Mary, his wife, second daughter of Mr. Henry Mason, of Shrewsbury; and succeeded to the title May 1, 1840, at the decease of his uncle, Frederic, first Lord Ashtown, who was so created Dec. 27, 1800, with remainder to the heirs male of the body of his late father, Frederic Trench, of Woodlawn, in the county of Galway. The nobleman whose death we record was educated at Cambridge. He was a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Galway, and served as High Sheriff previously to his accession to the Peerage. He married, first, Aug. 29, 1831, Henrietta, youngest daughter of Mr. Thomas Phillips Cosby, of Stradbally Hall, Queen's County; and secondly, Feb. 10, 1852, Elizabeth, second daughter and coheir of Mr. Richard Oliver-Gascoigne, of Parlington, in the county of York. By the former (who died Feb. 25, 1845) he had two sons and two daughters. Of the sons, the elder, the Hon. Frederic Sidney Charles Trench, died March 2, 1879, leaving, by Lady Anne Le Poer Trench, his wife, daughter of William Thomas, Earl of Clancarty, an eldest son, Frederic-Oliver, born Feb. 2, 1868, who is now third Lord Ashtown. The Hon. Mrs. Trench, wife of the Most Rev. Dr. Trench, Archbishop of Dublin, is eldest sister of the late Lord Ashtown.

SIR J. S. WOOD.

Colonel Sir John Stewart Wood, K.C.B., lately Inspector General of the Royal Irish Constabulary, who died on the 9th inst. at Ryde, was last surviving son of Major J. T. Wood, by Hannah his wife, daughter of Major-General Stewart; and entered the Army at an early age in 1831. His military career was highly distinguished. He took an active part in the old campaigns in Afghanistan, and wore medals for Ghuznee, Jellalabad, and Cabul. From 1854 to 1855 he served in the Crimea, at the Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and Sebastopol, for which he received the medal with three clasps, together with the Turkish medal; was made a Knight of the Legion of Honour and of the Medjidie. In 1865 he was appointed Inspector-General of the Royal Irish Constabulary, and retired in 1876. He became C.B. Military in 1855, and K.C.B. Civil in 1870. Sir John married, in 1844, Isabelle Frances, daughter of George Baker, Esq., of Beverley, near Canterbury, and leaves issue.

LIEUTENANT E. W. WILLIAMS-WYNN.

Lieutenant Edward Watkin Williams-Wynn, Scots Guards, was accidentally drowned in the Thames, near Windsor, on the 8th inst. He was nephew and heir presumptive of Sir Watkin Williams-Wynn, Bart., of Wynnstay, in the county of Denbigh, who stands, by popular consideration, foremost amongst the great landed proprietors of the Principality of Wales. Mr. Williams-Wynn was born in 1857, the eldest son of the late Mr. Herbert Watkin Williams-Wynn, M.P. for Montgomeryshire, by Anna, his wife, daughter and heir of Mr. Edward Lloyd, of Cefn, in the county of Denbigh. He was educated at Eton, entered the Army in 1876, and was promoted to a Lieutenancy in 1877.

We have also to record the deaths of—

The Hon. Harry Cavendish Grey, youngest surviving son of Charles, second Earl Grey, on the 5th inst., at Howick, Northumberland, in his sixty-sixth year.

Major Raymond Inglis, late Royal Fusiliers, and formerly in the 18th and 2nd Queen's Regiment, on the 2nd inst., at his residence, Druimuan, near Pitlochry, N.B.

The Rev. Thomas Watson, for thirty years Vicar of East Fairleigh, near Maidstone, on Sunday last, at the advanced age of eighty-six.

William John Bolton, C.M.G., Lieutenant-Colonel Royal Artillery, and Brevet-Colonel Commanding Auxiliary Artillery, 2nd Sub-District, N.B., on the 9th inst., at Aberdeen, aged fifty-two years.

Arthur Honywood, Lieutenant of 66th Regiment, killed at the battle of Khushk-i-Nakhud, on July 27, aged nineteen, fourth son of the late Sir Courtenay Honywood, Bart., of Evington, Kent.

William Ernle Money-Kyrle, late 21st Regiment (Royal Scots Fusiliers), on the 4th inst., at Littlehampton, aged thirty-five years, eldest son of Lieutenant-Colonel Money-Kyrle, of Homme House, Herefordshire.

The Rev. James Henry Bower, of The Larches, East Sheen, Surrey, formerly Vicar of Newnham, in the county of Kent, on the 9th inst., at Teignmouth, son of the late Mr. James Bower, of Weymouth and Melcombe Regis.

Mr. Mansel Longworth Dames, J.P., formerly of the 6th Enniskillen Dragoons, on the 5th inst., at 15, Lansdown-terrace, Cheltenham, aged eighty-eight. He was of the family of Longworth-Dames, of Greenhill, King's County.

Lieutenant Clement George Whitby, of H.M. 17th Regiment of Foot, Acting Wing Officer of the 1st Bombay Grenadiers, killed in action at the battle of Khuskh-i-Nakhud on July 27, eldest son of Dr. Whitby, Leamington, late of Ottery St. Mary, aged twenty-five.

Mr. Thomas Birch-Wolfe, of Wood Hall, Arkesden, Essex, on the 5th inst., at his residence, 40, Lansdowne-place, Brighton, aged seventy-eight. He was youngest and last surviving son of the Rev. Richard Birch, Rector of Widdington and Bradwell-juxta-Mare, by Elizabeth, his wife, sister of Sir Henry Bate Dudley, Bart. He succeeded to the estate of his cousin, Mr. John Wolfe, in 1864, and assumed the additional surname of Wolfe.

Lieutenant-Colonel George John Davies Heath, Madras Staff Corps, on the 3rd inst., aged forty-eight. He was formerly Deputy-Assistant-Commissary-General, served with the Sangur Field Division in Central India, was present at the relief of Kirwee, and took part in the subsequent assault on the heights of Punwarree and the defeat of the rebels, Dec. 29, 1858. He had a medal with clasp.

Lieutenant Thomas Rice Henn, Royal Engineers, killed at the battle of Khushk-i-Nakhud, Afghanistan, on July 27 last, aged thirty, third son of Mr. Thomas Rice Henn, D.L., of Paradise Hill, in the county of Clare, one of her Majesty's Counsel and Recorder of Galway, by Jane Isabella, his wife, second daughter of the late Lord Chancellor Blackburne. Lieutenant Henn was Acting Brigade Major and on the staff of General Burrows in the action in which he fell. This promising and much-lamented young officer, who won his commission by a brilliant course at Woolwich, was specially mentioned in despatches four times within the last fifteen months.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor, and have the word "Chess" written on the envelope.

S H (Nottingham).—We are much obliged to you for the games played at Trouville, and wish your leisure were greater that we might hear from you more frequently. Please address the paper specially to this department.

B G L (Islington).—Is there not a solution to the three-move problem by 1. Kt takes R? The other shall appear soon.

F O'N H (Liverpool).—The problems are very acceptable, and we are very glad to hear from you again.

Pedro (Finsbury Park).—Your letter, we regret to say, has been overlooked. We will consider the matter referred to and reply next week. It is not a question to be answered off hand.

W B (Sheffield).—The problems shall be examined.

K G (Bombay).—You will find a note referring to problem No. 1849 in our issue of Aug. 30, 1879. In the solution of No. 1855, the answer to 1. B to Q Kt 5th is 2. Q takes B (ch), to which Black has but one rejoinder, 2. P to Q B 4th. White then captures the Q B P, en passant, with the Pawn on Q 5th, discovering checkmate to the Queen. The answer to 1. B takes B, is 2. Q to Kt 4th (ch), &c.

Buffalo Chess Club.—We have a letter for Mr. Richmond, which shall be forwarded if he will favour us with his precise address.

W S (Oswaldkirk).—The move 1. Kt to Q R 4th is a feeble one, and, consequently, has not been analysed. Black, in reply, can play B takes P, and if Kt takes B, then Q to Q R 4th (ch) recovers the piece.

Va (U.S.).—Correct solutions of Nos. 1901, 1902, and 1903. Your opinion of 1903 is in accord with ours.

Rev. John Wills (U.S.A.).—Correct solution of No. 1903.

Correct Solutions of Problem No. 1905 received from Hesley Hall and H Hampton.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

The following Games, between Mr. Hamel, President of the Nottingham Chess Club, and M. A. de Riviere, were played recently at Trouville.
(King's Gambit declined.)

WHITE (Mr H.)	BLACK (M. de R.)	WHITE (Mr. H.)	BLACK (M. de R.)
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	13. Q to Q B 3rd	B to Kt 5th (ch)
2. P to K B 4th	B to B 4th	14. K to B 2nd	B to B 4th (ch)
3. Kt to K B 3rd	P to Q 4th	15. K to Kt 3rd	P to K B 3rd
4. P takes Q P	P to K 5th	16. Kt to Q 2nd	P to Q B 4th
5. Q to K 2nd

Mr. Hamel has conducted the opening in, for him, a rather careless manner, and now the timely advance of these Pawns gives Black a winning advantage.

		17. Kt to K B 3rd	P to Q Kt 4th
We should have preferred 5. Kt to K 5th, followed by 6. B to B 4th, to thus shutting in the King's Bishop.		18. B to K B 4th	B P takes P
		19. Q to Q 2nd	P takes P (ch)
5.	Kt to K B 3rd	20. B takes P	Kt takes B
6. P to Q B 4th	Castles	21. K takes Kt	Q R to B sq (ch)
7. Kt to K 5th	Q Kt to Q 2nd	22. K to Kt 3rd	R to B 6th (ch)
8. P to Q 3rd	Kt takes Kt	23. K to R 4th	Q to Kt 3rd.
9. P takes Kt	P takes P	White resigned.
10. Q takes P	Kt to Kt 5th
11. P to Q Kt 4th	B to B 7th (ch)
12. K to Q sq	Kt takes P

Between the same Players.

WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. H.)	WHITE (M. de R.)	BLACK (Mr. H.).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	26. P to B 6th
2. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to Q B 3rd
3. B to Q Kt 5th	P to Q R 3rd	26. P takes P, followed by 27. Q to K B 2nd, should Black take the Pawn at K 6th, is a stronger line of play.
4. B to R 4th	Kt to K B 3rd
5. Kt to Q B 3rd	P to Q Kt 4th	26.	R to K B sq
6. B to Kt 3rd	B to B 4th	27. Q to K 2nd	R to B 2nd
7. P to Q 3rd	R to Q Kt sq	28. R to B 5th

This move is recommended by the "books" as a reply to the advance of the Q R P, but in this position it seems to us to be unnecessary.

A highly ingenious stroke.

		28.	Q takes P (ch)
8. Castles	Castles	The best course undoubtedly. It is, perhaps, needless to say that if he had taken the Rook he would have been mated in three moves.
9. B to K Kt 5th	B to K 2nd
10. Q to Q 2nd	P to Q 3rd	29. Q takes Q	R takes Q
11. B takes Kt	B takes B	30. R to K 5th	R takes Q B P
12. Kt to Q 5th	Kt to Q 5th	31. R takes K P	P to K Kt 3rd

14. P to K B 4th	B to K 3rd	33. R to K 8th (ch)	R to B sq
15. Kt takes B (ch)	Q takes Kt	34. R to K 7th	R to B 2nd
16. P to K B 5th	B takes B	35. R takes R (ch)
17. R P takes B	R to Q Kt 3rd
18. P to K Kt 4th	Q to K R 5th	Played without due consideration, apparently. Had he continued to play the Rook to K 7th and K 8th alternately, Black must have been contented with a drawn game.
19. Q to Kt 2nd	P to Q 4th
20. P to K 5th	R to K R 3rd
21. R to B 3rd	P to B 4th

24. R to K B sq	R to K sq	37. R to K Kt 7th	P takes Q P.
25. P to K 6th	P takes P	White resigned.

The problem which was the subject of the solution tourney at the Brunswick Congress, and which was quoted in our Issue of Sept. 4, has been solved from the diagram by the following correspondents:—By East Marden, in two sittings of one hour each; by W. M. Curtis in five hours; by T. Greenbank in five hours and a half; by C. Oswald, four sittings, together seven hours; and by "An Old Hand" in seven hours. With the pieces on the board, Alpha solved the problem in ten minutes.

We learn from the Australasian that there were ten entries for the handicap challenge cup of the Melbourne Chess Club, and that they have been classified by Mr. L. S. Phillips, the handicapper, as follows:—First class—Mr. Burns; second class—Messrs. Ealing, Fleming, Simpson, and Stephen; third class—Messrs. àBeckett, Agg, Harlin, Lulman, and Lush.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated Dec. 8, 1879) of Mr. Edward Heneage, D.L., late of Stag's-end, Great Gaddesden, Herts, who died on June 21 last, was proved on the 1st inst. by Windsor Richard Heneage, the son, the acting executor, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator appoints his cousin, Mary Prince, guardian of his only daughter, and he gives her £250 if she accepts such guardianship; a sum of £20,000 is left upon trust for his said daughter, but upon her marriage one fourth thereof is to revert to his residuary estate. He bequeaths to Miss Martha Hannah Woods, for her attention to his daughter, £500; to his then present head coachman, head gardener, and cook, if in his service at his decease, £40 each; the household furniture and effects at his residence, Stag's-end, to his son Windsor Richard, and his plate he divides between several of his sons; he also exercises in their favour the powers of appointment given to him by his marriage settlements. All his real estate is directed to be sold, and the proceeds, with his residuary personal estate, he leaves to his five sons. The deceased represented Great Grimsby in Parliament in the Liberal interest from 1835 down to 1852.

The will (dated Oct. 17, 1867) with six codicils (the last being dated March 8, 1873) of Mr. James Campbell, formerly of Cardigan House, Richmond, but late of Cawley Priory, Chichester, who died on July 19 last, has just been proved by Mrs. Caroline Campbell, the widow and acting executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator gives to his wife his residence, Cawley Priory, with the furniture, plate, effects, horses and carriages, and £500; and there are various provisions in favour of his children. The residue of his real and personal property he leaves to his wife for life, and then to his children, as she shall appoint.

The will (dated Sept. 6, 1875) of Mrs. Sally Hall Bradshaw, late of Portland-place, Reading, who died on July 19 last, was proved on the 26th ult. by Richard Fisher and William Wallace Cowslade, the surviving executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testatrix bequeaths £3000 Three per Cent Consolidated Bank Annuities to the Association for Promoting the General Welfare of the Blind, Euston-road; £1000 like annuities each to the Royal Hospital for Incurables, the Royal Berkshire Hospital, the Winchester County Hospital, the Westminster Hospital, and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; £500 like annuities to the Reading Dispensary; £1500 like annuities to the Royal National Life-Boat Institution towards the establishment and maintenance of three life-boats, to be named "Faith," "Hope," and "Charity;" £1000 like annuities each to the Royal College of Physicians and the Royal College of Surgeons, to found lectureships on some subject in physic and surgery, to be delivered on Aug. 18 in each year, to be respectively called "The Bradshaw Lecture," in memory of her late husband, Dr. William Wood Bradshaw; £1000 like annuities upon trust, to distribute the annual income on Ascension Day in each year among the poor parishioners of Upper Clatford, Andover, especial consideration being paid to the aged and infirm poor; and there is a precisely similar bequest for the benefit of the poor parishioners of Moulsford, near Wallingford. Her executors are directed to place a marble tablet in the churches of Upper Clatford and Moulsford with a record of these bequests. There are numerous legacies to relatives, friends, and others; and the residue of her property she leaves to her sister, Mary Ann Pouncey, and her niece, Kate Sarah King.

The will (dated Oct. 20, 1879) with two codicils (dated Nov. 11, 1879, and June 24, 1880) of Mrs. Georgiana Wrightson, late of Cusworth Park, Yorkshire, and of No. 22, Upper Brook-street, Grosvenor-square, who died on July 2 last, was proved on the 10th ult. by Richard Heber Wrightson and John Robert Williams, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. There are numerous legacies to her sisters, cousins, and other relatives, godchildren, and late and present maids, and the residue the testatrix gives to her brother, the Rev. Charles Edward Thomas.

The will dated (Feb. 16, 1878) with a codicil (dated April 22, 1879) of Mr. Frederick John Evans, late of Clayponds, Brentford, Middlesex, who died on July 8 last, was proved on the 20th ult. by Mrs. Cecilia Anne Evans, the widow, and acting executrix, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife £1000 and an annuity of £1000, and certain of his furniture, plate, and effects for life; to his niece and adopted daughter, Minna Fanny Cecilia Evans, an annuity of £100 during his wife's lifetime, and at her death such a sum is to be set apart upon trust for his said niece as will produce £800 per annum; to his sister-in-law, Mrs. Amelia Miller, an annuity of £200; annuities to nieces and other legacies. As to the residue of his property, the income is to go to his wife for life, and at her death the capital between some of his nephews and nieces.

The will (dated June 30, 1880) of Mrs. Elizabeth Izant, late of the Queen's Hotel, Upper Norwood, who died on the 6th ult., was proved on the 20th ult. by Richard Herbert, the brother, and Henry Wilcox, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000. The testatrix distributes her property among her children and other relatives.

THE SEAHAM COLLIERY DISASTER.

The terrible disaster of Wednesday week at the Seaham Colliery, near Sunderland, by an explosion of the inflammable gas called by the miners "fire-damp," was reported in our last. Two pages of this Supplement and the front page of the Number are filled with a series of Illustrations, which are furnished by our Artist's Sketches, with some aid from photographs by Messrs. Stabler and Fries, of Sunderland, and Mr. J. Lomax, of Seaham Harbour.

Seaham is a small seaport, nineteen miles from Newcastle-upon-Tyne. It is in the county of Durham, and in the richest portion of that coal-field. The late Marchioness of Londonderry showed great enterprise in the improvement of the harbour, with the view of getting ready shipment of the produce of her mines. The present Marquis has fully supported the views which her Ladyship entertained, and Seaham is principally devoted to the Marquis of Londonderry's export of coal. Durham and Northumberland, by reason of the great care taken, have enjoyed a singular immunity from accident since the dreadful disaster which occurred at the Hartley Colliery, in Northumberland.

The Seaham Colliery pit was sunk about forty years ago. It was worked during about half that time with a single shaft for sending down the men and ventilating the pit. That old system of working was abolished by the Mines Regulation Act of 1862, which made it compulsory to have two separate and distinct shafts some distance apart for ventilation and taking the men up and down the pit. This colliery still preserves the old arrangement of a shaft with a brattice separating it; but this is now entirely worked as a downcast shaft, where the men go down and come up, and it is called No. 1 and No. 2 shafts, but is really one shaft with a brattice up the centre. The upcast shaft is about 150 yards distant, and is the outlet by which all the foul air comes from the pit. There are five seams of coal worked—the Main seam, 460 yards from the surface; the Maudlin seam, 490 yards deep; Nos. 1, 2, and 3, Hutton seams, which are broken up by a "fault;" these are worked in three sections about twenty yards below the Main and Maudlin seams. There are two seams further down, the Harvey and Baskey, at a depth from the top of the shaft of 560 yards to 600 yards. There are about 1600 men employed at the colliery altogether, and they work three "shifts" per day, or seven hours each, so that the full complement of men in the pit at one time would not be less than five hundred. But, fortunately, the hour at which the explosion occurred, being half-past two, was previous to the hewers coming on, which would be at four o'clock in the morning. The number below was actually 246, and it is stated that there were very few hewers in the pit, the men there being principally engaged in clearing the travelling-ways and putting in timber to support the roofs and make it safe for the men to get the coal. The force of the explosion, supposed to have originated in the lowest seams, was such as to block up both the upcast and downcast shafts, and this led to the belief that every soul in the pit had perished. Ventilation was, however, soon restored, and the work of removing the débris in the shaft was commenced. This operation did not go on long before the efforts of the exploring party were rewarded by sounds from below, and within four hours of the explosion the nineteen men in the upper or main coal seam were found alive and well. They were got at by relays of men going down through the broken and shattered shaft by means of loops slung on chains, the regular cages and runners having been destroyed.

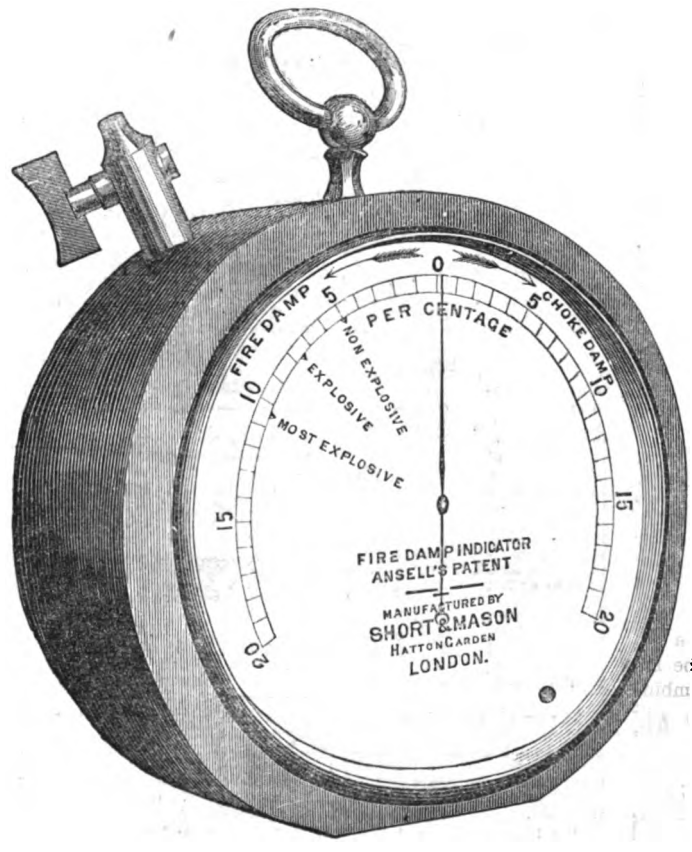
The manager of the colliery, Mr. Stratton, whose portrait we have engraved, was the first person, accompanied by the resident viewer and two of the workmen, to descend into the pit after the explosion, and to open communication with the men confined in the main coal seam. This was about half-past twelve at mid-day on Wednesday, and by seven o'clock in the evening there were fifty-seven men and boys brought up alive, but some of them in a very exhausted condition.

MR. STRATTON, THE MANAGER OF SEAHAM COLLIERY, WHO FIRST DESCENDED AFTER THE EXPLOSION.

The following is a narrative of one of the men, Ralph Marley, who was entombed with eighteen others in the main coal seam. He said there was a set of four of them working together 1200 yards from the shaft driving a heading, a work preparatory to the hewers getting the coal. They always took the precaution to go eighty yards in different directions to see if gas could be found, but so free is the colliery from gas that during the twelve months he had been working in the seam he had never seen gas. Lamps of the most approved pattern are used all over the pit, although no gas is ever seen, and the current in the main drivings is so strong that the men have to keep their eyes partly closed to keep out the dust caused by the rush of air. About twenty minutes past two o'clock they felt a rush of wind, and he said to one of his mates, "There 's something up," and his mate thought there was a fall somewhere near the place, but on looking he found nothing. Having been in three colliery explosions before, Marley told his mates that the pit had fired, and on going towards the shaft about a quarter of a mile from it they found a deputy overman named Wardle lying insensible, with his face covered with blood, and here they met the after-damp. Up to this time they had fresh air, but on proceeding along towards the shaft they saw the effects of the explosion—doors blown down and debris about the main ways. When they reached the shaft there were nineteen of them, with eight or nine lamps among them, the rest having had theirs blown out at the time of the explosion. On looking up the shaft they saw the cage above them damaged and off the runners, and looking down the shaft there was a lot of timber lying higgledy-piggledy. They were getting air into their seam, but the return air was so foul that it was like being in a very smoky room. They had water and tea with them, and they partook of this refreshment, but they had misgivings as to whether they were out of danger. They dreaded a second explosion, and travelled about in different directions in couples to see whether there were any signs of fire, but, not finding any, they sat down, now and again shouting up the shaft, however, without getting any response. About five o'clock in the morning they thought they heard voices from above, and this cheered them, but it was not till one o'clock in the afternoon that they were assured of being rescued. Marley, who is an elderly man, was then slung into a loop, and, with two others, was brought to the surface, and walked home, where he has been visited by many relatives.

Soon after the deliverance of these nineteen men from the Main Seam, about forty more were brought safely up from the Harvey Seam, where they had suffered only from dust and smoke. The upcast or High Pit shaft had been cleared of the broken wire-ropes, eight in number, which were fixed in it from top to bottom for "guides" to the descending or ascending "cage," and of the remains of the shattered "cage" itself, which had stuck in the shaft not far from the bottom. A "kibble" or iron tub was then let down, first to the level of one seam, next to that of the other seams below, and the men above shouted after it, for an hour or two, hoping that those who might be near the lower entrances to the shaft would hear them and get into this vehicle for their ascent. These men, however, from the Harvey Seam had collected in the engine-house, and did not hear the summons from above. It was between six and seven in the evening when Mr. Stratton, with a party of eight or ten miners, carrying two patent fire-annihilators, again descended through the smoke in the High Pit shaft to rescue the men in the Harvey Seams The scene as they went down, followed by several other parties equipped in the same manner, i. represented in our front-page Engraving. The fire-annihilators, which are iron cylinders with conical tops, about four feet high, containing a chemical apparatus for generating a gas that will extinguish fire, will be recognised in several of our Illustrations. Among those who were raised alive from the Harvey Seam was one, William Laverick, terribly burnt in the head and face, and another severely bruised; the rest were not much hurt.

There are sixty-seven persons who have escaped the disaster; and thirty-three dead bodies were got up from the lower seams or levels; but the number of dead is estimated at 161. There is a record of 246 having gone down to work. Some of these had taken the "night shift" of work out of their proper turn, in order to make a holiday of the next day, that they might attend a public flower show to be held at Seaham, where Lord Londonderry was to distribute the prizes. The cultivation of gardens and flowers is a favourite pastime with the colliers of that neighbourhood, and is wisely and kindly encouraged by their social superiors. Some men of this class also formed part of the Seaham Harbour Volunteer Artillery Corps, which greatly distinguished itself in the recent competition of the National Artillery Association at Shoeburyness. Ten members of that corps were among the colliers who were below at the time of this disaster; and one of them, Corporal Hindson, had won the Queen's Prize this year at Shoeburyness, and the gold cup was to have been presented to him by Lord Londonderry at the Seaham Flower Show that very same day. His corpse was found in burnt fragments, the head and both legs torn off the body and thrown several yards apart. He has left a wife, a son, and four daughters, one of whom was to have been married this week to a young man who has also lost his life in the pit.



The utmost sympathy and kindness, with prompt and energetic labours to assist the manager and other officers of the colliery in the work of exploration and rescue, were freely manifested by nearly all persons in the district who are connected with colliery operations. The Marquis of Londonderry, who was deeply affected, and to whom the Queen has telegraphed a message of her compassion for the sufferers, came again and again to the pit's mouth, in consultation with the managers, and with Mr. Bell, the Government Inspector of Collieries. The Secretary of State for the Home Department, Sir William Vernon Harcourt, who was staying at Studley Royal, near Ripon, came to Seaham on purpose to ascertain for himself the circumstances of this great disaster. It will probably be many days yet before all the dead bodies can be recovered from the Hutton and Maudlin Seams, where none can possibly have survived the explosion. No fault has been found with the ordinary arrangements and condition of the Seaham Colliery. It is satisfactory to learn that nearly all the men killed were insured in the Northumberland and Durham Miners' Association, which grants five shillings a week to each widow and two shillings a week for each child.

Our Illustrations comprise a general view of Seaham, with the harbour; views of the three shafts at Seaham Colliery; the scene at bringing up the first dead body; the operation of putting out the fire in No. 3 Pit; groups of miners and wives standing outside the dead-house, waiting to identify the bodies; and some of the women and old men going to the neighbouring chapel at night to attend a special religious service held upon this occasion. The Rev. W. A. Scott, Vicar of the parish, performed the funeral ceremony in the churchyard for the dead who were interred on Sunday.

ANSELL'S FIRE-DAMP INDICATOR.

The deplorable loss of life in the Seaham Colliery will naturally lead the public to inquire if science can do nothing to prevent the periodical recurrence of so terrible a destruction of human life. The answer to an inquiry of the kind is ready to hand and perfectly conclusive, for science has already placed at the disposal of miners the most efficient means of detecting accumulations of fire-damp in coal-mines. It is upon the Legislature the responsibility now devolves to make it compulsory upon mine-owners and officials in charge of mines to employ the means science has placed at their disposal—otherwise "overlookers or mine-viewers" will, as heretofore, go on trusting to blind chance in all they do. Those who have to do with mines are by nature "fatalists." They have at all events not to bear the brunt of a neglect of proper precautions to make the life of the miner safer, and will therefore continue to trust to chance and believe they have faithfully performed their duty when they have hoisted the "danger signal."

That this must be so is apparent, for a dogged indifference to the use of scientific instruments is notorious, and fully explains why one of so much value as that of Ansell's Fire-damp Indicator is not in use. The construction of the instrument is based on a well-known scientific principle—that of the diffusion of gases. All mere mechanical contrivances for shutting off the fire-damp from the miners' Davy Lamp have, in practice, proved an utter failure. So with regard to the accumulation of gas in confined spaces, this cannot be prevented; and when from neglect of some precaution the miner suddenly comes across "a blower" the flame of the lamp immediately increases in size, the sharp current draws it through the wire-gauze and renders it red-hot. In an instant, and before the man has time to think, an explosion takes place. Science has thus been driven to look in another direction for the means of lessening the danger of fire-damp accumulations, and it occurred to Mr. George F. Ansell that he might utilise the law of diffusion, and, by some simple means, measure the quantity of gas present in any and every part of the workings. The idea was of great value, and soon took a practical form. The instrument, as will be seen on reference to our Engraving, closely resembles the aneroid barometer. The rigid metal back of the aneroid being removed, is replaced by a porous tile, and, with other important changes made in its mechanism, becomes a diffusiometer. When the instrument is brought into an atmosphere charged with fire-damp, the gaseous atoms diffuse into the closed chamber with greater rapidity than the atmospheric air passes out. The increased volume of gas causes pressure to be made upon a spring in communication with the index-hand, and it immediately moves over the graduated dial-face. The face is arbitrarily divided into degrees—1 per cent of carburetted hydrogen marks 1 degree, 7½ an explosive mixture, and 10½ a most explosive mixture. The degrees are bold, and purposely kept wide apart, to enable the viewer to read them off by the aid of a feeble light. In the event of the instrument being brought into an atmosphere of heavy gas, choke-damp, or carbonic acid gas, the action of the index-hand is reversed, and it travels in the opposite direction. To restore the equilibrium of the instrument, it is only necessary to turn the small stop-cock at the upper part of the instrument, which lets in atmospheric air, and the index-hand returns to zero. The Indicator is so little liable to be deranged and is so simple of application that it can be intrusted to anyone quite unacquainted with the use of a scientific instrument. It is well adapted for use in other subterranean works, as the sinking of wells and the laying of gas-pipes in the streets. In ships, where the accumulation of gases in the hold is a frequent source of danger, and the detection of gas leakages in the house. It is of this instrument Dr. Jabez Hogg writes, "it is impossible to conceive a more refined application of science than Ansell's fire-damp indicator, or one that will be found of greater practical utility in the saving of human life."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON: SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1880.

A Ministerial Crisis in France has been, unhappily, of too frequent occurrence, since the permanent establishment of the Republic, to occasion much public surprise or disquietude. At the present moment there would seem to be, at least in the judgment of foreign onlookers, no sufficient ground in the internal affairs of France to warrant, far less to justify, the change that has been effected. The dislocating force which has riven in twain the Cabinet of M. de Freycinet appears, after a searching examination, to be personal rather than political—personal, at least, as regards its immediate direction, political remotely, if it be political at all, chiefly in reference to a somewhat far-off hereafter. A recent speech of the Prime Minister at Montauban supplied the pretext—we hesitate to say furnished the reason—of the conflict which has issued in the reconstruction of the Cabinet. A part of that speech related to the execution of what are called the March Decrees, and intimated an intention to hold it in suspense until the meeting, in due course, of the National Assembly. We are not aware that this purpose was seriously objected to in the first instance—at least, by M. de Freycinet's colleagues. It may have been regarded by some of them as an inopportune concession to the clerical representatives of the Church. For, although it gave up no State rights, it indicated a desire to wield them with caution and with some degree of indulgence. The Vatican is supposed to have approved of this purpose, and to have counselled the religious congregations—not, it is true, to seek the authorisation of the State for their continued existence and work, but to show, as far in principle as they could do, a complete practical submission to State authority, and a resolution to carry on their functions of prayer, teaching, and charity, quite apart from political designs. There needs not—nor, indeed, would it be decorous—to discuss in these columns the radical principle which should regulate the relations of State and Church. Suffice it to say, that no such principle was involved in the discussions, or the acts, terminating in M. de Freycinet's downfall. It is hardly expected, indeed, that the change of Ministry will lead to any important administrative change in regard to the immediate application of the March Decrees, or that, under the sanction of the new Cabinet, matters will go on, for some two or three months to come, or, at any rate, until the meeting of the Legislature, very differently from what they would have done if M. de Freycinet had continued at his post.

Internal policy, then, can hardly be held sufficient to account for what has taken place in Paris during the past week. The affairs of France were not troubled. The public mind was not disquieted. Trade, commerce, and agriculture were marching on their several ways, rejoicing in fair prospects of success. No external adversary threatened, even from afar, the peace of the country, upon which just now Frenchmen have wisely for their own interests, and for those of Europe, set their hearts. How, then, is the Crisis to be accounted for? Prevalent opinion, both in and out of France, attributes it to the influence of M. Gambetta. Prevalent opinion may, of course, be mistaken; but there can be no doubt of M. Gambetta's paramount political power. His fiat is decisive. No Ministry has been able to act independently of him and continue to maintain its ground. M. de Freycinet ventured at Montauban to give expression to his independence as Premier of any controlling influence, and he has paid for it the same penalty as two of his predecessors had done. M. Gambetta has power, but he hesitates to associate it with responsibility. Such a position may be patriotically used, but it is highly dangerous. If France places almost unlimited confidence in him as a Statesman, he must, sooner or later, place confidence in France by accepting the constitutional headship of her Administration. We presume not to judge of his motives; we know not what they are. But we cannot be surprised, after his speech at Cherbourg, that many people, both at home and abroad, should identify them with a purpose that may hereafter fill the heart of Europe with disquietude, and inflict upon his own countrymen unmeasurable suffering.

If it be true, as his enemies impute to him, and as some of his professed friends ardently desire of him, that he is meditating for France "a policy of revenge;" if he is looking forward to the reconquest of Alsace and Lorraine; if every step that he takes is taken with a determination of ultimately measuring strength once again with the German Empire; it is to be feared, however far off may be the struggle, that the interval between now and then will be employed in the furtherance of any policy but such as the interests of humanity would require. Military ideas will, of necessity, continue to pervade the European Continent, and peace, such as it is, will be but a silent preparation for war. In that case we may bid farewell to the brighter prospects we have been wont to contemplate as a result of the final settlement of the Eastern Question—a settlement which, it is hoped, may yet be effected without a physical conflict between the European Powers. The Franco-German question will still remain to excite the apprehensions of the Continental public. Germany, Austria, Russia, Italy, and France will continuously pursue a policy believed to be enforced upon them by the quarrel on either side of the Rhine, will endure any sacrifice calculated to nurse their strength and augment and organise their military resources. It is a vision of the future which we shudder to look upon. At present it is but a vision, thank Heaven! and, as such, it may pass away. Changes which none can foresee may render the realisation of it practically impossible. The world may grow wiser. People may better understand their national interests. Higher orders of thought and feeling may permeate the great communities of civilised mankind. At any rate, every year which witnesses the continuance and the triumphs of international peace will render more difficult a policy of revenge. We have our doubts whether this is really M. Gambetta's aim. He is a great statesman—but he is also a subtle politician. His appearances have not always prefigured his ends. He would deny—we may almost affirm he has denied—the motive imputed. But he will be narrowly watched; and the sooner he becomes a responsible servant of the French Republic the more likely will he be to achieve enduring fame.

With the view of promoting agricultural improvement in Bengal and encouraging the study of scientific agriculture, the Bengal Government has created two annual special scholarships of £200 each, to be held by science graduates of the Calcutta University at Cirencester College. The first two will be tenable for two years and a half from the commencement of 1881. An allowance of 1000 rupees will be made to defray the expenses of scholarship-holders proceeding to England, and a similar allowance for the return journey on completion of the course.

The Act passed towards the close of the late Session, 43 and 44, c. 25, empowers the Metropolitan Board of Works to expend money, which they are empowered to borrow, to a large amount for metropolitan purposes. By the new money powers conferred by the Act the Board may, up to Dec. 31 next, expend £10,000 on the Fire Brigade, and £30,000 on parks, commons, and open spaces. From Jan. 31 to Dec. 31 next year the Board may expend £3,766,579. In some of the amounts are included the borrowing powers previously granted. Among the amounts which may be expended next year are £42,028 under the Street Improvements Act, 1872; £25,000 for parks, commons, and open spaces; £25,000 for the Thames Embankments and other places, including the Northumberland-avenue; £7000 on the obelisk on the Victoria Embankment; £112,551 on the toll-bridges; and £1,500,000 under the Improvement Act of 1877, and £500,000 for artisans' and labourers' dwellings, besides other sums set forth in the schedule annexed to the Act, in addition to advances to public bodies. The new borrowing powers for the Board amount to £485,372, and for loans to other bodies £868,100.

In accordance with an ancient civic custom observed annually on St. Matthew's Day, the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Under-Sheriffs went on Tuesday in state to Christ's Hospital to Divine service. On their arrival there they were met by the governors and escorted to Christ Church, which adjoins the hospital, and where the bluecoat boys had also assembled. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Henry C. Bowker, M.A., Vicar of Christ Church, Hull, formerly a master in the mathematical school of Christ's Hospital. The preacher alluded to the impending changes at Christ's Hospital, and expressed a fear that an institution which had stood the test of an existence of three centuries might be imperilled in its usefulness by the sweeping alterations in contemplation. At the conclusion of the service the Lord Mayor was escorted to the Court-room, where, under the Act 22 George III., chapter 77, the lists of the governors of the Royal hospitals were formally presented to him and thence into the custody of the town clerk (Sir John Monckton). Formerly the scholars delivered the usual orations, but they are now recited earlier in the year.

ECHOES OF THE WEEK.

That "Silly Season" which, from a journalistic point of view, is supposed to set in when Parliament is prorogued and partridge-shooting begins, seems fated, this year, to assume the aspect of a solemnly silly recess. The hero of the day just now is the Juvenile Offender. He is giving more trouble than ever Ginx's Baby gave his parents and the constituted authorities. The Home Secretary and the county magistrates are gravely exercised as to what should be done with small boys who have been convicted of stealing apples; and the Old Woman who lived in a Shoe might be gratified were she to learn that the birch rod with which she so liberally corrected her multitudinous offspring prior to their retiring to rest is being seriously recommended by the Home Office as a penalty for juvenile misdeeds.

That all this turmoil respecting the treatment of juvenile criminals should be possible becomes all the more disheartening when it is remembered that reformatories and industrial schools have been in existence for more than twenty years, and that the school for criminal boys of the Philanthropic Society at Redhill, and the School of Discipline at Chelsea for refractory girls, are yet older institutions than the reformatories. So much bureaucratic and magisterial verbiage is being expended on a question which the Dutch (by the establishment of Houses of Correction for troublesome boys and girls) satisfactorily settled more than two hundred years ago, that one feels inclined to doubt whether such philanthropic experts in the treatment of juvenile offenders as the Rev. Sydney Turner and Miss Mary Carpenter ever lived. Boy burglars, boy pickpockets, boy robbers of tills and filchers of tradesmen's goods, and boy and girl "hoodlums" (to use a Californian term) swarm in our midst. Boy roughs pelt each other, and the public at large, with stones; the Board School boys as soon as school is over gather in gangs in the streets to indulge in free fights with the children of other schools; and the railway companies are fain to employ detectives to watch for the fiendishly mischievous urchins who are in the habit of placing stones or pieces of wood on the rails with the view of upsetting trains. And with all this, it does not seem that we have yet mastered the A B C of how to deal with Juvenile Offenders. Is Parliament really "the Collective Wisdom of the Nation"? I confess that I am growing somewhat sceptical as to the truth of that pseudo-sapient common-place.

That new Fielding Club, of the proposed establishment of which I spoke some time since, is soon to assume a definite form and embodiment. The habitat of the new Fielding is to be in King-street, Covent-garden, within a couple of doors from the site once occupied by the Garrick. I understand that the Fielding will not be open to members until one o'clock in the afternoon; and, of course, in these playgoing and supping after the play days, it will be a late or "small hour" club, as its distinguished predecessor in Maiden-lane, Covent-garden (over against Rule's oyster-rooms) was. I look upon the one o'clock in the day rule as a very excellent one. The most unclubbable of all people are, perhaps, those who habitually breakfast at their clubs (what terrible disturbances they make about the dry toast and the kippered herring!), and who spend the rest of the morning writing letters on the club paper. It is only about lunch-time that the club-man's heart begins to expand, and that the sylphs of gossip, tittle-tattle, and scan-mag begin to hover about the coffee-room. Sir Benjamin Backbite is never quite himself until he has had his chop and his half-pint of Léoville.

Mem.: I learn that the preliminary list of the Committee of the new Fielding comprises the names of Sir Coutts Lindsay, Bart., Sir Bruce Seton, Bart.; Sir John Holker, Q.C., M.P.; Sir Algernon Borthwick, the Hon. David Plunkett, Q.C., M.P.; Captain the Hon. Fulke Greville, Captain H. Wombwell, Captain Shaw, C.B.; Mr. F. Lubbock, Mr. Edward Dicey, Mr. Montagu Williams, Mr. John Hare, and Mr. Henry J. Byron. A very brilliantly promising list, I think, adequately representative of literature, art, law, journalism, the drama, and society. I should like to see the names of an eminent musician and a distinguished sculptor added to the number.

The writer of an illnatured article in the World, falling foul of a harmless suggestion made in these columns about the possibility of mitigating the organ-grinding nuisance, takes occasion to remark that I am "not always cogent, perhaps, but seldom dull." I beg to state that I can be very dull indeed—as dull as the scraps of fashionable intelligence which fill column upon column of "What the World says." I can be as dull as the paragraph in which it is stated that "the Duke of Jericho hired a small house in the town of Doncaster, where he entertained a select circle of men friends. He went in for one or two good purchases, but was outbid by a rich commercial gentleman!" Who edits these wonderful paragraphs? Touching my being "not always cogent," if the writer of the article on "Licensed Organ-isation" will look at his dictionary he will find that cogent (from cogere, to force) means urgent, irresistible, resistless. Did I ever claim to be irresistible?

When Mr. Parnell was campaigning in the United States I frequently noticed some remarkably vigorous and well-attuned verses in the American papers (on the distressing Land question of course) by Miss Fanny Parnell. A contemporary has just published a poem (on the same mournful topic) by the same lady, which strikes me as being peculiarly eloquent, nervous, and, after a manner, "cogent." I quote two stanzas—

> Oh, by the Heaven who made us all—the seignior and the serf—
> Rise up! and swear this day to hold your own green Irish turf;
> Rise up! and plant your feet as men where now you crawl as slaves,
> And make your harvest fields your camps, or make of them your graves.
> The birds of prey are hovering round, the vultures wheel and swoop—
> They come, the coronetted ghouls! with drum-beat and with troop—
> They come, to fatten on your flesh, your children's and your wives;
> Ye die but once—ho'd fast your lands, and, if ye can, your lives.

The politics of Mr. Parnell and of Miss Fanny Parnell are not mine, by many thousands of leagues distance; but the lady certainly knows how to write ringing verse. Her latest poem is almost as stirring as Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's famous paraphrase of "John Brown's Body lies Mouldering in the Grave," published during the great American Civil War. I have heard Mrs. Howe's magnificent anti-slavery hymn sung in chorus by a Massachusetts regiment, two thousand strong, with electrical effect. The phrasecology of the poem is too Scriptural to be quoted in a column of gossip; but the poems of Mrs. Howe (the gifted sister of the celebrated Mr. Sam Ward, ex-King of the Lobby, Monarch of Wall-street, Despot of Delmonico's, and Prince of Good Fellows) should be procurable at Messrs. Trübner's, or some other London dealer in American books.

Is it not time that the stupid and unjust practice of sneering at Cook's Tourists came to an end? Here is bright, clever Mr. Du Maurier indulging, in the pages of Punch, in a gratuitous and very cruel fling at the "personally conducted" patrons of Messrs. Thomas Cook and Son. The scene of Mr. Du Maurier's drawing is laid in the garden of an hotel somewhere in Italy; and a very snobbish-looking English youth, who has left his crutch and toothpick at home, but has brought his wide-awake hat with him, observes to the waiter, "You have rather a large party this afternoon, Sandro;" to which the attendant replies with a grin, "Yes, Sare, it is von of Mistare Cook's parties. Dere are twenty-tree patients in all." The "patients" are represented by a crowd of deplorable men, women, and children, some of whom look like incurable valetudinarians, and others like congenital idiots. In the first place, Mr. Du Maurier, who, inferentially, belongs to the Latin race, ought to be aware that the word "patient" in France and Italy is not usually applied to a sick person. He is in French "le malade," and in Italian "un ammalato," or "un sofferente." Only Mrs. Gen'l Gilflory (who has lived so long abroad) would talk about "ung Doctor ay say pashiongs"—or patients.

In the next place, I may say that I have met with many hundreds of Cook's Tourists in the course of my travels; and I never could discern any difference between them and other English travellers on the Continent, save that they were, as a rule, better behaved and more anxious to acquire information than are the general run of "T. G.'s" (travelling gents.: the abbreviation dates from the days of the Crimean War) of the "stuck up" order. I have been told that one of the most illustrious of English statesmen has been heard to say that he regards Mr. Thomas Cook and Mr. John Hullah as two of the most important social benefactors that this age has seen.

Mem.: The late Charles Lever, who was certainly a most kind hearted man, never made a greater mistake than when, in one of the "Cornelius O'Dowd" papers in Blackwood, he likened Cook's Tourists to escaped convicts. The truth is, that in some peculiarly constituted British minds there is a prevalent impression that what are called the "Superior Orders" or the "Upper Classes" are entitled to a monopoly of travelling on the Continent of Europe. You meet these people on the Rialto, or at Pontresina, or at Munich, or in the Catacombs at Rome, and they stare at you, and turn up their noses, and gather up their skirts, as though you had no right to be there, and they only were privileged to make what our great-grandfathers used to call the "Grand Tour." But get you gone a very long way from home. Wander about the Kitaigorod at Moscow, or the Richelieu boulevard at Odessa; stroll through the peerless courts of the Alhambra; cogitate in the Mesquita at Cordova; dine at the delightful bouillabaisse restaurant, on the road to Lake Pontchartrain, at New Orleans; listen to the Spanish military bands playing in the Plaza de Armas, at Havana; join in the moonlight promenade known as "Las Cadenas," in front of the cathedral of Mexico; buy a pair of gloves at "Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institution," at Great Salt Lake City; gaze on the Seal Rock from the Clifton House, hard by the Golden Gates of the Bay of San Francisco; eat oranges at Jacksonville, Florida; and buy cigars at Key West, and you will meet with no "stuck up" people. You will meet kindly, friendly, well-informed English ladies and gentlemen. To Cairo, Constantinople, and Algiers the "stuck up" community have, I am sorry to say, penetrated. I can fancy them in Charon's boat, being ferried over the Styx, and objecting to sit next to ghosts "of inferior rank" to themselves.

Look at that wretched little controversy about the female clerks in the Post Office Savings Bank. It is contended that the ladies who have hitherto enjoyed a virtual monopoly of appointments in a particular department of the General Post Office would be "degraded" by contact with female clerks admitted under a system of open competition, and who are not in the conventional slang of the day "gentlewomen." What sorry stuff is this! My dear mother was a teacher of Italian singing, and in her time instructed a vast number of future Duchesses, Marchionesses, and Countesses. But I remember that one of her prettiest, most graceful, and most lady-like pupils at Brighton was the daughter of a butcher out of Black Lion-street. To my mind, all women are "gentle" if they be gentle in their manners, and do not talk scandal about their sisters. What a storm of public indignation would have arisen in the United States had the female clerks' controversy been mooted there! I can just imagine the white-hot wrath of the lady employées in the Treasury Department at Washington if anybody had presumed tos ay that they were not all "gentlewomen." On the other hand, the term "gentleman" is used somewhat indiscriminately in the Great Republic. Everybody remembers the story of the English tourist in the States who was accosted by a rough-looking individual with the inquiry, "Air you the man that 's hired a buggy?" "I am," replied the traveller. "Then," continued the rough-looking individual, "I 'm the gentleman that 's goin' to drive you." And I remember once noting the following in the advertising columns of the New York Herald:—"Board for Gentlemen.—N.B. Blacksmiths preferred." I do not say that a blacksmith may not be a gentleman (remember Mr. Elihu Burritt, "the learned blacksmith," some time United States Consul at Birmingham); but why this partiality on the part of the New York boarding-house keeper for the knights of the hammer, anvil, and bellows?

I have before me the new volume of "The Boys' Own Paper" and the first volume of "The Girls' Own Paper," both published at the office of that excellent periodical "The Leisure Hour." The circulation of these journals is, I understand, immense; but if all the boys and girls in England subscribed to the papers published directly for their amusement and instruction we might have in time far less trouble than we are at present experiencing with the juvenile offenders (the majority of whom are primarily only "naughty" boys and girls who need a little wholesome correction, and "a good talking to"). It is the good juveniles who are "talked to" in the Boys' and Girls' Own Papers, but not, let me hasten to add, in a mawkish "goody-goody" fashion.

Mem.: In the "Girls' Own Paper," which is my favourite, chiefly for the sake of the capital stories and the beautiful engravings which it contains, we are promised a series of essays on "The Difficulties of a Young Housekeeper, and How to Overcome Them," by Dora Hope; together with papers on "The Weddings of the World," "The School Girl Abroad," "New Songs for Girls," by Sir Julius Benedict, and "a Doll's Letters to her Mistress: showing how a Doll corrected the Faults and Errors of a Little Girl."

Mem.: Touching dolls, I wish that some enterprising bookseller would republish a charming little book called "The New Doll," published by old Rudolf Ackerman, of the Strand (his famous "picture shop" was at the north-east corner of Beaufort-buildings) about sixty years ago. It was an unusually pretty and entertaining story, and was full besides of some of the most delightful engravings (in the "stipple" manner) that I ever have seen. These plates could easily be reproduced by one of the new processes. "The New Doll" ought to be in the library of the British Museum.

It would be obviously impertinent on my part to attempt to review so important a contribution to contemporary literature as the "History of Our Own Times, from the Accession of Queen Victoria to the General Election of 1880," by Mr. Justin M'Carthy, M.P., of which the third and fourth volumes, completing the work, have just been published by Messrs. Chatto and Windus. I read the first volume last March at San Francisco; but as yet I have not had time even to "smell the paper-knife" with which I am cutting the leaves of the remaining tomes. En revanche, I have read the index, even as the discreet gastronome reads and re-reads the bill of fare at Bignon's or the Café Anglais before he orders his dinner. To my mind, historians ought to make their own indices. They only know the tid-bits scattered through their pages, of which the professional index-maker will probably make insufficient mention, if he makes any mention of them at all.

I am not satisfied with the index to Mr. Justin M'Carthy's four doubtless admirable volumes. I am not satisfied with any index to any book that I have yet seen, save (pardon my modesty) the index to one of my own common-place books, in which I have at least three cross references to every entry. But, alas! there are six thousand entries in that book (I have been keeping it for twenty years; and I have just indexed entry number eight hundred and ten. A mournful outlook. In the index to "The History of Our Own Times" I miss specific reference to the Slave Trade (the Slave Circular is mentioned), to the Great Eastern (the Great Western steam-ship is cited), to the Great Britain and her disaster in Dundrum Bay, to Qui tam actions, to Crinoline (although a question de jupons is touched upon), to Photography or to Chloroform, to the Abolition of Intramural Interments, to Macready, the actor (although mention is made of Macklin and Captain Macheath), to Gold-Digging in California, to Revolvers or to Ironclads, to Marshal Haynau's reception at Messrs. Barclay and Perkins's Brewery, to the Cholera of 1849 and 1857 (the apprehensions of Cholera in 1866 are noted), to the trials of Madeleine Smith and Dr. Smethurst, to the Crystal Palace and the Pre-Rafaellite movement. Surely all these persons and things belong to the "History of Our Own Times." Stay, there is a reference to crinoline under the head of the Empress Eugénie, who is stated to be the "inventress" of the aid to beauty in question. My dear Mr. Justin M'Carthy, crinoline "dress improvers" were common in Paris in the year 1847, when the Empress Eugénie was plain Mdlle. de Montijo.

An extremely obliging correspondent sends me from Stockport a number of extracts from Mr. Tyrone Power's "Impressions on America," among which is a notice of the ruined church at Petersburg, recently mentioned in the "Echoes." The passages, unfortunately, are far too long for quotation. Another correspondent, signing himself "Stadacona," begs me "never even to think for the future of Quebec as an American town." It is divided, my correspondent adds, by an impassable gulf from all things American. I humbly beg the gentleman's pardon. I preserve so many pleasant recollections of Quebec, and of dinners at the Stadacona Club, and Mrs. Steele's boarding-house, and the mess-room of one of her Majesty's regiments of infantry, in which a present dashing and popular novelist, hight Hawley Smart, was then (1863) a bold Captain, that I would not, on any account, disparage Quebec. It is not in British North America. Beshrew "Mercator's Projection" and all the atlases of Mr. Stanford and Mr. Wyld. Quebec is in Champagne, or in Berry, or in Franche Comté. But, my excellent "Stadacona," Quebec is a city, not a town. Aha! I have you there, I think.

As a proof of the minute attention with which the pictures in Punch are studied, I may mention that no less than ten correspondents have reminded me that I have done (I need scarcely say an unintentional) injustice to a very clever artist, Mr. T. R. Atkinson, by ascribing to Mr. Charles Keene some delightful little vignettes which appeared as illustrations to an article on Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Florence, and which illustrations were really from the graceful and facile pencil of Mr. Atkinson. My mistake was due simply to the circumstance that I am more than half blind, and that at a distance there seemed to me to be a strong similarity between Mr. Atkinson's mode of grouping his initials and the well-known initial signature of Mr. Charles Keene. If the first-named clever artist will take my advice, he will alter the pattern of his monogram.

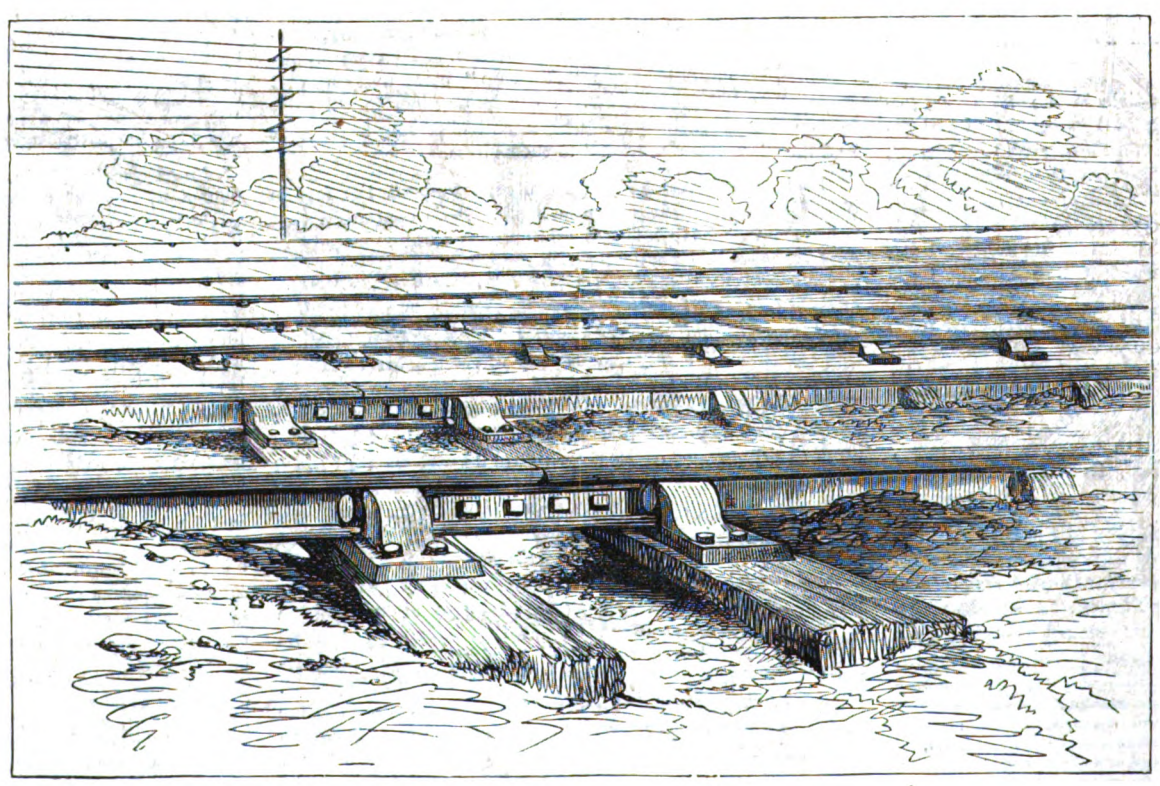
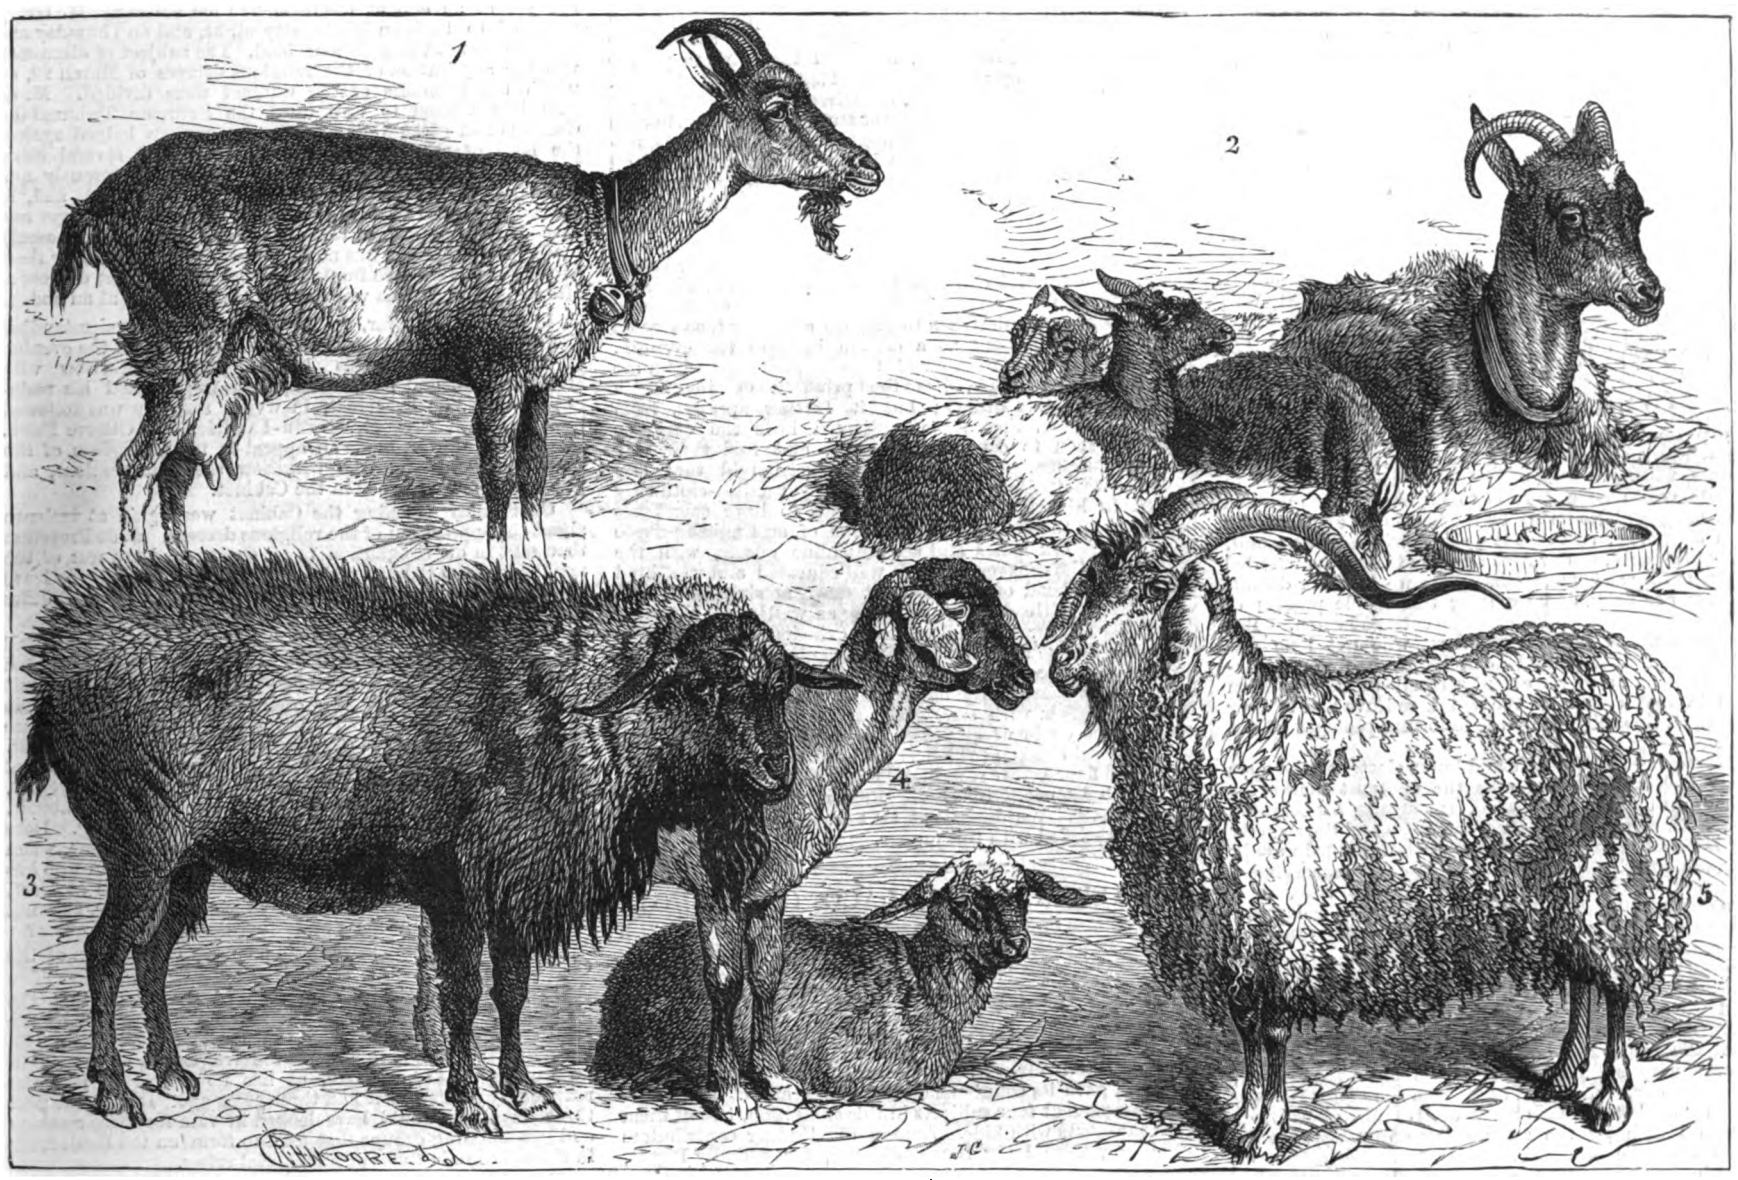
THE PLOT TO BLOW UP A LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY TRAIN.



PLACE WHERE THE DYNAMITE WAS LAID, BETWEEN BUSHEY AND WATFORD.

The mysterious plot for the destruction of a train on the London and North-Western Railway some time between the Sunday night, the 12th inst., and the Monday morning has puzzled all the police and railway officials from the hour of its discovery to the present moment. One of our Illustrations is a View of the exact spot where the deposit of explosive matter was found by John Heath, a platelayer, ten minutes after seven o'clock in the morning on Monday week. It is about sixteen miles from London, opposite Messrs. Sedgwick's brewery, nearly a quarter of a mile beyond Bushey station towards Watford. At this place there is an embankment some twenty feet high, and a small thicket of trees stands within a few feet of the railway. The river Colne and the waterworks of the railway company are here close to the railway. The line at this point curves inwards, so that anyone might steal from the thicket, and, crouching among the bushes on the slope of the embankment, approach unobserved from the direction of either Watford or Bushey to the very spot where the dynamite was placed. There are four lines of rails over this portion of the road, the fast or express main-line trains having up and down lines of their own. On the down fast main-line the "fish-plates," or bars which hold down the rails upon the sleepers, had been removed from both rails. A little hole was dug alongside the sleeper of the outside rail, and in this hole was placed a brown paper parcel, 14 in. long and 8 in. wide, with a piece of india-rubber tubing, more than a yard long, having one end of it inserted in the parcel. On the top of the parcel were the two fish-plates, with the bolts and nuts sticking in them, which had been used for attaching them to the line of rail. The parcel was partly open, but had been loosely tied with a strong cord, which was lying beside the parcel. The paper was very wet, as there had been rain on the Sunday night. John Heath tore off some of the paper, and saw inside what he supposed to be red lead. A small "jemmy" or crowbar lay close at hand. Heath only thought, at first, all this might belong to some work of repairs of the telegraph, and that the telegraph workmen had left it there while they went to give information at Watford of having found the fish-plates off the rails. So he at once put the fish-plates up in their proper position, screwing on the nuts as far as he could with his fingers, not being furnished with the instrument called a "spanner" for that purpose, and carried back the signal-lamps to Bushey station, for which he had been sent. On his way thither he met Joseph Holwood, the "ganger," and told him what he had observed.



Holwood instantly went to the spot, fastened up the fish-plates securely with his spanner, and carried off the parcel, with the indiarubber tube and the crowbar, to be shown to the station-masters at Bushey and Watford. They telegraphed information to the Euston-square terminus, and soon afterwards Superintendent Copping, the head of the detective department at Euston, accompanied by two subordinates, proceeded to Bushey. These were joined by Inspector Isgate, of the Herts County Constabulary, stationed at Watford, and by Detective Warne, of the S Division of the Metropolitan Police. They went, accompanied by Inspector Keys, who has charge of that portion of the London and North-Western Company's line, to view the contents of the parcel.

It was considered that the substance must be dynamite, or similar explosive material. The indiarubber tubing proved on examination to consist of four pieces, each twelve inches long, of a quarter of an inch diameter, all filled with gunpowder, and at the end of each length of tube was a large percussion-cap. It is supposed that the ends of all the tubing, with the four percussion-caps, had been laid upon the rail, and that the two fish-plates had been set up at the side of the rail, to keep the tubing on the top of it, so that the train might run over the percussion-caps, and they set fire to the gunpowder in the tubing, from which the dynamite in the parcel would be exploded. Dynamite it really was, though some persons doubted this until it was proved by an official scientific examination. It was contained in twenty-seven cartridges, wrapped in many pieces of old newspaper, and all in one piece of oiled paper, and then tied together with twine; each cartridge being a roll about four inches long and one inch thick. The material is described as a chalk-like substance, of flesh-coloured tint. It would burn readily in a fire, but in its wet state would not explode, some of the nitro-glycerine having been washed out. Samples were examined by Dr. Aveling, of the Polytechnic Institution; by Major Duncan, R.E., at the Royal Arsenal; and Mr. R. Bannister, Government Analyst at Somerset House. There can be no doubt whatever of the destructive nature of the apparatus, or of the criminal intention of those who placed it on the railway. We forbear to discuss the various conjectures that have been entertained concerning their motives, as some authentic publication of the evidence is yet to be expected.

A MONTENEGRIN WEDDING.

That sequestered highland race, numbering 280,000 people, whose ancient territorial disputes, and border warfare with the Albanian subjects of Turkey, have brought on the present European naval demonstration in support of their claim to Dulcigno, have their own domestic manners and customs. Our Illustration, from a sketch by our Special Artist lately in their country, shows the festive nuptial procession conducting a Montenegrin bride and bridegroom from church after the wedding ceremony, accompanied by their parents and friends, with whom is the bearded parish priest, distinguished by his peculiar head-dress. Among the bystanders at the church door are one or two rustic musicians, furnished with a rude kind of wind instrument made of a bladder and short pipe, which emits dismal strains, varied to the notes of the gamut by the pressure of the hands at the sides of the bladder, thereby playing a tune supposed to be of hilarious, if not melodious, effect on the listening ear. A more formidable part of the procession consists of a troop of warlike peasants, armed with rifles, long pistols, and terrific knives, shouting and discharging their firearms by way of a grand salute, which is considered to do the greatest honour to the newly-married couple. It is to be hoped that this wild fashion of congratulation may be the harbinger of household peace and happiness, and that the young wife may be found, a twelvemonth hence, as our Artist has separately represented her, quietly sitting at home, spinning the wool on her distaff, looking after her baby, and awaiting the simple process of cookery in the pot suspended over the cottage hearth. But our correspondent, Mr. Athol Mayhew, who not long ago visited the romantic mountain land of Tschernagora or Montenegro, does not give a very pleasant account of the condition of women in that country. We will here leave him to bear testimony upon this subject, by the following passages of one of his letters:—

"In Montenegro, the middle and lower classes of the male community look to matrimony as the cheapest market to supply them with stout, serviceable, substitutes for beasts of burden. Both on account of their costliness and the scarcity of fodder horses and mules are luxuries to be indulged in only by the upper classes. When a man resolves upon marrying—and there are but few bachelors, you may be sure, in a country where custom rules that he who weds fills, as it were, his chamber and his stall at one and the same time—he expresses his intention to his oldest and nearest relative, who repairs to the parents of the girl and asks their consent to the match. Should this be granted, the marriage ceremonies are celebrated with great signs of rejoicing—eating, drinking, and the constant discharge of firearms forming the stimulating features of the festivities, before the bride settles down to united domesticity and single harness. Should the maiden, however, prove coy, the suitor, aided by some of his friends, proceeds to 'lift' the fair object of his affections from her father's hearth by the same sudden coup de main as in bygone days he was accustomed to steal cattle on the Turkish border. This done, he first obtains the blessing of a priest and settles the matter with the parents at his leisure. The Montenegrin who is thus married is doubly blessed in taking to his bosom an humble, docile, and loyal consort, and a sturdy, sound, and tractable pack-animal, who will trudge uncomplainingly by the side of her lord and master over the rugged mountain tracks, her back bending under a load such as men in other countries seldom carry. With matrimony the domestic labours of the man are at an end; henceforth he will permit himself to shoulder nothing but his gun; for the woman becomes at once the hewer of wood and the drawer of water, the ox and the ass, the housewife and the husbandman, the hourly drudge and the daily bread-winner—the husband's market-pack in the days of peace, and his baggage-train in time of war.

"In Montenegro the male is, indeed, a very specially favoured and superior animal. Under his own roof he is literally 'lord of all he surveys,' for his 'will there is none to dispute.' He comes and goes as the humour suits him; and each time that he crosses his threshold he is met, not with questioning words or angry looks, but with meek, submissive, downcast eyes, and the deferential welcome of a wife who carries her husband's hand to her lips and places it on her forehead in token of mute submission to his slightest will or bidding. In Turkey, as in Montenegro, man is equally 'a despot and woman a slave,' but the difference in the two countries is, that in one she is an object of caprice, and part of the establishment, as a horse is a member of its master's stud; in the other she is the working beast of burden, and his substitute in all laborious tasks.' Thirty-six years have passed since Sir Gardner Wilkinson visited the Black Mountain and wrote these words, and still they remain accurately descriptive of the position of the women, whose social status appears to have remained the same in the midst of many salutary changes. Now, as then, the custom prevails with a Montenegrin Benedict of avoiding all mention of his wife before a stranger. But if he is forced to speak of her he still prefaces his words with the apologetic 'Da prostite, moja zena,' meaning 'begging your pardon, my wife,' 'Excuse my rudeness, my spouse,' or words to that effect; and appears anxiously solicitous that he has given no offence by introducing such an objectionable topic, just as it was when Sir Gardner first described this singular matrimonial peculiarity more than a third of a century ago. To judge from our English standpoint, therefore, a Montenegrin woman's 'rights' are only wrongs. But custom, which is said to reconcile even the eels to skinning, appears to have deadened the feelings of the gentle sex to such a merciful degree that they seem no longer sensitive to the injury they suffer in being stripped of those honours and attentions which in less primitive countries are either freely accorded or peremptorily exacted."

The proposal of the water committee of the Liverpool Corporation to give £1500 to the town clerk for his services in connection with the Water Bill has, in consequence of the great opposition to it, been withdrawn.

A mutiny broke out on Monday night at the reformatory, Stanwix, Carlisle, where forty-three boys are confined. Mr. Crowther, the governor, has two assistants, one of whom left for the night at seven o'clock. On going into the dormitory the governor found the gas turned out, and on asking the reason he was struck on the head with a stick. Other blows followed, and he fell insensible. All the boys rushed out and escaped, but some returned voluntarily to the reformatory. Others were arrested in Carlisle. The police are searching for the remainder—about half of the whole.

A YOUNG LADIES' COOKERY SCHOOL.

The social dignity and artistic elegance, as well as the intellectual and scientific character, of this feminine occupation, which has always been esteemed for its practical utility, will henceforth become more generally acknowledged. In some of the great cities of the United States, and most conspicuously at Boston, it is now quite the fashion among clever and enterprising young ladies to take lessons in the culinary art, which is there brought to a high degree of refinement. Some of the wealthiest families, it is said, have sent their girls to private classes instructed by a very competent lady in Tremont-street, who also teaches, for a less fee, the wives and daughters of the working classes. Her programme of study and practice, in each case, is adapted to the probable wants and means of the households to which her pupils are likely to belong. They all receive, as a matter of course, some elementary instruction; they learn how to cook meat and vegetables, to make tea and coffee, and even to make bread. Afterwards, those who desire to know and practice the more elaborate processes of cookery have ample facilities of gaining the requisite knowledge. The highest class, at the establishment of which an Illustration appears on our front page, assembles one morning in the week, and undertakes to prepare a dinner for twice its own number of persons at a certain hour in the evening. Each lady who is a member of the class, amongst whom are several married ladies, has the privilege of inviting a gentleman to this dinner; but it further appears, from our Illustration, that some gentlemen have the curiosity now and then to come rather early, and find their way into the kitchen. We have never been told that any of them was treated as an intruder, or got a dish-cloth slily pinned to his coat-tail, which is said to have sometimes happened in the lower domestic region of an English private household. Six ladies and six masculine guests, with the mistress of the cookery school, a well educated and well-bred person at the head of the table, sit down at six o'clock to a very perfect little dinner. We may as well quote the menu devised by the superintending Lady Principal at Boston, who seems to know her business to a nicety: "Six small oysters on a block of ice hollowed out at the top (they look better on ice than in the half-shell). A clear consommé soup. Baked whitefish, with sauce Hollandaise. Oysters, or chicken pâtés. Filet de bœuf aux champignons. Cheese soufflets, with salad. Roast chicken (which should have been covered with butter and flour before roasting). Sweetbreads. Game—Salad of French lettuce. Sherbet. Frozen pudding. Crackers and cheese." We doubt not that many intelligent people would be satisfied with this dinner.

THE ALEXANDRA PALACE GOAT SHOW.

The exhibition of about one hundred fine specimens of British and foreign goats, opened last week at the Alexandra Palace, has attracted some notice. It was arranged by the general manager of that place of public entertainment, with the assistance of Mr. F. W. Wilson, who has had the direction of various shows of animals, at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere. The British Goat Society, of which Lady Burdett-Coutts is patroness, and Mr. H. Stephen Holmes Pegler is hon. secretary, gave its countenance and co-operation. Our Illustrations represent four subjects in this exhibition, two of them being she-goats with kids. Among the leading contributors to the show were Lady Burdett-Coutts, Lady Emily Pigott, Miss Jacomb, Mr. Chapman, Mr. Clarence Bartlett, Mr. W. Bertram, and Mr. Crookenden. The first prize, for a goat of the English hornless breed, close-haired, black-and-tan-coloured, was taken by Mr. Chapman. The first prize for kids was awarded to Mr. W. Freeman, of Wandsworth. The honorary secretary, Mr. Pegler, sent a few animals, not to compete for prizes, which were especially worthy of remark. One of these was an Angora or Mohair goat, which has been brought from the Cape of Good Hope, having been imported thither from Asia Minor. This animal, which carries a long, spiral wool-like coat of white hair, as thick as the fleece of a Lincoln sheep, was not in the best possible condition, but is, nevertheless, very interesting as a representative of those flocks which are now in high esteem among South African colonists, who give such prices as £400 and £450 a piece for males, and from £70 to £90 for females. Mr. Clarence Bartlett, of the Zoological Gardens, exhibited Dutch, Persian, and other varieties, which were highly interesting, and are likely to be useful if bred in this country. On Saturday evening there was a dinner of kids' flesh, under the auspices of the British Goat Society, in one of the dining-halls of the Alexandra Palace.

THE WHITWORTH SCHOLARSHIPS.

The Science and Art Department of the Committee of Council on Education, South Kensington, have issued the following list of candidates successful in the competition for the Whitworth scholarships, 1880:—Arthur L. Jones, aged twenty, engineer's apprentice, Carnarvon, value of scholarship awarded, £150; Benjamin Angwin, aged twenty-one, engine-fitter, St. Just, £150; Frederick R. G. Cockey, aged twenty, engineer student, Frome, £100; Christopher J. Whittaker, aged twenty, pattern maker, Accrington, £100; William J. Tilbrook, aged twenty-one, mechanical engineer, London, £100; J. W. M'Kenzie, aged twenty-one, engineering student, Dublin, £100; William H. Potter, aged nineteen, engineer's apprentice, Nottingham, £100; Albert Frankish, aged nineteen, engineer, Manchester, £100; Charles Simons, aged nineteen, engineer, Dublin, £100.

In the examination for Whitworth scholarships prizes, 1880, the following were the results as regards the scholars appointed in 1877:—William I. Last obtained the first prize, £100, with 3704 marks; Fred Ogden, the second, £60, with 3000 marks; David A. Low, third, £50, with 2472 marks; William S. M'Kenzie, fourth, £40, with 1986 marks; Alfred D. Ottewell, fifth, £30, with 1599 marks. As to scholars appointed in 1878 the results were:—William Groves, first prize, £100; Joseph E. Needham, second, £60; William H. Tozer, third, £50; Zachary H. Kingdom, fourth, £40; Thomas Mather, fifth, £30; Thomas Duckworth, sixth, £20. In the final competition of scholars appointed in 1877, the first prize of £200 was awarded to W. I. Last, and the second of £100 to Fred Ogden.

The fisheries exhibition to be held at Norwich under the auspices of the Norfolk and Suffolk Fish Acclimatization Society has been postponed until Easter, 1881. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Dukes of Norfolk, Richmond, Grafton, St. Albans, Roxburgh, Northumberland, and Sutherland, have given their patronage to the exhibtion.

George Brown, thirty-five, having neither home nor occupation, was on Monday charged at the Marylebone Police Court with being a person of unsound mind, not under proper control. The prisoner, in a high state of excitement, demanded a warrant against the Prince of Wales, who, he said, had shot his (the prisoner's) sister on Sunday in Tottenham-court-road. He was remanded to the workhouse.

PARISIAN SAYINGS AND DOINGS.

Paris, Tuesday, Sept. 21.

The Ministerial crisis, which was imminent at the time I last wrote, broke out in full force on Saturday morning, when three Ministers and two Under-Secretaries resigned. The crisis is not yet at an end at the moment I am writing. M. Grévy returned to Paris on Wednesday night, and on Thursday and Friday Cabinet Councils were held. The subject of discussion was the application of the religious decrees of March 29, on which the members of the Cabinet were divided. M. de Freycinet wished to wait until the Supreme Tribunal des Conflicts had given judgment in the appeals lodged against the laws of the Jesuits. M. Constans and several other Ministers wished the decrees to be applied vigorously and immediately. However, the Council agreed to wait, and, at the same time, to send a circular to the Archbishops and Bishops informing them that the declaration signed recently by the congregations was not sufficient, and summoning them once more to fulfil the formalities prescribed by the decrees of March 29. The crisis was then announced to be at an end.

It appears, however, that there was some misunderstanding about the date or the terms of the circular, for on the evening of Friday M. Constans had a private interview with M. Gambetta, and on Saturday morning handed his resignation to M. de Freycinet, in which step he was followed by MM. Cazot, Turquet, Martin-Feuillée, and Geneve Farre. M. Grévy, however, made an appeal to the patriotism of the resigning Ministers, who withdrew their resignations, and peace once more reigned in the Cabinet.

On Sunday morning the Cabinet was again at variance about the application of the religious decrees. M. de Freycinet then sent in his resignation to M. Grévy, and the rest of the members of the Cabinet resigned collectively, in order to leave the President entire liberty. M. Grévy then requested M. Jules Ferry to form a new Ministry.

What is the meaning of the fall of M. de Freycinet, a fall which all parties admit to be honourable? Sharp-sighted people here consider it to be another instance of the occult despotism of Gambetta. For some time past all the Cabinets of France have been mere patchwork. To replace the Dufaure Cabinet M. Waddington was taken out of the Dufaure Cabinet. To replace M. Waddington, M. de Freycinet was taken out of the Waddington Cabinet; and now, to replace M. de Freycinet, M. Jules Ferry has been chosen out of the Freycinet Cabinet. Nobody supposes that a Ferry Cabinet will live long. Does it not seem strange to talk of a Parliamentary régime, when the man who makes and unmakes Ministers, the man who has been the real President of the last three Cabinets at least, M. Gambetta, is allowed to enjoy his occult power, and not summoned to quit the mask and either accept or refuse office?

The crisis will probably end in a speedy convocation of the Chambers.

It is worth noticing, as a sign of the times, that the physiognomy of Paris has been in no way modified by the Ministerial crisis. Although the Parliamentary régime is hardly perfect, the nation seems to have perfect confidence in its working. At any rate, at has no longer to fear the reactionary parties, as it had three years ago. During the past three days you would have looked in vain for those anxious and gesticulating groups that used to form on the Boulevards in the old days in times of Ministerial crises.

Everybody who knows the Boulevards must have seen Aurélien Scholl, one of the most witty and brilliant Parisian journalists, on whom the mantleof Chamfort may not unjustly be said to have fallen. On Thursday last he was breakfasting with three friends at Bignon's, and, as he rose from the table, a man came up to him and, after asking him if he was really M. Scholl, began to punch his face, and finally flung a brandy-bottle at him. The bottle struck Scholl in the breast. His wounds are so serious that the doctors do not yet venture to pronounce any opinion. It is feared that he will lose the sight of his right eye. The author of this dastardly attack, which appears to have been premeditated, was the Comte de Dion. Judicial proceedings have been begun against him. The cause of the attack is unknown. Several rumours have been afloat, but all have been contradicted. Such a brutal attack is all the more curious, as Scholl has already fought fourteen duels, and if the Comte de Dion had wished for ordinary reparation he knew where to find his adversary.

It is reported that the Government has authorised Marcereu, the commander of the Prison des Chantiers during the Commune, to prosecute the journals which have been attacking him of late. It will be remembered that the campaign was begun in Rochefort's journal, L'Intransigeant, which day after day during some two months accumulated testimony of the most odious violences and arbitrariness against Marcereu.

The memory of Monsieur Thiers was honoured in a curious manner at Saint-Germain last Sunday. Great preparations had been made for the ceremony of unveiling a statue to the "liberator of the territory," as he used admiringly to be called. There was, it is true, rather a dearth of speakers. The only remarkable discourse was that of the Jesuitical Jules Simon, who made an eloquent and ingenious panegyric of the Conservative Republic, and eulogised in the highest terms Monsieur Thiers's severe repression of the Commune. M. Jules Simon had hardly finished his peroration when M. Olivier Pain delivered a brief speech, which was not inscribed on the programme of the fête. M. Olivier Pain escaped with Rochefort from New Caledonia, and is now a writer in L'Intransigeant. M. Pain said, amidst the general stupefaction: "In the name of the thirty-five thousand patriots who were shot in May, 1871; in the name of the women and children who were massacred, I, a republican and a patriot, protest against the apology for the massacre and against the erection of a statue to the author of the massacres." M. Pain was arrested, but set at liberty again after having been kept an hour at the police station. The reader will find an explanation of the reasons of M. Pain's protestation in M. Camille Pelletan's book La Semaine de Mai, pp. 1 to 23.

The first number of Félix's Pyat's new journal La Commune appeared this morning. It is a four-page journal of the ordinary size. The first page is taken up with a declaration of principles. First of all is reproduced the declaration of the proscripts of December protesting against the amnesty which the Emperor offered them. They denied the Emperor's right to pardon them as they denied his right to punish, and the proscripts of December returned to France with the intention of bringing the Emperor to justice. The Communists of 1871 have returned in the same spirit. The proscripts of May have nothing more to say than what was said in the declaration of the proscripts of December, except that the Opportunist amnesty has been less frank, less prompt, and less dignified than the Imperial amnesty was. They owe gratitude to no one, and they return to take up the struggle where it was left off. La Commune is the organ of the Commune of 1792, of 1848, and of 1871. Its object is the establishment of the Commune, which is to spring out of the Republic by means of the vote.

THE PLAYHOUSES.

This has been a very momentous week at the theatres; and the autumnal dramatic season (all honour to Mr. Hollingshead and Mr. Toole for so bravely keeping the Gaiety and the Folly open during the most dismal period of the recess), and two remarkable dramatic events have occurred since I last touched on "The Playhouses." On Saturday evening last the third season of Mr. Henry Irving's management commenced with the eagerly-expected revival of the "legendary drama" of "The Corsican Brothers," founded on the French dramatic version of Alexandre Dumas the Elder's romance of "Les Frères Corses," and adapted to the English stage by Mr. Dion Boucicault. The revival achieved an immense success; and Mr. Irving has added another to his list of dramatic triumphs. I had not witnessed a performance of the "Corsican Brothers" for eight-and-twenty years. I seems to me to possess a wonderfully ingenious scenario, or scheme of action and incident; and it is a very telling spectacle. Otherwise, so far as the characters and the dialogue go, I cannot help thinking "The Corsican Brothers" to be a very poor play. Some of the dramatic critics (who possibly were not born or were in petticoats when Mr. Boucicault's drama was originally produced at the Princess's) seem to think the drama a very worthless one, all round.

No need for me to follow the plot. It is as well known as that of "The Green Bushes" or "Black-Eyed Susan," and much better known than that of "George Barnwell." I missed little or anything from the old Princess's text, except the woodcutter's song in the Forest of Fontainebleau scene of the Third Act. The words of the ditty were not very choice. They ran, if I remember aright, somewhat thus:—

Oh! oh! oh! oh!
My heart is low;
I've asked Jeannette, and she has said me no.
Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!
Oh, oh, oh, oh, oh, oh!

And so on, crescendo.

The genius and artistic skill of Mr. Henry Irving enabled him to do more with the gloomy parts of Fabien and Louis dei Franchi than perhaps any living actor on our stage could do. The twin brothers of Corsica are, from a legendary point of view, intensely interesting, but as agreeable companions in polite society they would have been found, I fear, lamentably dull. At the masquerade at the Opera House Louis dei Franchi has to enact the part of a skeleton at a banquet; and in the glade of the Forest of Fontainebleau the attributes of Louis are simply those of Nemesis. Did he cheer up, I wonder, after he had slain Château Renaud; and did he marry Emilie de Lesparre? Stranger things have happened. The real flesh-and-blood heroine of Washington Irving's "Broken Heart," and of the exquisitely pathetic poem, "She is Far from the Land where her Young Hero Sleeps," got married in the end. The settled gloom which shrouds both the Corsican brothers, even before anything fatal has happened to them, was, in the case of Louis dei Franchi, dexterously dispelled by Mr. Irving, who threw all the geniality and the humorous abandon of his nature (and the great masters of pathos are rarely lacking in the quality of humour) into the supper scene, and that of the termination of the long-standing vendetta between the Orlandi and the Colonna in the first act. The episode in question is a very absurd one, and is as wholly extraneous to the action of the piece as is the "Dance of Itinerant Fools" in the spectacular rendering of "Henry the Fifth," or the pantomimic and choregraphic entr'actes to Molière's comedies; but it seems to lighten that which is practically the prologue to the drama, and which, without some life and bustle, would be intolerably wearisome. The attitude of Mr. Irving at the supper table was full of frank and easy gaiety. He can be a boy if he likes, and the humorous persuasion and coercion which he used on the reluctant Orlando and Colonna, cajoling one and absolutely forcing the other to shake hands and sign the contract of reconciliation, were those of a frank-hearted, high-spirited boy, who looked on the bringing together of these ancestral foes as a "good lark." Mr. Irving played throughout this scene in the spirit of the truest comedy. As Louis dei Franchi at the masquerade it was impossible for him to be anything but what the dramatist had made him—a trouble-feast and a spoil-sport, or what the French term un mauvais coucheur.

In the duel-scene in the forest he was superb. Do you remember in Flaxman's illustrations of the "Iliad" the terrific drawing of the giants Otus and Ephialtes holding Mars captive? They have got the god prostrate and in chains at their feet. They hold the shackles that bind him; but the expression of their countenances does not betoken any personal resentment towards their subjugated enemy. Otus and Ephialtes are gazing with impassibly implacable faces, awful to look upon, into the Immensities—into Space. They are but the ministers of Fate. So does Mr. Irving demean himself and look in the duel scene. He means to kill Château Renaud. He is going to have his heart's blood there and then. He tells him so in plain terms. But he seems to entertain no personal animosity to the man whom he is about to slay. He is looking far away—into Space. He is communing with the spirit of his dead brother, who is presently to appear to him. The cunning of fence exhibited by Mr. Irving in perhaps the most realistic duel that has ever been represented on the stage was marvellous. He had to be judged by many who had witnessed in this same drama Charles Kean, Fechter, Alfred Wigan, and Walter Lacy, all admirable swordsmen. It was quite in accordance with the foregone conclusion that he was to kill Château Renaud that, in the first stage of the encounter, he should act strictly on the defensive. He stood precisely as the Spanish matador stands in the arena—his rapier in his right hand, his muleta or lure in the left. The matador must not attack the bull. The wretched animal must advance on his opponent. Everyone knows that the bull is foredoomed to death, and that at the proper moment a turn of the wrist and one deadly lunge from the espada will transfix his vitals. That was the way which Mr. Irving took with Château Renaud at the Lyceum.

Mr. W. Terriss did everything that could possibly be done with the difficult and unlovely part of Château Renaud. Mr. Terriss's physique is not in keeping with the part assigned to him, which would have suited Mr. John Clayton, and especially Mr. Bancroft. But, although Mr. Terriss could not look like a viveur of Frascati's and the Jockey Club; like a lion of the Bois de Boulogne and the foyer de la danse at the Grand Opéra, he acted throughout most carefully and intelligently, and his presentment of the pangs of remorse in the forest just before the arrival of the Avenger of Blood was a really fine piece of acting. Mr. Terriss should change the fashion of his beard and moustache. The fashion which he has adopted is not that patronised by French gentlemen in the year 1840. Unfortunately, it was patronised by nearly every omnibus-conductor in Paris.

Mr. Pinero was very quiet and gentleman-like as M. Alfred Meynard, and Mr. Elwood earnestly sympathetic as Montgiron. Mr. Mead was a most melodramatically furious Orlando, and Mr. Johnson a duly farcical Colonna. Miss Pauncefort was amiably dignified as Madame Savilia dei Franchi; and Miss Fowler must be complimented on the abnegation of self which she displayed in sustaining the absolutely paltry part of Emilie de Lesparre, into which she infused, nevertheless, much grace and pathos.

The "mounting" of "The Corsican Brothers" was magnificent. Scenery, dresses, decorations, ballet, and accessories were all sumptuous; but I reserve what I have to say about the mise-en-scène for a second notice next week, when a very delicate little original comedy in one act, called "Bygones," which was acted for the first time, with marked success, will also call for notice. The author of "Bygones" is Mr. A. W. Pinero.

The second memorable event of the week was the assumption at Sadler's Wells on Monday night of the tremendously difficult part of Othello by Mr. Charles Warner, who only a few nights ago was playing in "It Is Never Too Late To Mend," and only a few weeks ago was playing Coupeau in "Drink." Sadler's Wells was crowded to witness Mr. Warner's interpretation of the Moor of Venice; and it augurs well for the success of Mrs. Bateman's spirited management in her adherence to the Shakspearean drama that the pit and gallery seemed to know "Othello" by heart, and never missed to "take up" the "points" in the play. Mr. Warner is heartily to be congratulated on his courage in selecting the part of Othello for impersonation. His physique is splendid. His voice is very sonorous, and at times very musical. He does not rant more than a man maddened by jealousy would rant. His passion and his pathos are equally artistic and effective; but he is not yet a Shakspearean actor. His elocution is not quite up to the high standard of excellence which we expect in an interpreter of Othello. To Mr. Charles Warner's great good fortune, he is a young man. I am sure that he is a very gifted man, and a very observant and industrious man to boot. With continued study—study of the most sedulous kind—he can scarcely fail to make, ere long, vast improvement as a tragedian; and if the Fates are propitious there may be a very bright future before him in the highest departments of his art. At present his rendering of the noble Moor is somewhat crude. The Iago of Mr. Hermann Vezin was a most finished and polished performance—superlatively self-possessed, self-contained, and sardonic. Never did a more affable fiend, a more well-bred "demi-demon" bring ruin and confusion into a respectable private family in Cyprus. Mr. E. H. Brooke's Cassio was very spirited; and Mr. Walter J. Brooks bore himself very efficiently as the unfortunate dupe Roderigo. Finally, Miss Isabel Bateman was a charmingly submissive and affectionate Desdemona. She looked very graceful and pretty, and her dress (for these days of sumptuary prodigality) was exemplarily quiet and refined.

MUSIC.

COVENT GARDEN PROMENADE CONCERTS.

These concerts are to close this (Saturday) evening, when a specially attractive programme is offered for the benefit of Messrs. Gatti, the directors. Since our last notice, a "Humorous" night has been given, the principal features in which were Mozart's "Musikalischer Spass" (a "Musical Joke"), Romberg's "Toy Symphony," and the final "Presto" and supplemental "Adagio" from Haydn's "Farewell" symphony. The first-named work was composed (in 1787) in ridicule of much of the inane music of the period, and as a caricature of clumsy performers. The absurd effect of wrong notes, false entries of the instruments, and other errors, such as inefficient amateurs would make, was duly recognised by the audience; a special feature having been the burlesque cadenza for the first violin, played by Mr. A. Burnett with due appreciation of its humour. The Toy Symphony is more fitted for drawing-room than for public performance, the puerility of the childish instruments (imitation cuckoo, quail, nightingale, and woodpecker; rattles, triangles, bells, diminutive drums, and penny trumpets) becoming wearisome when heard throughout a series of symphonic movements. Far more effective were the concluding portions of Haydn's symphony, the closing "Adagio" of which includes the gradual departure of the players, each of whom, in turn, extinguishes his candle, takes up his instrument, and leaves the orchestra, until only two violins are heard; these following the example of the others. The purpose with which the symphony was written is said to have been the desire of Haydn to give a hint to his patron, Prince Esterhazy, of the wish of his musicians to obtain their holiday leave to revisit their homes. The practical carrying out of this piece of musical humour was thoroughly appreciated by the Covent Garden audience. Other less important orchestral features on the occasion referred to were Glinka's fantasia ("Kamarinskaja") on National Russian airs, Weber's Chinese overture entitled "Turandot," a "Meditation" (Scherz), in which the styles of past and present composers are parodied; and a so-called "Wedding March of Punch and Judy," a most offensive burlesque of the fine Wedding March which forms a part of Mendelssohn's noble music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream." The first part of the concert included Mr. Charles Hallé's admirable performance of Weber's pianoforte solo, the "Invitation to the Waltz"—and vocal solos of no special importance, rendered by Miss Mary Davies, Madame Antoinette Sterling, and Mr. Vernon Rigby. The second portion of the programme was of the usual miscellaneous character.

On Saturday, the eminent Russian pianist, Madame Essipoff, made her first appearance this season, and played Mendelssohn's first concerto (in G minor) with brilliant execution, besides contributing two unaccompanied solos to the second part of the concert. Mr. Viotti Collins gained great applause by his skilful execution of a difficult violin solo of Paganini's, written for the fourth string only. The vocalists were Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. A. Oswald. The humorous programme was repeated on Tuesday and Thursday. Wednesday was the last classical night, and yesterday (Friday) the last English choral and ballad concert.

After the interval of a week, a new series of Promenade Concerts is to begin at Covent-Garden Theatre, under the direction of Mr. Hayes, with Mr. Weist Hill as conductor.

London music will soon regain its wonted activity. The Crystal Palace Saturday afternoon concerts will begin a new series (the twenty-fifth) on Oct. 9; on Monday, Oct. 18, Her Majesty's Theatre will open for a season of operatic performances, in Italian, at cheap prices; on Nov. 8, the Monday Popular Concerts will open their twenty-third season; and during the winter the Sacred Harmonic Society will resume its concerts, removed to St. James's Hall.

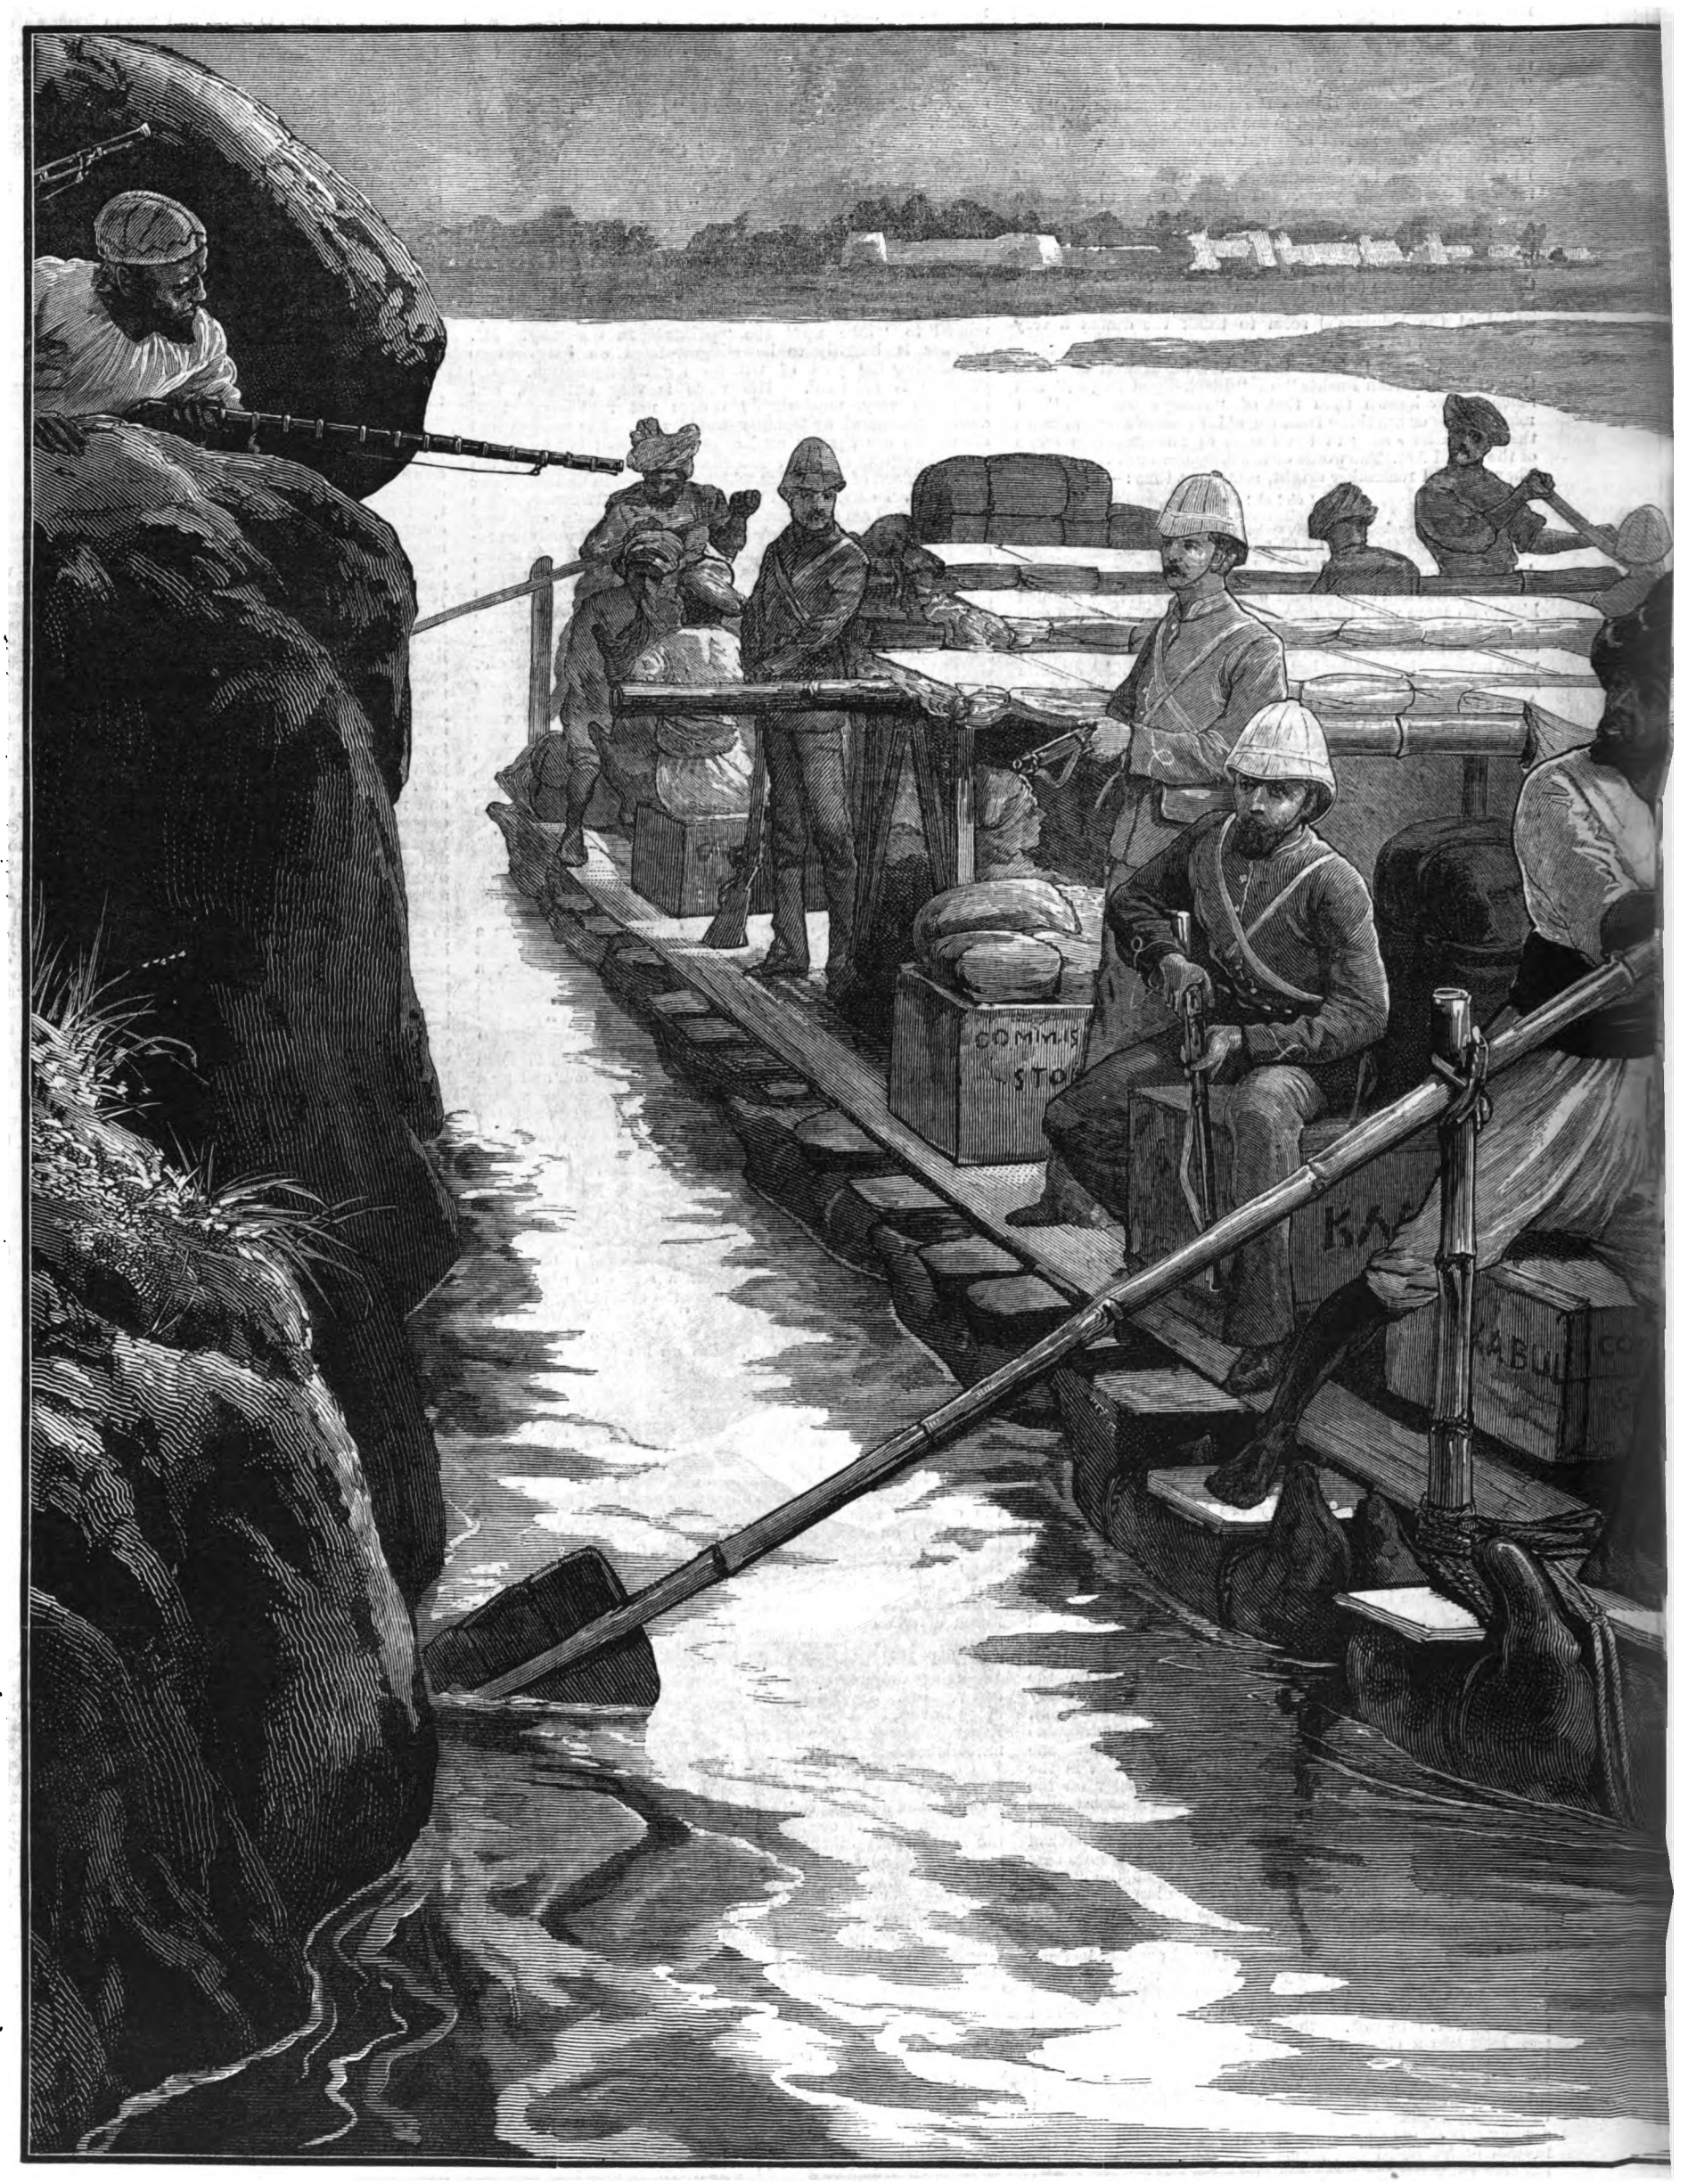
Madame Marie Roze has sailed for New York to fulfil an operatic engagement with Mr. Strakosch in America. The term of contract is for six months, during which period the principal cities will be visited. Madame Roze is to be supported by a powerful company, and sing in English the following operas:—"Faust," "Mignon," "Aïda," "Huguenots," "Mefistofele," and "Lohengrin."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

No satisfactory explanation of Bend Or's melancholy exhibition in the St. Leger has yet been forthcoming. He was undoubtedly struck into by Zealot, and received two or three slight cuts, but, at the time that this occurred, he had been passed by Robert the Devil, and was in hopeless difficulties; while the fact that he is now in work again conclusively proves that the accident was not a very serious one. We fancy that want of condition was the main cause of his failing to gain a place. He has always been a difficult horse to train, and, in place of giving him a thorough preparation, Peck was compelled to let him potter about behind Blue Danube. Then the terribly heavy state of the course was all against a half-trained horse, and, above all, we are more than ever convinced that as we mentioned at the time—"Robert" is the better of the pair, and, with Cannon on his back, would have won the Derby by a good length. Still, Bend Or will yet prove that he ought to have been second at Doncaster, and will have his revenge on Cipolata and Abbot if he ever meets them again. Zealot performed more in his Goodwood than his Ascot form; but Beauminet cut a very respectable figure, and, on Sunday last, took a good race in France, over a distance of nearly two miles. It is understood that Messrs. Brewer and Blanton won about £25,000 in the race, and their success was thoroughly popular.

The weather improved a little on the Thursday, but still there were several heavy showers, and the programme was not attractive enough to compensate people for getting wet through. Of course the chief event of the afternoon was the Portland Plate, for which Peter (9 st. 7 lb.) was backed down to 3 to 1, in spite of his welter weight, and in the face of fourteen opponents. However, he began far more slowly than usual, which was not surprising, considering that the course was a perfect swamp, and, though he made up an immense deal of ground from the distance, he could never quite on terms with Discount (6 st. 12 lb.), who won by a neck. The Rous Plate proved a good thing for a daughter of Doncaster and Czarina, a filly in Lord Rosebery's stable, and the unlucky Mazurka was once more second. Another field of fifteen ran for the Alexandra Plate, in which little Witchery (7 st. 1 lb.) slipped her horses at the start, and came in alone. On the Friday, which was the only fine day of the four, the Tattersall Sale Stakes, for yearlings sold at Doncaster in 1879, proved a very happy idea, and produced a good class field of ten. Simnel was made favourite, and ran well, as he always does, but 9 st. 7 lb. proved a little too much for him, and Fortissimo won easily at last. Teviotdale, who had been withdrawn from the Leger and reserved specially for the Doncaster Stakes, was only opposed by Apollo; but, though the latter had cut such a poor figure in the big race, he was good enough to beat the north-country horse, who is very unsound. Jenny Howlet once more ran wretchedly in the Park Hill Stakes, but Evasion showed a glimpse of her best two-year-old form, and stuck so gamely to Experiment that Osborne had to do all he knew to win by a neck. The Doncaster Cup was virtually a match between Dresden China and Edelweiss. Schoolboy, who was making running for the latter, set a rattling pace from the moment the flag fell, and at one time was nearly two hundred yards in front of the other three. Bonnie Marden was well beaten fully half a mile from home, at which point the others were together, and eventually the Goodwood Cup heroine won with great ease by a length, and has since been backed pretty heavily for the Cesarewitch. The Prince of Wales's Nursery Plate fell to the highly-tried Vallon (6 st. 6 lb.); and Earl Godwin, a son of Macaroni and Lady Coventry, wound up the meeting by securing the Wentworth Stakes for Lord Falmouth.

Upon the first day the sales of blood stock were fairly successful, and really high-class yearlings seem still able to command very long prices. Mr. Dunlop gave 1150 gs.—his full value—for an own brother to Lizzie Long, by Albert Victor—Letty Long, who was reared at the Croft Stud. Eleven of Lord Scarborough's sold fairly well—Gold Stick (730 gs.), by Silvester—Lady Alice Hawthorn, making the top price. Mr. Eyke, however, had by far the best sale of the day, his four young Brown Breads averaging no less than 1133 gs. An own brother to Hilarious and Reveller fetched 2000 gs., and Mr. Jardine, who bought him, had to bid up to 800 gs. for a colt by Brown Bread—Voyageuse; while an own sister to Picnic (700 gs.), by the same sire from Alice Lee, also sold well. The Moorlands Stud did not do so well as usual with the young Speculums; but Tempest, a colt by Thunder—True Blue, made 600 gs., a large sum for the offspring of an untried sire. Mr. Crowther Harrison did well with his half dozen, thanks chiefly to Lucifer (1000 gs.), a beautiful colt by Rosicrucian—Bathilde, and Lady Greensleeves (500 gs.), by Doncaster—Evergreen. Mr. Cookson's dozen were perhaps not quite up to his usual standard, still an average of 370 gs. must be considered very remunerative; Foreteller (1300 gs.), by Hermit—Preface, and Pursebearer (1000 gs.), by Scottish Chief—Thrift, were the cracks of the team; and the former, who is half-brother to Forerunner, is especially promising. The Yardley Stud eleven averaged a shade under 300 gs., nearly all the Sterlings selling well; and we hope that Tom Cannon may have bought a second Isonomy in Transition, by Sterling—Traviata, for whom he gave 1150 gs. The feature of the Friday was the sale of Mr. I'Anson's eleven, which, in spite of the young Salvators failing to hit the public fancy, made the splendid average of 450 gs. An own brother to the luckless Beauclerc went to Mr. Perkins for 1700 gs., and two or three of the others also made capital prices. Some of the late Mr. Launde's brood mares were also disposed of, and Mr. Vyner gave 3200 gs. for Apology.



Thanks to the Australians, the cricket season of 1880 has been unusually protracted. Last week they played the Gentlemen of Scotland, whom they defeated by six wickets. Owing to the heavy state of the ground, low scores were the order of the day, Jarvis (31 and 41) and Alexander (17) doing most for the winners, while Palmer and Boyle proved most effective with the ball. On the other side, A. G. Steel (60), C. Davidson (11), A. L. Wood (35), J. A. Allan (35), and the Hon. Ivo Bligh (30) did nearly all the run-getting.

On Saturday evening Miss Beckwith successfully accomplished her marvellous swim of one hundred hours in six days, at the Royal Aquarium, Westminster. The attendance throughout the week was very large, and the exhibitions of fancy swimming given by Miss Beckwith, her father, and brother, proved very attractive.

J. Roberts, jun., and W. Mitchell will play their great billiard-match for £200 a side, at St. James's Hall, on Monday evening, beginning at six o'clock. The game is 2000 up, and Mitchell is to receive a start of 400 points. Roberts is said to have shown some extraordinary play in a game at Brighton on Saturday last; but as the accounts of the affair appear rather vague and mysterious, we do not give the breaks that he is alleged to have made.

Mr. Horace Davey, Q.C., M.P., has presented a clock and bells for erection on the new pier at Bournemouth

The Extra Supplement.

BECALMED IN YACHTING.

It is an idle ship's company, steered perhaps by "the summer pilot of an empty heart unto the shore of Nothing," as Tennyson says, that we see here assembled on deck; but how can they sail without any wind? Inlandish readers of Mr. William Black's romances of the Hebridean sea, "White Wings," the latest and not the least inviting, may ponder this question as they look at Mr. Overend's drawing, which we have this week engraved and published. There is really not the slightest token of any nautical business going on; and these people afloat, who seem to be a happy family party, might just as well be ashore, playing lawn tennis, for instance, which is scarcely to be done on board the vessel. A pastime more convenient for the situation has been found in pistol-shooting, the mark being a wine-bottle suspended by a rope stretched athwart the stern of the yacht; and we see that one of the young ladies, instructed by a brother or cousin, is just now taking an uncertain aim with the pretty little revolver, which she feels it needful to hold with both hands. She is more likely to send a bullet into the reeving-block of the main boom tackle, or to cut one of its ropes, than to hit the bottle with her next shot. Another lady, of quieter disposition, and some twenty years older, sits in a very comfortable wicker chair, listening to some magazine article which a young man is reading aloud to her. The little boy is fishing with a line overboard; the little girls are foundling a big Newfoundland dog. The disengaged young lady is only looking on; and the parrot, which has perched itself on the boom, is just enjoying the sunny day, as we doubt not they will all enjoy it, though disappointed of an expected run that morning in their yachting cruise off the beautiful coast of a mountainous and wooded island.

FINE ARTS.

A large selection of the great Grace collection of topographical, and other illustrations of London has been arranged on screens for public view in the King's Library, British Museum, by Mr. Reid, Keeper of the Department of Prints and Drawings. The whole collection was, it will be remembered, exhibited at South Kensington last year, and purchased on very advantageous terms by the Museum authorities. We noticed the collection at the time of its exhibition, but for various reasons it did not attract one tithe of the public attention which its inexhaustible interest deserves.

The second annual free exhibition of pictures, drawings, sculptures, &c., in connection with the South London Working-Men's College, in Upper Kennington-lane, which has recently closed, was visited by over 3000 persons. The expenses of the exhibition have reached £50, but the receipts have not been more than £2.

General Sir J. Lintorn Simmons, G.C.B., has presented to the Military Academy at Woolwich a bust, by Mr. Belt, of the late Prince Imperial. It has been placed in the library.

The American Art-Review for August is enriched with several artistic etchings and numerous well-executed and beautifully-printed wood engravings. The papers on the American etchers, and Mr. Linton's history of wood engraving in America, are continued, and are copiously illustrated. The "Review," as an exponent of Transatlantic art, is creditable to all concerned.

The second exhibition of the lately formed Yorkshire Society of Artists (the first exhibition having been held in the spring of this year) was opened last week in the new galleries at Leeds. The display, which comprises nearly 1000 items, consists entirely of contributions of the artists, and, excluding the loan pictures of the former gathering, the present collection fully equals—and, indeed, in some respects surpasses—its predecessor. The amount of the sales on the two opening days much exceeded that realised during the first month of the former exhibition. The oil-pictures were hung under the superintendance of Mr. T. J. Gullick, of London.

The local artists at Liverpool are complaining that their works are excluded from the exhibitions of the Corporation, to make room for those of strangers. In 1879 there were 210 works by local artists, but only eighty this year, as against 1000 by strangers. There can, however, be little doubt that this is merely an illustration in art of the law of the "survival of the fittest." If the local artists think they can make out a case, they should hold an exhibition of their own works.

M. Fantin's fine picture "Dans l'Atelier," which was much admired at the Paris Salon, and won a gold medal at Munich, is now in the Manchester Autumn Exhibition, having been bought by a Manchester collector for £400. The picture was, it is said, rejected from the last exhibition of the Royal Academy.

Several of Gustave Doré's colossal paintings are on view in the spacious Central Exchange Art-Gallery, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

In consequence of objections raised by the New York committee, the unveiling of the Burns statue at Dundee, which was to have taken place on the 25th inst., has been postponed.

The Government of New South Wales have granted £1000 a year for the purposes of an art-gallery in Adelaide.

A report that the Archæological Society of Rome had become practically extinct since Mr. J. H. Parker's return to Oxford has been contradicted by that gentleman.

The exhibition of the works of Couture, now open at the Palais d'Industrie, is reported to be a surprise even to the Parisians. Many of Couture's pictures were sold for large prices to Americans; but the artist reserved several of his most important paintings, together with many drawings and sketches, for the decoration of his château at Villiers-le-Bel. No galleries sufficiently large for these works could be found till some of those of the Palais in the Champs Elysées were obtained. Here are now shown "Les Romains de la Décadence;" the enormous picture from the Luxembourg, "L'Engagement des Volontaires de '92," which measures nine mètres in length; "Le Baptême du Prince Impérial," only a trifle smaller; "L'Amour d'Or," from the Museum of Toulouse; "Le Trouvère," "Damocles," and other works from private collections; several satirical and humorous pieces, and a vast number of sketches and drawings, many of them exhibited by the artist's widow. "L'Engagement des Volontaires" is regarded as Couture's chef-d'œuvre, and is remarkable for a union of allegory and realism characteristic of the painter. A crowd of Frenchmen of all classes are responding to Rouget de l'Isle's stirring appeal to arms to resist the invader, while above the multitude flying onwards are figures of Liberty, Patriotism, and Victory. This splendid cartoon was designed for the decoration of one of the walls of the Salle des Etats, but was countermanded by the late Emperor, with other works he had commissioned of M. Couture.

A portrait of Soufflet, the architect of the Panthéon, by Vanloo, has been placed in the Louvre.

Amongst the civic lumber at the Mansion House has long been kept a monster painting by Sir Robert Kerr Porter, a representation of the battle of Agincourt, which was presented by him to the Corporation about the year 1819. This leviathan production contains upwards 1000 figures, and measures one hundred feet wide by thirty feet deep—larger than the "Paradiso" of Tintoretto, much larger than the "Last Judgment" of Michael Angelo, about three times the width of "The Marriage at Cana" by Paul Veronese, and five times the whole superficial dimensions of Mr. Prinsep's big picture in the last Academy exhibition. This Brobdignagian canvas has occasionally been utilised as a screen at the Mansion House; but, owing to its size, it has been found necessary to cut it into three sections, the central representing the battle, and the other two the English advance and the French retreat. This extraordinary performance has been hung, by order of the Lord Mayor, in the Guildhall during the last week; and a committee has been appointed to consider the advisability of mounting it in reduced sections, and also the desirability of cleaning and restoring it. We need hardly say that the only remarkable feature about it is its size; and we would suggest that the best thing to do with this, "the biggest picture in the world," as we suppose, is to present it to our American cousins, who have room for it and like big things. But, stay; we are not sure that this is the biggest picture in the world. Sir Robert himself, when he was only twenty-two, painted a panoramic representation of "The Storming of Seringapatam," which, if in existence, should be twenty feet longer, though it only contained 700 lifesize figures. This panorama, the "Agincourt," and a "Siege of Acre," of about the same size as the Guildhall picture, were painted for the Lyceum when Sir Robert was scene-painter there. Could these three pictures possibly be exhibited together, M. Gustave Doré would run much risk of being beaten out of the field. Sir Robert Kerr Porter's life was a romance. During his active and adventurous career he was by turns artist, soldier, author, and diplomatist. Invited to Russia by the Emperor, he was employed in the decoration of the Admiralty Hall, painted several large historical pictures, and fell in love with a Russian princess, whom he ultimately married. He went with General Moore through the hardships of the campaign ending with Corunna. From 1817 to 1820 he travelled in the East, and made many sketches in Persia, &c., which are now in the British Museum. He was knighted by the King of Sweden and the Shah, as well as by his own Sovereign. He was Consul at Venezuela for several years; finally, he died at St. Petersburg, and was buried in the foreign cemetery there. He was the author of several books of travels; and the once-popular novelists, Jane and Maria Porter, were his sisters.

TROOPS LEAVING AFGHANISTAN.

It may be some months yet before the British forces can be entirely withdrawn from Southern Afghanistan. The policy of our Government, with the present Liberal Ministry, can hardly be the permanent retention of Candahar; but it is still uncertain whether Abdurrahman, the new Ameer of Cabul, will soon be able to take charge of it. There is another condition of uncertainty in the fate of Ayoub Khan, and the chance of his regaining power at Herat, though rumours prevail of an insurrection against him in that city. General Sir F. Roberts is now occupied in restoring British authority in Pishin and other districts between Candahar and Quetta. We trust there will be no further occasion for active military operations, and that the Afghan War is ended, though some political difficulties remain to be solved.

The peaceable retirement, from Cabul to the Khyber Pass, of Sir Donald Stewart's division of the army, has now become a matter of past history. Northern Afghanistan was freely and voluntarily evacuated by our forces, at the same time when General Roberts marched southward to defeat Ayoub Khan and to relieve the besieged garrison at Candahar. We are now indebted to an obliging military correspondent, Major Charles J. Cramer Roberts, for a Sketch that shows the manner in which the sick and wounded soldiers, together with some Government stores, were conveyed on native rafts down the Cabul river, from Jellalabad to Dacca. The merit of adopting this contrivance, and of making successful arrangements for its execution, is chiefly due to Surgeon-Major Tippetts, who made great exertions to procure the safe and comfortable removal of the sick from Cabul to India. By using the native rafts on the river they were spared, at the hottest season of the year, some very severe marches, which would have been almost killing. The construction of these ratts is somewhat rude, but they answer very well, and are very quickly prepared. Given the dimensions of the raft wanted, it needs only that a number of inflated skins, with rough planking laid upon them, be lashed together, which can be done in a couple of hours. The amount of burden such a raft is capable of bearing would astonish any person not before accustomed to see it; and, from its pliable nature, it is better than one made of casks, which would not only draw more water, but would be more difficult to manage in the rapids. These often require careful and clever steering, to avoid the dangerous rocks in the deep and strong stream of the Cabul river. Another cause of anxiety during the voyage was the chance of being fired at, anywhere along the river, by the untriendly maraunding tribes on the opposite bank. A single bullet through one of the "mussocks," as the inflated ox hides are called, would have instantly deprived it of floating power. It was, therefore, with much satisfaction that the safe arrival of the raft at Dacca was hailed. Our Illustration gives a very correct notion of the raft drifting down the river, with a man at each of the four corners punting or paddling an oar to direct its course. Some others of the crew are engaged in blowing up skins which have become leaky and lost the air they contained. The officer and soldiers on guard are keeping a sharp look-out towards the shore, while the invalid passengers lie under cover of an awning. When such a raft arrives at Dacca, it is taken to pieces; the planks are sold to Government contractors; and the skins, after pressing out the air from them, are sent back to Jellalabad on mules or camels, to be used again for other rafts, till they become quite worn out.

A fox was chased through the main streets of Bishop's Stortford on Monday morning by Mr. Gosling's hounds. Reynard entered the town at the north end, and after an exciting chevy through a garden took to the streets, followed by the hounds in full cry, thence through the market square, and was shortly after captured in the Reindeer Inn yard.

Yesterday week the bells of the parish church of Boston were rung at intervals in commemoration of the 250th anniversary of the foundation of the city of Boston, Massachusetts. The latter Boston received its name in honour of the Rev. John Cotton, one of the "Pilgrim Fathers," who was twenty years Vicar of Boston, in Lincolnshire.

THE RECESS.

The idyllic season of English political life has succeeded to the turmoil and talk of the Parliamentary Session. Whilst differences of opinion have suddenly brought about a reshuffling of the Ministerial cards in France, politicians in this country have for the nonce almost turned their swords into ploughshares, so to speak. Monsieur de Freycinet may feel impelled to resign his position as the French Premier. But Mr. Gladstone leads a placid life at Hawarden, unruffled by anything more exciting, so far as the outer world knows, than reading the lessons on Sunday in the village church; and the Right Hon. Henry Bouverie Brand, in lieu of emulating M. Gambetta in his favourite pastime of Minister-making-and-unmaking, quietly assumes the robe of Corydon at the Glynde Harvest Home. We all know the genial smile of the Speaker, and can imagine how easily and well he must have filled this gentle rôle on Saturday, when he assured the agriculturists of Glynde in placid tones:—

I have been a farmer something like thirty years, and throughout that long period I have watched with keen interest the harvests as they have occurred. The harvest of 1880, speaking of it with respect to the weather, was the best I can remember, and I may speak with confidence when I say that not at any period within the memory of living man was there a worse than in 1879.

Sir William Harcourt, glad to seek relaxation from the cares and anxieties incident to a sad succession of home disasters, has fled from Seaham to Scotland, whither Nemesis with a crop of "Justice's Justice" still pursues the Home Secretary, however. As for Mr. Bright, the right hon. gentleman has intimated, with somewhat of democratic bluntness, to the magnates of Aberdeen that he does not expect to be Minister in attendance upon the Queen at Balmoral, and therefore could not accept at present the proffered fredom of that city. Far as John o' Groats and Land's-End asunder are the rest of the Ministers—Earl Granville finding the air of Walmer Castle more bracing than the heated atmosphere of the House of Lords, Mr. Childers being on a tour of conciliation and observation in Ireland, and Lord Hartington flitting from Doncaster Moor to Ducal preserves. Sir Charles Dilke alone has since the Prorogation been prevented by illness from taking full advantage of the opportunities offered for recreation; but we are glad to learn the zealous colleague of Earl Granville, with whom he stayed when Parliament separated, is recovering, and is able to transact the business of the Foreign Office.

Mr. Fawcett, fresh from encouraging the hoarding of postage-stamps for the purposes of thrift, has elicited a remonstrance from Sir Henry Cole by a remark he let drop at Salisbury on Monday. The Postmaster-General accompanied his accomplished wife to the platform; and, Mrs. Fawcett having presented the prizes won at the Oxford and Cambridge local examinations, the right hon. gentleman "improved the occasion" by warning his listeners against over-cramming their minds. Mr. Fawcett casually intimated that the study of mathematics was a favourite recreation of his; but added he should no more advocate that everybody should cultivate the same pastime than that everyone should be taught "music or drawing." There Sir Henry Cole joined issue with him. The Apostle of South Kensington wrote post-haste to the Times in favour of teaching the young idea how to sing and draw.

There are not lacking signs that the truce between the rival political parties will soon be broken. It having been to the late Lord Lieutenant of Ireland that Lord Beaconfield addressed the letter which was the signal for the General Election, there was some fitness in the rising of the Duke of Marlborough thus early in the Recess to inaugurate the campaign against the Government which has taken the place of the noble Earl's Administration. On Tuesday his Grace adversely criticised the measures of the Ministry as being likely to disturb the friendly relations of landlords with tenants; and defended the House of Lords as the bulwark against the Democracy. The Duke spoke at the dinner of the Woodstock Agricultural Association, and was followed in the same vein by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach and Lord Randolph Churchill, the sarcastic young Leader of the "Fourth Party." Another member of this microscopic Party, Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, on the morrow wrote a pungent letter to the Times protesting that he could no longer remain silent (was golden silence ever his forte?) whilst England was engaged in subjecting the Albanians to the Montenegrins.

The Duke of Buccleuch, presiding at an agricultural dinner at Thornhill on Tuesday, took advantage of the "The Army and Navy" toast to enter likewise a lively protest against the attempt by the joint naval demonstration "to bully and overawe the poor Turk."

Earl Fortescue, returning to his old love, on Tuesday gave the distinction of his name as President to the opening meeting of the Sanitary Institute's Congress at Exeter. Replying for "The House of Lords" at the Mayor's luncheon, the noble Earl, in his usual amiable style, deprecated Mr. Forster's recent attack on the Upper Chamber, and maintained that it had done good service to the State.

Two influences are at work in Ireland. Mr. Childers, on behalf of the Government, and doubtless in his most honeyed accents, has been assuring the people of Donegal, who have accorded him a hearty reception, that the Ministry intend to do all they can to improve the condition of Ireland. Mr. Parnell, to maintain his leadership, on Sunday began at Ennis a series of meetings in favour of land reform; but, while his speech was characteristically thankless to the Government for what they had endeavoured to do for the sister isle, there was a welcome absence of that mischievous and craven appeal to the passions which Mr. Forster felt called upon to denounce on the part of another Irish member.

A coming event probably cast its shadow before it when Mr. Leonard Courtney, speaking recently at the opening dinner of the Liverpool Junior Reform Club, returned thanks in a remarkable able speech for the toast of "Her Majesty's Government." A useful member of Mr. Gladstone's former Ministry, Mr. Baxter (who looked anything but cheerful on the back Ministerial benches last Session), the same day earnestly eulogised the Navy at a meeting on board the Mars training-ship at Dundee. The Liberals of Aylesbury festively foregathered on Tuesday, and vivaciously celebrated, under the chairmanship of Lord Carington, the return of two Liberal members for the borough.

Colonel Joicey, M.P., has signified his intention of giving £2000 to the Newcastle-on-Tyne Bishopric Fund.

The portrait of Lieutenant-Colonel Francis Brownlow, in this Number of our Journal, is from a photograph by A. Bassano, of London; that of Captain St. John Frome, from one by Crowe and Rodgers, of Stirling; and that of Lieutenant-Colonel L. G. Brown, from one by Ritter, Molkenteller, and Co., of India. The portrait of Mr. C. B. Birch, A.R.A., is from a photograph by the London Stereoscopic Company.

Speaking at the laying of the foundation-stone of the new Church school at Bournemouth on the 16th inst., the Bishop of Winchester said that great responsibility rested upon the people of this country to see that young children had a proper Christian training.

Last week the Countess Beauchamp laid the foundation-stone of the new buildings at St. Matthias's Church, Malvern Link, which it is proposed to enlarge in order to accommodate the increasing population of the place. There was the usual service in the church in the forenoon, and a sermon was preached by the Dean of Worcester. Subsequently a luncheon was partaken of in the school-room adjoining.

Several grants in aid of local benefactions (which, joined together, will be doubled by Queen Anne's Bounty or the Ecclesiastical Commissioners) have been made from the Poor Benefice Fund of the diocese of Salisbury. To the parish of Ansty, in Wilts, which is completely disendowed, £100 was voted, and it was agreed to double any sum not exceeding £150 which may be locally collected before the end of October. A similar grant was made to West Lulworth, in Dorset. To Cerne Abbas, in the same county, £75 was voted. To Studley, St. John's, Trowbridge, in Wilts, £200 was granted; and to Chittoe parish, in the same county, £200 was also voted. In the latter case the Ecclesiastical Commissioners have raised the living from £160 to £300 a year.

The first Church Conference of Durham summoned by the Bishop for the purpose of discussing questions affecting the Church was opened in Durham city on Tuesday. About 200 members were present, and the Bishop, as president, gave the opening address, in which he set forth that these periodical gatherings were not the least happy results of revived life and energy in the Church of England. Having reviewed the work and prospects of the Church in the diocese, his Lordship said the laity and clergy must learn to realise more fully than hitherto that they were not isolated combatants in a desultory struggle, but soldiers of a great army, officered, disciplined, and marshalled for a steady campaign against ignorance and sin. Mr. Albert Grey, M.P., read a paper on Organised Lay Work in the Church of England, and Sir W. C. Jones, Bart., Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., and the Dean of Durham read papers on the Cathedral in its Relations to the Diocese.

It is officially announced in the London Gazette that the following ecclesiastical changes shall be made in various parts of the kingdom, with the concurrence of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the Bishops of the respective dioceses, and the patrons and Incumbents of the several parishes affected:—1. A "district chapelry" is to be assigned to the Church of St. Peter, at Scorton, in the parish of St. Helen, Garstang, Lancashire (otherwise known as Churchtown). 2. A new district, to be called All Saints', Crowborough, is to be carved out of the parish of Rotherfield, Sussex, the patronage of which is to be vested in the Marquis of Abergavenny and his heirs. 3. A new parish is to be formed out of the district of Norwood (formerly part of the parish of Hayes), Middlesex, and to be called the parish of St. John, Southall-green; and, 4. A new district is to be carved out of the ancient parish of Willesden, Middlesex, and to be styled the district of St. Andrew, Willesden.

The Duke of Argyll laid the foundation-stone of a new church at Ballachulish last week. Dr. Story, in proposing the Duke's health at a lunch which followed, expressed his satisfaction at the Duke of Argyll's services to the Church of Scotland.

The foundation-stone of a new Roman Catholic church was laid on Sunday at Ince, near Wigan, by the Bishop of Liverpool. A Roman Catholic priest last week performed burial service according to the rites of his Church in the parish churchyard of Egton, in Yorkshire. Cardinal Manning laid the foundation-stone of a new Roman Catholic Church at Nottingham on Tuesday afternoon. The Church will stand on a site previously occupied by a public-house and some small tenements, the neighbourhood being a very poor one.

Mr. Agar-Robartes and Mr. Borlase, the members for East Cornwall, laid two of the memorial-stones of a new Wesleyan chapel at Polruan, on Thursday week. In the course of his speech Mr. Robartes said he had always held that members of every denomination might very well co-operate on occasions of this kind, and he knew of no reason why, as a member of the Church of England, he should not participate in the work.

The Thames rose on Tuesday nearly three feet above Trinity high-water mark, and overflowed at several points of its southern bank. In the afternoon a fog settled over the river between Waterloo Bridge and Woolwich, and the river steamers had to carry mast-lights.

It is stated that, in consequence of the report of the Select Committee on the London water supply, the eight companies have agreed to oppose, as one body, any scheme which the Government may bring forward for the purchase of all, or any, of their undertakings.

The Board of Trade have awarded a silver-gilt claret jug and two beakers to Captain Antonio D. Oliveira, of a Portuguese brig, who picked up at sea on April 27 last part of the crew of the steamer American, which was lost on a voyage from Southampton to Cape Town.

The Sir Josiah Mason's Science College, Birmingham, is to be opened with an introductory lecture by Professor Huxley on Oct. 1, and Earl Northbrook, the new president of the Birmingham and Midland Institute, will give the opening address in the Townhall on Oct. 29.

In the remains of a Roman villa on Morton Farm, near Brading, Isle of Wight, a new chamber has been discovered, inclosing a mosiac, the central design of which is a figure of Orpheus playing on the lyre, surrounded by animals. Coins have been found in brass of the reign of Victorinus, A.D. 268.

At Leicester on Monday the Mayor (Mr. John Bennett) opened the fourteenth Board school in that town. The new school is in Catherine-street, and will accommodate 1200 children, and has cost £12,000. The Board now provides accommodation for 10,000 children. Two other schools will shortly be erected.

At a meeting of the Committee of the Rowland Hill Memorial Fund, held on Tuesday at the Mansion House, it was resolved that the sculptors who had consented to compete should be invited to furnish the Committee with models of the proposed statue and sketches of the proposed monument, the total cost of the statue, with pedestal, not to exceed £2000.

Robert Cumming was on Monday charged at the Marlborough-street Police Court, with having burglariously entered the residence of the Earl of Bective, and stolen therefrom a quantity of jewellery, including a ruby ring, value £3000. The prisoner, who is stated to have been at one time a butler in the service of the Earl of Bective, was remanded for a week.

Sir William Harcourt, writing to the Mayor of Manchester, expresses his thorough sympathy with the movement for legislation to prevent juvenile offenders being sent to common goals. No one, he says, can be satisfied with the present state of things, and, with the assistance of the magistrates, he hopes an effectual remedy may be found.

The annual Conference of School Board Clerks was opened at Manchester on the 16th inst. under the presidency of the clerk to the Hull Board. Papers were read by Mr. Davis, the clerk to the Birmingham School Board, and other gentlemen, on subjects connected with elementary education. In the afternoon the members of the Conference were entertained at luncheon by the Mayor of Salford.

At the meeting of the Metropolitan Asylums Board last Saturday reference was made to the Hampstead Hospital, Sir E. Currie expressing the opinion that the ratepayers ought to be made thoroughly aware that, owing to the long-continued litigation in connection with the hospital, they were paying for the maintenance of an institution which could not be utilized.

The Sanitary Institute of Great Britain began its sittings at Exeter on Tuesday, under the chairmanship of Earl Fortescue, President. After luncheon in the Guildhall, the members visited an Exhibition of Sanitary Appliances. The importance of the potato as an article of food fully justifies the series of International Exhibitions organised under the auspices of the Lord Mayor of London and other prominent citizens for the encouragement of potato-culture. The sixth of these exhibitions was opened on Wednesday morning at the Crystal Palace, when about 3000 dishes were displayed, embracing all the old favourite varieties and several new ones.

A shop and house in Oxford-street, occupied by Messrs. Cook and Birchett, jewellers totally collapsed on the morning of the 17th. It is supposed that the fall was in some degree caused by the alterations going on at the Princess's Theatre which is situated next door. The assistants who lived on the premises, suspecting that there was danger kept a watch all night, and thus escaped without injury. The stock of jewellry, valued at several thousand pounds is buried in the ruins.

The Dublin Gazette of Tuesday night contains a proclamation by the Lord Lieutenant, offering a reward of £500 to any person or persons who, within six months from the present date, shall give such information as will lead to the conviction of the men who attacked Mr. Thomas Boyd and his two sons, at Shambough, county Kilkenny, on Aug. 8, mortally wounding one of the latter; and a further reward of £200 to any person who shall give such private information as shall lead to the same result.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers on the last day of the second week in September was 82,205, of whom 46,331 were in workhouses and 35,874 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1879, 1878, and 1877 these figures show an increase of 757, 5847, 5800 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 615, of whom 450 were men, 143 women, and 22 children under sixteen.

Among the Acts passed in the late Session was one to amend the law respecting the manner of passing grants under the Great Seal, and respecting officers connected therewith. On and after Nov. 1 next all warrants for the passing of letters patent under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom, required to be prepared by the Attorney and Solicitor-General, are to be prepared by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. By the Judicature Act the Judges of the Appeal Court are to be appointed by her Majesty by letters patent; but no provision is made respecting the mode of passing such letters patent. In future such letters patent are to be passed in the same manner as letters patent appointing the Judges of her Majesty's High Court of Justice.

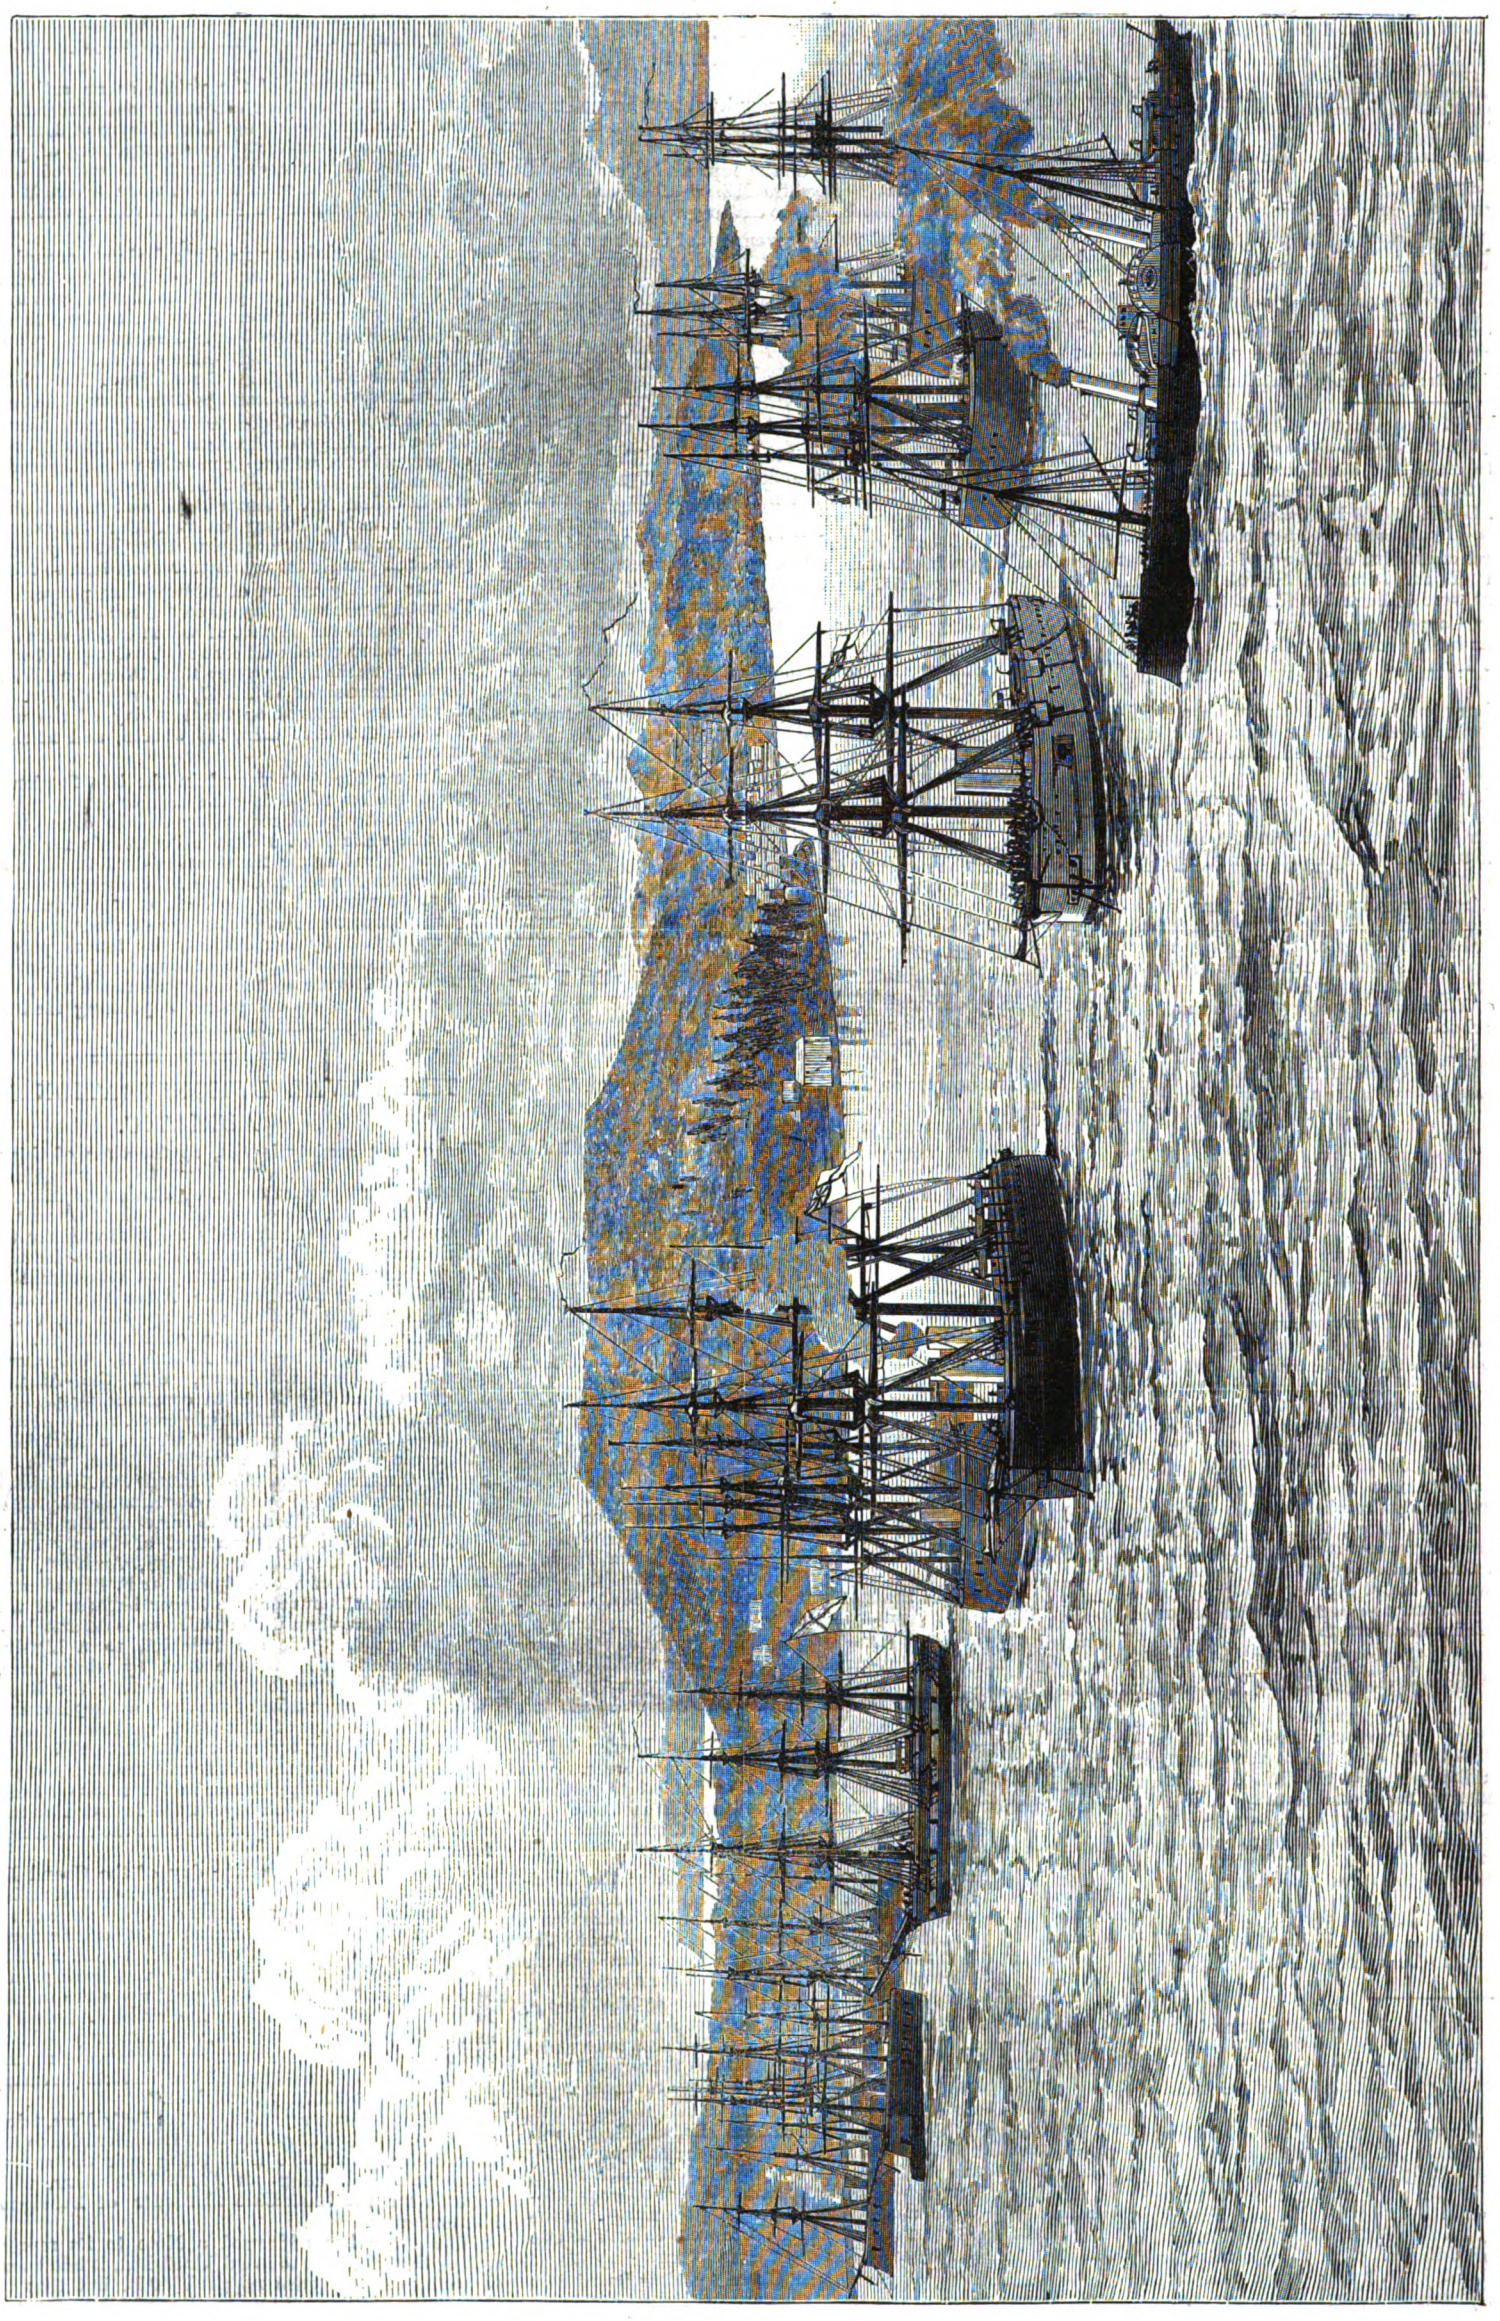
THE NAVAL DEMONSTRATION IN THE ADRIATIC.

The gravest anxiety is felt, at the time of this writing, on Wednesday evening, with respect to the possible issue of the course which has been taken, or which it is intended to take, by the action of the combined squadrons now assembled at Gravosa. It seems extremely doubtful whether the Turkish Government has still the power, even if its will can be subdued by the dictation of the European Governments in diplomatic concert, to make the Albanians, though nominal subjects of the Sultan, give up the town and district of Dulcigno to the Prince of Montenegro. The town is now occupied by 8000 Albanians, the small Turkish garrison having withdrawn, and the Albanians have also intrenched themselves in commanding positions on the adjacent hills. A Montenegrin force, reckoned at 5000 men, is approaching Dulcigno from Antivari, a short distance north along the seacoast. The Turkish Pasha, with his force of regular Turkish troops, is at Skutari, the Albanian capital, an equal distance in the opposite direction, and protests that he cannot oblige the Albanians to surrender Dulcigno.

The combined European fleet of twenty ships of war, British, French, Russian, German, Austrian, and Italian, under command of Vice-Admiral Sir F. Beauchamp Seymour, is still lying at Gravosa, the larger harbour of the Austrian port of Ragusa, from which Dulcigno is distant less than one hundred miles. We are indebted to a highly esteemed correspondent on board the fleet, by whom, also, we were favoured with valuable Sketches during the Russo-Turkish War, for our Illustration of the ships as they lie in the harbour of Gravosa. A view of that place, with some description and notice of its history, appeared in our last publication.

The departure of the fleet from Gravosa is not yet officially announced, but its appearance in the roads off Dulcigno will, it is said, not be delayed beyond the 24th or 25th inst.

The Standard's correspondent with the fleet telegraphed as follows on Tuesday:—



"To-day, being the fête day of the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia, all the ships are decorated with masthead flags, and at noon the fleet fired a Royal salute of twenty-one guns. Last night Sir Beauchamp Seymour entertained the Italian Admiral Fincatti and staff, together with all the Captains and Commandants of the various ships of the fleet. Mr. W. H. Smith was also his guest upon the occasion. The Russian Admiral entertained the French Admiral at dinner, and his flag-ship, the Svetland, was brilliantly illuminated with the electric light. The ward-room officers of the Alexandria gave a dinner to the officers of the Victoria (German) and the Prinz Eugen and Zrincy (Austrian)."

The Ragusa correspondent of the Daily News, telegraphing, says her Majesty's despatch-boat Iris has sailed to Albania for Lord Walter Kerr, who is to bring back the answer of Riza Pasha to the ultimatum of Admiral Seymour, which was a demand for the immediate surrender of Dulcigno to the Montenegrins.

The Porte has addressed a Note to its representatives stating that, in order to avoid bloodshed, it had been desirous of ceding the territories required of it, but that the Naval Demonstration is an exercise of armed pressure contrary to the right of the Sultan and the Porte, and casting upon the Powers the responsibility for all the results.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment will reopen for the autumn season on Monday, Oct. 4. A new first part and a new musical sketch by Mr. Corney Grain will be produced soon after the opening.

OFFICERS KILLED IN AFGHANISTAN.

Among the officers of General Sir F. Roberts's army, who were killed in the action of the 1st inst. near Candahar, were Colonel Brownlow and Captain Frome, of the 72nd Regiment.

Lieutenant-Colonel Francis Brownlow, C.B., of the 72nd (Duke of Albany's Own Highlanders), was forty-four years of age, having been born July 19, 1836. He entered the Army by purchase as Ensign in the 72nd Foot on Sept. 5, 1854, and was promoted to a lieutenancy on June 22 following. From the 28th of the preceding month he served with his regiment in the Crimea, including the expedition to Kertch, and the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and the attack of June 18, receiving for his services the medal with clasp and the Turkish medal. He was also engaged during the course of the Indian Mutiny, serving at the siege and capture of Kotah, and was present with the leading column of assault on March 30, 1858. He was subsequently actively employed throughout the operations in Central India and the pursuit of the rebel forces under Tantia Topee and Rao Sahib in 1858-9, for which he received the medal with clasp. From April, 1862, till Aug. 18 following he was Assistant Instructor of Musketry at the dépôt battalion, and, after purchasing his Captain's commission, and being gazetted thereto on Aug. 19, he was appointed Instructor of Musketry to the dépôt battalion in the month of September, a post which he continued to fill till June, 1865. On May 28, 1870, he was advanced to the rank of Major by purchase, and on Aug. 15, 1877, was gazetted a Lieutenant-Colonel. He had been engaged throughout the operations in Afghanistan, and on Nov. 19 last was gazetted Companion of the Bath for his services.

Captain St. John Thomas Frome, of the same regiment, was born on Jan. 24, 1841, and entered the army by purchase as Ensign in the 72nd Highlanders on Feb. 22, 1861. He obtained his Lieutenancy, also by purchase, on April 19, 1864, and was gazetted a Captain on June 8, 1872.

Lieutenant-Colonel Lewis George Brown, of the Bombay Staff Corps, intelligence of whose death from sunstroke at Sibi, on the road to Candahar, has been received in England, was in his forty-third year, the eldest son of the late Major Lewis Brown, the gallant defender of Kahun. He served with the 5th Bombay Native Infantry against the Taepings, near Shanghai, and was present at the attack and capture of the intrenched camp at Wang Kaza, and of the town of Tseerpo, at Nazeau, at the storming of the town Tsingpoo, and at the repulse of the rebel army near Nazeau (1862).

THE LATE LIEUTENANT-COLONEL L. G. BROWN.

MR. C. B. BIRCH, A.R.A.

This accomplished sculptor, who is forty-eight years of age, is the son of the late Mr. Jonathan Birch, a distinguished scholar of German literature, and translator of "Faust" and the "Nibelungen Lied." Mr. Charles Bell Birch was born in London, but was partly educated at Berlin, where his father resided from 1845. Having already begun, at a very early age, to study in the Schools of Design at Somerset House, he became a student of the Berlin Royal Academy. He continued there until 1852, engaged in drawing and modelling from the antique, showing great skill and talent, and gaining not a few prizes. He attended also the life and anatomical classes (in both of which he took prizes), and the perspective and animal classes. He received more particular instruction, as a pupil, from Professors Rauch and Wichmann, whose studios he attended. His first work of importance was a bust of the late Earl of Westmoreland, English Ambassador at Berlin. It was executed in marble for the King of Prussia, and was exhibited in Berlin and London. On returning to England, Mr. Birch passed through the schools of the Royal Academy, and gained two medals for modelling from the life. After some years he entered Mr. J. H. Foley's studio, where, for a long period, he was principal assistant. In all the larger works which came from that studio Mr. Birch had a share. In 1864 the Art-Union of London offered a premium of £600 for the best original figure or group, a prize open to all nations. Mr. Birch was the successful competitor, his piece of sculpture, "A Wood Nymph," being considered the finest among many similar productions. The group represents a seated nymph fondling a fawn, her left arm encircling the neck of the mother. This work was executed in marble. It was selected by the Royal Commissioners as one of the representative works of British art for the Vienna, Philadelphia, and Paris Exhibitions. In 1869 Mr. Birch gained in competition a commission for a statue of the late Dr. Chadwick, of Bolton. The execution of this obliged him to discontinue his work in Mr. Foley's studio. Mr. Foley, however, in his will named Mr. Birch as one of the three sculptors to whom he intrusted the completion of his unfinished works. In 1879 Mr. Birch exhibited "The Last Call," a group of heroic size, representing a trumpeter of hussars and his horse simultaneously shot while in the act of charging. During many years past, Mr. Birch has exhibited at the Suffolk-street, Dudley, and other galleries, as well as in the provinces and Ireland. In 1876 he was called upon to carry out an important monument to the late David Reid erected at Cranbourne, near Winkfield, Berks. It represents his widow and two eldest daughters grouped round a cross, while the heads of the four younger children are introduced as cherubs at the angles of the base. Mr. Birch has exhibited some drawings in water-colours. He lately executed a series of twenty original designs for the Art Union of London, in illustration of Lord Byron's poem of "Lara." As a draughtsman on wood and stone, he frequently contributed to the pages of the Illustrated London News, and other periodicals and books. Among his recent works of sculpture is a large group which represents the death, at Cabul, of Lieutenant Hamilton, V.C. He has several other works of importance in hand, including a colossal statue for India, and the griffin for the top of the Temple Bar Memorial.

MR. C. B. BIRCH, A.R.A.

DULCIGNO.

The immediate occasion for the naval demonstration made by the assembled squadrons of the European Powers in the Adriatic is to enforce the resolution of the Berlin Conference for the transfer of Dulcigno from the Turkish Empire to the Principality of Montenegro. The little seaport town of Dulcigno, on the Adriatic coast, hitherto belonging to the Turkish province of Albania, is a town of 5000 inhabitants, of whom 3500 are claimed as Mohammedans. The line of Albanian nationality, according to Consul Sax, the great authority on the subject, runs about half-way between Antivari and Dulcigno, and with every mile from this point southwards the Albanian element, of course, increases. Consul Sax says there are 8400 Mohammedan and 4000 Catholic Albanians in the Dulcigno district. The port of Dulcigno resembles its northern neighbour, Ragusa, in possessing two harbours. The one nearest the town is, however, small and shallow, and could not accommodate vessels larger than 200 tons. The other harbour—Val di Noce—is for Dulcigno what Gravosa is for Ragusa, and can shelter the largest vessels. But the entrance is troublesome on account of the narrow channel, and so for some time past the steamers of the Austrian Lloyd have been accustomed to stop at San Giovanni di Medua, a proceeding which has had a damaging effect on the prosperity of Dulcigno as the port of Scutari. In 1860 Dulcigno possessed 190 sea-going craft; at present it has not more than between eighty and ninety vessels engaged exclusively in a coasting trade. Formerly, before the existence of a distinct Austrian fleet, Dulcigno was a notorious pirates' nest, which sheltered fully 400 corsair vessels. But from 1815, when cruisers first hoisted the Austrian flag, the number of these vessels rapidly diminished, and those which remained were transformed into trading craft. These, again, all but disappeared during the Greek War of Independence, being destroyed by the Greek corsairs. The old and new town at Dulcigno are divided from each other by the small harbour. The former, which includes the fortress, has not now more than eighty houses, half of which are uninhabited. The fortress, surrounded by walls of great strength, is no longer of any importance; modern artillery would command it from the heights of Moschura and Klomsa. The new town has about 400 houses. There are about 2800 Mohammedan inhabitants, twelve Servian families, reckoning about eighty individuals, belonging to the Orthodox Greek Church, eight Roman Catholic families, reckoning forty persons, and about a dozen huts inhabited by eighty gipsies. It is only since 1858 that Christians have been allowed to live in Dulcigno. The town, which is called by the Albanians Ulkun, by the Turks Olgun, by the Servians Ulshin, bore in ancient times the name of Ulcinium, and previously Olchinium. Pliny tells us it was founded by fugitives from Colchis, who gave it the name of Colchinium. After the division of the empire, Dulcigno fell to the rulers of the East, and remained till the eleventh century subject to Constantinople. In 1180 the Servians obtained possession of Dulcigno, and held it till 1408; the Venetians then acquired it, and held it till 1571, when the Turks, under Achmet Pasha, took it. The Venetians made several attempts to regain Dulcigno, notably in 1718, under Schulenburg. From that date the Turks remained in undisputed occupation till 1878, when a Montenegrin force under Plamenac took it by storm. On that occasion 1000 men of the Turkish garrison were killed and 500 taken prisoners. Three colours, five guns, and 1500 muskets, became the spoil of the victors, who had 180 men killed and 300 wounded. During the assault the town was set on fire and the greater part of it burnt down. Subsequently, the Montenegrins endeavoured to conciliate the inhabitants of Dulcigno. The proposed substitution of Dulcigno for the Lim valley and the Tusi district gives some meaning at last to that clause of the Berlin Treaty which allowed Montenegro the free navigation of the Boyana. All the trade between Dulcigno and Skutari is done on the river. Navigation, however, at the mouth of the stream is not very safe.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The town of Newcastle, at a meeting held under the presidency of the Mayor in March, 1874, resolved on the adoption of the Public Libraries Act. A committee of the Town Council was appointed to carry this resolution into effect. In September, 1878, arrangements were made with the old Mechanics' Institute, which had been established since 1824, for the transfer of its building and library to the Corporation. The art and science classes and other teaching operations of the Mechanics' Institute were still to go on. The Public Libraries Committee of the Town Council has since purchased about 18,000 volumes, which are kept in the Lecture Hall of the old institution. Their use, or that of the greater part, in a Free Lending Library, from which all burgesses of Newcastle, or any person warranted by a burgess, may borrow a book to read at home, will henceforth be enjoyed by the townsfolk. The formal opening of this Lending Library took place on Monday of last week, together with laying the foundation-stone of a new building which is designed to contain both the Newcastle Public Library and a Gallery of Art. Dr. H. W. Newton, chairman of the Library Committee, presided over the meeting, held in the Mechanics' Institute building, for the purpose first-mentioned. Mr. Joseph Cowen, M.P., was the principal speaker, and the Earl of Durham also took part in the meeting, with Mr. Burt, M.P., the Hon. Albert Grey, M.P., Sir Charles Trevelyan, and other gentlemen. The ceremony of laying the foundation-stone was afterwards performed by Mrs. Newton, and was followed by a luncheon, with speeches, at the Assembly Rooms, and an evening meeting in the Townhall.

Our Illustration gives a view of the intended new building, which is designed by Mr. Alfred Fowler, the borough engineer. Its style is in the Corinthian and Doric orders of classic architecture. The façade will be 167 ft. in length, arranged in bold relief by bays 30 ft. wide at each end, with the principal entrance in the centre, approached by seven steps through a portico with Doric columns supporting an entablature which will be surrounded by a balustrade. This balustrade will be continued along the whole length of the building. Above this, in the recessed portions, panels will be formed in which subjects may be carved in relief. The whole of the centre portion will be surmounted by a pediment, below which will be formed a cornice of the Corinthian order, with blocking course parapet, terminating at the projecting bays. The bays at each end of the building will be furnished with a medallion cornice, surmounted by a balustrade. This arrangement gives relief to the sky-line. The roof is semicircular in shape, and the centre portion of the first-floor rooms will be lighted by skylights through a panelled ceiling, and by gas sunlights at night. The whole of the rooms will be heated by the low-pressure hot-water system. The building will be three stories in height, with apartments for caretaker, and provision for water apparatus at the top, to be used in case of fire. The front will be set back from the street, and protected by a dwarf wall surmounted by an ornamental iron railing, with lamps at intervals. The basement floor will be used for the ordinary working purposes of the Library, and will cover an area of 330 square yards. On the ground floor there will be a spacious lending library, 60 ft. by 42 ft. and 17 ft. 6 in. high; a library containing books for reference, 58 ft. by 36 ft., semicircular on plan, and 19 ft. 10 in. high. There will also be two reading-rooms, 43 ft. 4 in. by 28 ft., and 25 ft. by 19 ft. respectively, each 17 ft. 6 in. high. The whole of these rooms will be approached from the principal entrance-hall or vestibule, which will be 43 ft. long and 20 ft. wide. On the first floor the front rooms will be appropriated for pictures and sculpture, and will be 135 ft. long by 28 ft. wide, and from 23 ft. to 28 ft. high, divided by partition walls fitted with sliding doors, the whole arranged en suite. There will be four rooms set apart for science and art classes. The sizes of these are 29 ft. by 24 ft. and 15 ft. 4 in. high, 20 ft. by 15 ft. and 12 ft. 6 in. high, 24 ft. by 17 ft. and 12 ft. 6 in. high, and 58 ft. by 36 ft., semicircular in form, and 22 ft. 6 in. high. These will be approached from the front street by a separate entrance; and, although connected with the Sculpture and Art Gallery on the first floor, the working of these classes will be carried on distinct and separate from the working of the library. The staircase and part of the walls of vestibule or hall will be constructed so as to admit of extensions in case of further requirements. The light will be admitted through a large window at the staircase landing and from the roof. This portion will be 24 ft. wide, semicircular on plan, and 42 ft. high from floor to ceiling. The area of the site is 1431 square yards, and will nearly all be covered by the building. The land and structure are estimated to cost £20,000.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

From inquiry at Merton College, Oxford, we learn that the Derby Memorial Scholarship has been awarded to Mr. Walter Scott, B.A., Fellow of the society, and formerly Exhibitioner of Balliol College, who has conformed to the requirements of the scholarship. October, or Michaelmas, Term will commence with the conferment of degrees on Monday, Oct. 11, but the colleges will not meet until the end of that week.

The last of the examinations in connection with the Queen's University in Ireland were opened at the Exhibition Palace, Dublin, on Monday. The largest number of candidates ever examined on these occasions have presented themselves this year.

The Warden of Durham University has appointed the Ven. Canon Watkins, Archdeacon of Northumberland, to the newly established Professorship of Hebrew; and Mr. W. E. Gabbet, M.A., to a Senior Tutorship in Durham University. Mr. Gabbett was in the First Class in Moderations in 1875, and in the Final Classical School in 1876.

University College, Bristol, has the credit of being the first in England in which the higher education of women has been conducted on a large scale in conjunction with that of men. Its calendar shows that in the last session, its fourth, the college was attended by more than 500 students, of whom nearly half were women. A wide range in science and literature is covered by the lectures, of which there are more than forty distinct courses in the day, and more than twenty in the evening. Its engineering department has derived great advantage from the plan under which the students spend the six winter months in the college and the six summer months as pupils in engineering works in the neighbourhood. The want of space, which has hitherto pressed severely, will be relieved by the opening in October of a part of the new buildings. On the council of the college, besides many eminent citizens of Bristol, are the Master of Balliol and the President of Trinity College, Oxford, Professor Henry Smith, and Professor Stuart.

About £88,000 has now been subscribed towards the cost of the projected new University College at Liverpool, and little more will be needed to make up the amount required. It was originally intended to raise £80,000 for the endowment of seven professorships and two lectureships; but part of the money subscribed (about £7000) has been contributed towards the foundation of a Roscoe chair of art—a professorship not originally contemplated. Lord Derby gives £10,000 to found a chair of natural history; Messrs. William, S. G., and P. H. Rathbone give a like sum to found a King Alfred chair of modern history and literature; Mr. A. H. Brown, M.P., and Messrs. Cresfield and Barrow also give £10,000 to found a chair of ancient history; Mrs. Grant subscribes a similar amount to found a chair in some branch of science; and £10,000 is given by the trustees of the late Mr. Roger Lyon Jones to the Royal Infirmary School of Medicine, to found a chair of experimental physics, with which mathematics will be for the time associated. Between £7000 and £8000 has been subscribed towards founding a chair of philosophy, logic, and political economy. A peculiar feature of the remainder of the subscription list is that it classifies the contributors, a circumstance due to the fact that each class has made special efforts, by meetings and otherwise, to raise funds. Thus there are shipowners, corn and provision trades, manufacturers and traders, literary, scientific, and professional lists, and a general list. Though the endowment funds are nearly complete, there remains the cost of a building to be provided.

THE STRANGE and PREVAILING DISEASE OF THIS COUNTRY.—Like a thief at night, it steals in upon us unawares. The patients have pains about the chest and sides, and sometimes in the back. They feel dull and sleepy; the mouth has a bad taste, especially in the morning. A sort of sticky slime collects about the teeth. The appetite is poor. There is a feeling like a heavy load on the stomach; sometimes a faint, all-gone sensation at the pit of the stomach which food does not satisfy. The eyes are sunken, the hands and feet become cold and feel clammy. After a while a cough sets in, at first dry, but after a few months it is attended with a greenish-coloured expectoration. The patient feels tired all the while, and sleep does not seem to afford any rest. After a time he becomes nervous, irritable, and gloomy, and has evil forebodings. There is a giddiness, a sort of whirling sensation in the head when rising up suddenly. The bowels become costive; the skin is dry and hot at times; the blood becomes thick and stagnant; the whites of the eyes become tinged with yellow; the urine is scanty and high-coloured, depositing a sediment after standing. There is frequently a spitting up of the food, sometimes with a sour taste and sometimes with a sweetish taste; this is frequently attended with palpitation of the heart; the vision becomes impaired, with spots before the eyes; there is a feeling of great prostration and weakness. All of these symptoms are in turn present. It is thought that nearly one third of our population has this disease in some of its varied forms. It has been found that medical men have mistaken the nature of this disease. Some have treated it for liver complaint, some for dyspepsia, others for kidney disease, &c., but none of the various kinds of treatment have been attended with success. It is found, however, that the Extract of Roots (or Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup) will effect a perfect cure in every case. This article can be obtained from all Chemists and Medicine Venders at 2s. 6d. and 4s. 6d. per Bottle.

The following Testimonials prove the efficacy of the Medicine in cases of Dyspepsia, &c.:—

DISORDERED LIVER.

"Prospect House, Bridport, Dorset, Dec. 22, 1879.

"My dear Sir,—I have for years suffered more or less from (to me) an unknown cause, but which from diagnosis I imagined to arise from a disordered liver. Digestion was extremely difficult, and consequently my appetite was much affected. Various medicines (so called) I have repeatedly tried, but failed to derive anything beyond a temporary benefit. I was induced by your agent to give your 'Curative Syrup' a trial, and after taking the contents of one bottle I invested in another, which is yet scarcely finished. I am more than happy to be able to testify to the curative properties of the compound. That languid feeling, which formerly unfitted me for business, I have not since experienced, and, indeed, feel altogether a different being.

"I am, Sir, yours very faithfully,

"A. J. White, Esq. RICHARD EBDON, Journalist."

"Mr. J. Longbotham, Chemist and Druggist, of Chester-le-Street, in the county of Durham, writes, Dec. 19, 1879:—"I should like to have more of your almanacks, with my name printed on them. Please send them as early as possible. We have sold an immense quantity (many dozens) of the Syrup, and the sale is still on the increase; in my long experience (fifty years) I have never known a patent medicine sell so rapidly, and the result so satisfactory."

The attention of readers is directed to the following letter from a highly respectable Chemist at Landport, Hants:—

"323, Commercial-road, Landport, Feb. 9, 1880.

"Dear Sir,—I should say that the sale is increasing very fast. This is the second supply we have had since Christmas, when we ordered half a gross—in fact, we sell more of 'Seigel's Syrup than any other patent medicine. The secret of the demand is, in my opinion, due to the beneficial effects produced by the medicine. A friend of ours who visits the sick has come across some remarkable cases of cure produced by taking the Syrup.—Yours, very faithfully, W. J. TUCK, Chemist.

"To A. J. White, Esq."

Would it be possible for this gentleman to make such a statement unless his customers really derived benefit?

SEVERE CASE OF RHEUMATISM.

"Cowper-street, California, Ipswich, July 27, 1878.

"Mr. A. J. White.—Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in informing you that after taking 'Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup' I am quite restored to health, after suffering for four years from the most excruciating pains. At times I could not move in my bed from rheumatism and dropsy; but now, although I am now sixty-three years of age, I am able to work and walk free from pain. I send you this that you may let my fellow-sufferers know the great benefit I have received after taking your valuable medicine. I found great relief after taking for two days, and I am sure no one could have been a greater sufferer than myself.—Yours truly. CHAS. SLATE."

"36, Pitfield-street, Hoxton, London, N., March 24, 1880.

"My dear Sir,—I think if the following case was published in your next issue it might prove of advantage to the public generally. I have sold some hundred bottles of Mother Seigel's most excellent Syrup, but, though well acquainted with its wonderful efficacy in Stomach and Liver Complaints, did not know until a day or two back that in South America it is largely taken for Ague. My informant was Mr. Morris, of 42, Haberdasher-street, Hoxton, N., who came for a bottle, and stated that he and his wife and friends always took 'Mother Seigel's Syrup' when in America for what they call there the Chills and Fever, but what we term Ague. He was very glad to find I sold it, and subsequently returned, in the course of the day, and said that it had the usual effect, and that his wife was already much better. He has been a great traveller, and never knew of so speedy and successful a remedy.—I remain, my dear Sir, yours truly,

"H. W. HORTON, Chemist."

Mr. J. B. Crosby, 22, Fowler-street, South Shields, writes, Nov. 25, 1879:—"I have sold several dozens of your 'Mother Seigel's Syrup.' When parties have come back the second or more times for a fresh supply, I am in the habit of asking them what they think of the medicine, and if it has done them good, and the invariable testimony is that it is a most excellent medicine, and they have derived great benefit from it. Wishing you the success you deserve, I am, yours truly, J. B CROSBY."

NOTE.—No person would buy a second bottle of a worthless medicine, so that the fact of people coming back to Mr. Crosby again and again proves, as he says, that the medicine is excellently adapted to meet the end in view—viz., to relieve sufferers from Dyspepsia and kindred complaints.

Mr. W. C. Hall, Chemist and Mineral Water Manufacturer, Bridge-street, Newark, writing under date of Nov. 27, 1879, says: "Mother Seigel's Syrup has certainly a wonderful effect on the human system. You have certainly not overrated its value. If I did not hear from my customers personally what an efficacious medicine it is, I could not, nor would not, believe it. Although I have sold a large quantity, I have never heard it spoken of other than in terms of praise. If any sufferer writes to me I will certainly give them a satisfactory reply. Make what use of this you like."

"May 3, 1880.

"Dear Sir,—I take great pleasure in recommending your 'Curative Syrup'; it always gives satisfaction. I can confidently state, without the least exaggeration, that there was never yet any proprietary medicine having such an enormous and increasing sale. A gross of the 2s. 6d. size only lasts a very short time. Such an extraordinary demand must warrant it a safe and effective medicine. Yours faithfully,

"JOSEPH WOODS, Chemist,

"Bridgehouses, Sheffield."

NOTE.—This gentleman has sold Seigel's Syrup for a long period, and, by experience, he well knows that the demand would not be so great but that the Medicine is effectually performing its work.

"Methley, near Leeds, June 10, 1879.

"Dear Sir,—I suffered from bad Indigestion and Liver Complaint for years, during which time I used various remedies, but all to no purpose. I tried all the medical men, and got no relief. I afterwards went to the Infirmary, but left as 'incurable.' As a last resource, I was induced to try the 'Curative Syrup,' and to my great joy it has almost made a new man of me. I can now do what I had not been able to do for a long time past—viz., I can eat a good dinner without the pain that was formerly so great.

"I wish to highly recommend the medicine to suffering humanity, as the best and cheapest in the world.

"I remain, your humble servant, WILLIAM HEWETT."

"Methley, near Leeds."

"THE QUEEN"
Of Sept. 11, 1880, says:
"As this is to be a velvet season, it may be as well to point out some eminently novel features in
LOUIS VELVETEEN,
now an established favourite for Dresses. The REDS are particularly rich; indeed, so are the many PLUMS and PRUNES, and we have also OLD GOLD (no less than four shades) PEACH, PORCELAIN BLUE, and many DARK GREENS of the WILLOW and MYRTLE tones. The pile, which is both erect and fine, is asserted to be permanently fast.
This Velveteen is one of those materials which has an excellent appearance without being costly.

F. H. COWEN'S GREATEST SUCCESS.
THE CHILDREN'S HOME. By COWEN
(Words, Weatherly).

They played in their beautiful gardens,
The children of high degree;
Outside the gates, the beggars
Passed on in their misery:
But there was one of the children
Who could not join their play,
And a little beggar maiden
Watched for him day by day.

Once he had given her a flower!
And oh! how he smiled to see
Her thin white hands thro' the railings
Stretched out so eagerly.
She came again to the garden,
She saw the children play,
But the little white face had vanished,
The little feet gone away.

She crept away to her corner,
Down by the murky stream;
But the pale, pale face in the garden
Shone thro' her restless dream.
And that high-born child and the beggar
Passed homeward side by side,
For the ways of men are narrow,
But the gates of Heav'n are wide.

In B flat, Contralto or Bass; C, Mezzo or Baritone (compass, C to E); E flat, Soprano or Tenor.
With Pianoforte and Harmonium (ad lib.) Accompaniment.

MRS. S. A. ALLEN'S
WORLD'S HAIR RESTORER
THE ADMIRATION OF THE WORLD. Mrs. S. A. Allen's World's Hair Restorer is perfection for its wonderful life-giving properties to faded or falling hair, and quickly changing grey or white hair to its natural youthful colour and beauty. It is not a dye. It requires only a few applications to restore gray hair to its youthful colour and lustrous beauty, and induce luxuriant growth, and its occasional use is all that is needed to preserve it in its highest perfection and beauty. Dandruff is quickly and permanently removed. Sold by all Chemists and Perfumers.

BREIDENBACH'S WOOD VIOLET. Fresh as the flower itself. Price 2s. 6d., 5s., 10s. Bottle. Sold at all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the Universe; or Breidenbach and Co., Distillers of Wood Violet to the Queen, 157B, New Bond-street, W. Trade-Mark, the "Wood Violet."

MITCHAM LAVENDER.—PIESSE and LUBIN.

LAVENDER, Sweet Lavender.—PIESSE and LUBIN are now distilling, at their Flower Farm, the famed MITCHAM LAVENDER. Samples may be had either at the Stillery, Mitcham-road, Surrey, or at the Laboratory, 2, New Bond-street, London.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR. If your hair is turning grey, or white, or falling off, use "The Mexican Hair Renewer," for it will positively restore in every case Grey or White Hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not decayed. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 3s. 6d. per Bottle.

FLORILINE. For the Teeth and Breath. Is the best Liquid Dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially-decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalculæ," leaving them pearly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke, being partly composed of honey, soda, and extracts of sweet herbs and plants. It is perfectly harmless, and delicious as sherry. Sold by Chemists and Perfumers everywhere, at 2s. 6d. per Bottle.

"AND TEETH LIKE ROWS OF PEARLS."
THE ORIENTAL TOOTH-PASTE.
The celebrated original and only genuine Oriental Tooth-Paste is signed "JEWSBURY and BROWN, Manchester. Established 50 years." PEARLY WHITE and SOUND TEETH, a healthy action of the gums, producing that firmness and rosy brightness of colour so essential to beauty, and fragrant breath, are all insured by the use of this most perfect Dentifrice. Pots, 1s. 6d.; double, 2s. 6d. All Perfumers and Chemists.

DR. DE JONGH'S
LIGHT-BROWN
COD-LIVER OIL.
THE PUREST. THE MOST EFFICACIOUS.
THE MOST PALATABLE. THE MOST DIGESTIBLE.
Proved by thirty years' medical experience to be
THE ONLY COD-LIVER OIL
which produces the full curative effects
CONSUMPTION AND DISEASES OF THE CHEST, THROAT AFFECTIONS, GENERAL DEBILITY, AND WASTING DISEASES OF CHILDREN.

Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The value of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL as a therapeutic agent in a number of diseases, chiefly of an exhaustive character, has been admitted by the world of medicine; but, in addition, I have found it a remedy of great power in the treatment of many Affections of the Throat and Larynx, especially in Consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. SINCLAIR COGHILL,
Physician Royal National Hospital for Consumption, Ventnor.
"I have convinced myself that in Tubercular and the various forms of Strumous Disease, Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL possesses greater therapeutic efficacy than any other Cod-Liver Oil with which I am acquainted. It was especially noted, in a large number of cases in which the patients protested they had never been able to retain or digest other Cod-Liver Oil, that Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL was not only tolerated, but taken readily, and with marked benefit."

DR. HUNTER SEMPLE,
Physician Hospital for Diseases of the Throat and Chest.
"I have long been aware of the great reputation enjoyed by the LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL introduced into medical practice by Dr. DE JONGH, and have recommended it with the utmost confidence. I have no hesitation in stating my opinion, that it possesses all the qualities of a good and efficient medicine. Its taste is by no means disagreeable, and might even be called pleasant. I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL very useful in cases of Chronic Cough, and especially in Laryngeal Disease complicated with Consumption."

JOSEPH J. POPE, Esq., M.R.C.S.,
Late Staff Surg., Army, Prof. of Hygiene, Birkbeck Institution.
"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The value of 'hydro-carbons' in all debilitated states of the system is now becoming thoroughly recognised; and it is, without doubt, from the animal oils and fats, rather than from their vegetable substitutes, that we may hope to derive the surest benefit. The Oil of Dr. DE JONGH places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy, one that cannot be too widely recognised."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold ONLY in capsuled IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 2s. 6d.; Pints, 4s. 9d.; Quarts, 9s.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the World.

PEOPLE I HAVE MET.

No. XII.—THE CHAPERON.

Lady Selina Mizzle had many strings to her bow, which was, indeed, sadly in want of them; and perhaps the best of all these strings was that hung on to a wire which pulled the Lord Chamberlain. It is very likely that his Lordship did not know by whom or through whom he was pulled; possibly, he had only the very vaguest idea that he was even pulled at all, but whenever Lady Selina gave a vigorous jerk to her own particular part of the mechanism by which he was set going, the Lord Chamberlain unconsciously went through the stateliest of his paces. The underlying reason of this edifying behaviour was always hidden beneath superfine manners and refreshing compliments. For, if the best strings are kept too dry and pulled too hard, they break. However, several people in good society knew that the secret of Lady Selina's influence lay in the fact that she had a cousin who was a permanent person of great authority in the Royal household, and that she held certain documents which placed that permanent person of great authority at her mercy.

She made a very good income out of her social position, though there was a brisk competition in the business to which she had devoted her high birth and vigorous energies; for it was that of the Professional Chaperon. Lady Selina, however, had many advantages over her rivals. In the first place, she was the daughter of a Peer of the highest rank, Fulke de Were Everard Nortiman, sixth Duke of Nomanswill, which always counts for something; then she had married into a family which had been behind the scenes of public life time out of mind, her defunct husband, Mr. Backstairs Mizzle, having been the useful friend of some of the most important personages of his generation. He would have died rich but for this, and Lady Selina, who had married him for his supposed wealth, might have turned out a very different sort of person; but when his assets were examined it turned out that he had lent his money to the important personages as fast as he made it, or even faster, and his widow, to her infinite mortification, inherited little but a bundle of bonds and annuity deeds, which were hardly worth the paper they were written on.

It was then that she was obliged to live by her wits. Fortune she had next to none; but of intelligence she had a very fair share indeed. A fine impressive woman, too, was Lady Selina, with no nonsense about her. Her voice was a clear, shrill, breezy voice, quite invigorating to weak nerves. Her stature was grand, her eyes bright and resolute, her nose had something of the bold arch which distinguished that of the late Duke of Wellington, and which is generally considered a mark of high breeding as well as of firmness in character. She had required that and more to keep her place in the world when she was left to do battle with all comers, a noble female pauper, aged forty-three.

Luckily, or as she thought luckily, she had no children of her own, and therefore was tolerably free to do as she liked. In the early part of her widowhood, therefore, she went to Florence, where living is cheap, and queened it over the Anglo-Italian colony there. She dined out every day, and gave letters of introduction in return. She also made a little by signing certificates of cure to some venders of patent medicines, who advertised her as having been miraculously healed by their nostrum; and though this was but a limited field for her ambition, she liked the Italian people and their climate, and led a convenient life among the Florentines. She also found many wealthy travellers worth her attention constantly moving about in Italy; and she could open the gates of the Vatican as easily as those of St. James's Palace. But when the new regulation came out commanding the personal attendance of every one who made presentations at the Queen's Courts, Lady Selina was of course obliged to reside in London during the season. "I must get my Court dresses out of them now," she said curtly to a poor relation who lived with her; "and so shall you, my dear. You must see Madame Mauve about it, and say I shall expect a handsome commission on the foolish people I bring to her."

It was a trade which required a good deal of shrewdness, for not even the ducal flag of the great house of Nortiman would have passed people really objectionable into the throne-room of Majesty. Lady Selina had to pick and choose among her customers; and it is due to English loyalty to add that she had an extensive choice. There were no end of people who had acquired property, and who wanted to show it in company where they could never feel for a moment at ease. Even when they were too old, or too fat, or too consciously vulgar to venture themselves into the great world of fashion, they were anxious that their daughters should do so; and those young ladies were invariably all agog to set out on that risky enterprise. Then Lady Selina made her terms. The highest price she ever got in one lump was from the blooming wife of a great railway speculator, who paid her three thousand pounds in hard money, besides perquisites, for the honour of her escort to a Drawingroom. But in this case there was a good deal of negotiation necessary; and it was whispered that Lady Selina had an illustrious coadjutor who had also a large finger in the pie. In ordinary cases her terms were five hundred guineas. It must not be imagined that so great and brave a lady ever condescended to ask for cash. Her poor relation managed that part of their business. Did Mrs. Loanly, the stock-jobber's wife, who had made that awful pile of money in Egypt, desire to display her own charms or those of her daughters at Court, Lady Selina Mizzle, whose birth gave her access to every society she cared to make a hunting-ground, found means of becoming acquainted with Mrs. Loanly; and when the game was once flushed her Ladyship generally bagged it. Her dresses, her carriage, her footmen took all the breath out of a middle-class matron, till there was no more spirit left in her; and once under Lady Selina's tuition, their intercourse might have been found recorded step by step in Loanly's banker's books, though not a cheque bore her Ladyship's indorsement. She dealt entirely in cash payments, and it was always politely understood that the cash was a voluntary contribution for the benefit of my Lady's poor, which made things more agreeable on all sides. "It is nice to make a large income out of one's benevolence," she was wont to say on these occasions when she and her poor relation, to whom she was very kind and cordial, sat down, as they sometimes did, after a well spent day, to a private and confidential supper.

A kind-hearted woman was Lady Selina Mizzle when it was possible to get under the triple armour of worldliness, rapacity, and pride in which her affections were encased. Her poor relation's lines had fallen in pleasant places; and few dowerless widows of mature age had so many friends. Her clients did not consider their obligations at an end when they had handed over the cost of their entrance into the presence of their Sovereign, nor, to do her justice, did Lady Selina. She always took a supercilious but sincere interest in them ever afterwards. After a proper understanding, she would even send out invitations to their balls and parties, filling their fine new houses with company fit to figure in the Morning Post. She would supervise their garden parties and correct the florid exuberance of their taste in banquets and ornaments. She would even choose their carriages, horses, liveries, and jewellery. She could get them the first offer of her brother Lord John Nortiman's famous yacht, or of Lord Charles Nortiman's villa at Ascot during the race week. Nothing was beyond the reach of her highborn arm if she found good cause to stretch it out. What she could not do herself somebody else could; and whoever that somebody might be, Lady Selina could pull a wire that moved him.

There was another branch of her profession which required very discreet and nice handling, but under her dexterous management it was extremely lucrative. She was the confidential referee of some of the very largest money-lenders in this metropolis. His Grace the Duke of Nomanswill, chief and head of her noble family, who had at various times in his social and political career entered into relations with every one of them, had dropped a hint that his sister might be consulted with advantage in certain cases of delicacy, and thenceforth her advice was very frequently in request. No safer guide in pecuniary transactions with the aristocracy than Lady Selina. She knew not only the rent-roll of nearly every man who had a rent-roll; but she also knew what were the charges on it, and what the landed gentleman did with his time. She had news from every club at home or abroad, from every racecourse, from every polo and pigeon-shooting match, from every gambling house, and from the side scenes of the theatres, through one or other of her noble relatives. She could command precisely that sort of information which is most precious to the fashionable bill discounter, and he had to pay for it. She used to boast that she had never given so much as a mutton chop to any human being without an equivalent, which left her, upon the whole, a winner, and she was wise in her generation.

She would sail into a ball, or a fancy fair, or a horticultural show, where the flush and the fair meet together, looking like a line-of-battle ship at a regatta. A dozen of the prettiest girls present might be under her splendid convoy, and she had an attentive eye on all their doings; but she never allowed them to embarrass her course. She did not permit them to fluster her, or to whisper at her, or to mob her. Each girl commanded her own vessel under judicious sailing-orders, and seldom indeed did one of Lady Selina's gallant fleet come into port without a galleon in tow as lawful prize. "What do you want, child?" she would say, in a hard, prosaic voice, to any girl who was not fittingly armed for conquest, or who manœuvred awkwardly, while her squadron was under canvas. "You want rank or money, or both, if you can get them, don't you? Well, then, do as you are told." And they did as they were told, or Lady Selina took the nonsense out of them in mighty quick time. She was bluff as a man, keen as an attorney in criminal practice, droll, amusing, jolly and good-humoured too. She "trained fine," as they say at Newmarket. She would have no nerves, no faintings, no lackadaisical or melodramatic ways on any pretence whatever. Her nominations for the great prizes of the season were all heroines and martyrs. Their drill, to an experienced eye, was beautiful. They spoke exactly in the language of the day; they dressed in the loveliest fashions of to-morrow. Not a dowdy was ever seen among Lady Selina's lot; the get up of every one of them was absolutely perfect. Not a mistake in gloves, ribbons, or colours; not an ornament too much from crown to heel. The arrangement of their hair was a study; their walking was among the fine arts; their dancing was grace consummate. Every tone and inflexion of their voices, the turn of the head, the trick of the hand, had been rehearsed, and there was no more exquisite piece of acting in London than Lady Selina marshalling her victorious Amazons on a presentation day. The band should have played a triumphal march in honour of them; and hautboys and clarions with a silver sound should have acclaimed her.

The honourable Miss Pettie, who had taken four virgin nieces about to all the pleasure haunts of Europe, hated Lady Selina with all her heart, now nearly full of verjuice. "Old fool," snorted her great rival; "does she expect young men are to be caught by prowling about after them. They have to give chase to my girls. The woman is a wallflower, my dear," Lady Selina would add to her poor relation (long since on the way to be rich). "She sits stock still with those pale, lanky girls beside her all of a row, and goes wherever she can get asked in a fly. Her coachman has a cold in his head, my dear. I have seen him with it. My girls only go to the best houses, and are never seen out unattended by powdered footmen, and a barouche with proper match-making horses seventeen hands high. A young man of birth and spirit who has got something in his pockets won't marry a Frump. Why should he? He has generally seen enough of them in his low connections. How do you like these ortolans? Drink Johannisberg with them, my dear, not claret-cup, as you were going to do; good hock brings out their flavour.

"There is that owl my brother Frank's widow, too, whose girls will take root at Leamington, I believe. They have thrown themselves all four, mother included, at the second-rate hunting-men who go down there for the season. The fellows dine with them, flirt with them, and morris off to town in spring for better amusement. Lady Meanwell, too, our prim cousin, has never given her niece a single chance of establishing herself in a proper manner. She never lets the poor girl get out of earshot, and is always leaving her drawing-room door ajar that she may see what is going on through it. Going on, indeed! Just as if young women did not know their own business best, and how to manage it. Men get scared when they see steel traps and spring guns all about people's houses. Look at my conservatory. No better place in Belgravia for morning callers; and morning callers cost nothing. On the contrary, I make them bring round their drags and give us a good dinner. Then, of course, as you have seen fifty times, what they call their 'spooning' in the conservatory, with all those heady exotics, and the Orleans Club champagne afterwards, puts them in such a condition that any girl of sense and courage can have her own way with them. Mabel May caught Lord Lightfeatherly by a wild prank which scared us, you remember, a little, at first; and I hesitated to give my consent to so bold a venture till she satisfied me she had nerve to go through with it. Now she is a Marchioness, with the right sort of settlements, and keeps her husband from making a goose of himself. A chaperon, my dear, means a hood or a cape; it is an old word we have kept from the gay times of knight and troubadour. She should be a girl's cloak to mask her merry witcheries, while she tries their effect; she should not be the glumpy jaileress of a prisoner at large."

"Just so," answered the poor relation, for she was always of Lady Selina's way of thinking, and assented agreeably. It is a nice way of talking to superiors, and makes a dressing-room fireside, in the half hours before going to bed, quite cheerful and cosy, especially after a supper of ortolans or oyster toast and pine-apple salad, which is a diet at once light and nourishing.

THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH'S RELIEF FUND.

The final meeting of the trustees of her Grace's Relief Fund was held on the 16th inst. in Dublin Castle. The Duke of Leinster presided.

Dr. Grimshaw read a letter intimating that the Lord Mayor of London would on the following week forward a further sum of £437 3s. 3d., and announced that £23 17s. 3d. had been received through Mr. George Sidgreaves, 111, Mount-street, London, from the Very Rev. T. Porter; and £25 1s. 10d., through Captain Lord Walter Fitzgerald, as the proceeds of private theatricals conducted by the sergeants of the fourth battalion 60th Rifles.

Colonel Dease read the statement of accounts, which had been gratuitously audited and vouched by Messrs. Craig, Gardner, and Co., showing that the total amount of subscriptions received up to Sept. 1 was £135,301 7s. 2d., and that interest had been allowed by the Bank of Ireland on current accounts amounting to £119 8s. 1d., making the total amount of the fund on Sept. 1 £135,420 15s. 3d.

The disbursements included grants to union committees, £71,815 5s.; special grants to sub-committees, £2350 8s. 1d.; grants expended by Major Gaskell, £5160; grants expended by the Bishops for Clifden, £650; expended in food, meal, &c., £4168 10s. 7d.; emigration to America, £792; migration to England and Scotland, £666; special grants for purchase of seed, £3049 10s. 2d.; money grants for union committees for seed, £9695; seed potatoes purchased and freight on same, £24,239 4s. 11d.; total amount for seed, £36,983 15s. 1d.; clothing purchased, £10,000 19s. 2d., carriage on clothing, £81 13s. 4d., making the total expenditure for clothing £10,091 12s. 6d.; inspectors' travelling and hotel expenses, £267 4s. 2d.; salaries and wages, stationery, printing reports, and official reporter, £668 16s. 11d.; advertisements, £662 17s. 5d; cheque-books, charges on foreign bills, postage, and telegrams, £320 12s. 2d.; car-hire, messengers, and sundry expenses, £86 9s. 1d.; cash on hand, £5 13s. 10d.: leaving a balance in the Bank of Ireland amounting to £2721 10s. 5d.

The trustees suggest that her Grace should devote the balance of the fund to assisting entire families from the distressed and over-populated districts to emigrate, provision being made for them on landing, as had been done by Bishop Ireland for the emigrants sent out by Father Nugent.

The Commissioners for the Exhibition now being held at Brussels to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of Belgian Independence have awarded gold medals to the following English firms for new inventions and excellence of workmanship and design:—Agricultural machinery, Messrs. Ransome, Sims, and Head; steam-engines, Messrs. Tangye Brothers; cabinet-work, Messrs. Gillow and Co.; carriages, Messrs. Morgan and Co.; pianofortes, Messrs. Brinsmead and Sons.

A young lady summoned a draper of Birmingham last week for illegally detaining a gold chain, a set of gold studs, topaz stones, and other ornaments. The parties, according to the evidence, were engaged to be married till recently, when the engagement was broken off by the defendant, as he admitted, becoming engaged to another lady. The question was whether the complainant had lent or presented him with the jewellery. In a letter defendant had said he would "show up" his old sweetheart if she took legal proceedings. Characterising defendant's conduct as unmanly, the Bench ordered the jewellery to be restored to the lady, the alternative being two months' imprisonment.

THE COURT.

The Queen continues at Balmoral, and passes much of her time in driving through the picturesque neighbourhood, accompanied by the several members of the Royal family now with her Majesty.

The Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt, who is accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Duke and Princesses Irene and Alix of Hesse, arrived at Balmoral yesterday week. The Grand Ducal party had travelled, viâ Flushing and Queenborough, to London, and, after passing a night at Buckingham Palace, resumed their journey to the north, travelling from Euston by the limited mail to Perth, where they breakfasted; and thence to Ferryhill Junction, where the saloon carriages were detached and the journey continued by special train to Ballater. Prince Leopold met his august relatives at the station, a guard of honour of the 71st Regiment being in attendance. The Grand Duke, with his family, drove thence to Balmoral.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice and her granddaughters, made an excursion the next day, driving to Braemar and to Loch Callater, where they had a long walk.

On Sunday her Majesty, with Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, the Grand Duke of Hesse, and Princess Irene, was present at Divine service in Crathie church, when Dr. Scott, minister of St. George's, Edinburgh, officiated. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, drove to Glen Gelden Shiel.

On Monday her Majesty went to the Glassalt Shiel with Princess Beatrice, the Hereditary Grand Duke, and Princesses Irene and Alice of Hesse.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice, accompanied by the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt and Princess Irene, drove to Braemar on Tuesday in an open carriage. The horses were changed at the Fife Arms, and the journey was continued westward to Linn of Dee and afterwards to Berry, where luncheon was served and a short walk enjoyed. On the return journey her Majesty called at Allanaquoich House, to visit Mrs. Clark. Braemar was reached at half-past six, and, the horses having been again changed, the Royal party proceeded to Balmoral.

The Princess of Wales, with her daughters, pays frequent visits to the Queen.

The Earl of Fife has dined with her Majesty.

The Duchess Dowager of Roxburghe has arrived at the castle, and the Hon. Harriet Phipps has left; and Captain Waller, R.E., has arrived, and Mr. Walter Campbell has left.

A Queen's messenger arrived at Devonport on Monday, and was conveyed on board the German war-vessel Prinz Adalbert, lying in the Sound. The messenger handed to the son of the Crown Prince of Germany, a youth of eighteen, who is an officer on board, a present from her Majesty, accompanied by an autograph letter of congratulation to him on his attaining his majority.

On the recommendation of Sir William Muir, K.C.B., and Lady Superintendent Mrs. Deebles, her Majesty has been pleased to confer the order of St. Katherine on Sister Elizabeth Wheldon, one of the nurses of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Netley. The order carries with it a pension of £50 per annum for a limited period, with an embroidered badge worn on the left arm. Sister Wheldon, in addition to long and good service at Netley, was one of the nurses chosen to accompany Mrs. Deebles to South Africa for work in the military hospitals during the Zulu war.

The Gazette of Tuesday announces that the Queen has appointed Mr. Ralph C. Palmer to be Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in the room of Mr. Charles Romilly, resigned.

Her Majesty has been pleased, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, to approve of the following pensions being charged on the Civil List:—To Mrs. Clifford, widow of Professor Clifford, £80 a year; to Mrs. Hawker, widow of the Rev. Mr. Hawker, £80 a year; to Madame Llanos, sister of John Keats, the poet, £80 a year; and to Mrs. Armstrong, widow of Lieutenant-General J. W. Armstrong, £80 a year.

The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud, and Prince John of Glücksburg, arrived at Abergeldie Castle on Thursday week. Their Royal Highnesses paid a visit to the Queen the same afternoon. The Prince, with the Grand Duke of Hesse and Prince John of Glücksburg, has been out both in forest and on moor, and has enjoyed some good shooting. Princes Albert Victor and George left Portland in the Bacchante on Monday for Vigo.

The Duke of Edinburgh, after having had a week's shooting with the Duke of Coburg at Oberoff, returned to Coburg last Sunday. The Duchess, accompanied by her brother the Grand Duke Sergius of Russia, who had been on a visit to the Queen of Wurtemberg, her aunt, at Friedrichshafen, close to Lake Constance, returned to Coburg the same day. The Duke and Duchess's children arrived the next day from Tzarskoe Selo, viâ Berlin, having quite recovered from their illness.

On Saturday a large number of persons interested in the movement for the establishment of coffee-houses met at No. 63, Fleet-street (corner of Bouverie-street), to be present at the opening of The Caxton, the thirteenth establishment opened by the Coffee Public-Houses National Society, and the eighth opened by them in London. Mr. Stephen Bourne, chairman of the company, stated that the society had been established on temperance principles, and that this house had been opened to provide non-intoxicant refreshment for three classes. First, for the public in general; secondly, for witnesses and others who might have to attend at the new Law Courts; and, thirdly, for printers and others connected with the press, especially on the morning papers, for whose benefit a special license had been obtained, so that the house would be open for 22½ hours of the 24—from two a.m. to half an hour after midnight.

At a meeting of the Cymmrodorion section of the National Eisteddfod, held at Carnarvon last month, the subject of Eisteddfod reform was discussed. A resolution was unanimously adopted in favour of the establishment of a National Eisteddfod Association, and a number of Welsh bards, literati, and other persons interested in the Eisteddfod, were invited to act in conjuction with the Cymmrodorion Society as a provisional committee. A meeting of this committee, at which there was an influential attendance, was held yesterday week at Shrewsbury, under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Puleston, M.P. It was agreed that the association should be called the Society of National Eisteddfod. Mr. Hugh Owen explained that one of the principal objects of the movement was to secure the holding of only one national Eisteddfod in each year, in North and South Wales alternately, and to prevent the local Eisteddfodau from assuming a title of "national." Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, M.P., was elected president of the society, and Mr. Lewis Morris, author of "The Epic of Hades," chairman of the council. An executive committee was also appointed. It was resolved that the council be limited to fifty elected members, and that all chaired bards be appointed honorary members.

ITALY.

The ceremony of visiting the tomb of Victor Emmanuel, and the commemorative tablets to those who fell at Porta Pia, passed off in perfect order on Monday in Rome. At the famous breach in the wall where the Italians entered the city that day ten years since, speeches were made by the Syndic and Count Cairoli, and were enthusiastically received.

The Corso, the Piazza Colonna, and the Piazza del Popolo were on Thursday evening crowded with people admiring the brilliant illuminations which were prevented by the rain on Monday.

According to the Italian Provisional Budget for 1881, which is now ready, there will be a diminution of fourteen million lire in income on account of the abolition of the grist tax, and, on the other hand, an increase from various sources of thirty-five millions. This would give a surplus of twenty-one millions, but it will be reduced to seven by increased expenditure.

The question of continuing to build monster ironclads of the Italia type has, the Roman correspondent of the Daily News says, been submitted to thirty-one leading naval officers of Italy by the Italian Minister of Marine, and their answers will guide the policy to be pursued in the future in this respect.

In commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the first railway, between Manchester and Liverpool, a marble tablet to the memory of George Stephenson was placed in the railway station at Turin, the ceremony being attended by the municipal authorities, the English Consul, representatives from the different Italian railways and workmen's societies, and by a great number of spectators.

The Official Journal of Saturday last publishes three Royal decrees concerning political and economical reforms to be introduced in the Portuguese Indies.

The Anthropological and International Literary Congresses were inaugurated at Lisbon on Monday. At one o'clock the Anthropological Congress assembled in the grand hall of the Academy of Sciences, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion. The King and the King's father, Don Fernando, assisted, while Senhor Corvo, ex-Minister for Foreign Affairs, presided. Messrs. Quatrefages and Capellino were the vice-presidents, and Carlos Riveiro the secretary. The session of the Anthropological Congress terminated at two o'clock. After a brief interval, the Literary Congress helda session in the same hall, his Majesty assisting, the Duke Avila, Councillor Mendes Leal, Henri Martin, and ex-Minister Sampaao being honorary presidents, while Louis Ulbach and Chodskiewitch acted as effective presidents. All the addresses were in French. The opening address was given by Mendes Leal, and other eloquent speeches were made by Ulbach, Chodskiewitch, Krans, Dietsch, and Friedmann. All these were loudly applauded, while Secretary Sermina's annual report received great attention. The British Minister, Mr. Morier Evans, was present. The King expressed himself thankful to the Italian members, whose exertions greatly contributed to the success of the Congress.

HOLLAND.

The King opened the Session of the States-General on Monday. His Majesty, in the Speech from the Throne, announced that the relations of his Government with foreign Powers were perfectly cordial. The trade and industry of the kingdom showed a certain improvement. Agriculture was in a flourishing condition, the harvest generally was very satisfactory, and the pneumonia prevalent among the cattle had nearly disappeared. The revenue from taxation was progressively augmenting, but increased resources were nevertheless necessary to effect a financial equilibrium. The King announced the presentation of Bills relative to the constitution of the Militia and Communal Guards, with a view to the completion of the system of national defence, and also a Bill for improving the canals. Adverting to Colonial affairs, the King said that, although armed resistance had not yet been entirely subdued in Acheen, Dutch authority was so far established there that the Government could now prepare the organisation and regular administration of the colony. The general condition of the Dutch Indies could be described as satisfactory, were it not for the sickness among the population and the disease affecting the cattle.

Referendary Van der Wyck has been appointed Secretary-General to the Department of the Colonies.

BELGIUM.

King Leopold arrived at Brussels from Ostend on Monday afternoon. A Royal warrant will be published this week giving a long list of nominations and promotions of officers on the occasion of the centenary of Belgian Independence.

SWITZERLAND.

Telegrams from Berne report the resolve of the Council of State to adhere to the decision of the National Council in favour of a revision of the Swiss Constitution. It is stated, however, that the Roman Catholic members of the Federal Assembly will offer a vigorous opposition to the revision.

GERMANY.

Notwithstanding the rain, which had fallen during the whole of Wednesday night and the early part of Thursday morning last week, the full programme of the military manœuvres south of Berlin was carried out. The troops engaged in the attack and defence numbered nearly 45,000 men of all arms. In the operations of yesterday week Prince William, the grandson of the Emperor, bore a distinguished part. The Duke of Cambridge drove in the morning to the palace, whence he proceeded with the Emperor to witness the manœuvres. The Duke of Cambridge left in the afternoon for Dresden. The army manœuvres at Berlin closed on Saturday, and in the evening the foreign officers who have been attending the manœuvres in an official capacity met for a farewell dinner at the Kaiserhof. Sir Garnet Wolseley proposed in the English language the toast of "The German Emperor;" and the Prussian General Verdy, in reply, drank to "The health of the various foreign Sovereigns" whose representatives were present.

Owing to a slight indisposition, the Emperor William has been prevented from carrying out his intention of visiting the Rhine Province to witness the military manœuvres.

AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.

The Emperor Francis Joseph spent the 14th inst. at Czernowitz, and was received enthusiastically everywhere. In the evening a torchlight procession was held, and there was an illumination of the town. The Roumanian Princes and the Envoy had an audience with his Majesty, and welcomed him to the town. Numerous deputations followed. On the 16th inst. a popular fête was held in Czernowitz in the Emperor's honour. In the centre of the gardens glass-works were erected for the purpose of showing the Emperor the entire process of glass-making. Interesting scenes were presented by peasants from all the surrounding districts in their picturesque costumes, who executed national dances, while girls, many of whom wore dyed silks and gold caps, sang their national songs. The Emperor also visited the steam saw-works and Redinger's machine manufactory, and in the evening he was present at the theatre, which was entirely renovated for this occasion. On the 17th he received the Landwehr battalion. His Majesty has given to the town of Czernowitz 2900 florins. The Emperor received M. Slaniceano, the Roumanian Minister of War, who came here in order to salute his Majesty in the name of Prince Charles of Roumania. The Emperor has concluded his visit to Galicia. The Vienna correspondent of the Daily News says that the Emperor's leaving the frontier was the occasion of a brilliant demonstration. The Emperor arrived at Goedoelloe on Sunday evening. A great meeting of the Constitutional party took place on Sunday at Brunn. There were nearly 1000 members present, including delegates from fifty-one towns and sixty-four country parishes. Great manifestations against the policy of the present Government were made. On Monday the Emperor arrived at Hatvan, where deputations from Pesth, Jazygien, and Heves received him. He passed through Pesth on Tuesday.

RUSSIA.

The Czar has given his assent to the representations made by General Loris Melikoff and the Minister of Justice for a revision of all branches of the administration in the provinces. Count Melikoff arrived in St. Petersburg on the 16th inst. An Imperial rescript has been addressed by the Emperor to the Count announcing the Count's investiture with the insignia of the Order of St. Andrew, and expressing the Emperor's thanks for the energy displayed by the Count as President of the Supreme Executive Commission. The Emperor has also conferred upon Count Sievers, a member of the Supreme Military Court, the insignia of the Order of St. Alexander Newski, set in brilliants.

The Golos states that orders have been issued for the immediate construction of a railway 200 versts in extent on the Tekke Turcoman Steppe. The railway material left over from the last Turkish war, and now stored at Ungheni, will be used to construct the line.

It is estimated by the Agricultural Department at Washington that the value of the exports of breadstuffs from the United States during the last eight months was 182,000,000 dols. According to the September report of the Agricultural Department at Washington, the decrease in the general average of the cotton crop amounts to 11 per cent, and not 1 per cent, as previously announced.

SOUTH AFRICA.

Sir Bartle Frere, accompanied by Lady Frere and family, and attended by the Hon. W. Littleton, private secretary, and Major Parr, military secretary, embarked for England on the 15th inst., in the Pretoria, under salute from the castle and her Majesty's ship Boadicea. A large crowd assembled to bid him farewell, and the telegrams state that "widespread regret" is felt at his departure. In reply to an address presented to him by deputations which included delegates from the Eastern frontier and from Natal, Sir Bartle Frere said that the action he had taken in connection with Natal and the Transvaal was either a great service or a great crime, and he greatly valued the favourable verdict of the inhabitants of Natal, who could not but be competent judges.

General H. Clifford has been sworn in as acting Governor at the Cape, and Mr. Pearson has been gazetted Treasurer, in place of the Hon. J. Miller, who has resigned, but remains in the Cabinet.

A telegram from Cape Town seems to indicate that the Basutos are determined to offer serious resistance to the policy of disarmament. Captain Carrington, while making a reconnaissance of Lerothodi's village, in Basutoland, with seventy men of the Cape Mounted Rifles, was unsuccessfully attacked by 1200 Basutos. Lieutenant Clark and two men were killed. The army suffered great loss. Reinforcements are being sent to Captain Carrington. Official intelligence has reached Cape Town that the Tambookies have combined with the Basutos against the British forces.

Disturbances have broken out in Damaraland.

INDIA.

A special telegram from the Daily News correspondent at Lahore informs us of a terrible landslip that has occurred at Naini Tal, in Bengal, resulting in a shocking loss of life among British officers. The names of the killed are:—Mr. L. Taylor, assistant commissioner of the road police; the Rev. Mr. Robinson, chaplain; Major Morphy, 40th Regiment, and Mrs. Morphy; Mr. Morgan, road overseer; Mrs. Turnbull; Captain Frederick Talbot Goodridge, Bengal Staff Corps, of the 35th Bengal Native Infantry; Surgeon J. B. Hannah, M.D.; Captain Haines, Royal Engineers; Captain Balderston, of the 34th, station staff officer; Lieutenant J. E. H. Sullivan, of the 73rd; (? Dr.) Hatchell, of the 83rd; Second Lieutenant J. B. H. Carmichael, 33rd Regiment; Colonel Taylor, R.E.; and Lieutenant Robinson, of the 33rd Regiment. An official telegram from the India Office completes this list of deaths by the addition of the names of the non-commissioned officers, privates, and others who were killed by the accident.

The hill-station, or sanitorium, of Naini Tal, or Nynee Tal, is situated at an elevation of 6520 feet above sea-level, being the lowest of all the English resorts on the Himalayas. It is approached by an excellent cart-road from Moradabad, a station on the Oude and Rohilcund Railway, and it is connected by a telegraph line from Delhi. It is the regular summer residence of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces, who brings with him every year his large administrative staff. Every official in the plains below tries to get away from the burning sun and parching winds to the shaded glens and cool ridges of Nynee Tal; or, if he cannot obtain a furlough for himself, he will certainly send hither his wife and children. A large permanent population has grown up, which is estimated to amount to about 6000 persons, though this number is more than doubled during the season. In the present month (September) the season is drawing to its close, though not yet finished.

Several items of news are telegraphed by the Times correspondent in Calcutta:—

The Viceroy will leave Simla about the end of October, and after a few days' tiger-shooting goes to Lahore, where he will hold a large durbar on Nov. 15. He then goes to Kurrachee, visiting Sibi en route, and then by sea to Bombay.

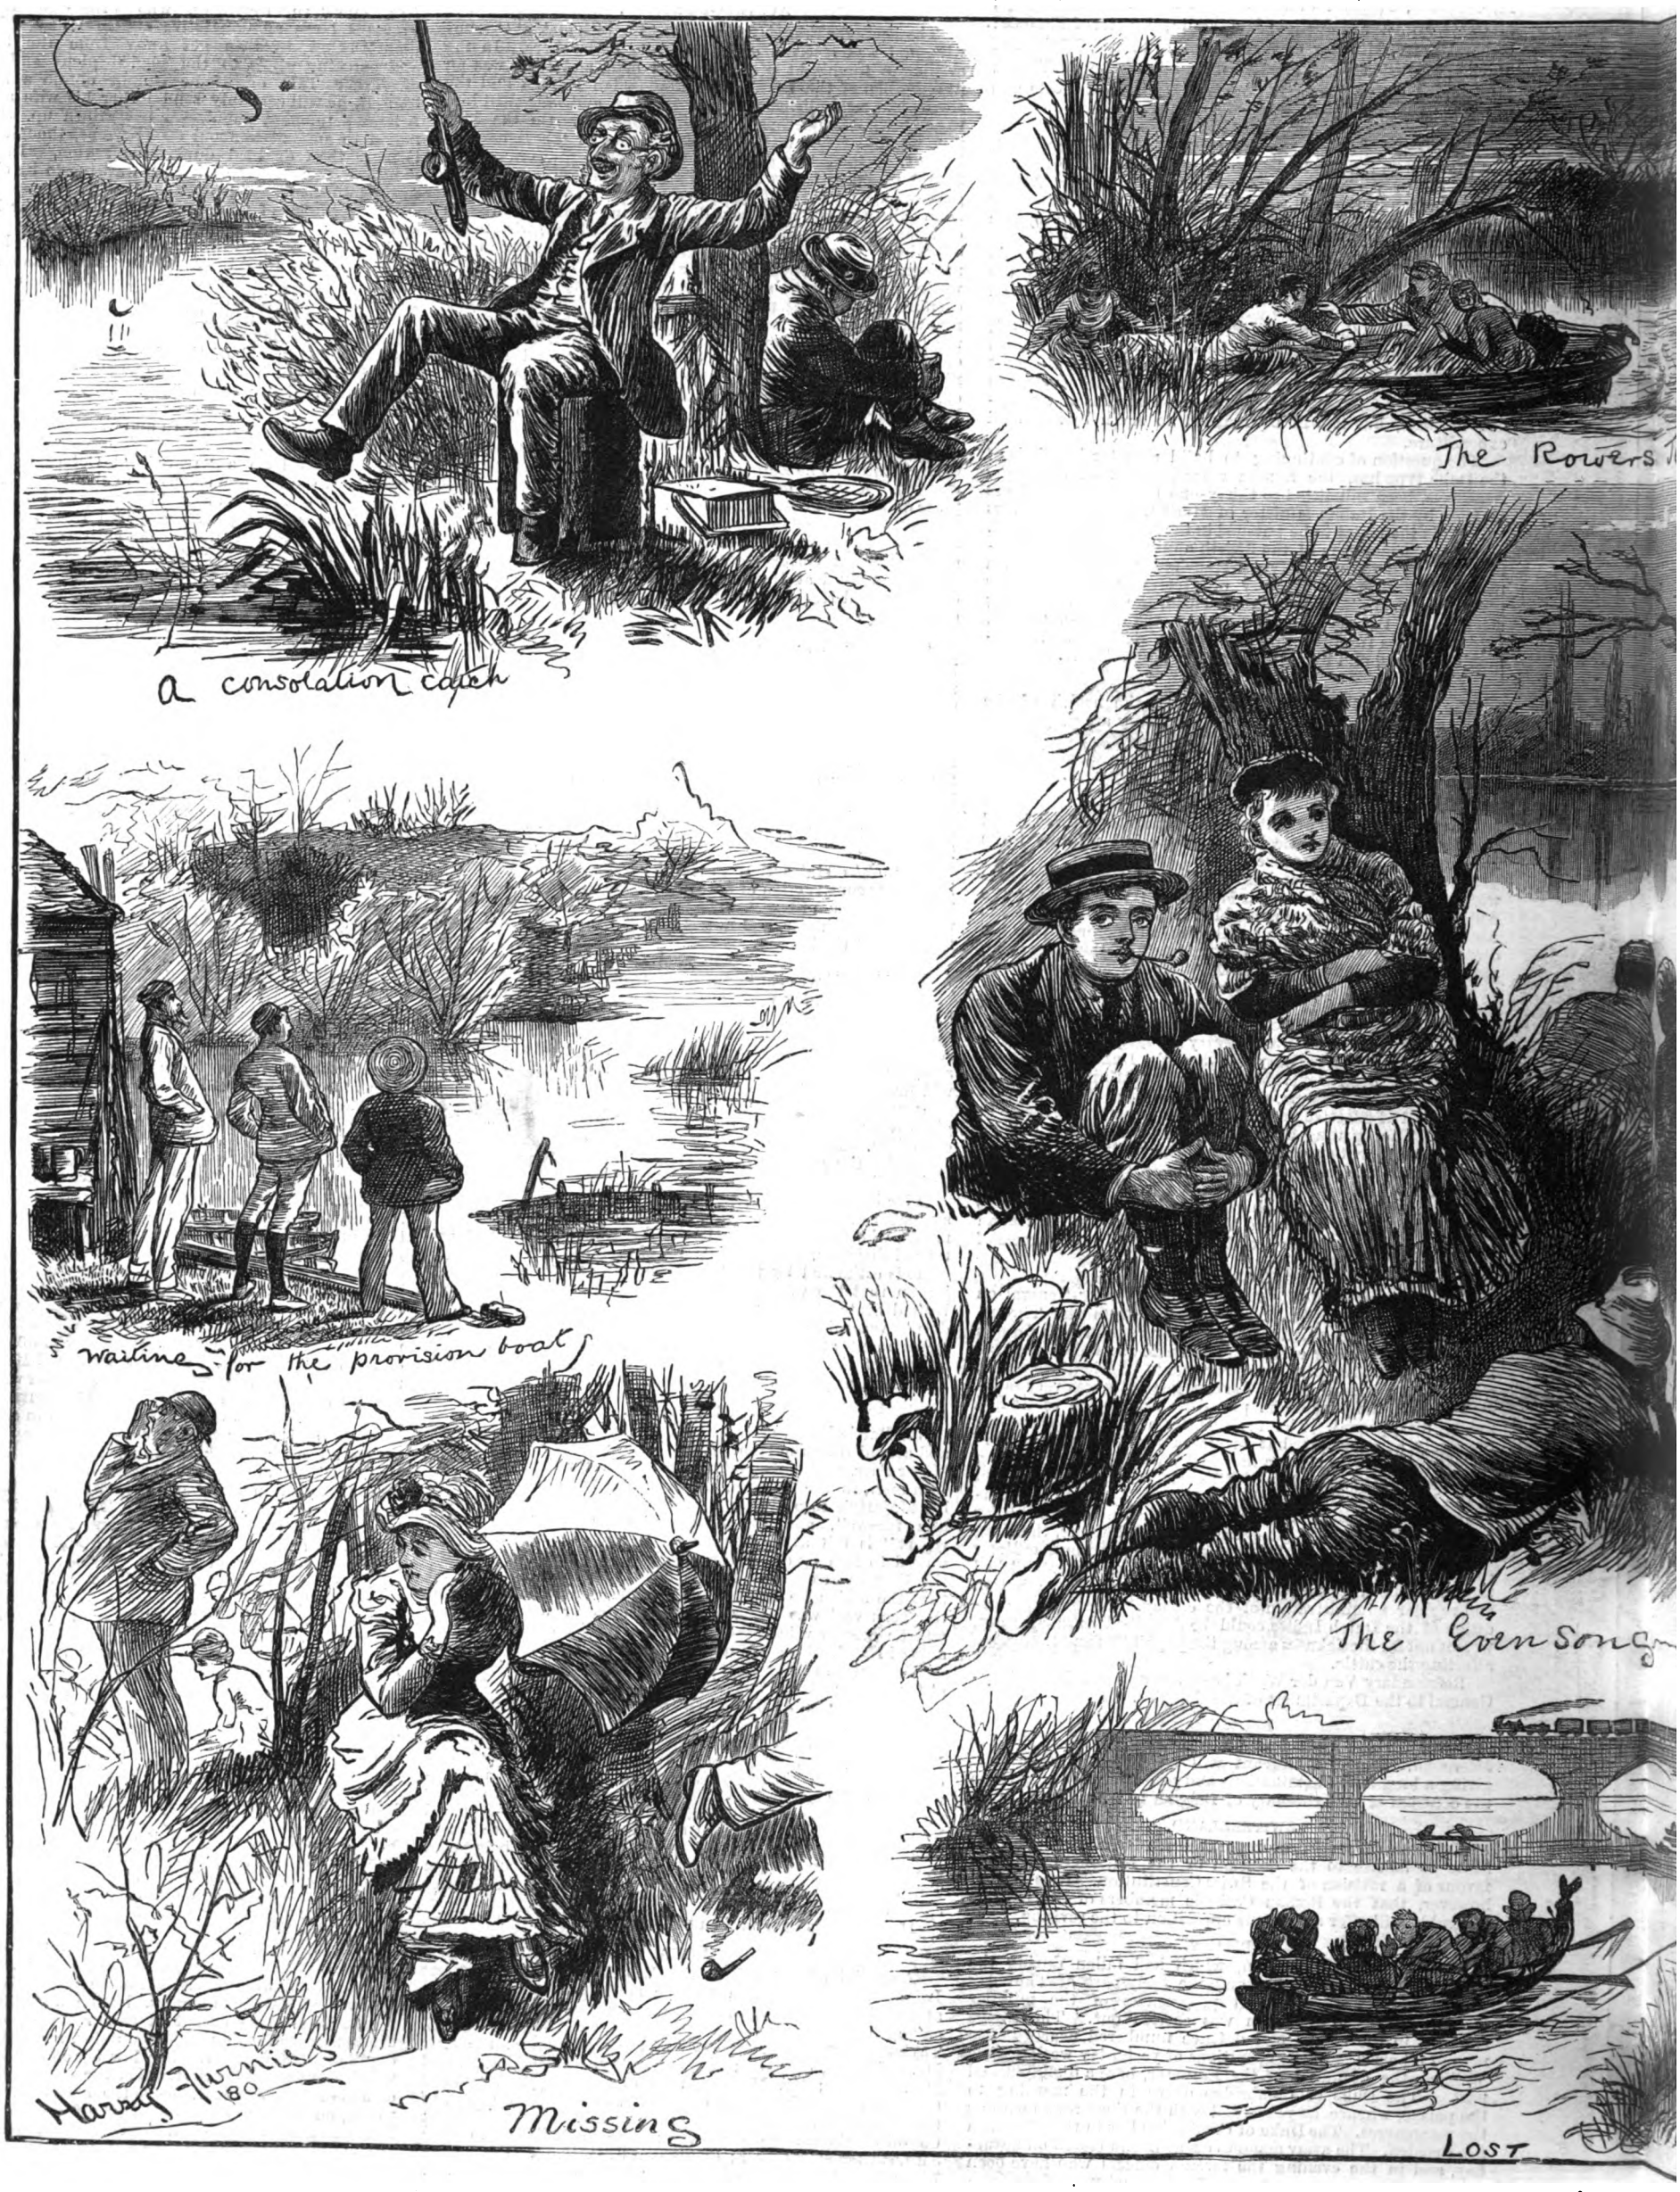
Sir Donald Stewart took his seat as a member of the Supreme Council on Tuesday.

A meeting in aid of the Patriotic Fund was held on the same day, at which the Viceroy presided and announced his intention of giving 3000 rupees. About 10,000 rupees were subscribed.

Crop prospects in Northern and Western India continue to improve.

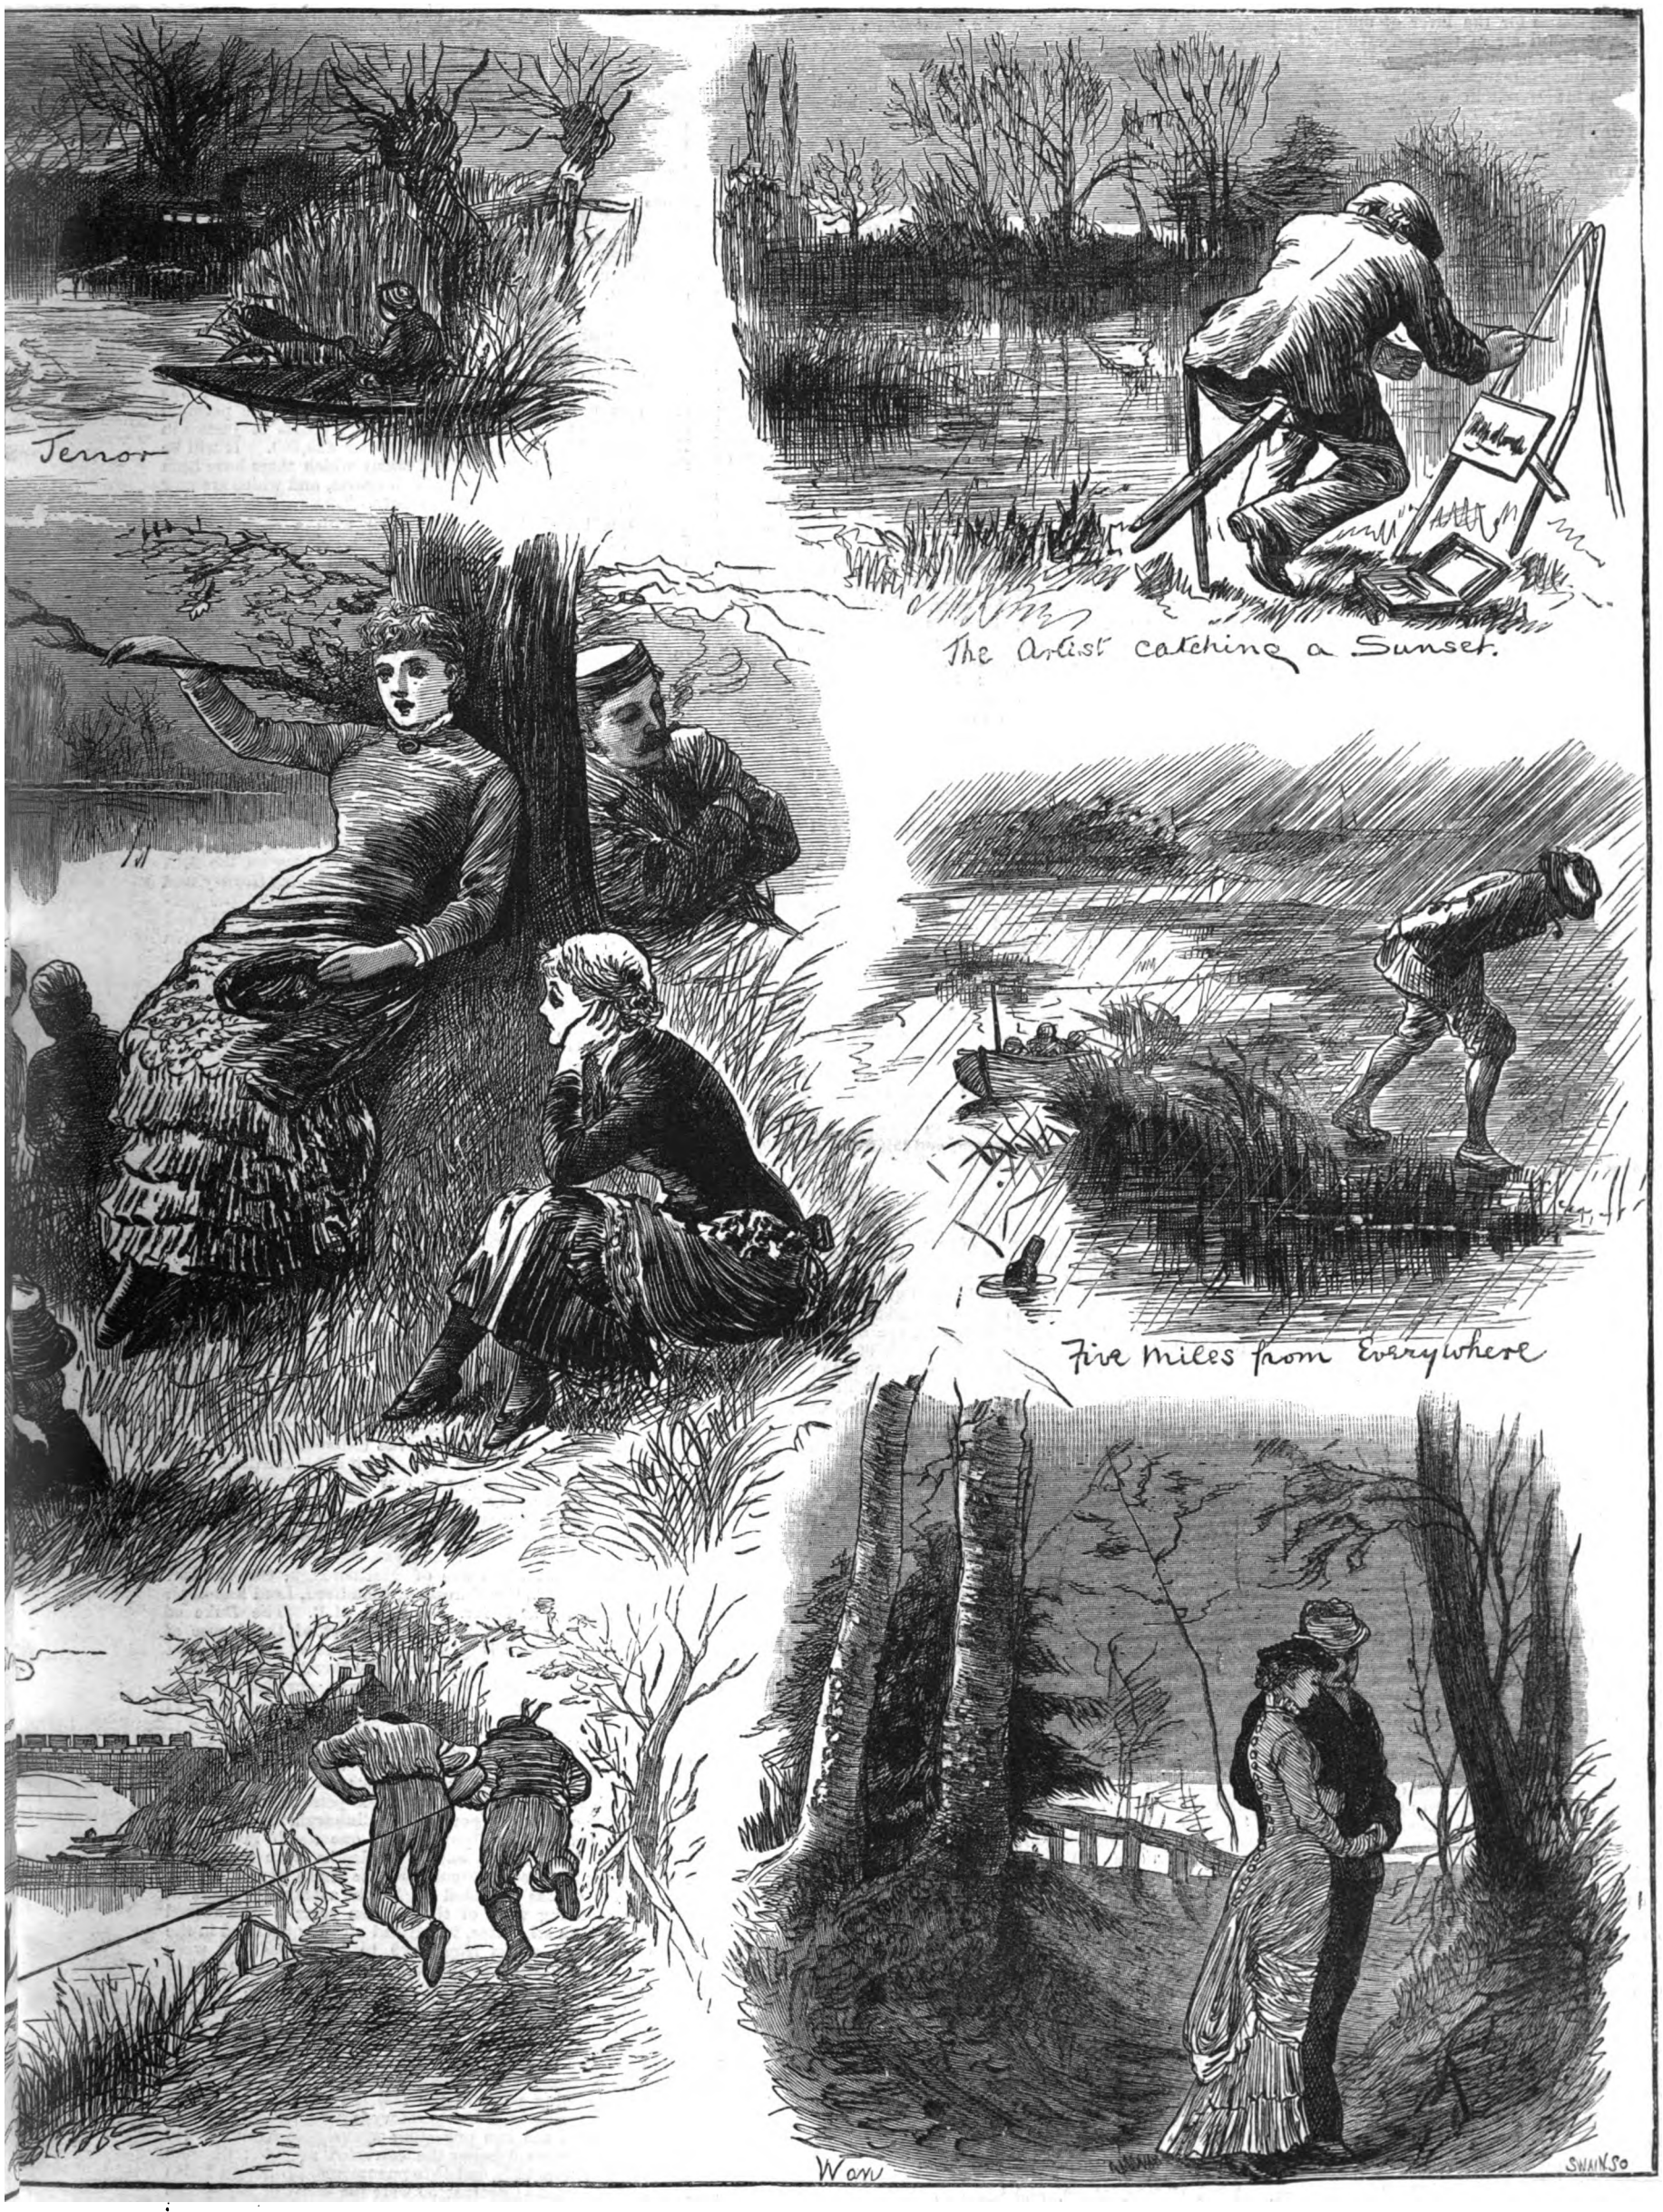
There has been a "scare" at Ootacamund owing to a report that the Mohammedans were about to rise. Volunteers were called out and an armed company of infantry was telegraphed for, and the people prepared themselves for defence, but the report turned out to be an entirely false alarm.

The principal of the Commissariat fraud cases, that of Captain Leigh Hunt, has terminated at Rangoon in an acquittal on all the charges.



Lieutenant-General the Hon. Leicester Smyth, C.B., who has recently completed five years in command of the Western District, goes out to South Africa in November next to relieve Major-General Sir Henry Clifford, in command of the troops at the Cape.

News has been received from MM. Popelin and Burdo, leaders of the third Belgian expedition to Central Africa from the East Coast, dated from near Tabora, Unyanyembe, April 30, and from Kissindeh, on the right bank of the Gombe, at the frontier of Ugale, June 10. Up to that date the travellers had known nothing of the death of Messrs. Cadenhead and Carter, who had lodged in Tabora, like themselves, in the house which was occupied by Livingstone and by Stanley. They state that Cadenhead had gone on to join Carter, but that M. Roger had been unwell, and was left in Tabora with a quantity of merchandise. M. Burdo had to engage porters to carry this on, and on May 1 the two caravans started for Kissindeh. Here the carriers deserted en masse, but M. Burdo was able to have the goods placed for safety in the tembe of the Sultan. Captain Popelin, who had already reached Karema with some faithful negroes, at once, on hearing of this, returned to Kissindeh, which he reached after ten days' march, just in time to secure M. Burdo from an attack which had been threatened by the Rugas Rugas. A short skirmish, in which one of the natives was wounded, was sufficient to put them to flight. It was rumource at Kissindeh that Mirambo, Simba, and Ninugu, chief of the Rugas Rugas, had set out to ravage the territories to the south-east of the Malagaris.



The Government of India has offered the prize of £100 for the best "Manual of Hygiene," to serve as a text-book for the use of the British soldiers in that country. Works submitted in competition for this prize must be sent in by their authors to the Secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department at Calcutta, so as to reach his hands not later than the last day of next March. Each is to bear a motto, and to have a sealed envelope attached, bearing the same motto on the outside cover and the name of the author within, after the fashion which prevails in our Universities at home; and the prize will be adjudicated by a committee of officers, consisting of the Surgeon-General and the Principal Medical Officer of the forces in India, the Sanitary Commissioner with the Government of India, and an officer of the Quartermaster-General's Department. The work is "to be written in clear and simple English, and thoroughly practical, showing the ordinary causes affecting health, and the special dangers to which British soldiers are exposed in India, more particularly during their first year in the country, and the best means by which those dangers may be averted." The work, if accepted, will be printed at the public expense, and become the property of the State; and it is not to exceed in bulk "more than fifty or sixty pages of print, of small pica, octavo size." It is added that the Government of India will not feel bound to award the prize at all, unless one at least of the manuals produced in competition shall be judged "in all respects suitable to the purposes for which it is required."

Some facts respecting the depth of the western portion of the Caribbean Sea have been recently brought to light during the cruise of the United States coast survey steamer Blake. Amongst other researches a line of soundings was run from St. Jago de Cuba to the east end of Jamaica, when a depth of 3000 fathoms was found 25 miles south of Cuba. Subsequent soundings proved this deep spot to be the eastern end of an immensely deep valley extending from between Cuba and Jamaica to the westward, south to the Cayman Islands, and up into the Bay of Honduras. The Cayman Islands and the Misteriosa Bank were found to be summits of mountains belonging to a submarine extension (very steep on its southern slope) of the range running along the south-eastern side of Cuba. The valley is narrow at its eastern end, but widens between the western end of Jamaica and Cape Cruz, when the soundings were 3000 fathoms within 15 miles of Cuba, and 2800 fathoms within 25 miles of Jamaica. Taking it altogether, it was found that this submarine valley extends for 700 miles between Jamaica and Cuba, with an average breadth of 80 miles. It covers an area of over 85,000 square miles, having a depth nowhere less than 2000 fathoms, except at two or three points, which are the summits of submarine mountains, and with the greatest depth of 3428 fathoms. The low island of Grand Cayman, which stands scarcely 20 ft. out of the sea, is really the summit of a mountain 20,560 ft. above the bottom of this submarine valley, an altitude exceeding that of any mountain on the North American continent. Calculating the height of Blue Mountain in Jamaica from the bottom of this valley, it would give an altitude of nearly 20,000 ft., exceeding any of the Himalaya range. It is proposed to call this great valley the "Bartlett Deep," in honour of its discoverer.

LOUNGING UP THE RIVER.

The Thames, a few miles above Hampton Court Palace, let us say, as far as Staines Bridge, is a favourite scene of holiday recreation in summer. Few among those Londoners who will condescend to enjoy a holiday so near home are unacquainted with its broad green meadows, and bright, smooth, but strongly flowing waters; with the flowery and rushy margin, the "aits" or "eyots" in mid-stream beset with shadowing willows; and the beds of aquatic plants, fringing here and there an oozy piece of sequestered river-bank. These natural features have an abiding charm for the lover of nature, and there is a cool, quiet, peaceful air in the general aspect of many places between Kingston and Windsor, that is very comforting to the jaded townsman. Such a one, having it all to himself, as it were, in a solitary skiff or canoe, or in a stroll along the Surrey-side path with a cigar in his mouth, has experienced a good share of self-contained happiness. This we can personally vouch for, and recommend him who doubts it to try it, for two or three hours of a fine sunny afternoon, taking his start from Weybridge, and going up to Chertsey or Laleham, the quietest part of the river thereabout, in an easy, indifferent, leisurely manner, if he be a man of sedate mood and of an age beyond the temptation to feats of athletic "pulling." He may get his luncheon anywhere, and return by train to a late dinner in town, which will do him more good than if he had spent those hours in Hyde Park, or sitting about at his club.

But there are many slaves to domestic or social connections, who cannot allow themselves to go anywhere for pleasure without more or less lady-companionship; others there are, whose youthful spirits affect to like that sort of thing. For their purposes, of which our Artist has delineated some not unfrequent results in the Sketches entitled "Up the River," boats are kept on hire at several well-known places, where a thoughtless crew of amateur inland-voyagers can embark to brave the unregarded perils of joint navigation without discipline or assured unity of command. Ladies ought to wear balloon-petticoats of crinoline inflated beyond possibility of sinking, unless they mean to obey orders, and sit still in their allotted places; for their restlessness, their fidgetiness, and their false alarms, contribute to the risks of mishap in a fearfully increased proportion. They distract the attention of rowers and steersman by their vivacious talk and frolicsome behaviour, and, when danger seems to be approaching, by their distressing exhibition of terror.

It is but fair to say that there are some honourable exceptions, and you may now and then see a couple of skilful female scullers, apparently sisters, who are believed to reside in a pleasant villa on the Middlesex bank, taking their elderly Papa out for an airing, and gliding up and down the river with a complete mastery of the business in hand. It wants precision, steadiness, and vigilant attention, rather than great strength, to manipulate these light craft in such water, and there is no reason why it should not be done by girls as well as by their brothers, if they have but presence of mind sufficient, and resolution not to yield to a sudden fright. The exercise is one that physiologists and anatomists would pronounce to be quite well adapted to the sex; and we have no intention of seriously discouraging its careful practice by them, in our remarks upon the danger of heedless conduct in mixed boating-parties on the Thames. It is to be hoped, moreover, that one of the greatest perils, that caused by the improper use of steam-launches, will hereafter be reduced by legal measures for the protection of the smaller and weaker vessels. The method of towing a boat filled with people, by a rope which one or two men haul along the bank of the river, is tedious and tame for the whole party concerned, and causes much disturbance to others, more especially to the harmless angler, who has a right to be considered.

We are rather disposed to think, after all, that the best hour enjoyed by a boating-party of several persons, not being all rowers, is the hour of landing at some retired spot beneath the shelter of the trees, and stretching their limbs on the grassy turf; then partaking of a cheerful repast, conversing or singing, and endeavouring to please one another, as men and women are prone to do from their youth, where they meet in leisurely company towards the close of a summer day. One or two, but more likely two than one, will then be apt to fall into the melting mood of sentimental fondness, and there will be a moment of intense happiness in their mutual understanding, as the plighted lovers slowly pace the field-path on their way to rejoin their friends in the waiting boat.

TRADES UNION CONGRESS AT DUBLIN.

On the re-assembling of the Congress on Thursday week a discussion arose on the duration of hours of labour, but the debate was temporarily adjourned. Dr. Ingram gave an address "On Work and the Workman," in which he maintained the beneficial influence of trades unions, after which the adjourned debate was resumed, and a resolution protesting against any attempt to extend the hours of labour was carried. A discussion followed on factory inspection, and a resolution was passed in favour of "an additional number of sub-inspectors, composed of practical working men and women." A paper having been read "On Co-operative Union and Trade Unions," the congress adjourned.

Yesterday week resolutions were carried in favour of a reform of the Patent Laws, so as to secure to inventors, by reasonable payments, the benefits of their inventions; the abolition of imprisonment for debt, as being a glaring piece of injustice; and the representation of labour in Parliament. On this resolution Trades Unions were called upon to do their utmost to return competent men of their own order to Parliament, and it was added that all duly elected members should, if they deemed it advisable to claim the same, be entitled to receive from the State fair and honourable compensation for their services. Mr. Nannetti, of Dublin, gave an address on the Irish Land System, and a resolution was carried adding the land question to the Parliamentary programme of the Congress.

The congress concluded its sittings on Saturday. Resolutions were adopted against overtime and in favour of the assimilation of the county and borough franchises, of the extension of the hours of polling out of London, of the institution of courts of arbitration for the settling of trade disputes, of the consolidation of Acts relating to the London cab trade, of the extension of the Employers' Liability Act to Government dockyards and arsenals, and of a searching inquiry into the Seaham explosion. A resolution was also adopted expressing regret at the reduction of wages in the Royal Army Clothing Factory.

London was selected as the place of meeting next year.

Seven miners were released from a lead mine at Eyam, Derbyshire, yesterday week, after an imprisonment of forty hours. The heavy rains had caused a flood in the mine, and the miners escaped drowning by climbing into higher levels.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will (dated May 28, 1880) of her Grace Margaret, Duchess of Somerset, late of Park-lane, who died on July 18 last, was proved on the 13th inst. by the Right Hon. Sir Fitzroy Edward Kelly, the Right Hon. Sir Robert Lush, Sir John Rose, Bart., G.C.M.G., Sir Michael Robert Shaw Stewart, Bart., the nephew, John Archibald Shaw Stewart, the nephew, and Andrew Alfred Collyer-Bristow, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £18,000. The testatrix requests each of her executors to select some work of art or article of virtù as a memorial; and she bequeaths to George Gurton £1000, and to William Rhind £600, respectively, to mark her sense of their faithful services to the late Duke, her husband, and also to herself; and to Lord Algernon Percy Banks Saint-Maur certain articles of furniture, of which she gives a schedule. The mausoleum in Kensal-green, erected by the Duke, her late husband, she leaves to Sir Michael Robert Shaw Stewart, and she requests him to keep it in good condition and repair; she desires to be buried in it, and that it be sealed up after her interment, and no one else placed there. As to the residue of her property, she gives one half to her niece Margaret Seymour Ross, and one fourth each to her sister, Catherine Osborn, and her niece Catherine Shaw Stewart Osborn.

The will (dated March 9, 1876) with two codicils (one bearing even date with the will, and the other Nov. 10 following) of Mr. Edward Pease, late of Darlington, Durham, who died on June 13 last at Lucerne, was proved on the 19th ult. at the Durham district registry by Joseph Whitwell Pease and Arthur Pease, the brothers, the executors, the personal estate, including leasehold property, being affirmed under £500,000. The testator bequeaths £10,000 upon trust for the education of the poorer classes in the borough of Darlington, either by establishing or founding, or assisting in establishing or founding, a free library or scholarships from elementary schools for boys and girls, or in such other way as his trustees should, in their uncontrolled discretion, think fit; £1000 each to the British and Foreign Bible Society, the British and Foreign School Society, the Friends Foreign Mission Association, the Peace Society, London; the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, London; and to the proprietors of the Saltburn Convalescent Home. To his wife, Mrs. Sarah Pease, his furniture, plate, pictures, books, consumable stores, and household effects; to his daughter Beatrice Mary, in testimony of his love for her, £2500, to accumulate until she attains twenty-one or marries; to each of his servants, for every complete two years and a half passed in his service, half a year's wages; and legacies to his wife's uncles, brothers, sisters, his own and her nephews and nieces, to his executors, and others. The residue of his real and personal estate is to be held upon trust to pay £5000 per annum to his wife until his only or youngest child attains twenty-one, when the entire income is to be paid to her for life, and the whole of his property is to go at her decease as she shall by will or codicil appoint; but if his wife dies before his only or youngest child attains twenty-one his property is to go to his children or child, the shares of sons to vest on their attaining twenty-one, and of daughters on their attaining that age or marriage.

The will (dated Sept. 5, 1878) of Mr. Joshua Appleyard, J.P., late of Clare Hall, Halifax, Yorkshire, who died on the 27th ult., was proved on the 14th inst. by Henry Williams, John Fisher, and James Malcolm Bowman, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £300,000. The testator states that he had during his lifetime given various sums for the advancement and extension of charitable institutions, and thereby acted as his own executor, and as he felt he had done what was necessary it was not his intention to make any charitable bequests by his will. We may mention that he was a very liberal supporter of Halifax charities, including a gift of £10,000 to the Crossley Orphan Home; £5000 to the Halifax parish church restoration, and large donations to the Halifax Infirmary and the Halifax Tradesmen's Benevolent Institution. He leaves to his executors £500 each; the silver plate presented to him by the proprietors of the Halifax Joint Stock Bank to his daughter, Mrs. Ellen Williams, and afterwards to her son, Joshua Appleyard Williams; his residence, with the furniture, plate, and household effects, to his wife for life; and annuities to some of his servants and one year's wages to others. The residue of his real and personal property is to be held upon trust to pay the income in equal shares between his wife and daughter, and on the death of his wife the whole to his daughter; at the death of the survivor of them, the whole of his residuary trust estate is to be paid and divided equally between his said daughter's children.

The will (dated March 22, 1875) with three codicils (dated Nov. 15 and Dec. 20, 1878, and Sept. 19, 1879) of Mr. Henry Christopher Robarts, the senior partner in the firm of Messrs. Robarts, Lubbock, and Co., of No. 15, Lombard-street, bankers, late of No. 41, Lowndes-square, and of Cecil Lodge, near Watford, Herts, who died on the 13th ult., was proved on the 8th inst. by Abraham John Robarts and Thomas Edward Robarts, the nephews, and Cecil Chaplin, the surviving executors, the personal estate being sworn under £250,000. The testator leaves upon trust for his nephew, Charles Henry Robarts, £20,000; to his nephew, Thomas Edward Robarts, £11,000; to every clerk in the employ of his firm, £10; to every messenger in the employ of his firm, £5; to his coachman, Scarborough, £400; to his butler, Frederic Smith, £200; to his housekeeper, Mrs. Scraggs, £100; to his gardener, Stannard, £50; to each of his domestic servants who have been two years in his service, one year's wages; and there are pecuniary legacies and memorial gifts to nephews, nieces, and others. The residue of his real and personal estate he gives to his said nephew, Abraham John Robarts.

The will (dated Feb. 14, 1880) of Mr. Henry Ashworth, late of The Oaks, Turton, near Bolton, Lancashire, who died on May 17 last, at Florence, has been proved at the district registry, Manchester, by George King Harrison, John Slagg, M.P., and Peter Kevan, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths to his executors £100 each; to his son George Binns Ashworth, out of his great regard for him, £1000, and he recites that, in consideration of an annuity and of his great care and attention to the business for many years, he had already sold him all his mills, whereby his said son and his family were amply provided for; and upon trust for his son William and his wife and children, £8000. The residue of his property, real and personal is left upon trust for all his children (except his said two sons) in equal shares.

The will (dated March 8, 1874) with a codicil (dated Sept. 5 following) of Mr. Charles Weatherby, late of No. 6, Old Burlington-street, and of Oatlands Park, Surrey, who died on the 15th ult., was proved on the 14th inst. by the Rev. John Matthew Brackenbury, Edward Weatherby, the son, and Alfred Peachey, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. The testator bequeaths to his daughter, Mrs. Ellen Kelsall, £1000, and plate to the value of £50, to be selected by her, as a personal souvenir; he also bequeaths £22,000 upon trust for her; to his son-in-law, William Kelsall, £1000; to his brother James, £500; to his said brother's wife, £100; and to each of their eight children, £50; to his three cousins, Mrs. Jane Claydon, Mrs. Maria Allen, and Fanny Raimondi, £50 each; and to his executors, £100 each. He devises his freehold property at Newmarket and all his other real estate, and bequeaths the residue of his personal estate, to his said son Edward.

The will (dated Dec. 5, 1879) of the Rev. Joseph Bockett, late of No. 1, Higher Summerland-place, Exeter, who died on July 16 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by the Rev. Benjamin Bradney Bockett, the brother, and the Rev. Edward Arthur Bradney Bockett, the nephew, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths £500 to the West of England Institution for the Employment and Instruction of the Blind, St. David's-hill, Exeter; £200 each to the Devon and Exeter Hospital, the West of England Institution for the Deaf and Dumb (St. Leonard's, Exeter), the West of England Eye Infirmary (Magdalen-street, Exeter), the Devon and Exeter Female Penitentiary (Holloway-street, Exeter), the Exeter Diocesan Additional Curates' Society, and the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts; £300 to the Rector and churchwardens of the parish of Stoodleigh, Devon, to be invested, and the annual income distributed yearly at their discretion among the poor of the said parish; and many legacies to his sister, nephews, nieces, and others. The residue of his property he leaves to his executors.

The Irish probate granted on Aug. 12 last, at Dublin, of the will (dated Sept. 7, 1876) of Mr. Christopher Neville Bagot, J.P., late of Aughrane Castle, Galway, who died on May 23, 1877, to Bernard William Bagot, the brother, and Joseph Arthur Holms, the executors, was sealed in London on the 19th ult., the aggregate personal estate within the jurisdiction of the high courts of justice in England and Ireland being sworn under £25,000. It will be remembered that this is the will about which there have been so many law proceeding in the Irish courts, and which are now closed by the granting of the probate.

The will (dated June 24, 1867) with a codicil (dated July 21, 1870) of Mrs. Rebecca Sharpley, late of No. 37, Lingham-street, Stockwell, who died on June 13 last, was proved on the 14th ult. by Charles Fowle and Thomas Harris Devonshire, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £12,000. Among other legacies the testatrix bequeaths £500 to the British Home for Indurables, Clapham-rise; £200 to the Commercial Travellers' School, Pinner; £100 to the Strangers' Friend Society; £200 to Dr. Cronin, upon trust, to be applied by him for the benefit of poor persons belonging to the Christian Brotherhood and Sisterhood to which she belonged; and £500 upon trust, the dividends of which are to be applied by the minister for the time being of the Chapel of Ease, Stockwell-road, attended by her late husband, Mr. Berry, and herself for many years, for the benefit of poor persons connected therewith.

The will (dated Feb. 11, 1875) of Mr. Daniel Gurney, J.P., D.L., late of North Runcton, Norfolk, who died on June 14 last, was proved at the Norwich district registry on the 24th ult. by Francis Hay Gurney, the Rev. William Hay Gurney, and Somerville Arthur Gurney, the sons, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £3000. The testator sets out that the property of which he was formerly possessed had been appropriated in discharge of his covenants and obligations in connection with the late firm of Overend, Gurney, and Co., and that he was indebted to the kindness of friends for what he then possessed. He gives £100 to the West Norfolk and Lynn Hospital, and the residue of his property to his son, Francis Hay Gurney.

An Order in Council has been issued in pursuance of the Winter Assizes Acts, 1876 and 1877, uniting for the purpose of the next Winter Assizes the counties of Lincoln and Nottingham and the county of the city of Lincoln as Winter Assize County No. 4; the assizes to be held at Nottingham. Another order unites for the like purpose the counties of Northampton, Bedford, and Buckingham, as Winter Assize county No. 6; the assizes to be held at Northampton. The Orders in Council of July 31, 1880, relating to Winter Assizes Nos. 4 and 6, are revoked.

The annual show of the Royal and Central Bucks Agricultural Society was held on the 16th inst. at Winstow. At the dinner in the evening, the chair was taken by Mr. Leopold de Rothschild.—The Speaker of the House of Commons, distributing the prizes at Glynde flower show, Sussex, last Saturday, commented upon the favourable conditions under which gardening operations were carried on this summer, in contrast with last year. He said he regarded gardens as a great luxury, and that those in the enjoyment of them were more happily situated than the toilers in great cities or in underground mines. He expressed it as his conviction that English farmers had nothing to fear from America so long as they were blessed with average seasons.—The annual meeting of the Woodstock Agricultural and Horticultural Association took place on Tuesday, in Blenheim Park; and in the evening a dinner was given at which Lord Valentia presided, and there were also present the Duke of Marlborough, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, M.P., the Marquis of Blandford, Lord Randolph Churchill, M.P., and Mr. Harcourt, M.P. The Duke of Marlborough, in responding for the toast of the House of Lords, spoke at some length on the future of agriculture in this country.—The annual dinner of the Royal Ilsley Agricultural Association took place under the presidency of Mr. George Palmer, member for Reading, who is a large proprietor in that part of Berkshire.

Last week 5435 births and 4148 deaths were registered in London and twenty-two other large towns of the United Kingdom. The mortality from all causes was at the average rate of 25 deaths annually in every 1000 persons living. The annual death-rate was 19 per 1000 in Edinburgh, 21 in Glasgow, and 39 in Dublin; smallpox caused one death in Dublin. In London 2382 births and 1438 deaths were registered. Allowing for increase of population, the births were 43 below, whereas the deaths exceeded by 87, the average numbers in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The annual death-rate from all causes, which had steadily declined in the seven preceding weeks from 24·9 to 19·8, rose last week to 20·5. The deaths included 3 from smallpox, 10 from measles, 50 from scarlet fever, 12 from diphtheria, 17 from whooping-cough, 24 from different forms of fever, and 214 from diarrhœa; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 330 deaths were referred, against 357 and 335 in the two preceding weeks. These 330 deaths were 37 below the corrected average number from the same diseases in the corresponding week of the last ten years. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs, which had been 152 and 124 in the two preceding weeks, rose again to 153 last week, but were 6 below the corrected average; 91 were attributed to bronchitis, and 45 to pneumonia. Different forms of violence caused 54 deaths; 39 were the result of negligence or accident, including 17 from fractures and contusions, 6 from drowning, 3 from poison, and 11 of infants from suffocation. Fourteen cases of suicide were registered.

THE REV. SIR J. H. CULME-SEYMOUR, BART.

The Rev. Sir John Hobart Culme-Seymour, second Baronet, of Highmount, county Limerick, M.A., Canon of Gloucester, Rector of Berkhampstead St. Mary, Herts, Chaplain in Ordinary to her Majesty, and Prebendary of Lincoln, died on the 17th inst. at his residence in the Close, Gloucester, in his eighty-first year. He was born March 24, 1800, the eldest son of Admiral Sir Michael Seymour, first Baronet (so created in 1809), K.C.B., a naval officer of distinction, by Jane, his wife, daughter of Captain Hawker, R N., and succeeded to the baronetcy at his father's death, July 9, 1834. Sir John was educated at Winchester, and at Exeter College, Oxford; received ordination in 1823; and, having held for a time the rectory of Horton-cum-Horley, in Oxfordshire, became in 1830 Rector of Berkhampstead St. Mary, or Northchurch, Herts. In 1827 he was appointed Prebendary of Lincoln and Chaplain in Ordinary to the Queen. Sir John married, first, April 12, 1833, Elizabeth, elder daughter and coheir of the Rev. Thomas Culme, of Tothill, Devonshire, by which lady, who died March 6, 1841, he leaves two sons and one daughter. He married, secondly, Feb. 10, 1844, Maria Louisa, youngest daughter of Mr. Charles Smith, and sister of Sir Charles Joshua Smith, Bart., of Suttons, Essex, and by her, who survives him, had one son and four daughters. Sir John, who assumed the additional prefix surname of Culme by Royal license May 6, 1842, is succeeded by his eldest son, now Sir Michael Culme Culme-Seymour, third Baronet, Captain R.N., and A.D.C. to the Queen, who is married to Mary Georgiana, elder daughter of the late Hon. Richard Watson, of Rockingham Castle, and has issue.

THE LORD CHIEF BARON.

The Right Hon. Sir Fitzroy Edward Kelly, P.C., Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, died at Brighton on the 17th inst. This eminent Judge was born Oct. 9, 1796, the son of Captain Robert Hawke Kelly, by Isabella, his wife, daughter of Captain Fordyce, Carver and Cupbearer to George III., and was grandson of Colonel Kelly, who commanded a division under Lord Cornwallis and fell before Seringapatam. He was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1824, went the Home and Norfolk Circuits, and obtained his silk gown and became Bencher of his Inn in 1835. He sat in Parliament in the Conservative interest for Ipswich from 1838 to 1841; for Cambridge from 1843 to 1847; for Harwich, April, 1852; and for East Suffolk from 1852 to 1866. He was appointed Solicitor-General on two occasions—viz., in 1845 and 1852; and was Attorney-General from 1858 to 1859. On the retirement of Sir Frederick Pollock in June, 1866, he was elevated to the Bench as Lord Chief Baron. He married, first, January, 1821, Agnes, sixth daughter of Captain Mason, of Leith and Aberdeen, by whom, who died in 1851, he leaves a daughter, Clara Fitzroy, wife of Thomas Bromley, Esq., and widow of Captain John Green Paley, 10th Regiment. The Chief Baron married, secondly, January, 1856, Ann, daughter of Mr. Mark Cunningham, of Sligo, which lady died in 1874, and by her leaves four surviving daughters, all unmarried.

We have also to record the deaths of—
